Headmaster-elect Donald and Britta McNemar

Andover's 13th Headmaster: Donald W. McNemar

Donald W. McNemar, Associate Dean of the Faculty for Social Sciences at Dartmouth College and Associate Professor of Government, was introduced January 13 to the Phillips Academy faculty, and later to the student body, as their next headmaster—the 13th headmaster of Phillips Academy.

Mr. McNemar's election by the Trustees a few days earlier followed the unanimous recommendation of the Trustees' Search Committee. It ended a six-month search, encompassing 250 nominations and applications, for a successor to Headmaster Theodore R. Sizer. Headmaster Sizer had informed the Trustees in July of his resignation, effective after the end of this academic year in June, in order to lead a study of American high schools. Headmaster-elect McNemar (pronounce it MACK-ne-mar) will take office in July.

Mr. McNemar, 37, is a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Earlham College

(1965) and was a Woodrow Wilson Fellow and a Danforth Fellow at Princeton University, where he received a master of arts degree in 1968 and a Ph.D. in 1971. Since 1969 he has been a member of the Dartmouth faculty, as instructor, assistant professor and associate professor. Since 1978 he has been Associate Dean of the Faculty for the Social Sciences, a division embracing seven departments and 90 faculty members, while continuing to teach in the Department of Government.

The headmaster-elect and his wife, Britta Schein McNemar, who is Dartmouth's Director of Career and Employment Services, made their first official visit to the Phillips Academy campus as overnight guests of the Sizers; they were warmly received by the faculty and by the student body, which accorded Headmaster Ted Sizer a prolonged ovation with cheers, then broke into an enthusiastic ovation to welcome Mr. and Mrs. McNemar.

Britta McNemar has been appointed assistant director of college counseling at Andover, beginning in the fall. She holds a master's degree in education from the University of Pennsylvania, has taught history in Philadelphia and Trenton, NJ, high schools, and has held several administrative posts at Dartmouth. She received an A.B. with honors in history from Connecticut College and was president of the Connecticut College Alumni Association, 1977–80. For three years Mr. and Mrs. McNemar were Deans in Choate Residence at Dartmouth, living in a cluster unit of four dormitories with 300 students. They are parents of two daughters, Heather (6 years) and Galen (3 years).

What was there about Andover that motivated their acceptance of the challenge? "It was a combination of the tradition here of excellence in education (which is so much a part of Dartmouth) and a concern for the whole person," McNemar told the Bulletin. "We knew that here we can legiti-

Trustees express satisfaction

The choice of a headmaster is the single most important task of the Trustees, according to Donald H. McLean, Jr., '28, retiring Trustee President, and he expressed great satisfaction with the results of their search. "We are most enthusiastic about the election of Donald McNemar. He has a deep concern for the education and growth of adolescents. He and Mrs. McNemar understand the residential life of education through their three years as deans-in-residence for 300 Dartmouth students. He has had significant managerial experience through his current responsibility for the Social Science Division, which embraces anthropology, economics, education, government, history, psychology and sociology. He is an able teacher. He has shown superb leadership both with the faculty of the Social Science Division and with a committee now planning an important memorial project at Dartmouth. And he has a genuine zest for education.

"His talents, leadership ability and concern for the wise management of educational resources augurs well for this Academy in the years directly ahead.

"We are indebted to the Trustee Search Committee for its work. Meeting on an almost weekly schedule over the past three months, the Committee has reviewed some 250 individual nominations, and has had innumerable conversations and meetings with faculty, students, alumni and alumnae, parents, and leaders in education. The members of that Committee are: Melville Chapin '36, Chairman; Stephen B. Burbank '64, Richard L. Gelb '41, R.L. Ireland, III '38, Gerard Piel '33, Elizabeth Parker Powell '56 and Alexander B. Trowbridge '47. Frederic A. Stott '36, has served as Secretary of the Committee.

Formal gala reopens Commons

Formal, but hamming it up, Katie Leede '81, with Joe Sutherland '81.

Everybody looked smashing at the grand reopening of Commons, after one year of renovations, in its fiftieth year. On the first day of winter term classes, students and faculty made a gala event of the school's return to the Commons after a year of walking nearly a mile for their meal at the Abbot campus. The occasion called for formal wear or its moral equivalent, candlelight, and dinner music from the wandering minstrels of the Fidelio Society, the Jazz Band, and the Brass Quintet.

Alumni returning to campus this spring or for Reunions will be cheered to see the old dining halls looking the way Thomas Cochran had them built. The fresh ceiling surfaces are free of aging butter pats, with softer lighting to augment the polished chandeliers and highlight the restored beauty of the wood paneling. The visible change, mercifully, is in the serving areas—opened up to be cheerful and efficient flexible serving areas, instead of the old cramped single lines. Unseen, and expensive, but necessary improvements are new electrical, heating and ventilating systems. The Commons workers have a vastly improved kitchen area to work in; on reopening night Tom Pool's chefs were invited up to receive an ovation for the feast of delmonico steak, baked potato with sour cream and chives, homemade cream puffs and eclairs.

English Instructor Frederick Peterson '34, an inspirational expert at organizing galas, chaired the student-faculty Committee that planned the Commons reopening gala. The specific purpose, as School President Howie Lebowitz '81 told the student body at a school meeting, was to set the tone for more civilized and considerate dining behavior, "so we won't take this beautiful Commons for granted, but will appreciate it and live up to it." We'll have to wait and see about that, but everybody seemed to get the point and they certainly all got into the spirit, wearing best dresses, three-piece suits, even fathers' outworn tuxedo jackets, and manners to match. "I could barely recognize half the kids," mused Headmaster Ted Sizer, but he wasn't looking his old self either—no green book bag and chinos; instead, he was sporting white tie and tails, last worn at the 1953 Yale Glee Club commencement concert.

A masque, with feeling

A celebration in Sizeria

Another celebration took place before this, when the last meal was served in the Abbot dining room, just after the students had left for the Christmas holidays. That "happening" was the annual faculty Christmas party, but within it this year was a surprise dedicated to Ted and Nancy Sizer from the faculty—a Jacobean masque in full costume, and full of feeling, rhymed couplets, and music.

A dozen lords and ladies entered in pairs, clad in velvet gowns or doublet and hose, dancing in stately measure, their hands joined high. They seated the astonished Nancy and Ted in makeshift thrones (moments after Ted arrived from a Trustees' meeting in New York), and crowned them King and Queen of the revelry, a mock-Jacobean masque to celebrate the accomplishments of their "reign."

The spectacle can be imagined only by visualizing Tom Regan '61 in black doublet and hose, a plume over the brim of his velvet hat, recounting, in rhymed couplet, "The Early Years of Sizeria," or Holly Owen '43 (resembling Sir Walter Raleigh, perhaps) recounting another great event of the realm: "The Great 200th Birthday, Muse, I sing!

A note ephemeral, yet perennial—Our Celebration Bicentennial. . .

The entire presentation was a gift from the faculty, and Alexandra Kubler-Merrill '56 concluded with gifts to symbolize those gifts the Sizers have brought to the Andover community.

Commons put its best food forward for the reopening.

Regional associations launched

From Washington, D.C., to San Francisco, new regional Andover-Abbott Associations are beginning to emerge, building on the shared experiences and geographic organization of Andover's Bicentennial Campaign.

For years, New York City and Boston area alumni have had ongoing associations which have served as the focus for social events and visits from Andover administrators and faculty, and have assisted the work of the Admissions Office and other school interests.

Two new regional associations are already going concerns—Washington D.C.'s Andover-Abbott Association and, as of this month, the Andover-Abbott Association of Northern California, based in San Francisco. Preliminary planning also has begun in San Diego, Los Angeles and Denver, and there is interest in other areas. In the midwest, P.D. Block '54 reports that alumni and alumnae in Chicago are interested in transforming the old Andover Alumni Association, of which he is president, into a more active regional association of alumni parents and friends.

Washington, D.C., the first of the new regional associations to organize, offers a model for other cities. By September it was formed, with alumni, alumnae and parents as officers, an executive board, a set of goals and a calendar of events for the constituency in the D.C.-Baltimore area. According to Association President Steve Clarkson '55, "all it takes is the initiative of one person who knows another person who is interested enough to work on it too."

Clarkson, who was an area campaign leader, began brainstorming the idea of a Washington regional association last spring with several others. They sent out a newsletter to their constituency announcing its formation, with a September kickoff party and meeting.

English Instructor Tom Regan '61, his wife Gerri, and Mary Stevens from the Academy Resources Office came down from Andover for the well-attended meeting, and Peter Gilbert '72, law student and on-site advisor for the Washington Intern Program, was on hand. The founding group decided to include Baltimore and Richmond, Virginia, in the D.C. orbit experimentally, and to work closely with the Washington Intern Program, as well as with the Admissions and Alumni Office. One of their spring events will bring together the Andover Washington Interns and the Washington-area youngsters who have just been accepted for admission to Andover for the following year.

On the west coast Headmaster Ted Sizer's visits this fall provided an organizing impetus. Alumni and parents gathered for luncheon, dinner or receptions in San Diego, Los Angeles, San Francisco, and Denver and later Chicago to hear the headmaster's perspective on Andover—the lessons from the '70s and certain trends he sees affecting Andover in the '80s. In San Francisco, Malcolm "Nappy" McNaughton single-handedly organized the dinner party of over 100 people for Ted Sizer and let his shrewdly chosen dinner committee begin organizing the Andover-Abbott Association of Northern California. The triumvirate of Tom Pollock '61, Brad Geir '75 and parent Bev Tuller laid the groundwork and a 39-member founding committee has set three purposes for the regional association—admissions recruitment, public relations and money—with chairmen for each. There is a strong interest in a travel scholarship fund for western students who need them. The San Franciscans predict a string of regional associations up and down the coast and they've already christened it "Andover-West." If Andover is to serve youth from every quarter, geographically and socio-economically, it will need a network of regional associations to recruit promising students for the regular session, the Summer Session, and the Short Term Institutes and (MS)² Programs. The concept of regional associations envisaged by an Alumni Visiting Committee in 1978, and endorsed by the Trustees and Alumni Council, will provide, along with social activities, a built-in structure to support the people working to help the school in various ways—the local alumni admissions representatives; Alumni Council members; fundraisers seeking support for Andover from individuals, foundations and corporations; alumni and parents serving as advisors to the school on specific issues, etc. Alumni Council members will serve as the link between the regional associations and the Academy. New associations can share ideas with each other and profit from the experience of the longer established groups. The Andover-Abbott Association of New England, with Bruce Hughes '68 as its president this year, capitalizes on Boston's proximity to Andover in its programming. Their fall meeting featured a lively PA student science debate: whether or not the U.S. should be building breeder reactors. The New England Association has offered to assist the school especially in the recruitment of talented minority students, a real need if Andover is to remain diverse and serve a wide spectrum of bright youngsters. The New York Andover-Abbott Alumni Association led by Russ Thomes '46 is another key association for the Admissions talent search. New York has developed its annual Forum into a very effective program for prospective students and families as well as for the New York alumni and parents. The New York Forum this fall drew a record 250 people to hear Admissions Dean Josh Miner and three current PA student speakers, all from the New York area.

The Office of Academy Resources staff is now ready to assist alumni and parents interested in organizing a local regional association to support their mutual interests in Andover, and Andover's interests in their area. For more information, write or call Associate Secretary Sandy Urie Thorpe '70, or Resources staff member Mary Comfort Stevens, whose assistance and sense of timing helped launch the new associations in Washington, D.C. and San Francisco.

Other western and mid-western areas are in the process of organizing on the heels of Ted Sizer's fall visit. In San Diego, Charles Daly '58, Barbara Hill Kennedy '42, Norm '51 and Martha Allenby have been key people in both the fall luncheon for Ted Sizer and subsequent organizational steps. In Los Angeles David Cathcart '57, Alan Fox '61, Graeme Henderson '52, Nan Roberts '68 and Bill Farley '28 have been considering how best to get an association started in that sprawling metropolis. At Denver's fall dinner Peter Grant '49 reports that over 60 alumni, alumnae and current and past parents expressed "enthusiasm for the idea of a regional alumni group in the months and years ahead." In Chicago, King Harris '61 organized Ted Sizer's December visit, and out of this successful event P.D. Block is looking forward to increased Association activity in that area.

Two new Charter Trustees

Frederick W. Beinecke, II '62, president of the Sperry and Hutchinson Company, and Thomas Hunt Wyman '47, president, chief executive officer and a director of CBS, Inc., have been elected Charter Trustees of Phillips Academy.

CBS President Wyman, previously vice chairman of the Pillsbury Company, was senior vice president and general manager of Polaroid Corporation, then became president and chief executive officer of the Green Giant Company in 1975. When the Pillsbury Company acquired Green Giant in 1979, Wyman was named Pillsbury's vice chairman. He assumed the presidency and chief executive duties of CBS in June, 1980. A St. Louis native, Wyman was a four-year student at Andover and president of his senior class, a graduate of Amherst, Phi Beta Kappa, in 1951 and served as an officer in the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers in Korea. He spent ten years with the Nestle Company, including a year's graduate study at the Management Development Institute in Lausanne, Switzerland. He was a Nestle vice president before joining Polaroid, where he was vice president from 1965 to 1975.

Wyman is a director of the National Executive Service Corps and the United Negro College Fund, a trustee of Amherst College and The Economic Club of New York, and a member of the Council on Foreign Relations, and the Business Committee for the Arts. Wyman's eldest son, Peter, is a recent Andover graduate. He is married to the former Elizabeth Minnerly.

S & H President Beinecke, a third-generation alumnus, was graduated from Andover in 1962 and from Yale in 1966, served in the U.S. Marine Corps as a lieutenant in Vietnam, and received his law degree from the University of Virginia in 1972. Beinecke was associated with the law firm of Hughes, Hubbard and Reed, then was general counsel and deputy director for the South Street Seaport Museum before joining Sperry & Hutchinson in 1975 as manager of real estate for S & H Promotional Services. Before assuming the presidency of the diversified company last April, Beinecke was acting president of the Gunlocke Company, one of the companies owned by S & H, the nation's largest trading stamp distributor. He has been an S & H vice president and a member of the company's board of directors since 1977.

Beinecke is a director of the New York Urban League and is vice chairman and a director of the New York City Ballet. He is a trustee of the Trudeau Institute and the South Street Seaport Museum and a director of the Nature Conservancy and the Association for the Protection of the Adirondacks. He served Andover as an elected member of its Alumni Council, 1974-77. He is married to the former Candace Krugman, and they have a son, Jacob Sperry.

mately be interested in students' growth and values, and in their future aspirations. It is also the fact that Andover is dedicated to the concept of 'youth from every quarter.' It's going to be increasingly challenging when things get tougher economically, yet we sensed in the school's history and in the Trustees and the faculty a very strong commitment to that goal.

"Also, we sensed the dedication of the people in the community. We saw it in the student guides who took us around when we first came down this fall, and in the teaching we observed; it's certainly in the Sizers and in the Trustees. A place and people that inspires that kind of loyalty and support is something we wanted to be a part of."

An impression communicated that day was the sense of an immediate empathy between the Sizers and McNemars, who met for lunch at Phelps House and an afternoon of conversation between the outgoing and the incoming headmasters. (They were joined for lunch by Abby Kemper who, as Headmaster John Mason Kemper's widow, had welcomed the Sizers to Phelps House nine years ago.) Ted Sizer told the Phillipian later that he considered Donald McNemar's strongest qualification to be a "sense of mission." And Donald McNemar's last words, in an interview with the Bulletin that day, were that "we are delighted to be joining Ted and Nancy Sizer and then to carry on. Although there will be new issues for Andover in the 1980's, we share their basic vision and we are delighted to pick up the torch from them."

George Bush and the Fuess Award

by Helen M. Eccles

When Vice President George Bush '42 came to Andover to receive the Claude M. Fuess Award, he was met by a rare outpouring of respect, affection and pride from his school—its students, faculty, Trustees and staff—and the townspeople who joined them in the Case Memorial Cage for the ceremony.

Later, after a brief reception to meet community leaders, the vice president and Barbara had box lunches with the senior class in the basketball court of the Memorial Gymnasium. There the former UN Ambassador met Andover's 12 Kemper Scholars, and other foreign students who have come for a senior year at Andover, and greeted the three students from the People's Republic of China in Mandarin Chinese.

The 1981 Fuess Award winner accepted his honor with disarming humor, humility, and some very straight talk to the students, who were seated directly in front of the podium. He pointed out that the Fuess Award had gone first not to a name in the headlines, but to 65 Andover alumni in the Peace Corps, and in 1978 it was awarded to an alumni group of "unsung heroes," for their unpublicized community service. Recalling that one of last year's winners was Dr. Tom Hale, a medical missionary in the mountains of Nepal, he told them that public service stretches far beyond the political arena: it is a commitment that should operate in all walks of life.

"What this medal represents to me is what Andover represents: 'Non sibi—not for self alone.' Service to community, service to people, service to country."

"I hope one thing the incoming administration can bring to government is men and women with deep commitment to public service. It's not easy, because there is an obstacle; if President Reagan and I fail to overcome that obstacle, if we fail to attract talented, dedicated people, our administration will fall far short of its expectations."

The obstacle? "The American people have been rocked by a series of events that have increased the level of cynicism and dampened the vitality, stifling the desire to serve one's country—the War in Vietnam, Watergate, Koreagate, Billygate, Abscam—so that talented people look at the political process and say "Why do I need this? It's just not worth it."

But it is worth it, George Bush told the students. "It's important for you and me to remember that we share a common bond by attending this school. We are all fortunate to be trained and educated at one of the finest schools in the country." They would take some flak about this, he warned them. "But because we have had the opportunity to have the best learning, we have the obligation to crank something back into our system, our country, in public service—community service, political service, aid to the handicapped, whatever."

"And don't be concerned about criticism if you seek a career in public life." He reminded them of Jefferson's dictum: "When a man assumes a public trust—he should consider himself a public property," though Bush noted that Jefferson didn't have to contend with William Loeb and the Manchester Union Leader: "When we have invasion of the privacy of the family, we have really surrendered something." He also recalled Adlai Stevenson's important comment: "What you get from your public servants is what you deserve."

"People used to say to me, 'George, why would you want to run? The jobs are impossible, your family's not your own, and no one man can make a difference.' Well, that's not true. One man or one woman can make a difference, not only in government but in every profession and every endeavor and all aspects of community life."

"We don't offer Utopia on January 21," the vice president told Phillips Academy students. "But we can begin a new journey. The United States has the potential to solve its problems. We were elected to effect change, to chart a course and stay with it. Things must change. It is worth the flak, the challenge, the criticism, the sacrifice and work and frustration, and the editorials that go right to the heart of your family. It's worth it because we believe the United States is a great and honorable nation."

Why is it worth it? Because of George Bush's belief that the United States is a great and honorable nation and his hope for the renewal of young people's commitment to service to their country. "I hope that in a very few years some of you will be joining with others in giving of yourself to public service, to help our fellow Americans and those around the world."

Bush did not minimize the difficulties ahead—the problems of the poor; the difficulties of the economy; restructuring foreign policy; defense and national security; dealing with emerging nations of the Third World—just to mention a few. "But in terms of satisfaction, for helping those bypassed by our economic system, for bringing peace, for eliminating hunger and famine, the rewards are great. To paraphrase Thomas Paine, these are the times that try men's souls. So let this great educational institution continue to instill a sense of duty to make some aspect of the community better than before you came along."

Sidelights of the Fuess Award ceremonies this year were fascinating in themselves. For example, the media interest in the event, bringing city newspapers, wire services and a national newsmagazine to Andover; the extraordinary secret service protocol that surrounds a vice president, even before taking office; the care with which a small group of students, demonstrating against a military draft, made it clear that their respect for George Bush was quite separate from the issue they sought to publicize.

As the Boston Globe described the scene at the Cage, someone "seemed to sum up the outpouring of good feeling toward yesterday's guest of honor with this private aside: 'Whether one agrees with his politics or not, he's a superhonorable person who believes in a public career as public service.'"

Lyman Spitzer Lecture

The twinkling of the stars is romantic but to an astronomer it's a darned nuisance, according to the 55th Alfred E. Stearns Lecturer, Lyman Spitzer, Jr., '31, Princeton astrophysicist and one of the Academy's most distinguished living graduates. Spitzer is acknowledged as an international leader in the fields of interstellar matter, space astronomy and plasma physics—a pioneer in basic research in controlled fusion energy.

Fifty years out of Andover this June, Spitzer ranged athletically about the GW stage from podium to slide screen, telling a full house of students, faculty and townspeople about the object of his enthusiasm—"The Space Telescope: Probe of the Universe." Scarcely a mention that a telescope-bearing satellite conceived by and designed under Spitzer already has been orbiting the earth, and sending information back for eight years; Spitzer's mind is on the new space telescope that NASA will launch in four or five years—a large (100-inch diameter) general purpose telescope that will greatly expand our knowledge of the universe.

He explains the basic equipment the satellite will carry in simple, jargon-free terms: "cameras to get images of the sky and a spectrometer, all to orbit above the atmosphere in the ultraviolet where they can see and find lots of things you can't see from the ground. It has to be unmanned because we don't want the data and equipment contaminated. But it would have to be able to be repaired in orbit, and its equipment updated, by a visiting astronaut." It would be open to use by astronomers from all parts of the world.

The questions Spitzer fielded from students showed that the Academy's observatory, now housed atop Evans Science Building, stimulates the same curiosity among adolescents today that Spitzer felt 50 years ago, when he was taking Freddy Boyce's informal course in astronomy: "It was here I first became interested in science in a systematic way."

New chapel organ nears completion

Andover Organ Company craftsman Gary Wright shows John and Carolyn Skelton, William Thomas, and Organ Company President Robert Reich the new keyboard, which used the last of the company's hard-to-get ivory.

By the weekend of May 22–24, important changes that have been taking place in Cochran Chapel over two years will be completed. A new organ will be dedicated during a weekend of organ seminars and recitals for musicians and for lovers of organ music, featuring Czechoslovakian organist Karel Pauket and three noted alumni organists.

The new organ for Cochran Chapel

presently taking shape at the Andover Organ Company in Lawrence is in the European classic tradition of the 18th century—a tradition whose revival in this part of the country began at the Andover Organ Company in the late 1950's. The 27-stop organ will have mechanical, or tracker, action that provides a simple direct connection between the keyboard and the pipes, to give a responsive and touch-sensitive control of pipe speech. Tracker action was chosen because it has proved to be the most reliable over the past several hundred years. In direct contrast is the complicated electro-pneumatic action of the giant 1927 Casavant organ, which involved an enormous amount of leather and required constant maintenance. The Casavant, originally built for George Washington Hall, was moved in 1931 to Cochran Chapel. Its pipes were buried behind a beautifully carved facade so that the sound was extremely unfocused and diffuse. In addition, the instrument suffered an increasing state of failure over many years, from mechanical and tonal problems; the cost of restoring it would have been greater than the cost of the new organ, which has the added advantage of better placement on the balcony—and low maintenance costs. Installation of the new organ will begin about April 1. Fortunately the Casavant has been sold and will be rebuilt and a concert hall is being designed for it near Interlachen, Michigan.

The three alumni organists who will participate in the May 22–24 Dedication Weekend are James Darling '46, director of music at Bruton Parish Church, Williamsburg, VA; Daniel Pinkham '40, director of music at King's Chapel, Boston; and Elizabeth Travis Sollenberger '40, instructor of organ at Bowdoin College, with Carolyn Skelton, school organist.

right through each other.") How long before we have electricity from fusion energy? ("A good rule of thumb is 20 years from the time we have verified that it's consistent with the laws of physics. But that hasn't been verified—yet.") More questions—on the Big Bang hypothesis of how the universe began, on quasars, black holes, and how sure are we that the universe is open, not closed?

If Lyman Spitzer is any example, astronomers tend to take the long view ("If you are interested in how galaxies have changed in the last 5 billion years, compare them with galaxies 10 billion years old!"), they tend to have a good sense of humor, to respect curious students, and to be optimistic: "Cheer up! There's no chance the astronomers can get rid of the atmosphere."

Alumni appointed Regents

Two Andover graduates are among the 15 members of Massachusetts' new Board of Regents for Higher Education in the Commonwealth: Robert Cushman '35 of Worcester and David S. Paresky '56 of Weston. The founding of the Board of Regents for Higher Education represents the first steps taken by the state to restructure the organization of its higher educational system. All powers over budget, personnel, curriculum, and physical facilities of the Commonwealth's 28 public colleges and universities now are vested in the Regents.

Both Cushman and Paresky meet the simple guidelines that the Regents' chairman, James Martin, set in selecting the board—that each should have been successful in the career he or she had chosen. Robert Cushman, who graduated from Dartmouth, with graduate work at Syracuse, is the chairman of the Board of the Norton Company, the world's leading manufacturer of abrasives, and is a leading proponent of the concept of corporate responsibility (see Bulletin profile, March 1979).

Dave Paresky is a Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Williams College, but earned his graduate degrees at Harvard Law School and Harvard Business School. He revealed his local allegiance in 1965 when he founded his firm in Harvard Square and named it—Crimson Travel Service. The company has grown to include ten offices in Boston, Cambridge and the metropolitan area and ranks as the largest sales volume agency in New England.

"It's too early to tell how effective we're going to be," Cushman told the Bulletin, "but this organizational structure should enable us to accomplish something. We're tackling problems that have been lying around for a long time, because the authority was so divided."

The Cluster Custodians

West Quad South's Eddie Miller

Eddie Miller, Cluster Custodian of West Squad South, is senior in service among those half-dozen men under whose direction Andover students vacuum, mop, scrub, sweep, and wax the dormitories of their cluster. As the original cluster custodian in a 1974 pilot project, he and his "Elite Sub-set," as his dorm crew was christened by then-dean Frank Eccles '43, set the tone of the work program for the campus. Today the Work Program is an established part of the Andover experience: the cluster custodian's evaluation of his 60-75 students' performance is included in the house-counselor's report to parents, as with academics and athletics.

Does the dorm cleaning aspect of the Work Program save the school money? Yes, but the educative aspect is equally important.

Cluster custodians, like students, have geographic loyalties. Walter Hayes is Custodian of Abbot Cluster, and West Quad North is Joe Martin's, with Eddie Miller the chief custodian on that west side of Main Street. Dave Bronson is chief of the custodians east of Main Street and Rabbit Pond Cluster custodian, with Guy Arsenault in Flagstaff and Bill Robinson in Pine Knoll as Cluster Custodians. Al Ferrucci is the "floater," who has to know all the clusters and take over when someone is out sick. They are in charge. There are other kinds of work duty, but the dorm cleaning program literally deals with the nitty-gritty.

Ask any of these men and they'll tell you they have two sets of responsibilities to handle—one to the Office of Physical Plant, to keep their cluster's buildings at a high level of maintenance, and see that any safety hazards or other repairs are taken care of quickly. But, working with the dean and the housecounselors of their cluster, they have another, educational goal—to instill in the youngsters a sense of responsibility for maintaining their living quarters in cleanliness and for acting constructively as members of their work crew. In this, the process is as important as the product, and the cluster custodian's role is one of authority, persuasion and teaching. There is a RIGHT way to get a bathroom sparkling clean, and the custodians also must be concerned with attitudes.

A third role isn't in the job description, and takes judgment and concern. These men are magnets for students who often need another sympathetic adult ear. To Eddie Miller, who's been at it the longest, the contact with his students, even after they have graduated, is the most rewarding part of the job: it's also important to younger men, like Guy Arsenault, who observes, "Kids who have problems often come to you, and after you've listened to their problems, they respect you more." It's not coincidence that several of the custodians—Walter Hayes, Joe Martin, Eddie Miller and Bill Robinson—have been involved with coaching, teaching or some other form of youth work in their communities.

It is generally acknowledged that the Work Program has come of age, that most students accept their two or three hours of work duty each week as a matter of course—their commitment to the school community. This is a tribute to the effectiveness of the cluster custodians, but they give a lot of the credit for their success to Marjorie Harrison. When she became Director of the Work Program, as well as Instructor in Physical Education, the program gained the key administrator it needed to deal with cluster deans, students with scheduling problems (or poor attendance records!) as well as custodians and their responsibilities. She coordinates the Work Program's relationship to OPP, to faculty and to students. "She's done a great job," a group of custodians told the Bulletin; "She's not afraid to say what needs to be said to get things straightened out." Marge Harrison, in turn, appreciates the cluster custodians' key role: "Their most difficult task is to motivate students to do a thorough and responsible job in the cluster maintenance program, while maintaining a reasonable happy relationship with them."

Fund posts strong year-end report

The 1981 Alumni Fund reports year-end figures of $488,860 from 2971 donors. This represents a strong beginning and, with six months yet to go in the Fund year, brings the goals of $775,000 and 40% participation in view, according to alumni co-chairmen Julie Schauffler Bucklin '48 and Richard C. Starratt '54.

The NON SIBI Associates, a group forming this year to recognize those alumni who give $1,000 or more to the Fund, can take some of the credit for the increase in dollar totals as compared to previous years. During the fall the number of donors at this level increased by almost 50%. Before June 30, 1981 Donna Brace Ogilvie '30 and William Moore, Jr. '45, co-chairmen for the NON SIBI Associates, hope to welcome many more into this group. This form of leadership giving creates a strong base for increased financial support to Andover, and the launching of this new program underscores its importance.

As in past years, the 25 and 50-year classes (1931 and 1956) are mounting special reunion-year gift efforts. They are joined this year by the classes of 1941, 1961 and 1971, as the Alumni Fund begins to expand the very successful Reunion giving program. Early signs of support are strong. All five classes have set ambitious goals for both dollar totals and participation. Reaching these goals requires class committees and lots of hard work.

Broad participation will continue to be the heart of Andover's Alumni Fund. Our goal this year—40% participation—represents a significant increase over last year, but it is an achievable goal. Class Agents, particularly among the more recent classes, are approaching this challenge in creative ways and are hoping for a strong response.

Chairmen Bucklin's and Starratt's message to their agents: "The fall totals for the Alumni Fund give us all a strong foundation on which to seek increased Alumni Fund support for Andover. Our goals are ambitious. Abbot alumnae and Andover alumni, through support of the Alumni Fund, are the margin of difference toward achieving a balanced school budget."

Reunion Chairmen plan

The Reunion Chairmen met as a group in Andover on Saturday, January 17, to plan the 1981 Reunions coming up on June 12, 13 and 14. Russell Thomes '46 and Caroline Greene Donnelly '58 chaired the meeting in the Phillips Room at the Andover Inn. There was general enthusiasm for the proposal to give focus to Reunion weekend through seminars offering a closer look at the role the arts play at Andover. Abbot and Andover reuniting alumni (the years ending in 1 or 6) will have the opportunity to participate actively in one of a number of Saturday afternoon "classes" on theatre, music, or the visual arts, directed by Andover faculty, perhaps in concert with some alumni.

The new features of Reunion '81 will be in addition to the Alumni-Faculty Dinner and the class parties, with plenty of food, drink, and good cheer, a time and place to find old friends and new!

Brad Kliber: one arm, three seasons

by John Burgess '81

Senior Brad Kliber

Brad Kliber was born with one arm. The doctors believed that Brad's handicap, an undeveloped stump for a right arm, would hinder his personal development. Yet today at 17 Brad leads more than a normal active life and has been a three-season varsity and JV athlete. However, Brad's trail to success has not been an easy one. Born and raised in Missoula, Montana, Brad is one of three children born to Rev. and Mrs. William Kliber. A few years after Brad was born his parents brought him to a doctor who dealt with prosthetic limbs and fitted Brad with an artificial arm. The limb has two metal claw-like fingers which open and close, similar to a pair of tongs, enabling Brad to pick up many small objects. After hours of practice, Brad was able to maneuver his arm, almost as well as one does with a real arm.

As Brad grew older, his friends and doctors believed that he would be unable to play active sports such as football, baseball, and swimming. One would think this skepticism would have had an inhibiting impact on Brad's development, but it did not. His father, a Methodist minister, was instrumental in helping Brad overcome the problems involved with his handicap. Brad believed that his strong faith in God would help him in overcoming what at that time seemed to be a painful burden. Brad became more accustomed to his handicap and soon began to amaze his friends and doctors with his accomplishments.

Brad was quickly able to compete with other children his own age on an equal basis. In third grade he played Pee-Wee baseball and by the time he was in the sixth grade he was playing Little Grizzly football and swimming on the local swim team. Off the playing fields, Brad's development was equally impressive. He was an honor roll student and in the ninth grade was the president of his school.

In 1978 Brad came to Andover as a lower-middler, and played junior varsity football his first term. In winter term, he tried out for the varsity swim team and won a spot on the squad. Every day, prior to practice, he would harness a plastic fin-like arm to his shoulder, enabling him to swim. He was the only lower to make the varsity team. In the spring, when Brad competed on the JV baseball team, his style was unique. He would catch the ball in the glove on his left hand, tuck the glove under his vestige of a right arm, pick the ball from the glove with the now-free left hand, and rifle it to his waiting teammate for the out. He had energy and initiative for more than athletics. Brad started the first chapter of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes at Andover, and became its president.

In his upper year, he made the varsity football squad, but it was as a senior that he has come into his own on the gridiron. This year Brad stands 6'2" tall and weighs a solid 210 pounds. He started as offensive guard on the varsity, which finished the year with a 4-2-1 record. His offensive line coach, Andrew Kline, saw where that achievement came from: "Brad played JV football as a lower and did OK; but as an upper he didn't see much action on the varsity squad because he lacked quickness and upper body strength. So he simply went to work with weight lifting and running. Through sheer determination and hard work he acquired the agility, quickness and upper body strength he needed. He is handicapped, because a one-armed person just doesn't have the balance and leverage of a two-armed person. So he has to compensate by being near-perfect at the straight-ahead blocking we used so much in our power running attack. He's also very strong at pass blocking. Brad contributed a lot to our team effort with his sense of humor, perspective and spirit. I've never seen him in a bad mood. He's a very funny guy and he kept us all loose."

Brad's swimming on varsity again this year. His primary events are the sprints—the 100 and 50-yard freestyle—and he's a member of the relay team. He didn't swim competitively last year, notes Chuck Willand '70, co-coach with Jack McClement: "In his upper year, Brad decided his studies couldn't afford the time commitment of swimming. But this year, with that under control he came back with a new prosthesis, made the time commitment swimming requires and came out again: I really respect that." Coach McClement simply notes that "to work with Brad Kliber is a real joy. He's out there every morning at 6 a.m. for the optional early morning practices. He does everything you can ask of him and he never lets up on himself. In his attitude and his performance he's a real inspiration to every kid on the team."

In another line, Brad's also been asked to direct the school's talent show, thanks to his sense of humor. He is very humble about his achievements and is indeed a true inspiration to all of us here at Andover. Through his determination and personal strength, Brad Kliber is one remarkable person.

Winter sports in progress

by Stephen Demibitzer '81

During winter term, Andover sports seven varsity teams, a far cry from fall term, where only two team sports, football and soccer, manage to capture campus-wide interest. Just before mid-season, two boys' teams and two girls' teams remain undefeated and untied.

Boys teams range from hockey and basketball to skiing and squash. Coach Chris Gurry's hockey team started weak, but came back strong, with an important win over Yale. The basketball season has gotten off to an impressive start after dropping its opening game. With mild-mannered Kenny Cline '81 scoring points and coach Kalkstein providing encouragement, the team has a 4-1 record, its most recent wins over Deerfield and Exeter. The gymnastics team soundly beat Winthrop High in its only match to date. Squash is having a hard early season, but the superb play of Doug Benedict '82 and Captain Bill Ullman '81 have kept the team in many matches; Coach Hoitsma's young team hopes to make a turnaround in the latter part of the season.

In spite of key injuries, the wrestling team has won all three of its meets so far, with energetic coach Nicholas Kip working his team at a frantic rate. The track team is very impressive—undefeated in five starts, while setting an unofficial mile relay record. The combined Nordic and Alpine ski teams, coached by George Best and Diane McNab, have shown promise in their early races. Boys' swimming possesses great individual raw talent, though it started slowly. The team is led by Scott Malcolm '82 (son of Miller D. '50), who set a New England record in the 100-meter breaststroke.

The girls have fared well indeed, with three teams still undefeated. Coach John Chivers' girls' hockey team, trying to repeat its perfect record of last year, has a mark of two wins and two ties thus far. Basketball is unbeaten in its first five games this season, under senior co-captains Laura Bull and Frannie Trafton (daughter of Willis A. '36). The squash team, led by number one senior Mary Hulbert (daughter of Richard '47), has a 4-0 record and the capability to go undefeated for the year. The gymnastics team has placed second in a tri-meet, has won one and lost one. Girls' skiing has fared well, with Mary Ogden '82 supplying a large share of the leading places. Finally, Coach Diane Souvaine's swimming team, like the boys, has performed admirably in the face of tough competition (most schools set much longer practice times for swimmers, both boys and girls). This year the girls have Leslie Boileau, a new lower who has set the New England record in the 100 meter breaststroke.

NEPSAC award to Harrison

History Instructor Ted Harrison '38 was recently awarded the Martin William Souders Memorial Award by the New England Preparatory Schools Athletic Council (NEPSAC). Established in 1967 in memory of Mr. Souders, Director of Physical Education at Milton Academy from 1919-29 and at Exeter from 1930-62, and first president of NEPSAC, the award is given annually to a graduate of a New England independent school who "made a distinguished record in sports and who since then has made a distinguished record in life through his ideals, leadership and accomplishments."

Small fire, large lesson

A fire that began at 9:20 p.m. one December evening in Day Hall South was detected, contained to one suite of boys' rooms, and put out before it could spread or injure anyone. The cause of the fire was a cheap plastic lamp with too large a bulb in it. The dorm was evacuated, the Andover Fire Department was on the scene within three minutes, and the blaze extinguished and the smoke cleared away. The cost of repairing the damage to the room and its furniture was about $6,000—nearly the amount of a full year's scholarship.

What the fire did do was underscore the efforts of Thomas Rees, faculty fire marshal, to raise the campus safety consciousness. The Andover fire inspector went through the dorm immediately, pointing out the dangers of students' trying to get around fire regulations that sound petty, but can save lives. No heating appliances whatsoever are allowed in students' rooms. Those attractive India import "tapestries" that brighten up a room can help burn it up, if they are not treated with fire retardant and hung absolutely flat against a wall.

"We were very lucky it wasn't worse," Dean of Residence David Cobb pointed out. "It was a good lesson for us, and we're thankful it wasn't more expensive, particularly in human terms."

Class Secretary openings

During the fall I have been trying to fill some of the gaps in Andover's and Abbot's Class Secretary ranks. The Class Secretary is the news gatherer and reporter for each class, maintaining an important link between the class and the school. Our office provides class lists, supplies, news about classmates and moral support.

Several classes still do not have Secretaries; I invite any members of the following classes who wish to serve in this important and rewarding position to contact me:

Andover 1917	Abbot 1943
Abbot 1921	Abbot 1945
Abbot 1924	Abbot 1950
Abbot 1926	Abbot 1951
Andover 1929	Abbot 1959
Abbot 1939	Abbot 1964
Abbot 1942

Many thanks.

Vice President Bush at Andover for Fuess Award

More than 2500 people thronged the Case Memorial Cage to see the Fuess Award for Distinguished Public Service presented to George Bush '42 on January 10, ten days before he was inaugurated as Vice President of the United States.

"The founders of this school dreamed about a marriage of learning and doing where students would both know and do good things. In their words, 'goodness without knowledge is weak and feeble; yet knowledge without goodness is dangerous; and that both united form the noblest character and lay the surest foundation of usefulness to mankind.' As we struggle with these words, it is helpful to have a vital example before us, a person who has wrestled with the best that learning offers and the most difficult that doing demands. Such a person is George Bush, and that is why we gather to honor him today. . . .

"He served this school for twelve years as a Charter Trustee. He served his country as a Navy flyer during World War II, as a Congressman from Texas, as an Ambassador to the United Nations, and as a Special Envoy to China. His own unquestioned integrity allowed him to restore that of the Republican National Committee when he served as its Chairman after Watergate. His strong sense of ethics allowed the CIA to regain public support when he assumed its Directorship. George Bush serves without letting privilege be a sanctuary.

"Now you stand before us as the Vice President-elect of these United States. We wish you Godspeed in your new office, and for your distinguished and compassionate life of public service, your school is proud to honor you with the Claude Moore Fuess Award."

25th Reunion Class welcomes McNemars

Sizer Baton to McNemar

There was a strong sense of paths crossing throughout Andover's Commencement and Reunions this June. A strong senior class of 425 young men and women seemed to treasure every ceremony and ritual of their leaving from Andover, conscious that their headmaster was graduating with them. During the following two days of Reunion, Andover and Abbot were able to wish Ted Sizer farewell and godspeed in his new educational venture and to greet Andover's 13th headmaster, Donald McNemar, and his wife Britta. They, in turn, were at the point of leaving their separate administrative posts at Dartmouth College for Andover.

Since then Headmaster and Mrs. McNemar and their daughters Galen, 6, and Heather, 4, have moved into Phelps House. Don McNemar already has served as Clerk of the Board at his first meeting of the Trustees of Phillips Academy, July 7-8.

After a vacation in August, the McNemars will take up their duties at Andover, he as headmaster and an instructor in the Department of History and the Social Sciences, she to join the College Counseling staff as assistant director.

Meanwhile the Sizers have moved back to their home on Sheehan Drive in nearby Harvard, MA (Box 274, Harvard 01451). Nancy Sizer will continue as a PA instructor in history. From a base in Cambridge, Ted will conduct his Study of High Schools, which already has attracted wide public interest and foundation support (see Faculty Notes).

Andover has received a grant package of $316,400 from the Ford Foundation; a $150,000 grant provides $75,000 a year, this summer and next summer, to support (MS)²; Andover's three-summer program for urban minority high school students talented in math and science; the remaining $166,400 represents complete funding, for two summers, of a planned Andover-Dartmouth Institute of Teachers of Secondary School Mathematics, a model program to begin in 1982. The Ford grant is the largest of several recent grants relating to (MS)².

Ford's (MS)² grant covers close to half of this summer's Math & Science for Minority Students program; with other existing grants it brought 87 students to the campus this month, some for their third year in the program, and will similarly support (MS)² next summer, along with existing grants from other foundations and corporations and new ones Andover is seeking. With PA's Elwin Sykes as director, the program is in its fifth summer; its ultimate purpose is to help remedy the underrepresentation of minorities in engineering, medicine and science.

The Andover-Dartmouth Institute for Teachers in Secondary School Mathematics, an outgrowth of Andover's (MS)² commitment, will begin next summer. Its central objective will be to help 9th and 10th grade math teachers from inner city high schools prepare themselves to teach higher level math courses in their school, with effectiveness and soundly based confidence. Mathematics Instructor Frank Eccles '43, who will direct the institute, notes that Dartmouth's co-sponsorship in an advisory capacity means that the institute will be able to meet the teachers' continuing education requirements. Ideally, he said the two Ford Foundation sponsored programs, (MS)² and the Teachers' Institute, will be mutually reinforcing.

Commencement

by Helen Martin Eccles

As graduation approached, this 1981 class, seniors who had shown they could take school leadership seriously also took their leave-taking of Andover seriously. Together the uppers and seniors instituted a Senior Leave-taking service at Cochran Chapel a week before Graduation. "We wanted to give the student body a chance to say goodbye to the seniors," explained Upper Chuck Richardson. "It's important for the school to have a strong senior class." The sense of mutual appreciation during Commencement week was strong.

At his last Commencement as headmaster, Ted Sizer paused to recognize "three pioneers in the Class of 1981: Xiao-Kun Liu, Jingbo Yu and Ye-Hong Zhang, of the People's Republic of China." They, as well as Paiboon Mahaisavariya, the King's Scholar from Thailand, won Senior Honors in mathematics and/or science, despite the immense language and culture gap they faced when they came to Andover last fall. "With a rare kind of courage, grace and good humor," Sizer told them, "you have served your school here well and your country well."

Four major senior awards are given at Commencement.

The Yale Bowl, Andover's oldest Commencement Award, was won by Katrinka Leschey, a cum laude senior from Cape Elizabeth, Maine, Inter-scholastic champion and undefeated at Andover in cross-country competition. The Faculty Prize went to Susanna Rinehart of Charlottesville, Virginia; she also holds a John Motley Morehead Scholarship from the University of North Carolina.

The Aurelian Honor Society Prize

and the Madam Sarah Abbot Award winners are nominated by the faculty and chosen by the senior class. Shi Kyun Roh of Bloomsburg, Pennsylvania won the Madam Sarah Abbot Award. Headmaster Sizer presented the Aurelian Honor Society Prize to Howard Lebowitz of Andover, "who has done an absolutely extraordinary job of developing the office of the School Presidency and has served this Academy extraordinarily well."

In his last Commencement address at Phillips Academy, Headmaster Theodore R. Sizer borrowed the analogy of an aerial photograph of the Andover campus to tell the 425 seniors graduating with him that a different viewpoint changes the whole scale of things; the perspective of time would alter their perception of what was important about their Andover years.

"Whether you got a high SAT score will be less important than the ability to sort out a complex problem and articulate it well." To this senior class with which he has a special kinship of graduating together, Ted Sizer urged the subtler values, the qualities that sum up character.

"A person's character is a manifestation of her or his commitment. One important commitment—and a central one for schools—is to truth. . . . The integrity that comes from truth-telling is the heart of character. The extent that Andover exhibited candor and honesty in its institutional and personal life will be important to you.

"As a touchstone of character, generosity ranks with truth-telling.

Empathy is its beginning" As their values of generosity of spirit and empathy emerged more boldly, he predicted, "the extraordinary quality of many of Andover's faculty will be freshly apparent. Andover teachers are fine scholars: such is obvious. But the level of their caring for you, and their restraint and willingness to accommodate their lives to your agendas, is truly remarkable. . . . I hope you have learned well from them of generosity."

"In our most private and honest moments we know we're on this planet for a reason. Truth and generosity are part of it. Courage is more. . . .

Andover has believed in you, a high but deserved compliment. Now it is for you to believe, to have the character to serve wisely and well. Godspeed and good luck."

At the joint 25th Reunion of Andover and Abbot 1956, several PA alumni, looking through the scrapbook of an Abbot alumna, came upon their own signatures on her tea dance program. Now there's nostalgia for you! The 50-year Andover and Abbot Class of '31 hobnobbed both separately and together: Abbot '31 holed up Friday evening at Abby Kemper's to laugh over old class movies of Abbot and of tobogganing and showshoeing during the winter week at Intervale with Miss Bertha Bailey. The Andover and Abbot Class of '71 spent Saturday night working its way through lobsters and steamers from a classmate's new seafood store and restaurant. And so on.

Record attendance—approximately 850 people—enhanced the pleasure of reuniting classes from 1916 and 1921 through to 1976. Also, Andover's new headmaster came to Reunions. The Sizers' reception at the Addison Gallery Friday evening gave hundreds of alumni the chance to meet and talk with Don and Britta McNemar, and also see the exhibits still up from the Addison Celebration.

The Alumni Seminars, and some other options offered this Reunion Weekend, attracted enough attendance and enthusiasm to establish them in the school's Reunion planning for the future. Not everyone wants to run a 2.2 mile race in the middle of Andover Reunion, but six-year-old Gus Quattlebaum did and so did Howard Huntress '26 and about 38 others including faculty member Tom Francis '75, overall winner, and Don Smith, husband of Sybil Smith '61, who finished next.

Reunion Classes first met Friday afternoon for receptions in groups of two and three classes, hosted by the Sizers, the Stotts, the McKees, the Harrisons and the Royces: then they all met together for the Alumni-Faculty buffet in the Flagstaff Court. There were individual class gatherings hosted by the Reunion Chairmen after the reception for the McNemars.

The elements of the Saturday morning Reunion program were familiar but served up in somewhat new form. After the Alumni Memorial Service, with Richard Jordan '36 and Alexandra Kubler-Merrill '56 assisting, the Alumni Parade stepped off earlier than usual and headed for the Athletic Complex, but not to the luncheon. The reuniting classes were ushered instead into the Annual Meeting of the Alumni Association at 11 a.m. When business was over, a picnic-style luncheon with beer and soda pop was served outdoors, where tables and chairs were scattered on the green area in front of the Athletic Complex and Bulfinch, and toward the Bell Tower. Alumni Relations Officer Mary Comfort Stevens explains: "The idea of separating the annual meeting from the luncheon was to give each legitimacy in its own right. We held the meeting first: that meant the luncheon outdoors could be completely informal, and people could linger there and talk as long as they wanted."

After lunch alumni could and did become involved in one of five Alumni Seminars, this year concerning the Arts at Andover, in honor of the Addison Gallery's 50th anniversary: Visual Arts, Music, Dance, Theatre and Media. Others were involved in sports or in conversation. Later in the afternoon, alumnus Alan Durfee '61 got back into the Belltower for the first time in years to give a carillon recital; the 2.2 mile Reunion Classic around the school campus and fields was started in front of the Addison; and Abbot alumnae converged down School Street at Morton House for the Abbot Tea, before the joint Class Dinners Saturday evening.

Annual Meeting of the Alumni Alumni Council President William Rosenau '47 ran the 1981 annual meeting, largest in history. He reported that four new Andover-Abbot regional associations are forming, in Philadelphia, Chicago, Detroit and Denver, hard on the heels

An Open Letter to Bill Rosenau from Ted Sizer

Dear Bill,

I'd like in this personal and yet public way to express my thanks to all our alumni and alumnae for stalwart, even legendary, support of the Academy, of my headmastership and of me personally over these last nine years.

The first big test for us all was the Phillips-Abbot merger in 1973. That act was a leap of faith: much here on this hill had to be changed to accommodate the 'joinder', and it was changed. Many alumni wanted coeducation; others didn't. Many alumnae wanted coeducation, but with Abbot retained: for the Abbot constituency the options were particularly complex and risky.

We tried to create a 'new' Andover worthy of both its predecessors and more than their mere sum. The graduates of both schools gave significant support to our effort, looking forward as much or more as looking back. I'm particularly grateful for the stalwart support of the key Phillips—and poignantly the Abbot alumnae and Trustees. These latter must have felt that they walked a lonely and vulnerable road at first. Their courage has well served the long term interests of the education of young women and young men at this Academy.

And there was the Bicentennial. You happily flooded us at the Celebration. You enjoyed the Allis and Lloyd histories. And you confounded the experts by raising for our school over $52,000,000, a unique and signal achievement in American independent secondary education. Thousands of you were actively involved in this great effort.

I leave Andover as your 12th headmaster with a rush of conflicting feelings. Gratefulness: I've learned much here, and have been supported by alumni, alumnae, Trustees, faculty, staff and students in remarkable ways. Concern: even as we are in solid, 'in-the-black' condition, with the deficits accumulated at the merger shrinking, with a strong program even as the cost-per-student has dropped, with a flood of able applicants, both to be students and to be faculty members, with a good public "face": we may yet experience rocky times ahead. Inflation remains a nemesis, and the interest—benign and not-so-benign—of American politics in private schools has its dangers as well as its possible advantages. Optimism: PA has the strength to be a leader, and has a new headmaster of great promise. And idealism: This place is one that believes in young people and in the power of schools to help them grow. It is a place that stands both for intellectual rigor and compassion and for democracy. Those worthy goals are what make Andover special. I've been part of Andover for nine years, and will continue my commitment in the special role of an honorary member of the Classes of 1928 and 1981.

Secretary of the Academy

Fred Stott '36 will retire next June as Secretary of the Academy. In trying to fill his shoes, Andover needs the help and advice of its alumni. Headmaster Don McNemar has appointed a committee chaired by Alumni Council President William Rosenau '47 to seek recommendations from all quarters for this position so vital to the school and to its alumni.

The prime responsibility of the Office of Secretary of the Academy is to develop and secure the financial and human support of the Academy, enabling it to sustain and increase its educational strengths and to function with a maximum of independence. The individual filling the office must have a broad understanding of the Academy and its role in society, and be able to convey and advocate this in a variety of situations—on public platforms, in private conversations, in reunion gatherings or personal correspondence or in public print.

The Secretary of the Academy must share full confidence with the headmaster and administrative officers who direct the educational work which is the mission of the school and of the Trustees who bear its ultimate responsibility. In practical terms the Secretary of the Academy directs the Office of Academy Resources—encompassing development, alumni affairs and publications—with management responsibility for directing the efforts of its administrative and office staff of approximately 20 people.

Sandra Urie Thorpe '70, Associate Secretary of the Academy for Alumni and Parent Affairs, will be executive secretary of this search committee. All recommendations for Phillips Academy's next Secretary of the Academy should be sent to her, and will be kept confidential. The committee is meeting this summer in order to get the search under way as soon as possible.

of Washington and Northern California. The agenda of 1981-82 Alumni Council, Oct. 15-17, will be chiefly to discuss budget-balancing and affordability of programs, and give Headmaster McNemar a chance to make his ideas known to the Council. Rosenau reminded everyone that Fred Stott will be retiring as Secretary of the Academy and Director of Development in June, 1982, and he urged alumni to forward suggestions for Fred's replacement to Associate Secretary Sandra Urie Thorpe '70. "Surely, we'll have more than a few good applicants from more than 17,500 alumni."

Carol Greene Donnelly '58 and Russ Thomas '46, co-chairmen of Reunions and Class Secretaries, announced the winner of the 1891 Bowl for the highest percentage of Reunion returnees: the 50-year Andover & Abbot Class of 1931, with 38%. In fact, Abbot '31 had 50% of its members in attendance. The 5-year Class of 1976 had the highest number of actual alumni at Reunions—75, and the alumnus who had attended the most Reunions was, to no one's surprise, Sumner Smith '08. Four alumni share honors for coming from the greatest distance: D. Chadwick Braggiotti '31 from Ecuador; Julian Herrey '56 from Germany; Gordon Humphreys '51 from England and Robert Keith '51 from Venezuela. Co-chairmen Donnelly and Thomas added a new category, Early Advocates of Merger, to recognize Abbot-Andover couples present: Fonty (Flagg) '26 and George Sanborn '24; Mary (Trafton) '36 and John Simonds '36; Frankie (Young) '57 and Oscar Tang '56; and Mollie (Lupe) '56 and Garland Lasater '56. The Lasaters gave an amusing account of the culture shock that Abbot and Andover in the '50s represented to adolescents coming east from the Lone Star State.

Alumni Fund

The 175 Class Agents are to be congratulated. Julie Schaffler Bucklin '48 and Richard C. Starratt '54 reported a banner year for the Alumni Fund. A total of 6109 Andover and Abbot alumni gave a total of $825,989 in unrestricted annual giving to Andover this year. Abbot graduates gave more than $50,000 for the first time in Abbot history. To the Abbot total of $50,636, the new Abbot Matching Plan adds $26,950 for a total Abbot alumnae gift of $77,586.46. It was also a record year for Abbot participation, with more than 1000 donors.

Dick Starratt reported on three new programs for the Alumni Fund this year. He noted that the first student-led Alumni Fund Phonathon, which took place in May, was one aspect of the development of student responsibility under Ted Sizer; Starratt reported that the Non Sibi Associates, which is a leadership giving program developed by Bill Moore '45 and Donna Brace Ogilvie '30, had a membership of 167 in its first year, representing more than $200,000 for the Alumni Fund. In the third new program, expanded Reunion giving, the 10th, 20th and 40th Reunions had Reunion gifts for the first time, and all three classes exceeded the dollar total of any of their previous giving years except for the 1941's 25th Reunion Gift in 1966.

In the Class of 1941 under Joe Vaamonde, Josephine Hartwell Boddington and Julie Nelson Williams, 120 people gave over $20,000. For the Class of 1961, under

Major Reunion Gifts

The 25th Reunion Class of 1956, with Jane Tatman Walker and David Zurn as Agents, gave $67,000 to Andover as its 25th Reunion Gift.

For the Class of 1931, Emily Bullock of Abbot and PA's Ed and Norm King presented the school with $54,000 as a 50th Reunion Gift.

"I'm just tremendously pleased," said Sandy Thorpe, Associate Secretary of the Academy for Alumni and Parent Affairs. "This was a year of real growth and new programs that were very successful. The growth shows in the donor increase of 10% and in the dollar increases too. In the Student Phonathon 98 seniors talked to nearly 1,000 alumni. It gave the alumni a chance to learn from students about the school now, and it gave the seniors a chance to work for the Alumni Fund and see what alumni support of the school is all about.

"There was also tremendous growth in the Parent Fund, under the leadership of Tony and Nancy Ullman, parents of Bill '81 and Tom '83. The Parent Fund Committee raised $130,387 from 625 donors—a 50% increase over the previous year's dollar total."

New Officers

Two Alumni Council officers completed their tours of duty at the Association's annual meeting. Dick Starratt will be replaced as co-chairman of the Alumni Fund, where he and Julie Bucklin, have had three record-breaking years, by Clint Kendrick '61. Russ Thomes also steps down after this record-breaking year as co-chairman of Reunions and Class Secretaries: Ken McDonald '50 will join Carol Donnelly in that post. Handmade Andover clocks were presented to Starratt and Thomes, in appreciation of well-spent time, and devoted support of their school.

Headmaster's Report

Outgoing Headmaster Ted Sizer shared with alumni three convictions gained from his nine years work with Andover faculty and students that he would take to his new work of trying to understand American high schools:

First, that at any school the faculty is the key; not political forms or facilities or special programs. The heart of a school is teachers—fine teachers who can motivate unwilling students and push students farther than they think they can go, insisting they do their best. A key element, besides ability, must be generosity, the patience to work with adolescents and stay with them.

Second: that there is a great difference between the attitude of the kids who choose to come here, and those who go to a local school because they have to: that opting in, as Andover students in the regular session and the (MS)² students in the summer do, is a better basis for commitment and motivation than compulsion. Finally, Sizer said, he has become convinced of the importance of stability: standards consistent over time, of programs not at the mercy of change or constantly shifting rules. "Difficult things take commitment and commitment takes time. Tradition prevents too much ambiguity."

(MS)². Director of Foundation and Corporate Support Patricia Edmonds notes that this is due in part to the Geraldine Rockefeller Dodge Foundation, one of the program's earliest supporters. The Dodge Foundation has made a new $150,000 grant that challenges Andover to seek sustaining corporate support of (MS)². Since December three corporations have made scholarship grants for students: Bristol-Myers (2), Morgan Guaranty Trust (6) and Polaroid (1). Borg-Warner gave the first (MS)² scholarship, for a Chicago student, during the Bicentennial Campaign.

More recently the Hearst Foundation, the first to support Andover in 1977, has made its fourth grant, $25,000, and the Joyce Foundation of Chicago has made a grant of $30,675. $25,000 is a challenge grant for matching funds from other Chicago Foundations and corporations, and $5,765 for a jointly sponsored one-day conference in Chicago, with the hope of encouraging similar programs in that city.

Drake Heads Planned Giving

Philip Drake '43

During the Bicentennial Campaign more than 40 percent of the campaign total of $52 million was in the form of bequests, real estate, life insurance or gifts of appreciated stock, and gifts which provide for donors a life income. To help alumni and alumnae understand the various benefits of these different types of gifts, the Planned Giving committee was formed in early 1981. In addition to providing overall direction for Planned Giving, the committee will sponsor programs providing information about the advantages of a variety of charitable gifts.

Chairman of the committee is Philip M. Drake '43, alumni trustee and a senior partner in the lawn firm of Cummings & Lockwood of Stamford, CT. Other members: James B. Ames '28, John L. Cooper '31, Philip Eiseman '21, Richard A. Kimball '48, Paul Nash '49, Myndie H. Nutting '40, Richard J. Phelps '46, Silas Spengler '49, Bernard C. Welch '42.

The Planned Giving committee is sponsoring workshops and seminars this summer in Boston and New York for Class Agents, Addison campaign volunteers, and the Alumni Fund committee of the Alumni Council.

The Long View of the School

Beginning with music at the Library

On May 1, the Andover Trustees gathered at the Oliver Wendell Holmes Library, then in Commons, for a festive, black-tie dinner evening that was another rite of passage; they were celebrating the contributions of two retiring Charter Trustees, Trustee President Donald H. McLean, Jr., '28 and John L. Cooper '31, and also their departing Clerk, 12th Headmaster Theodore R. Sizer.

It was an historic gathering, but also a family affair. All the former term Trustees were invited, as well as Charter and Emeriti Trustees, current Alumni Trustees, and spouses. This was a reunion of friends who have worked especially closely with the Trustees over the past 25 years: the quarter century of Donald McLean's deep involvement with the fortunes of Phillips Academy. The continuity at that celebration stretched from Trustee Emeritus Sumner Smith '08, an Andover student when the Theological Seminary owned most of the buildings on the Hill, to the Board's incoming Clerk and 13th Headmaster, Donald W. McNemar.

The theme of the evening, embellished with music and reminiscence, was the examination of these three Trustees' extraordinary records of achievement. The underlying theme that emerged was the meaning of trusteeship itself—the quiet but crucial role of the Board in providing continuity and inner stability, that rudder that keeps an institution on its course.

When the 23 years of Donald McLean's trusteeship were surveyed, heartfelt tribute was paid to this central figure of Andover's last quarter-century, whose Trustee presidency has spanned the most critical and sensitive period in Andover's modern history. During the uncertainties of the transition period following John Kemper's death, McLean's courage and strength of character held things together, said his close friend, R. E. Ireland III; after Ted Sizer's election as headmaster came the major initiatives of coeducation, the Academy's 200th Celebration, and the enormous effort of the Bicentennial Campaign and, finally, the choice of a new headmaster. Citing McLean's dedication, Ireland called him a "Rock of Gibraltar, a counselor, whose wisdom is sought by all ages and manners of people." A great gift book of letters to Don McLean, from 60 admirers who have worked long and closely with him for Andover, spells this out in detail. The baseball bat and glove? That speaks of the close camaraderie of longtime friends who know how McLean feels about the Red Sox.

Honoring John Cooper, his fellow Trustees paid tribute to a man who has spent the last ten years as Chairman of their Finance Committee—the nexus of Trustee responsibility for the Academy's endowment—without losing his cool. Trustee Charles Meyer '35, who follows him in this post, suggested that Jack Cooper has had plenty of chance to display character, because in those difficult ten years the nation's economic behavior has defied any attempts to use history as a basis of market predictability. Yet, said Meyer, "while inflation and interest and energy prices have shattered all precepts, you maintained your nerve and guided us wisely—steady hand, cool advice." Secretary of the Academy Frederic A. Stott '36 handed the retired chairman of Massachusetts Diversified Services and Massachusetts Investment Trust a giant stock certificate making him "undisputed owner of an unknown number of shares of Phillips Academy." Stott suggested they might be redeemed for an unknown number of Phillips Academy acres, "subject to their removal from this Hilltop!"

Charter Trustee John U. Monroe '30 addressed his remarks to Theodore

Sizer and assured him, "These have been a remarkable nine years for our school. Andover has indeed been a place of learning, a place of joy. . . . Our Principal Teacher is leaving because in his makeup and approach to a task there is a cycle—of imagination, vision, energy, deed and accomplishment—which best suits both him and the task. And he sees his Andover cycle nearly complete. But even more he is leaving to attempt a new and larger task, the improvement of the American high school. We admire your goal while we regret the necessity of your going from this Hill—so we rejoice that you have been here, Principal Teacher."

Special presentations recognized the extraordinary contributions these three Trustees have made to the long-run strength of Andover. Tim Ireland presented them with silver dies of the school seal, each with a name struck into the obverse side. Their wives received individual ceramic bowls made by potter Audrey Bensley. Finally, three large and beautiful color aerial photographs of the Andover campus were given to these three men, who have long watched over the interest of this school. The pictures each look at the campus from a different viewpoint; but all take the long view of the school—and that is the essence of trusteeship. The party closed with the singing of "America," composed by Samuel Smith, 1832.

The Trustees approved the Monroe Doctrine on Ted Sizer.

Addison Celebrates and Launches Drive

by Helen M. Eccles

The Addison Gallery's Glorious 50th Birthday Celebration began on the first warm day in May as a lawn picnic in the Elm Arch, like an updated version of an outdoor scene by American Impressionist Maurice Prendergast, hanging in the Gallery. The Celebration was colorful, and graphically correct: the picnic lunchboxes (and even the hardboiled eggs) matched the colors of the Addison celebration banner, hung from the pediment of the Gallery's facade. Students, alumni, faculty, townspeople, and artists were there. Old friends of the Addison were there like Director Emeritus Bart Hayes '21, and New York gallery director Antoinette Kraushaar, who was present at the Addison's first opening in 1931, with Charles Sawyer '24. Alumni came who have stayed in the art world—cartoonist Bill Hamilton '58, art publisher Bob Feldman '54, filmmaker Hollis Frampton '54, architect and designer and filmmaker Peter Chermayeff '53, and Loomis-Chaffee headmaster John Ratte '53, who led an afternoon seminar.

Inside the Gallery itself were special anniversary exhibits, the Addison's masterworks and contemporary work, such as Sandy Skoglund's "Radioactive Cats," an environmental sculpture that was both effective and a bit unsettling. In the big back gallery upstairs a water color workshop carried on all afternoon for visitors. This underscored, on this important anniversary, that Andover was celebrating artistic process as well as product—that close connection the Addison's directors always have made between looking at great art and making art one's self. A tentful of art work from half a dozen secondary schools was one of the most popular exhibits.

Outdoors, strange forms were on parade—a 30-foot Uncle Sam on stilts, and giant masks of the Bread & Puppet Theater—and more art workshops flourished.

"The Addison is a jewel of unparalleled quality and vitality, one of the treasures of the American tradition. We gather here today to re-establish as firmly as possible a commitment to the arts, as an essential part of our lives and as a major thread in the life of this school for which the Addison Gallery is the original provocation." With these words, Headmaster Ted Sizer launched the Addison Gallery's first fund drive: a campaign for $4.765 million to re-endow the museum, supporting acquisitions, programs and staff, and necessary improvements. Advance gifts total $1,016,458.91, more than 20 percent of the overall goal. The Addison campaign's chairman is Robert Walker '28, longtime head of Swarthmore's Art History Department. Martha McLean announced a birthday gift of $50,000 from the Merrimack Valley Addison

Committee to provide expanded programs for the museum in the coming year, and students donated a heavy box of quarters, representing "a quarter from every youth, from Andover's Youth from every Quarter."

Headmaster-elect Donald W. McNemar was on hand all day to endorse the Addison campaign. "An important part of education," he observed, "is instilling standards, a love of beauty, and concern for the future; and the Addison Gallery is central to this effort."

It was a great day for the Addison, a celebration of five decades of encounters between lively adolescents, the Addison's great works of American art and the Academy's great teachers, from Pat Morgan to Diz Bensley '43 and Art Department Chairman Robert Lloyd and their colleagues.

The dinner speaker was Robert Coles, Harvard psychiatrist, Pulitzer Prize-winning author of Children in Crisis, and two years a visiting faculty member at the Addison Gallery's summer institutes in art therapy. Dr. Coles described museums as forces for peace and wholeness in communities.

He spoke movingly of the healing role that the simple experience of drawing can play in the therapy of disturbed children. The theme of peace was expressed again after dinner in the Bread & Puppet Theater's production, Swords and Ploughshares, using primitive forms and enormous mythic shapes of great theatricality.

Finally, the creative forces inspired by the Celebration cut loose at the Beaux Arts Costume Ball, in the Case Cage, where faculty, students and alumni mixed it up as cavalier and courtesan and winged Lucifer.

21,325 dollars and 2,600 hours—were they worth it?

A very satisfied high school student tells what the last four years have meant to him. While he, of course, can only talk about the school he's attended, what he has to say speaks for many of this year's graduating seniors.

By William D. Kummel
Special to The Christian Science Monitor

Andover, Mass.

By the time I graduate in June my parents will have spent $21,325 on tuition. I will have sat in class for nearly 2,600 hours and will have studied in excess of 3,000 hours. I am not a college student but rather a student at Phillips Academy (Andover, Mass.), a private New England boarding school. In reviewing my four years at Andover a question continues to drift in the back of my head.

Has it been worth it?

I am sure that someone could answer the question in cost vs. college placement, but I cannot. A boarding school is designed to be much more than a giant combine that is fed teenagers, money, and parental support and produces acceptance letters from Harvard, Yale, and Princeton.

Andover has been worth it. My decision is not based upon my admission into an Ivy League college. First, at this writing, I do not know where I am going next year, and second, I applied to only one of those elite institutions. College placement is only a small—even superficial—element of my Andover experience.

Andover consists of many experiences both in and out of the classroom. Academically, Andover is diverse and demanding. Flipping through the Course of Study book, one views nearly 300 courses from Advanced Placement Chemistry to Stagecraft.

As a 9th grader, after attending a school where my only curriculum choice was French or Latin in the 7th grade, I was amazed to be given such a selection. I began to appreciate the curriculum at boarding school only when I enrolled in such unique courses as Caribbean Studies and Non-Fiction Writing. Many of these courses I would normally have to wait until college to experience. But at Andover I could take them as an 11th or 12th grader. These courses expanded my perspective, exposing me to other religious, economic, and family structures, while at the same time I was learning to write for commercial publication.

Although the courses themselves are important, much of what I have gained is a result of the exceptional quality and level of instruction. I experienced the Cuban revolution from a young woman who as a little girl was one of the thousands of children listening to Castro bark at them for hours under the hot sun.

My introduction into free-lance writing has been guided by a free-lance writer whose book "Waterman" has been referred to as "the real Chesapeake."

The instructors here expect much out of their students. It is not unusual to have two 1,000-word essays and a test due on the same day. The expectations are high, but the results are impressive, with many of the students writing as well as college students.

Equally extensive are the sports and extracurricular activities. Students participate in sports on either a competitive or noncompetitive basis including crew as well as football.

Some sports such as karate and fencing are taught by students. Although I have never taken great interest in participating in competitive sports, I enjoyed the intramural sports such as crew in the fall and co-ed softball in the spring. Andover's extracurricular program is immense. Its organizations are the same as other day schools such as the Spanish club, drama, student government, and the school newspaper. Unique is the high activity of the organizations, reflecting the intense interest of the students. Every week, for example, there is at least one theatrical production, sometimes three. Students will spend endless time working on sets, direction, lighting, and acting, even creating their own original plays and musicals.

My particular interest lies with The Phillippian, the student newspaper. The commitment is sizable.

During the spring term of my 11th grade year I was spending more than 20 hours a week shooting, processing, editing, and laying out photographs. The newspaper and my role with the organization are important to me, sometimes even more important than my schoolwork.

Every week we have to put out an eight-page paper, at times pulling "all-nighters" to insure The Phillippian will go to press. Those long Wednesday and Thursday nights are not only full of writing and editing, but typesetting, laying out copy, writing headlines, arguing over editorials, "Mac runs," and 3 a.m. drives back from The Harvard Crimson, as well as many laughs and tears in the process.

But every Friday morning we open our boxes, pull out the paper, open it up, and let a small smile slip through the fatigue.

The Phillippian is an integral part of the school, representing the students' uncensored views of Andover. Whereas my interest is with the newspaper, many students work for other organizations with the same loyalty. All of these specialized interests build the school community.

The school community is the heart of Andover. Its extensive facilities and impressive college acceptance record are great, but the real learning is experienced in the community.

I learned much about myself and people at Andover, especially the responsibility of an individual to the community. Andover is not perfect. At times students become lost and disoriented, but they learn to work with the pressures and to overcome them.

As a 9th grader, I drank regularly at school. After evaluating my actions I realized that I could not continue to abuse my independence and the community trust in me. Lately I have learned to overcome academic difficulties that I was encountering. Overcoming my falling grades has brought me closer to the community for it has given me the support when I have needed it.

Living at Andover has developed me as an individual. I came to the school with a self-centered, uninspired attitude, and I believe that I will leave a person who is not only more confident in his abilities but a little more concerned about others.

I wish I could undo some of the things I have done here, but I am satisfied with what I have done with myself at Andover over the last four years. I believe that the time and the expense have been a good investment.

I may see many of the benefits now and some in the future, but I will never be able to appreciate them all because Andover is a part of me.

Darconville's Cat by Alexander Theroux. New York, Doubleday, 1981, 704 pp.

One might do well to set up a standardized test and insert it in copies of Alex Theroux's Darconville's Cat. If you knew, say, that to be stranded on a beach is redundant, you would be allowed to buy the book. If you knew, say again, that, the surf being up, your stranding would be doubly redundant, you would be encouraged to buy the book. If, finally, you cared, the book would be said to be meant for you.

Time and again in this flagrantly erudite (teratogenic, strepitous, lusurious), bristly, semi-autobiographical, redounding novel about the romantic stranding of a young academic, things wonderful and ponderous from the sea of language and literature wash ashore (nates, vovodes, res apti studendo). In fact, ever since Three Wogs, Theroux's amazing, disgruntling diction has been what most provokes comment (catabolism, periopees, procinian).

Nine years later, for this considerably longer work, Theroux has developed a whole new range of styles. He can be exceeding brief (search out the chapter called "A Telephone Call") and exceeding excessive both, and he chooses most often to be the latter, to amplify, to exhaust. The story itself sets a simple enough problem, but as Darconville says, in near extremis, "a problem is always less complex by nature than the solution it requires." The solution to betrayal is apparently portrayal, to forgetting, memory, and this memorable portrayal of Darconville, trapped in an entertainingly woe-begone southern college, fleeing infidelity into the clammy influence of a Harvard misogynist named Crucifer, and thence to an inherited palazzo and death in Italy, is simple enough in itself, the climax being Darconville's decision not to take any but literary vengeance on Isabel and Gilbert Van der Slang. When all is said and done, or said and said, the hero has come to the Humbertian insight that "poets never kill." On the way, however, along with lists, libraries, litanies, diaries, a verse play, a sermon, a fable, and a "grimoire of dark invocations, runes, mantic spells," there are heaps of literary what-not: anti-heroic archery borrowed from Eliot's Daniel Deronda, new appendage chapter and mourning page based on Sterne's Tristram Shandy, a death in Venice, and more Nabokovian trickery than can briefly be adduced.

"You have the gift of impudence," the hateful eunuch Crucifer tells Darconville, "enjoy it. Every man has not the like talent." Not every man has the gift of being able to listen to impudence. Crucifer, we should be warned, is one. What makes the listening easier is the evidence of great care in the writing; 100 chapters; one entitled "What is One Picture Worth?" contains exactly 1,000 words; a chapter "Love" is matched later by one on "Hate;" a chapter (seventh after the middle) imagining wildly what Darconville might do with Isabel is matched by one (seventh from the end) imagining as wildly what he might do to her; and the book hinges at the midway point where Mrs. Van der Slang, a countrified Madame Merle, introduces complications and complicity.

More difficult to deal with, of course, is a feeling of thematic carelessness about the massive dose of misogyny Darconville has absorbed and survived, against which the reader, without the antidote available to only the lover himself, must stand resourceless. Few feminist readers will allow the writer the exculpation he has gently claimed in private that, love and hate cancelling each other out in the book, art remains, doing its precocious services and disservices to memory. Like it or not, the love and the hate are meant to live on as long as the art; we are clearly meant to respond to Darconville's seethings with the awe that Crucifer himself shows in the hushed words: "how he must have loved her."

Whatever the chilling associations of that motive, Theroux has given us some great writing, moments of heaving poignancy, perfected prose. There is, for example, bravura Miltonism in a kite-flying that fails, and a superb accumulation of hisses as Crucifer conjures Darconville's acquiescence. Consider too the simple perfection of the phrase "flaughts of snow" falling and swirling in Venice. According to the Oxford English Dictionary the word contains both flight and flakiness. So does the book. It is nonetheless flaught with difficulty, flaught with significance.

Letters From the Country by Carol Bly '47. Harper, New York, 1981, 184 pp.

Carol McLean '47 married the poet Robert Bly and moved 25 years ago to his western Minnesota homeland, the Lutheran prairie town of Madison. The level of feeling people there permitted themselves seemed as flat as the prairie itself, pressed down. What couldn't be repressed was the activity of Carol Bly's inner life, distilled in this book, and her generous expectations of the same in her neighbors.

In a major review in The New York Times Book Review, May 24, 1981, Noel Perrin of Dartmouth's English Department calls this a spirited and inspiring book:

"It is, however, misnamed. Letters from the Country sounds like one of those sentimental reports back to the city that tell of harmony with nature, rural virtue and all that. But Mrs. Bly's book is not a report, not sentimental and not aimed at cities. It's a clarion call, fine silver notes, meant to resound along a thousand Main Streets: These are letters to small towns. More literally, the book is a collection of 31 essays—a very readable mixture of sociology, secular sermons and good stories. All are intended to raise rural consciousnesses.

"For example, one essay analyzes why the big family Christmas in the farmhouse is in fact an ordeal particularly for the men. There are no Erma Bombeck wisecracks here, no conventional impieties. And Mrs. Bly gives an illuminating account of why holidays mean such different things to men and women, city or country. . . .

"What she expects of small-town Americans is breathtaking. Carol Kennicott only wanted them to be interesting and fun—to support little-theater groups as well as Kiwanis. Mrs. Bly wants the farmers and small-town merchants of America to live with passion, to have a sense of greatness in their lives, to take themselves as seriously as a Beethoven or a Thoreau. . . .

"What makes this book so stirring is Mrs. Bly's conviction, only strengthened by 25 years on the prairie, that everyone has an inner life to find. Or, to use her words, that every single American has 'an ethical and an esthetic nature' and that it is simply not true to claim otherwise.

"She is not the first to hold this grand Jeffersonian idea. But she is one of the first I've encountered who knows what to do with it."

Carol Bly has dedicated this book to her Abbot English teacher and advisor to the Courant, Alice Curtiss Sweeney '14.

Outward Bound U.S.A. Learning Through Experience in Adventure-Based Education, by Joshua L. Miner and Joe Boldt. William Morrow & Co., Inc., New York, 380 pp.

Outward Bound U.S.A. is Josh Miner's personal account, not only of the history of the movement, but his own involvement in bringing Outward Bound to the United States. The book is rich in anecdotes, and his treatment of the distinguished German educator, Kurt Hahn, throughout their lifelong acquaintance—beginning with Josh on the faculty of Gordonstoun School in Scotland—is particularly well done. The Andover family should be proud of the involvement of its late headmaster, Johnny Kemper, and board president, Jack Stevens, together with other faculty and alumni who figured prominently in the establishment of the Outward Bound Schools in this country. Educators will be intrigued with the clear statement of the Outward Bound philosophy, and all should enjoy reading of the early days of each of the (six) schools and the stories of those who founded them. A sampling of other important outreach programs of Outward Bound, from the successful treatment of adjudicated youth to college semester programs, is included in the later chapters, and will be of particular interest to those who work in experiential education. This is not a consumer handbook of Outward Bound schools, but an in-depth history of their establishment and the movement, as told by the person who is primarily responsible for bringing Outward Bound across the Atlantic. As an insider, and one who knows most of the characters in the book, I was both intrigued and re-inspired by Josh's sensitive and thoughtful treatment of what we are about.

Sun Moon Star: by Kurt Vonnegut. Illustrated by Ivan Chermayeff '50. Harper & Row, New York, 1980, 62 pp.

This is a remarkable collaboration, because Ivan Chermayeff made the illustrations, without saying what they meant, before Kurt Vonnegut made up the story to fit them. For once, a publisher's book jacket description is apt: "This is a song whose music came first." From Chermayeff's hand comes literally the music of the spheres—deceptively simple aspects and juxtapositions of sun, moon and star. The resulting story is Vonnegut's fresh, illuminated re-telling of the birth of Christ, a non-conventional (and genderless) version of an elementally human and elementally divine event. Illustrations and story suggest simplicity and cosmic importance in design, and human warmth in color.

Trustees move to redo Graves

The Trustees voted to go ahead with the renovation of the music center in Graves Hall, in their May meeting. They have asked for architectural drawings in time for action at their fall meeting, Oct. 30, if the renovation costs remain in the estimated range.

"This decision represents the third of the three building projects of the Bicentennial Campaign," Secretary of the Academy Frederic A. Stott '36 noted. "It is a reflection of the great excellence of music on this campus. Graves Hall is the only poorly equipped department building on campus." The anonymous challenge gift of an Abbot alumna was the first step in the process that led to the Trustees' decision. The Music Department will vacate the building while an outside contractor completely rehabilitates the inside of this solid 19th century period piece for improved circulation, use of space and acoustics.

The Trustees also approved the concept of building a new and secure boathouse for crew on the Merrimack River. The site in mind is PA-owned land upriver from the present site, where repeated and serious vandalism has occurred. George Neilson, the Academy's business manager, noted that the new boathouse will not be built overnight: conditions of real security do not yet obtain at the site.

Student-Faculty Council

Hadley Soutter '82 of Providence, RI, next year's school president the question after one year of the Council's operation.

In general, however, the faculty was not in the mood to pass sweeping proposals. The only proposal of the Course of Study Committee to pass faculty perusal was its recommendation for a standing curriculum committee to screen, supervise and regulate the course of study, and make recommendations to the faculty about workload and the balance between electives and required courses. Faculty consideration of the report of the Composition of the Study Body Committee, which it heard in February, will be postponed until next fall, with Don McNemar as headmaster.

The Trustees, Faculty, and Students of Phillips Academy cordially invite you to the Investiture of Donald W. McNemar as the 13th Headmaster of Phillips Academy on Saturday, September 19, 1981 at 10:00 a.m.

The Ceremony will take place on the Great Quadrangle before Samuel Phillips Hall; if rain, in the Case Memorial Cage.

There will be a reception on the Great Lawn following the Installation Ceremony, and refreshments will be served. At that time, guests will have an opportunity to greet Mr. and Mrs. McNemar.

A Student-Faculty Council has been established by faculty vote, to sift through the issues of residential life. The Council will have 29 members—the six cluster deans, the six cluster presidents, the school president, the Committee on Residential Life, which proposed the measure, the dean of residence, and the headmaster and associate headmaster, both ex officio. Will this add another layer of bureaucracy on a campus already honeycombed with committees? Proponents argue that regular meetings of those holding these already existing offices and committee posts will institutionalize communication among members of the school community, avoiding duplication of efforts. The Council's function will be to coordinate, clarify and sift residential concerns and proposals coming from the various Cluster Councils, before they are cast in bronze for consideration by the faculty meeting; there they will be monumentalized by approval, hammered into different shape, or melted down by a "nay" vote. The faculty passed the Student-Faculty Council measure, but added a "sunset amendment," stipulating a re-vote of

Fire Damages Peabody House

Peabody House was virtually gutted when fire broke out in the middle of one Sunday night in May. No one was in the building except a cat whose coat was slightly singed, then thoroughly soaked by water from the fire department's hoses. But the Afro-Latino-American Society lost its entire library as well as its meeting place since 1970, the Af-Lat-Am Center on the second floor. The Pot Pourri office in the basement was damaged only by water, Peabody House fire: the roof fell in on the stairway.

Faculty Chairs

The Trustees have elected four faculty members to teaching foundations; two are new faculty chairs, one honoring a former headmistress of Abbot Academy and one in memory of a Phillips Academy alumnus and former Charter Trustee.

The appointments: Susan Lloyd, Instructor in History and the Social Sciences, to the newly-created Instructorship honoring Marguerite Capen Hearsey, Principal of Abbot Academy from 1936 to 1955.

Joseph Wennik '52, Instructor in History and Director of Athletics: to a newly-created and special Instructorship honoring John H. Castle, Jr. '34 (see Profile, p. 22), this Foundation to be held by the Director of Athletics during his or her service in that position at the Academy.

Sherman Drake, Instructor in Mathematics, to the Emily Belden Cochran Foundation, most recently held by Wayne Frederick.

Angel Rubio, Instructor in Spanish and Chairman of the Spanish Department, to the Elizabeth Milbank Anderson Foundation, held by Frederick Peterson '34 until his retirement.

and the yearbook material saved; the school lost the use of the large meeting room on the first floor, once the scene of Spanish Club and other dances, now rented to Northeastern University's management training program, centered at the Andover Inn. The origin of the fire was probably electrical, firemen surmised.

The Af-Lat-Am Society has been relocated on the second floor of Cooley House, and Peabody House damage is being assessed, toward its repair.

More CASE Awards

Phillips Academy figured again in the national 1981 awards of the Council for the Advancement and Support of Education. The Andover Bulletin won an Exceptional Achievement Award for Independent School Periodicals, the third year in a row the Bulletin has figured in CASE's top awards.

In competition with both schools and colleges, the Addison Gallery Mini-Catalogs won a Citation Award for Visual Design in Print. The Addison Campaign material won a Citation Award for Printing Technology, presented to James Bingham of Nimrod Press, which prints the Addison Campaign publications as well as the magazine for the Bulletin. Helen Eccles is editor of the Bulletin, and Ann M. Parks is designer and director of publications.

Big Red steps down

The Oliver Wendell Holmes Library has a new Director of the Library, Lynne C. Anderson Robbins. Mrs. Robbins has been associated since 1976 with the Toronto, Canada, Public Library as Area Librarian in the city's Circulating Library system, but she is a native of Andover. She holds a bachelor's degree from the University of Pennsylvania, an M.S. from English Exchange (ESU) senior Michael Streat played Arthur, senior Adriene Bailey was Guenevere, in PA's Camelot.

Simmons College, and has studied further at the University of Wisconsin and the University of Toronto. More than two decades of alumni whose interest in books has been encouraged by Barbara McDonnell will be glad to hear that "Big Red" is still at PA. After a sabbatical involving a successful hip operation, she asked to be relieved of the OWH's directorship and has returned as its acquisitions librarian. Lynne Robbins joined the staff in mid-July, and she and her husband will be living at 135 Main Street, Andover, in the fall term.

Beers in the dorm

A nostalgic visit to the Andover campus last June, too late for Class Reunions, and a curiosity about what 50 years has done to student life at Andover, brought Linn Yardley Beers '30 of Boulder, Colorado to initiate a three-day stay in a PA dorm in April, with the School's blessing.

Beers reported to this classmate that he was pleased to observe the diversity of the courses in physics and the sophistication of the upper level ones. . . . "I have been exposed a number of times to the Twin Paradox in the theory of relativity. The presentation that Dr. Perrin gave was the first one that made sense to me." Beers would like to see additions to the science libraries.

More generally, says Beers, "The school I visited in 1981 is much more intellectually healthy than the one I knew in 1930. . . . There are many more ways a student can reach self-fulfillment in extra-curricular activities."

When Jack McClement stepped down as swimming coach in March, team captain Burke Doar '82 made it a nostalgic occasion.

Faculty Notes

Stephen Carter, instructor in mathematics, has been appointed Dean of Pine Knoll Cluster for a five-year term, replacing Susan Lloyd, who will be on sabbatical leave next year. A graduate of Brown University who obtained his master's degree in mathematics at Wesleyan, Carter taught for six years at St. George's School before coming to Andover. Adela Carter, his wife, a former teacher and dean of girls at St. George's School, will serve as associate dean of the cluster. Robert Lloyd, chairman of the Art Department will spend his sabbatical year in the Joseph Klingenstein Fellows Program at Teachers College, Columbia University; this is a leadership program of study for independent school faculty and administrators. During the year Lloyd will spend his year as a Klingenstein Fellow expanding the concepts of his Three-Dimensional Design course and exploring ways to combine teaching art with teaching basic science, using design problems as a vehicle. Vincent Avery, chairman of the Philosophy and Religion Department, will be researching the Tennessee Valley Authority and the snail darter to develop a case study in environmental ethics. His research is supported by an anonymous Bicentennial Campaign gift for the development of case studies for teaching purposes. Thomas Hodgson of the same department will be teaching at Williams College in fall term. George Best, instructor in mathematics, is currently chairman of the College Board's Scholastic Achievement Committee on calculus, responsible for the College Board's SAT examination in calculus.

Ted Sizer's Study of High Schools has received grants of $387,000 from the Carnegie Corporation of New York, and $25,000 from the Edward John Noble Foundation.

Twenty-five Andover students are spending three weeks in Russia and two weeks in England this June and July, led by Russian Instructor Victor Svec and Faculty Dean Jack Richards, who teaches both Russian history and European history courses.

Addison's Campaign Director

Kyra Montagu will be the new director of the Campaign for the Addison Gallery, beginning September 1. The founding director of Artweek Boston, Ms. Montagu has extensive experience in arts administration in the Boston area and is a trustee of The Children's Museum. Susan McCaslin, the present director, will be leaving to become assistant to the director of the Center for the Study of World Religions at Harvard.

Herberich has Harvard hurtling.

by Andrew Ahn '82

Great talent and enthusiasm brought boys' and girls' varsity athletes 93 wins out of 123 competitions during the spring term. Its conclusion marked undefeated seasons for both varsity tennis teams. For Coach Mike Lopes' boys' squad, led by Captain Tim Clark '81, it was the second consecutive undefeated year in a row. Its talent and aggressive style of play were exemplified by #1 player Peter Palandjian's challenging serve and volley game. A 9-0 routing of Exeter, without losing a single set, ended the season. Girls' varsity tennis likewise aced a perfect season, 8-0, led by captain Mary Hulbert (daughter of Richard W. '47). #1 player Annie Yates suffered only one loss all season. The toughest match was an 8-1 win against Milton. Harvard JV and Hotchkiss likewise fell.

"One of the best Andover track teams in the last quarter-century." That's how Coach Richards describes his squad. He trained on such senior talents as hurdler Jim Herberich (son of Frederick D. '43) and sprinter Joe Sutherland (son of John '49), to defend Andover's Interschols title of the year before, losing only 3 out of 12 meets. Herberich, consistently among the 10 best school hurdlers in the country, broke the record books in the 50 yd. and 110 meter high hurdles, and was one leg of the record-breaking relay at the Interschols. Sutherland holds a record-breaking 10.8 in the 100 meters, a record 22.3 for the 200 meter dash, and has run a 5.5 second 50 yd. dash. Richards points out the excessive reliance on seniors this year may mean a "building year" is in the offing.

For the girls' varsity lacrosse, a 62-goal season for Jenny Greeley, aggressive play by Angela Dulin and the fleet speed of Kathy Kinsella made the team almost unstoppable—an 11-1 record. Aggressive overall play allowed the team, coached by Susan Hunt, to come from behind for a 9-6 victory over Proctor, and a close 9-8 win over a strong Exeter team.

The boys' and girls' crew, under the careful coaching eyes of Peter and Kit Washburn, steadily improved all season and earned the Class A overall Interschol in New England, asserting dominance over the strong oars of Kent, Simsbury, and St. Pauls. Andover Crew finished its season at Exeter by taking four out of its six races for an easy win. "Andover crew is a force to be reckoned with," said Pete Washburn.

Hard hitting, solid fielding, and flawless pitching from the girls' varsity softball team carried throughout the season for a 10-2 record. Shortstop, Mary Byrne and captain Lynda McLaughry, (daughter of Robert D. '40), set up a strong defense on the left side of the field, while at bat, Byrne and McLaughry averaged .472 and .438 respectively. On the mound, coach Charles Willand could always trust Tristin Batchelder and Cris Kubacki to hurl their fireballs with accuracy; they are "artful masters of their position," commented Willand. The team, though it outmuscled many less experienced teams, had some trouble with some old rivals. Its only two losses were at the end of the season, as the Blue clutched in two out of three games with Worcester and Northfield-Mt. Hermon.

Dave Graham's varsity golf team doubled its participation this year and swung an impressive 12-3 record while also capturing the Witherspoon Trophy from the league. The team had talent and depth, and standings within the team were constantly changing on any given match. The team has been strong all year. Leading the squad in scoring was Andrew Siderowf, with Paul Slattery close behind.

On the first day, coach Rel

McCann challenged the girls' varsity track team to break five school records on the last meet against Northfield-Mt. Hermon. The team's 4-3 record is deceiving, because they took third in the New England's on the road to that last meet. The squad went on to produce 3 New England Champs; an undefeated Katrinka Leschey took first in the 1500 and the 3000; Landi Fannin captured first in the 800; and the most versatile player on the team, Jennifer Ellis, hurled the javelin for first. In fact, the outstanding personal achievements almost let PA take second in the New England's. Linda Wang in the Long Jump, Muffy Larned, (daughter of F. Stephen '58), in the 200, Landi Fannin in the 800, Katrinka Leschey in the 3000, and the mile relay team of Hadley Soutter, Jennifer Ellis, Muffy Larned, and Tamara Jones each broke their respective records against N-MH.

Coach Paul Kalkstein foresaw that his boys' varsity lacrosse team would be one of the best in recent years, but injuries and discipline problems early in the season lost four of its starters and most of its chances of success. The team finished with an even 7-7 record led by the boisterous energy of co-captains Andy Morton and Steve Frank. As leaders, the co-captains' ability were indisputable; their desire to win rubbed off on the whole team. Also Morton was named All-American in his defense spot, while high scoring center midfielder Steve Frank and Morton were named to the New England All-Star Team. Bennet West was awarded the singular honor of High School All-American, as well as All-Division and All-Star honors. Also, at the net, goalie Jim Ringer had a fine season, and was named All-Division goalie.

After a 0-5 start, varsity baseball came back to finish the year at 7-9 in a three-game rally to end the season. In its last two games, the Blue also swatted Exeter twice in a row, while also taking the Andover/Exeter Trophy. The Andover nine's variety had its consistent players, as captain Jon Pelletier batted well over .400 and the strong pitching staff of Jim Moulton, Matt Dacey, and Louis Ehrlich kept coach Hale Sturges happily away from the mound.

Theodore K. Thurston proudly reports that at age 92, he passed his automobile driver's test, good for two years, in the state of Maine.

Upton S. Sullivan writes he has two great-grandchildren—Julia Randolph Shipley, age 8 and Upton Sullivan Shipley, age 6. Their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel F. Shipley, want them both to go to Andover.

At 91, Frank L. Klingbeil is still active and in good health, enjoying retirement home living. He just completed writing Memoirs which recalled his "three years of delightful living at Andover—possibly the most rewarding, exciting, enjoyable and inspirational of my entire lifetime."

Those few of us who have not reached their 90th birthday will be impressed by the joyful celebration given by his large family to Stan Smith. An open house was held by his family at Wethersfield attended by his children and grandchildren as well as many friends and admirers Stan—the man—as he is affectionately called told them all that he had not planned to live so long. Unlike the man who said on his 100th birthday that if he had known that he was going to live so long he would have taken better care of himself, Stan has always been physically fit due to his lifelong interest in sports—especially basketball at which he starred at both Andover and Yale.

It is now over 70 years since we left Andover Hill. I imagine that some of you like me recall with nostalgia the days of our innocence. Our idea of raising hell at Andover Cottage was to stand in the fireplace and smoke a cigarette up the chimney so that House Master Al Benner could not smell the smoke. A wild adventure at night was to drop out of a back window and run across the meadows to Al Hinton's where we bought an ice cream cone and dashed back to safety.

And do you remember the night that Haley's Comet appeared in the night sky? It was said to bring about the end of the world so we all watched from rooftops to await the end. Nobody did their homework and we all flunked when we were called to recite the next morning.

I am sorry to have to report that we have lost another classmate Doug Townson who died at his home in Rochester, NY, on March 23 after a long illness. He was the president of Curtis Bros. Co., one of the oldest food canning companies in the country. After leaving Andover he went on to Yale graduating with the Class of 1914. He was very active in business and civic affairs in Rochester until his retirement. He is survived by three daughters, a brother, eight grandchildren and six great-grandchildren. His late wife was the sister-in-law of Frank Gannett, vice president of the famous Gannett newspaper chain.

We have lost two outstanding members of the class—Babe Allen and Dudley Lunt.

Parker Breeze Allen died December 12, 1980 in Meriden, CT. After Andover he attended Yale where he played varsity football. He served in both world wars, as a field artillery second lieutenant in WWI and a lieutenant colonel in WWII in England, Africa, Sicily and Corsica, where he was assistant chief of staff of the 12th Tactical Air Command. He received the Order of the British Empire in WWII. Following WWI he served on President Hoover's relief mission in Poland.

Babe had a distinguished career in Meriden. As president of the Meriden Gravure Company he brought the firm into prominence by its high quality work in art reproductions for such clients as the Boston Museum of Fine Arts and the New York Metropolitan Museum. He was also president of Chas. Parker Co., a manufacturer of structural and steel products, castings and machinery. He was chairman of the commission that developed the Meriden Airport; he was a director of the Meriden Hospital, a bank director and prominent in many civic affairs. In 1978 he was among five business executives who were inducted into the South Central Connecticut Free Enterprise Hall of Fame. He is survived by a daughter, Mary Carol Summon of Tucson, AZ, a son, Gordon and his brother, Theodore F. '15 of Darien, CT.

Dudley Cammett Lunt died January 13, 1981 at the Cokesbury Village Infirmary in Hockessin, DE after a long illness. Following Andover he attended Yale, was an ensign in naval aviation in WWI and was graduated from Harvard Law School in 1914. In WWII he served on the National War Labor Board.

Dudley had a distinguished career as a lawyer, historian, conservationist, naturalist and author. He lived in Delaware most of his life but was a native down-easter, a tenth generation New Englander. He liked nothing better than tracking through the woods. For many years in the spring he led his classmates Fred Lund and Lud Moorehead to his secret preserve in Maine for woodcock hunting.

He practiced law until the 1950s when literary work occupied most of his time. He contributed to the U.S. Supreme Court decision in the ancient boundary dispute between Delaware and New Jersey, acting as special master in the Court of Chancery. The matter involved the famous quarrel between William Penn and Lord Baltimore and Dudley spent a winter in England searching the Public Record Office and the British Museum for evidence in the case. But he is probably best known as a conservationist and author. His love of the woods led him to publish a new edition of Henry D. Thoreau's The Maine Woods wherein Thoreau's three separate excursions are combined in a single narrative. Then followed Cape Cod and The Concord and the Merrimack. His extensive writings on conservation of the Delaware marshes included Thousand Acre Marsh, Taylor's Gut, and The Woods and the Sea. Among his legal works were The Road to the Law and Tales of the Delaware Bench and Bar.

The Wilmington Evening Journal paid Dudley the following tribute: "For those of us who savored his columns, who edited them with care and published them with pride for many years, Dudley Lunt was a spell-binding writer on nature and an eloquent disciple of conservation. To attempt to write about him is to risk suffering by comparison in the eyes of those who draw constant pleasure from his books and columns. He could see beauty in the simplest natural object and evoke it for his readers."

Dudley is survived by his devoted wife, Margaret Franklin Duane, Box 10, Cokesbury Village, Hockessin, DE 19707, a son, Dudley Jr. and two daughters, Ann Duane and Alison S. Steadman.

Bassett and wife Claire, Burke, Dean, Ellis and wife Doris, Harriman and wife Agnes, Hood and wife Marny, and Hubbard celebrated their 65th Reunion together. Gamble had planned to be with us but had to bow out.

The get-together was most successful and the real regret was that so many of our fellow classmates were unable to attend. This Reunion marked its last of our formal affairs for now we join the "Old Guard." The Reunion was a milestone in that it recognized the end of the successful Ted Sizer Regime and the beginning of the new Era of Don McNemar. It is hard to realize that we have now seen six different headmasters. The future of PA is assured for another period, and Ted Sizer leaves to help bolster the standards of Secondary Education closer to those we know at PA.

The weather, except for a couple of hours Friday night, was most conducive to the many outdoor events. We carried the 1916 banner in the Alumnae parade right behind our most enthusiastic fellow Alumnus, Sumner Smith '08.

1916 participated in every event except the 2.2 mile jog around the campus. For those who have not been in Andover for a few years, it's hard to believe that such a race could be confined to the campus without a lot of crisscrossing, but it can be done. I think '16 presented a favorable record for going and involvement.

We had a "Grande Finale" dinner at the Inn. Our old friends, Nan and Fred Stott, joined us for the "Happy Hour." The ears of the classmates not present must have rung for we took time out to recall all of our absentees and to reminisce about the part that each had taken in the events of the Grand Old Days.

Now that we have become a part of the "Old Guard," we should try to plan a good turnout at another time.

I am sorry to report that I had a letter from a friend of Bob Schelling, telling that Bob is in the Leesburg Nursing Center, 715 E. Dixie Ave., Leesburg, FL 32748. A card or letter would be appreciated, I know.

I also learned that John Bowman of Buffalo, NY had passed away last October. We also lost Conrad Dodson on January 12, 1981.

All have a good summer. We will hope for a lot of good news of travels and events to report in the fall edition.

The Class of 1916 can be proud of its record of longevity. At present we have forty-nine members of whom thirty have given us an update of themselves. It is very gratifying to learn that most of us are hale and hearty for the age group we represent. A sixty-fifth Reunion is definitely a Major Milestone. Preliminary reports indicated that at least twelve or fourteen members and some wives would be on hand for the festivities on June 13th with the parade, alumni luncheon and class dinner: Bassett, Batchelder, Burke, Dean, Ellis, Flint, Harriman, Hood, Hubbard are definite with Conkling, Gamble, Heard, Page, Peck and Walt Smith as hopefuls.

Your Secretary heard from seven classmates since last report. Unfortunately we lost one of our regular reporters, H. Conrad Dodson, on January 12, 1981. Our best wishes and prayers go to his wife and family. He will be missed. We learned from Mrs. Rogers that her father, Clyde W. Homan passed away last September 28, 1980. Our sympathy is extended to his family. Also we send our sympathy to Maurice Gould who lost his wife, Ann Campbell Gould, on March 12th. They were a very close and devoted pair. Dick Bassett is looking forward to next September when he will have an exhibition of his drawings at the Hilles Library on the Harvard campus. Joe Carpenter has sold his home and taken an apartment near his daughter in Philadelphia. Bob Conkling of Olean, NY brought us to date. He lost his wife, Catherine, a few years ago but is again happily married. His son, Bob, was killed recently in Calgary, Canada. He spends about two months in Fort Meyer and Delray Beach, FL. It will be grand to see him at Reunion. Church Durant gives a great deal of credit to his wife for keeping him in shape physically. Bud Fisher enjoys both retirement from chemical problems and the game of golf. Charlie Gamble mourns the loss of many of his beautiful trees from the recent hurricane that struck Mobile, AL a while ago, but he cheers himself with a trip to Cuernavaca, Mexico.

Your Secretary thought he had not heard from Jud Dean or Church Durant and asked for reports. An apology is due them, but in the future you will see a little number in a circle in the left-hand corner of a card to you. That will be my safeguard if I have difficulty in reading signatures. I sure want the news. We will be looking forward to seeing you on the 13th. Let's have a real "Blast."

Leonard Bishop writes that he had an accident last August and was laid up until the middle of October. Here's hoping he is now fully recovered. One of our most distinguished classmates, George Reily Bailey died January 8 after a long illness. George was at PA only one year, but established himself as a leader, and the class voted him "Most Respected" by a wide margin. He went on to Yale, with a B.S. degree in 1923, after which he joined the Harrisburg National Bank, the leading bank in the capital city of Pennsylvania, serving as its president from 1954 to 1961, when in a merger it became Commonwealth National Bank. He continued as president, became chairman in 1965 and chairman emeritus in 1967. His other interests and honors are so numerous that he could well have been termed "Mr. Harrisburg." His wife, Elizabeth Scott Bailey, lives at 36-10 Logan Lane Apartments, Camp Hill, PA 17011, and he is also survived by three daughters—Elizabeth Bailey Zaldastani of Chestnut Hill, MA; Anne King Bailey Hackney of Glyndon, MD; and Susan Bailey Scott of Richmond, VA.

The Class sustained another irreparable loss when Huntington Townsend Day died on March 14. Hun was with us the full four years and enjoyed many honors and activities. He was president of the School, manager of football, chairman of the senior prom committee and member of the Student Council, Glee Club and Banjo Club. We voted him "Neatest" and "Best Dressed," and he also ranked highly as "Most Respected," "Most Popular" and "Most Promising." He graduated from Yale College in 1923 and Yale Law in 1928, practicing directly after. In 1934 he was a founder of the New Haven firm of Wiggan & Dana, with whom he served the rest of his life. His directorships included United Illuminating Co., Union Trust Co. of New Haven, New Haven Savings Bank, Kerite Co., and Capewell Manufacturing Co. At his memorial service, an associate gave the following tribute, which indicates how well he fulfilled his early promise: "It was to Hun that others always turned with the hardest problems. This was not so much because he was a founding partner or a senior partner. It was, much more, because we depended upon him for the right answer—the answer that was both principled and practical, both reasoned and reasonable. And it was because we knew he would stand by what was right, however tempting it might sometimes seem to take a more expedient course. Hun was meticulous in his work, establishing for his colleagues the strictest standards of quality and craftsmanship. But he never was guilty, as lawyers sometimes are, of nit-picking. He understood what was important and what was not, and he pursued the important things tenaciously. He was always the gentleman, slow to anger but firm of conviction, considerate of others but never condescending, respectful of the past, but aware of the present and the future." His wife, Cornelia, lives at 100 Reservoir St. in New Haven, and they have three daughters—Molly Day Scott of Adell, IA, Lee Bloomer of Pasadena, CA; and Anne Schael of Leiden, Holland.

Kathryn Beck Dow (Kay) writes that she is leading a quiet but contented life. She plans a short trip to Washington, a visit with both daughters in Virginia and, in June, to see her youngest granddaughter graduate from prep school. Ethel Bonney Faber (Bonney) says that she has been in a nursing home for two years and is very happy there. She is feeling very well, is one of the few who can walk. The nurses and aides are young and very helpful. She reports that her family is still increasing. She has thirteen grandchildren and six great-grandchildren. She's interested to know who of her classmates are still left.

Gwendolen Bossi Henson (Gwen) was married right after Wellesley and her husband just out of law school, so she says, she never did anything notable, just a lot of music and the usual volunteer jobs in Scarsdale, NY where they lived for forty-five years. When her husband died in 1967, she moved to their Cape Cod home, where she sees lots of family in summer. A troop of handsome grandchildren strewn around in various colleges "keeps her busy and happy." She spends three months in the Florida Keys. Kitty Coe Taylor writes "My husband and I are in our eighties and still continue to enjoy life and do some mild traveling each year. Greetings to all the class."

Charlotte Copeland Gray says, "I don't have any exciting news. Three years ago I moved to a small apartment at 55A Main Street in Thomaston, ME 04861 and love it. My daughter and family (three grown grandchildren) and husband live here. As for retirement, I have always been a homemaker. A broken hip has kept me housebound but am recovering. Would love to see any 1919ers who come through the town." Anna Davidson Wright has lived in Richmond, VA since 1924. She has two sons, Princeton '51 and VMD '54, and two excellent gifted daughters-in-law. One granddaughter is a sophomore at Princeton. She has done "quite a bit of traveling and some graduate work in archaeology."

Mildred Frost Eaton (Millie) and her husband now live in Sarasota, FL seven months of the year and five months in their Maine complex where they enjoy their families and try to keep young. Their addresses are: 5030 Village Kennedys Drive, Sarasota, FL; and Box 1608, Kennebunkport, ME 04046.

Jane Holt Atkinson wrote in April that she was going to pick up her son at the airport that day. He was coming to drive her home (11 Cannon St., Mattapoisett, MA 02739) where she will be glad to see any old Abbot friends of 1919 this summer. She has had a busy pleasant six months in Ft. Lauderdale. Gertrude Lombard McGinley retired from teaching Earth Science in High School in 1965. She says they live on a 553-acre farm and woodland but continue to raise blueberries. She is still able to direct music and work with young people in the local community church. One son is in advertising for Bell Tel. of PA and the daughter who teaches theatre and dramatic arts in Boston is an actress and director. (She is directing "The Man from La Mancha (?) for Open Door Theatre this summer.)

Virginia McCauley Otis reports "All my family, except my son, are now living down here in the southeastern part of No. Carolina—Shallotte. I feel very lucky. My granddaughter Dora Pope McCall, (Abbot '71), has a five-month-old-son. I'm a great grandmother! Am in good health, except for arthritis in my right hip. Just have to live with it. Enjoyed my three years at Abbot and the girls. My best to you all."

Gladys Merrill says she has retired from the newspaper (Maine Sunday Telegram) but still writes a column, doing it at home. She is so glad she has had many wonderful trips to Europe, the Orient, Scandinavia, and Leningrad, for now everything is so costly. She finds herself busier than ever since retirement, with friends, whom she enjoys and her particular interest in the restoration of the Victoria Mansion in Portland. (She misses seeing Kay Beck when she came to NY and "Mary Cole Day who was a dear.")

Geraldine Murray Stanton (Gerry) has no news of interest to report. She is traveling out of the country a good part of the year and is in good health. She is always interested to see the Bulletin to find news of classmates.

Caroline Richardson Korst Beechey writes,

"After sixty years of married life, having three nice sons and three daughters-in-law, living in Hamburg, NY fifty years and traveling a lot with my husband, Dot Korst B's brother Don (died 1973), I married again and am still enjoying life with Fred and all my children, including three great-grands. Dot and I enjoyed many trips back to Abbot together. Babe Korst King went to Abbot also."

Dorothy Shapleigh Meader writes that her life for the last six years has been very limited. Her husband has been confined to bed, has lost a leg and cannot be left alone. Fortunately her daughter and another woman who is very good with him, can come to be with him so she can do the shopping and banking. She has a doll collection which was started in 1806 for which she has designed and built a dollhouse in 1975. She has six granddaughters and one great-grandson, and wonderful memories of her days at Abbot.

Gertrude Stark Abbott writes Paul and I will have been married sixty years this fall. We live near our son, John William, daughter, Edith, eight grandchildren and three great-grandchildren. Unhappily we lost our son, Paul Jr., two years ago, which is very hard.

Margaret Taylor Stainton reports that her husband died eight years ago and that her three children live in Vermont, Illinois and California. One daughter went to Abbot. The other two children to Putney. She has eight grandchildren and three great-grands. She has a lot of Kodak pictures taken at Abbot and wonders if anyone would want them some day.

Gretchen Brown Knights writes Sanibel Island, FL is getting more crowded each year but my immediate neighborhood with its private beach and wonderful neighbors is delightful. Had hoped to see Kay Beck Dow when I was visiting in Delray, but my hostess said the traffic would be unbelievable. I have two new great-grandsons. They are six and three months old. They will be visiting me at Kezar Lake, ME this summer.

Elizabeth Armstrong purchased a 36-acre hill-top south of Buffalo, NY where she lives. It is called High Top, has a sugar house on it and a delightful view in all directions. She and her friends find it pleasant to leave the city behind and enjoy the solitude and refreshing clean air. She cuts a small tree—"It won't be missed!"—before she goes for a walk. She and Gwen Bossi Henson keep in touch at least once a year.

In February your scribe visited his daughter in Cambridge, England where her husband Guido Calabresi, Stirling Professor of Law, holds the Goodhart Chair of Science and Law at Cambridge University as Visiting Professor for the '80-'81 academic year. It was his first visit to England in 50 years, the intervening decades being spent visiting France. I was there one week and brought them four windless, cloudless days; quite unheard of on the Misty Isle. Visited Stonehenge, several "plaster and board" villages, including that of an ancestral cousin about five times removed and the seldom-visited prehistoric Flint mines.

Jim Baldwin writes: "After 57 years of working for a living, I retired on March 31. Am still living at 91 Middlesex Road in Chestnut Hill, MA in the house in which I was born in 1902 and fortunately in reasonably good health at the moment. Unfortunately I lost my lovely wife, Sally, on August 16, 1979 from cancer, but have the pleasure of our children, two sisters and brother Storer '17 in neighboring areas." And Ed Greene sends word that his wife Nancy's great nephew, aged 13, who lives in England has written that he wishes to go to Andover so he can become president of the U.S.A. From the depths of my feeble knowledge of the constitution, I hope he was born in the U.S. otherwise he can't take office.

A happy word from Al Mason that radiation therapy at Yale New Haven Hospital has licked his cancer and that he is "ugly but chipper." Just in, a note from Harold Noyes from his home in South Harpswell, ME 04079 reporting that as a result of his trip to the South Sea Islands he has taken up again his major interest in music and bought himself an electric organ and is working on that and musical composition with great satisfaction. On the side as he puts it, he has formed a corporation and with a few friends, has started "a new first class restaurant—The Captains Table" and hopes those of us passing through or visiting Harpswell will stop in.

Bill's son, Wade, reported this and added that in the years since Bill's retirement (from Alexander Grant's Sons, Inc., Syracuse) his father had been a rich and prolific writer of fiction.

OUR 60th REUNION

It was a disappointment that at the last minute Charlie Gage phoned to say he was really too uncomfortable on account of "the shingles," plus an arm or shoulder problem, to attempt a trip to Andover. Charlie and Maggie had planned to come from the start, as had Bill Serat, but he, too, couldn't make it. John and Kay Cushman came from Cambridge; Tom Darling, Washington; Bill and Dorothy Dwight from Florida with stop-over in Holyoke; Phil and Marion Eisman, Cambridge; Bart and Clare Hayes, Andover; Lou Lincoln, Falmouth; Don and Kay Loker, Oceanside, CA; Charlie Morris, Santa Monica, CA; Pete and Mary Nicola, Saginaw, MI; John and Ruth Shepard, Franklin, NH; Dave and Mary Lee Williams, Orleans, Cape Cod; Jess and Abby Willard, Florida via Nantucket; and Alex Preston from Cambridge for Saturday. We were joined by Eunice (Meigs) Pease, Abbot '21, and her guest, Laura (Scudder) Williamson, Abbot '24. Janice and I were there more or less getting an automobile's-eye-view so we can't report on the whole program. Our class dinner at The Inn was also a reunion with Ted and Marge Harrison who had been with us five years ago. Fred and Nan Stott dropped by for an informal visit, and classmates added to the occasion with toasts and jokes and a tale of nostalgia by Dave Williams.

We had a super brunch at Bart and Clare Hayes, and bid "The Hill" a fond farewell. It was a very nice party all the way through. The weather smiled and many happy memories were revived.

As Li'l Abner said: "I'm dizzier than usual," trying to sift class news from reunion news. When in Washington, D.C. in February we went to the Smithsonian's National Museum of American Art and saw some of Joe Cornell's "boxes" on exhibition (others were on tour in N.Y.C. and/or going to Europe). His fame has increased since his death 10 years ago. Anyway we had a nice talk with the curator in charge of Joe's territory and invited her to our reunion.

In the course of our wanderings we saw Tom Darling (Alexandria), Lou Lincoln (in Florida), Ed Parnall (Albuquerque), and Bill Serat (Tucson). Bill lives in a fascinating spot—a house in the middle of the Botanical Gardens, tho' hard to find if you don't know that the sign pointing to "Parking" leads to Bill's cottage. Bill seemed fine as ever but has eye and breathing problems. I remembered a letter from Norm McGee when he moved to Sedona, AZ and his cordial invitation to classmates to stop by if out that way. So we did. Signed up in a motel for one night and then stayed four. Fell in love with Oak Creek Canyon and hope to get back there for more. Norm's gang of volunteer "picker-uppers" (in orange vests) have kept the place litter-free. We saw some of them on the job; also heard the coyotes come out in chorus when a siren went off in the village.

Cal Curtis retired to Rancho Santa Fe (CA) some thirteen years ago. He thinks that is about the perfect place, too, (but too far from reunion) and urges classmates to get in touch if out that way. He has a grove of some 900 lemon trees that lends an interest (pun) and with present prices is pleasantly profitable. By contrast, Bill Holway up in Winthrop, ME boasts of a 5-lb. salmon he caught opening day and the ice was "out" a month early. He's working on the 10 cords of wood he cut this winter. Carlton Coon has been writing three books: A North Africa Story (recent), Adventures and Discoveries (autobiography due this fall) and Racial Aptitudes, also due soon. "Doc" Hardenbergh did some travelling abroad again with his daughter and her whole family and he is as enthusiastic as a teenager! Bill Dwight is a Sarasota, FL resident but keeps his Holyoke home and is chairman of a whole gaggle of newspapers in New England.

The sad news: Fred Hardy (M.D.) died December 24 in Jacksonville, FL; Joe Fallon, at his home in Andover on December 25. Fred Hibbard died on January 22, 1981 in Lawrence, MA. After PA he received a degree in chemistry from Lowell Tech. Inst. Fred was a stockbroker in Lawrence until WWII and then a Lt. in the Navy. After the war he and Grover Stevens (also PA grad '34) opened the Marblehead Chemical Co. in Marblehead, MA which later moved to Danvers for more space and Fred operated the plant until his death.

Winslow ("Bud") Eddy passed away April 17, 1981 after a long illness. He had been living in North Hampton, NH. He played varsity football at Cornell, left school as an electrical engineer and became a pioneer in the private plane industry helping develop the tri-cycle gears at General Aircraft. In 1951 he joined Raytheon Electronics and was with them until he retired in 1964.

There should be some reunion news following this if I survive the ordeal by the physio-therapist who is trying to whip me into shape for the event. He was recently introduced in some printed program as "THE RAPIST" (two words instead of one!)

On Dec. 6, 1980, in San Juan, Puerto Rico, Ralph Crowley received the William B. Silverberg Award of The American Academy of Psychoanalysis for his contributions to psychoanalysis. Gerry Woodruff spent the winter months at Walton Beach, FL. He continues his active interest in the Providence Country Day School with which he has been associated for more than 40 years. Howard and Sue Finney were in Naples, FL for the winter months. They will spend the summer months in Nantucket where they will usually be found on the golf course.

Arthur Jensen does some occasional consulting from his home in Hanover, NH but spends a lot of time on the golf course when weather permits. Rather than heading south, he tends to hug the fireplace during the winter months. Hoddy Cole was on a winter "safari" during all of February visiting his brothers in Florida, friends in Phoenix and spending some time with Les and Kate Sherrill in Tucson. In recognition of his services as president of the University of Arizona Foundation for 11 years, Les Sherrill was awarded an honorary degree of Doctor of Laws by the university at its 1980 commencement. Joe and Peggy Lund were in Tucson for a winter vacation but, unfortunately, Peggy spent more than half the time in the Tucson Medical Center. Since their return home to Duxbury, things have been much better.

Burt Gray died in late December. He was a graduate of Amherst and the Harvard Law School. A resident of West Hartford for 27 years, at the time of his retirement in 1968, he was secretary of Aetna Life and Casualty Insurance Co. Charles Lee Todd died Mar. 18, 1981. He was a Harvard College graduate and served as a Major in the U.S. Air Force during World War II. A longtime resident of Lincoln, MA, Lee was for a time town assessor.

Katherine Gage, Sister Mary Anselm CSM. Altho' she terms it "not newsworthy" Kay's program as "family scribe," arranging conferences & retreats for Episcopal, ecumenical & other groups sounds pretty impressive to me, for it involves writing hundreds of letters. She is well and aside from increasing deafness, marvels at how ageless she feels! That's great, Kay, keep it up.

Gertrude Franklin Callahan reports good health and a happy second marriage to the Rev. Baldwin W. Callahan. He is retired but has interim ministries and fills in at nearby churches fairly often. She keeps on with community work and a garden club. Marian Rugg Caywood said that like many healthy old grannie widows she travels quite a bit, especially as her small family is widely separated. Last Oct. she took a lovely London theater trip and has had many trips to Honolulu where her daughter (now in CA) lived for 22 years. Marian keeps in touch with Mary Ellen Fuller and remembers her trip to Europe after graduation with Phyl Bankart, Peg Hopkins and Phil Hinkley.

Florence Phillips Cooke and her husband became permanent residents in their vacation home in Newbury, NH 5 years ago. Their two sons and families live in Marblehead, MA while their daughter & family are in NJ. There are nine grandchildren—two through college, three in and four to go. None married. Ted and Flip fortunate to be well, together, and living on beautiful Lake Sunapee.

Ruth Hill English, while cheering for the approach of our 60th reunion, wonders how it could come so soon! Her studio "Hedgeabout," where she still teaches decorative painting and decoupage is on a reduced schedule these days with classes twice a week. We were sorry to hear of Schuyler's death and send our deepest sympathy to Ruth.

Barbara Goss was the first to reply to my card! Her news was sad for she reported the death of her sister Gertrude, just before Thanksgiving after a long illness. We are glad to hear that Barb is well and "hopes to stay that way." We do too! Elizabeth Ohnemus Hicks and her husband, Clyde, moved to Titusville, FL 6 years ago, where they thoroughly enjoy the sunny, warm climate. For 4-5 months of the year they are at their summer home in Brewster on Cape Cod. Ohnemus had her first plane ride this spring when they flew to Riverside, CA to attend a family wedding, and to do some traveling on the west coast.

Millicent Bartlett Holmberg, in spite of full & part-time help, is in her large antique shop, "The Glass Bottle," 6 days a week! Her four children, nine grand and five great-grandchildren are all doing well and she sees them often.

Elizabeth Hutchinson Matthews and Anne Whinery try to have a reunion in Fredricksburg every few months. Anne drives from Richmond and Bubbles from D.C. Peg McKee DeYoe of '24 is housebound and Peg Boyd Ramey '24 has trouble getting around too, but they do meet. Bubbles found a "schoolmate" in Hawaii—Tom Stirling—who sat next to her cousin Tom Stiles in every class at Andover!

This mini-reunion idea is great! If you want to start it in your area and need the newest addresses (and phone numbers in many instances) write me for them. Every card I received from the girls who sent this news wished each and every one of you the best of health, happiness and sent love to you all.

At the suggestion of the Bulletin Editor, Helen Eccles, I am sending out cards to 15 or so members, in order to spread the news throughout the year. However I will be delighted to hear from you any time. The class of '22 was a very special class! My personal greeting and love to each and every one.

News in this number will be sparse. A note appended to the annual donation of Charlie James read, "Say hello to Bill Gay." A card from said Bill declared (if I read his hand right) that he lives in lonely glory, having lost his Evelyn over 5 years ago. However, within a radius of five miles he has three married sons, their wives, and eight grandchildren. He weighs too much, has slowed to the point where a cane is nice, but still finds a lot to be pleased about. And we, the pipples of PA 1923, can be extremely pleased that our loyal Class Agent has performed so well, in these past 23 years, for the royal blue.

Bill Heald and wife Anne, divide time between Cincinnati, Michigan in summer, and Florida part of the winter. Son Bill Jr. lives in NJ, has an office in NYC, has two children. Daughter Nancy H. Hatch lives in Cincinnati, has two daughters—Deborah in NYC, Stephanie in Cincinnati. By means of plagiarism I inform you that the John Speers a year ago went to Egypt and down the Red Sea, through the Suez Canal to Israel, then on to Athens. Last fall they went to Oberammergau, Italy, Switzerland, and Paris. Our classmates Johnny Westcott and Johnny Munger were mentioned in a special letter for Yale 1927 sans nouvelles.

The luck of the Sarasota contingent of PA '23 is not running well. Bill Foster's wife, Flodie, has frequent problems with angina and emphysema. But they celebrated their Golden Anniversary on May 16th and we congratulate them. Al Blanchard's wife faces one health problem after the other. Your Secretary is having to adjust to the death of his sweetheart of more than 55 years, wife of almost 52 years, on May 6th. Comparison of chest x-rays taken a year apart revealed a lung lesion, which turned out to be malignant. After surgery, pneumonia set in and this combination with her diabetes and other complications were too much for her heart.

George H. Larsen

The Sanborns surely had a busy winter. After our surprise meeting at the St. Louis airport, they flew with us to Tucson and then headed for Ramsey Canyon, the hummingbird capital of America. The end of January they stayed with the Larsens before heading back to Florida where they surprised the Joe Smiths and Len Jameses. Finally home, they skied at Wildcat in NH, and Red chopped wood and plowed his garden in Kennebunkport, ME. After all these activities he was grounded by slipping on his front doorstep and cracking two ribs. Easter Sunday was a memorable one as Fonty had her picture in Monday's Boston Globe standing beside VP George Bush. Red's comment was that the VP would pick the best-looking girl in the church to stand beside.

Two letters from the Joe Smiths: one included the calendar for Joe's Rotary Club of which Joe is editor. Another from Ruth saying Joe had been in the hospital, was now out, recovering from surgery. He was reading Kane & Abel by Jeffrey Archer. Two thousand miles west of Umatilla, FL, the Larsens were also reading the same book—a great story! Another letter from Florida was Van Johnstone's. Van always inquires for his Princeton roommate, Morry Skinner and a letter from Morry reported the weather in Salem, OR must be as warm as Green Valley and he didn't know whether to rake leaves or do his planting. He thought Bill Keator was confused too as he hoped the Skinner's would have a glorious 1980 on his Christmas card—1980 being particularly cool.

Speaking of planting, Art Tait's note mentioned that wife, Frieda, had planted lettuce, spinach and asparagus which were in full bloom in mid-March. "Come on over and have some." The Dick Chances of San Diego will be in Oregon in November celebrating their 50th anniversary with their daughter and family. They gave up their Eastern trip this year what with theatre tickets at $25 each and hotel rates so high.

From San Diego recently came a card from Bob Redpath with a note on it from Gige Mumby. The two had dinner together. Bob also wrote from Ft. Myers, their winter home, and next door live the Sam Connors. Bob says Sam and Ruth are good golfers and Sam can do his age in 18 holes. Another classmate whose home base is Rochester, NY is Tom Ward. He and Jen wintered in St. Augustine, FL. Tom's grandson was accepted by Andover just recently.

Dick Morris wrote to say their granddaughter will enter Mt. Hermon School. Dick phones from Phila. to give me a new recipe he has tried in his radar range and ask a few questions like, did George Mumby shoot a basket in the Andover-Exeter game in the last second which won the game? Dick should consult Berry Grant on PA athletics. Berry is an authority. He claims athletes at Andover are younger than in our day because after four years of high school they used to take a year or two at Andover.

Pete Willis was obliged to retire as Prof. of Spanish at Princeton (age 68) but "was pulled out of the pasture twice to give graduate courses." N.Y.U. called upon him to teach paleography to a Ph.D. candidate and Pete turned down two requests by Harvard and Penn. to teach. In his spare time he makes tapes for the blind—"a very rewarding work." Pete thinks I write more letters than Eleanor Roosevelt did. He may be right!

The Abbot 24's planned a mini-reunion at our restaurant in May. Laura Williamson engineered the get-together. We were sorry not to be there. Laura has written several times during the year and we also had a fine letter from Polly Holden way up in Vermont.

We have given up on the Bob Clarks. Even Bob admits at 75 years, he should have his head examined to take on so many community projects especially those he headed up before and knew how much effort they took. Bob and Esther will have some relaxation in June during their trip to Glazier Nat. Park, Lake Louise, Banff and Jasper. Thanks for your invite but we are flying this year.

Another six page, handprinted letter came from Ed Fischer, our Chemistry Prof. at Yale, and Honorary Yale '28. Ed keeps track of our class—hears monthly from Dick Vaughan and others and asked for Gige Mumby's address. Ed has been interested in the Graduate and Professional Schools in New Haven and has donated a trophy to the winner of their intramural activities. He wanted to subscribe to our 1924 newsletter! He is on the list.

Bill Curtis was surprised at the cost of medical services and well he might as Bill just returned from a long session in Boston. He did admit Medicare took care of most of it. He thinks Bob Hamilton has the right approach when asking for money. "Bob's way with words softens the blow."

The Larsens usually get pictures of any new arrivals in the Edson family. Grandmother, Mamie, must be very proud of them as are Aunt Bunny and Uncle Swede.

Morgan Grace points with pride to his "two fine grandsons" and hopes they are Andover material. Dave Mdivani sent the Larsens an Easter card. Dave and I had a couple of phone chats while we were in California. We hope Dave and his son, Michael, are coming back to our 60th. I did not know that Dave's sister married the late Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. A letter from Louie Rugee's widow thanked the class for their memorial gift in his name. We hope to see Jan this summer while she is visiting her daughter and family in Wellesley.

Red and Katie Cleaveland, PA '23, were in Tucson for a few days in Feb. and spent one of them visiting the Knights and Larsens in Green Valley. Mary Duke, Rocky's widow, and the Larsens drove to Elkhorn Ranch—a 150 mile trip—to spend the day with Fletch Nyce PA '26 and his wife, Kay, in Feb.

The Ed Thompsons house-sat for the Larsens while we were in Calif., forwarding our mail and answering phone calls.

Bob Hamilton mentioned in one of his recent letters that we lost a classmate who was headed for national prominence in constitutional law when Mark DeWolfe Howe died. "I have stumbled on a couple of references where public figures turned to him on some delicate constitutional issues. What a shame that he could not have been spared to reach his full mature potential."

Bill and Miss Dickerman took off for their usual vacation in the Caribbean: Antigua & Barbados. Curt and Carol Booth wrote from Siesta Key in FL where they spent the winter. Bill Wadhams, an authority on the Conn. Charter Oak, sent along quite an interesting story of the hiding of the Charter. Bob Hamilton is still taking good care of the seedling from the Oak which has grown to be 7' high to be planted at our 60th.

We were sorry to hear the sad news of Tim Brown's death. We heard from brother, Gordon, thanking us for our letter of condolence. Also the death of Gerry Wynkoop's wife, Barbara, added another sad note to this news. What a job Gerry does for Yale '28! How he meets those monthly deadlines is beyond my comprehension.

Eight of us wine and dined at Pillar House on May 13th with apologies to Swede Larsen's son—we stayed till after 4 p.m. Bunny had reserved the Oak Room for 10 of us, but Peg Colby and Sybil Bottomley Talman had to cancel. Peg suddenly hurt her back and Sybil does not drive alone. Peg and Bob's grandson, David Kinnard will marry Melinda Munawski in May in the Presby. Church in Orchard Park, NY. They graduated from the Buffalo Medical School May 17th.

Ruth Larter Eveleth "said at last after 2 1/2 years in Nashua, NH, she feels at home and would welcome a visit from all if you remember me." Ruth Kelley Perry told us "their younger son, Dick, was married in October and made Elwyn and herself 'instant' grandparents of a 4- and 7-year-old." Ruth wins 1924 Eye Kudos. She tells us she will be 80 in three years.

Ruth Flaster Sadler had refused, but Ruth E. had twisted her arm enough. Her card said she did attend "had a nice time for the food was good and the company pleasant."

Our distinguished alum, Polly Bullard Holden told of the Alumni Council in Andover. No space to tell you! She and John shortened their Vermont winter with 3 weeks in California, but they returned in time to plant their many gardens.

Kay Hart Mitchell organized our delightful luncheon for she "wished more 24s could have come." Kay wins kudos for 1924 for her many honorary activities. I counted 6 I think. Our lunch hours must have made her late for the cancer clinic in Shirley Center. Then there's me, L.S.W., who likes Boston life more and more for its many varied cultural activities and a grandson and daughter who live nearby. And lastly, but by far our most distinguished guests, were 2 wonderful husbands. Elwyn Perry was well enough to drive down and back to Chatham. He took pictures which I think he might send us on request. John Holden and Polly come from the other direction, Montpelier, VT where they must soon return for John's rehearsals. They had lots of fun, too. Jane A. Kilby, Barbara Loomer, Ruth Newsom & Frances Platt declined our kind invitation this time. Ruth was to be in Bermuda with her daughter and Barbara was out-of-town. Lila Clevenger Burke says it is impossible to come (infirmities too)? She would love to see All (wow) when we are in the Yarmouths. Dorothy Converse sends "greetings to all my classmates." She is now semi-retired working 3 1/2 hours a day in the nursing department of the State Hospital in Concord, NH. Elsie Phillips Marshall says her Wellesley Simmons daughter now lives in FL; her son in Ohio; their "Navy Boy" in Norfolk, VA. She didn't even know some of the "extended" alumnus in our class, so almost feels Abbot does not exist. Yet she is all for fellow alum, George Bush. Olive Mitchell Roberts says she has 20 grandchildren and 9 great-grandchildren from 4 daughters. Her 5th lives at home still. I assume she has the 1924 Kudos for progeny. She has had both hips replaced, but was walking in a month. Her doctor says "this all depends as to how you go into it." So, when she got home, she just discarded her crutches. She adds she is at last getting used to Abbot being a part of Andover, for she has an Andover brother, that helps.

Caroline Hall Wason—perhaps wins the Infirmary Kudos of 1924. She says "her eyes need examining, she has colitis and arthritis and her teeth are falling out." Still Channel 2 keeps her husband and herself alert—they are called constantly by them for their criticism. And they are not large money givers! She adds "she would love to see her classmates, when near Orleans." Fun?

Polly B. Holden wrote an open letter to Peg McDonald, which I hope won't be too long for our allotted space. (I had a fun and interesting visit with her in February I will write up next time).

Elizabeth Sweet Hadlock of Milton, MA died in Nov. 80. Can a friend write about her for our next class notes? Dorothy Converse reports that she attended the annual convention of the State Employees Association of New Hampshire last October and had a nice Thanksgiving visit with her brother, Ralph, in Canaan, NH. Ethel Thompson writes that her granddaughter, Sally James (also the granddaughter of the late William G. James '24), was married on June 27, 1981 to Benjamin Meyer. Sally will graduate from the University of New Hampshire this June and Ben from Harvard.

Dutch Brodhead wrote Apr. 10 from Brattleboro the startling news that he was skiing 2 weeks ago and crocuses are now out. He & Suzanne were visited by the Irving Johnsons, of sailing fame, who had returned from an Antarctic cruise, bringing Dutch a pebble from the beach of Cape Horn—a memento of that hair-raising trip in '29 on the square rigger "Peking." Rev. Al Keedy completed a satisfying 7 months in St. Thomas, V.I., where he had a stimulating and busy time. He relayed the sad news that Al Whitney lost his wife Margaret last April. Our sympathy goes out to Al.

A welcome card and letter from Charlie Arnt since returning from their trip to India—the Taj is still beautiful, but the hawkers horrendous. They found the flights over and back exhausting, due to unexpected delays. Charlie's back at the old stand, calving, fertilizing and mending fences. Jack & Barbara Whitham visited Toronto last March, where their son was married. They're contemplating a visit to the British Isles the latter part of this summer, arranged by the Harvard Library in NY. They passed on the news that Dorothy Partridge had been hospitalized, but was home recovering. The following news from Charlie Stewart, "My wife died in '78 after a long illness. I remarried in '80 and a short time later had to have a lung removed. Recovery is fine so far. Last fall we had a good trip driving through Scotland & Ireland. Just now returned from an interesting trip through Egypt. So recent years have been both good and bad but never dull."

Spence Marsh's wife Doris thoughtfully writes that they're planning a trip to California, after Spence attends a meeting in San Antonio. He's still involved in finance, but in a volunteer way. Doris laments how his records keep multiplying and no secretary to keep them in order. Norm Flowers is still doing substitute teaching in Houston High Schools—keeps him off the streets, out of mischief and in good whiskey and annual trips to France and U.K.

Pete Todd reveals not much in the way of news since our 50th. Is leading a sedentary life in Lincoln, MA and breaks away to his place in Southern VT, which affords a wonderful escape. Frank Stratton stole away from Sarasota to visit Hell Grand Cayman for a long weekend to explore it both above and below water—he loves diving. Is blessed with lots of energy, completed an intensive 3 months' course in computer programming and will be doing it professionally on a voluntary part-time basis.

Regretfully I bring sad news of Kimberly Bush's death last February and Claude Allen, Jr., in April. Kim was in the personnel dept. at Macy's and later was personnel director of Assoc. Merchandising Corp. After graduating from Yale at the age of 62, he taught French at Deerfield. Claude had a distinguished career as a teacher. He taught at Deerfield & became assistant to Headmaster Frank Boyden. Mr. Boyden strongly influenced Claude to reopen Hebron Academy, which had been closed after World War II. Claude took on this challenge. By dint of his optimism, persistence and Herculean efforts, he rebuilt the school—enlarged its faculty, student body, physical plant, attracted a respectable board of trustees and increased its endowment substantially. He was awarded honorary degrees by Bowdoin, Colby and Bates Colleges. To the families of these class members, we extend our heartfelt condolences and sympathy.

Your Secretary stopped at Wethersfield to report on the Reunion to "Sandy" and Barbara and to leave the scroll tribute which the reunioners had signed. He was cheerful and getting about with a little help from a cane and still spending 2 days a week in a Day Care Center for his as yet undiagnosed troubles. I told him that though the Reunion finances were not all finished, instead of giving him another silver bowl for Barbara to polish (and this with her connivance) '26 had put more than $500 into the scholarship fund in his name, and that pleased him mightily.

'26 were headquartered at the almost new E. Stuart House nestled in the pines by the cemetery, a proximity we chose to ignore. We caught up with one another as far as decently possible and were all grateful to Carl Fishel for arranging a gourmet chateaubriand steak dinner at the Lanam Club which Nan and Fred Stott graced by their presence. Fred gave a short talk followed by Pete Tully who drew on his Washington background experiences to tell us things nobody ever prints or broadcasts.

The John Bassets greeted us as we formed for the Alumni Parade.

Most of us took advantage of the seminars, saw the school movie, and/or visited the Addison Gallery which put on a fine show.

The schedule of activities is covered elsewhere in this issue (please don't fail to read "Ted" Sizer's message at the alumni meeting: I hope it portends the educational wave of the future), but it won't tell you that Fletch Nyce set a 55th Reunion record by raising over $20,000 for the Alumni Fund.

The Abbot 1926 contingent was ably led by Frances Flagg Sanborn who happily brought along hubby George Sanborn, PA '24: "if you can't beat 'em, join 'em." The other registrants were Dave Anderson, Helen and Carl Fishel, Ben Gilbert, Barbara (hope the ankle's o.k. now), and Charley Gill, Jim Hoyt, Eleanor and Howie Huntress, Jan and Tom Kennedy, John McClellan, Kay and Fletch Nyce, Sher Smith, Alice and Frank Spinney, Charley Sullivan, Laura and Pete Tully, Mack Walling, Jean and Jack Weldon.

First and foremost the Class will be glad to hear that "Sandy" Sandberg is home from the hospital after a tough time. By now you'll know if he and Barbara felt up to reunion.

A constant visitor to the Hill is Carl Fishel fresh from the 1980 graduation of his grandson James A. McDermott, then coming back to reunite with us in 1981 and returns in 1983 for the graduation of another grandson Jeffrey McDermott.

Cam Blaikie dropped by the office to say he couldn't come to Reunion; that he just wasn't up to it. He hasn't completely recovered from his troubles and carries a can but promised to return for lunch after the festivities and hear the gossip. Travel lust has hit the Class. Jim and Allie Hoyt brought back such a glowing account of their Egyptian trip that Ben and Madeline Gilbert cruised 1,000 miles up the Nile on a 20-passenger river boat small enough to stop at many little way-places to bus to often-neglected sites. Ben's biggest thrill relates to his PA English course because he actually saw Shelley's "Ozymandias" shattered visage, not quite buried in the sand.

And now a few thousand miles north, we hear from Tom Ford who can't make reunion because he "expects to be at the North Cape in the middle of a swing through Norway and Sweden. Much of this will be by car so that we can get into the back country." Lapp country?

I was sorry more of the class could not return for our 55th Abbot Reunion. The PA '26's were most cordial, the campus looked beautiful as it always does at this time of year and the spirit of the school is as strong and loyal as ever.

A cocktail party outdoors at the Stott's was followed by a buffet, then a reception at the Addison Gallery for the retiring Sizors and incoming Headmaster and his wife, Don and Britta McNemar. I went to the Memorial Service in the lovely chapel with the new organ—a memorial to our past classmates whom we remember so fondly. Saturday's parade, with PA '26's, led to the gym and Abbot was strongly in evidence with our large banner behind the podium and many loyal alumnae. After the alumnae luncheon, the Abbot tea at Morton House was a happy occasion with many old friends and teachers back. Abbot seemed to be very much in the minds of people with her great gift to the alumni fund, the new active Abbot wing at the gym and many females around.

News from Gretchen Vanderschmidt tells of her retirement in 1979 and her present from the board of directors—a "super trip" to Germany. She is still active and well, is president-treasurer of her school's "Not-for-Profit Corporation," serves on several community agency boards, one of which has an Andover '42 man on it. She hopes to get back for our 60th Reunion and hears from Susie in Plymouth, NH. Gret gets together with Lucie Locker Rash and her husband now and then as they too live in St. Louis. She hopes her niece's son will come to Andover in the near future.

A note from Barbara Bloomfield Wood mentions she and Arnold moved to 108 Woodland Place, Osprey, FL last August, where their children visit and her son has a place nearby.

Eleanor Mahoney Smith, who still lives in Wenham, was sorry she could not come to reunion, as she was planning to be with her grandchildren in Maine at the time. She is enthusiastic about the new school—Andover. Her son "Chad" '57 works with Fritz Allis editing books for the Massachusetts Colonial Society. After a number of years as curator of Maritime History at Salem's Peabody Museum, he is currently curator of the Philadelphia Maritime Museum.

George and I are fine, enjoying life by the Maine coast, active in Dartmouth and Mount Holyoke clubs, conservation, Audubon clubs, church and large gardens. Went to Flamingo in the Florida Everglades birding this winter, saw friends and relatives and flew to Tucson, AZ where we saw many friends at Green Valley. This house is full of children and grandchildren in the summer including Anne (Abbot '52), Patricia '54, and Scott (PA '58).

Write to me, as many classmates want to hear from you.

Both of my children live in Maine, where my son is a Justice of the Superior Court and my daughter is a school teacher. As they are close we see quite a bit of them. Our health seems to be good and I am looking forward to our 55th next year."

Bernie Boyle writes "We have been residents of Naples, FL for ten years—spending 8-9 months a year a short distance from the Gulf—the other 3-4 months at our summer home in Manchester-Vt.-By-The-Sea. Active here as: director of the voters league, Republican Committeeman for the district. George Bush lived in Day Hall during his senior year while I was the Housemaster of Day—also was a student of biology. Also serve as a volunteer in the Naples Community Hospital. I've been active in the Dartmouth Club of southwest Florida since its founding 8 years ago—served as vice pres., pres. and presently as publicity and recruiting (enrollment) officer. I spend several hours each day in gardening—FL—specializing in a variety of different palms—I have 70 different types—up north in dwarf evergreens. Play golf every day—handicap—12-17."

Miner Patton, a former member of the Andover faculty and a college classmate of Joe Emrich (more formally known as the Right Reverend Richard S.M. Emrich, former Episcopal Bishop of Michigan) informs us that Joe is now retired, living in Sun City, AZ and preaching quite frequently in one or the other of the two Episcopal churches in Sun City. Recently Joe scored a hole-in-one on the 147-yard/17th hole of the north course at Sun City, using a 5-iron. Patton also tells us about the occasion Joe went to a golf course in Vermont one summer, was told he could not play because there was a tournament going on, persuaded the officials to let him enter the tournament just so he could play a round of golf, and then proceeded to win the tournament.

John Bennett recently saw Ed and Lydia O'Neil when they passed through San Antonio enroute to Cuernavaca, and the Bennetts were planning to visit them later in Mexico. John also reports "In March we're taking the south of Suez trip on the Argonaut with the Andover group. Hope to see classmates."

Pete Collado tells us "After retiring from Exxon in 1975 I became president of Adela Investment Co., S.A., from which I retired in 1979. I am now active in geothermal and biomass production of electric power." John H. Butts graduated from Stanford in 1931 and now resides at 805 Pichacho Lane, Montecito, Santa Barbara, CA 93108, where he has lived since 1959. He is the owner of Butts Buick-Fiat and Butts Mercedes Benz. He is married to the former Catherine Raymond of San Francisco and has 4 children and 9 grandchildren.

We received the following message from Frank Carpenter: "A disappointing winter for Dodie & me. In Nov. we took our boat (44' ketch) as far as Hilton Head from our place on the Severn near Annapolis expecting to return and take it to the Bahamas or Keys or both in January. But, alas, business reared its ugly head and we've been stuck here all this miserable winter. We hope to bring it back about May 1 in time for spring racing series. I need crew. How about it?" Says Charlie Cahn: I told my wife, Urs, that I would like to take a couple of months off and be a beach bum in Tahiti or Samoa. Urs said: "No need to travel, you are a bum in Florida!" Still active as bank trustee in Conn. and director of Systems Planning Corp. in Los Angeles. My golf is still horrendous."

Regretfully we report the following obituaries. Sidney K. (Ken) Tully died on January 2, 1981 while camping with his son in the Florida Keys. In recent years he served as a public relations executive for the New England Mutual Life Insurance Co., and in several civilian posts for the Navy. Ken graduated from Yale in 1933 and was commissioned as an officer in the Navy through the ROTC program. During World War II he served mainly on destroyers and was involved in Atlantic convoy duty, the invasion of North Africa and the invasion of Tinian Island in the South Pacific, where he was wounded. He was awarded the Purple Heart and the Navy Unit citation. After the war he was promoted to captain in the Naval Reserve and served as commander of the 1st Naval District Destroyer Division until his retirement a few years ago. He leaves a son, Peter K. Tully of Winchester; a daughter, Susan (Tully) Young of Liberty, ME; a sister, Susan Tully of New York City and Ocala, FL; a brother, Francis W. Tully of Brandon, VT, and a granddaughter.

Frederick Perry Boynton, Jr. died September 23, 1980 in La Jolla, CA. He was a graduate of the University of Michigan. Following a career with Sears Roebuck and Co. in Mexico, Brazil and the United States, he retired to La Jolla, CA, in 1956. Fred is survived by four sons: Frederick Perry Boynton III, George LaShelle Boynton and David Kirkham Boynton, all of La Jolla, and Peter Leavenworth Boynton of McLean, VA.

Charlotte Chase Hanscom's husband, Hank, has been retired for 10 years, and they have just completed their 12th foreign tour, with China in the spring. Their daughter, Sally, is an interior designer in Atlanta. They attended Hank's 50th reunion at Harvard Law last May. Charlotte has been president of her garden club for 2 years, and just completed her fourth genealogy book. Jerry Miller Bellows writes that she takes painting lessons, plays a lot of bridge, and gardens.

Nancy Kimball Dunlap writes that by marrying Ches Dunlap in 1979 she inherited 4 lovely daughters and 14 grandchildren. They live part time right on East Penobscot Bay in Maine, and the rest of the time in Lexington. Last summer they went to Scandinavia, and are going to California.

Eat your hearts out, Watson, Nicklaus, "Merry Mex", and '28 hole-in-ones! On St. Andrews Royal and Ancient stationery Hertie Barres proclaimed: "I have had two holes-in-zero. In St. Andrews we have 1 handicap table for all 4 courses. On the 5th hole of the New I had a stroke. Hence a hole-in-one (reported in enc.) becomes a hole-in-none. I also had a hole-in-one on the 11th of the Old Course. My stroke there gave me a second hole in 0. Ha." After reporting on whereabouts of 6 Barresian offspring and move from FL to Stonington, CT, for the 2 months spent in the U.S.A., Hertie issued "an open invitation to all my classmates to visit as pilgrims to the Mecca of golf. Thru the R. and A. I can secure for them preferred times on the Old Course and a 7-ft. bathtub to soak in afterwards." ... Tom Mendenhall's column in the Yale Alumni Magazine credits Rog Vaughan with "two certified holes-in-one on two different holes of the Montclair Golf Club." It must indeed be doubtful that any other cadre of Philipians can approach the Class of 1928 in lynx-eyed linksmanship. Tom himself, in addition to expressing gratifying sympathy for a co-toiler in the Class Secretarial Vineyard, described his home territorial Martha's Vineyard as "perfect for us. The island has all the world's problems, but in a smaller, more manageable form... plenty of retired folk and some very interesting youth. As for summer people (summer people some are not!), they are an inescapable price we pay for all this." After recoiling from funster M.F.'s summery punnery, one is reminded of the fact that there are many and lovely areas in New England where the genuine natives are outnumbered but not outsmarted, and "fleece the summer folks" is a favorite—and profitable—pastime. . . . From Down Under came greetings from Dick Carroll, amidst yet another visit from him and Esther to daughter Nana and family. Opined Richard: "Speaking of the future, 3/5 of our progeny (grandchildren) will be Australian, 2/5 in the U.S.A. We are quite content with this antipodal stance, strenuous as it is." Dan Gage has permanently pulled up stakes as CT resident in favor of Sarasota, with an eye to more favorable tax (and other?) climate, finds FL thoroughly enjoyable, hopes to rent back in Nutmeg Terr. for a couple of summer months. He also conveyed unhappy news that Jeff Jeffery suffered "a massive stroke this past year, but I'm glad he's still in there fighting." No later report is available, but Jeff's many friends wish him all the best. . . . From Seattle Pen Miller confesses to being "reasonably active in the law. Went Of Counsel 1/1/80. Playing lots of, but lousy golf. Betty and I have gone on 2 People-to-People golf trips, to Europe and to New Zealand and Australia. Also trips to China and the British Isles, the latter a garden tour." (nary a hole-in-one in all that swinging, Pendleton?). . . . From Atlanta Herb Elsas emitted warm epistolary glow re. (1) PA's acceptance, for Sept. '81, of 3rd generation Jacob E., son of Dr. "Skip," '54, and (2) 5 winter weeks in Cowpet Bay, St. Thomas condo, "very nice and noted in Feb. National Geographic." . . . On Alum-Fund gift envelope (Adv.) Dave Keedy scrawled: "Had the great joy of visiting in Andover this summer (cousin) P.K. Allen, squire of the Hill. . . . My first drop-in on Andover in many years." Subsequent follow-up card from San Antonio said: "Gladys fine, 2 of 4 children married, working toward 0 population expansion. Grandparents not yet. . . . 'Yup, still politicking," allows Ed Dearborn, "a Coolidge/Reagan Republican afloat in a sea of Democrats, serving as perennial chairman of the local (Hopkinton, MA) Board of Assessors, a sometimes sensitive spot." Ed's wife, Roana, has a good recovery from a triple bypass heart surgery, and he adds, "Now in my 8th year of 'retirement' and enjoying every minute of it, Heaven can wait." . . . Gerry Gesell continues to find summertime success from D.C. Bench devotes on his Down East acres and reports adding another hobby for the past 4 years, to buzzing wit, "raising bees and finding them more interesting than swine or cattle—and lawyers!" Addition of an aviary to Gesellian apiary could provide PA '28s Answer to Masters and Johnson. . . . Still in Okla. City, Bev Edwards retired recently from oil and investments, with both sons carrying on for him, locally and in world travel for Gulf Oil. Wife Dottie is a Gunston Hall (VA) Regent, and Bev indicates that he relishes "the life of a Country Squire." . . . From Bill Farley in L.A. a note and newspaper clipping told of Tucson-D.C. move of son Mike and family on Mike's assuming directorship of advance operations for Geo. Bush, making arrangements via nationwide staff of volunteers for Veepular Visitations to U.S. communities. Father Bill and Louise seem to be flourishing, with paddle tennis, golf ("struggle"), backgammon ("win a few coins now and then") service on the Board of the Hathaway Home for Children ("very interesting") keeping Bill out of excessive trouble. . . . Greenville, NY, parson Dick Clark, who missed our 50th a/c wedding duties, writes proudly of Feb. 1 Grandparenthood, June graduation of daughter Sally (last of 4 children) from N.Y. State College in Fine Arts, retirement in Sept. '81, "or until my churches have a successor. . . . Another cheerful missive from Marysville, CA, describes agriculturist Harold Edwards and Margaret and family ("all eighteen of us") as "wonderfully well," (with 2 medic sons in Santa Paula and Santa Barbara, 1 headmaster son (Crane School, Montecito), 2 teacher daughters-in-law, Ph.D. son-in-law on U. of Minn. staff, grandsons at Milton and Taft, AND Grandson Charles entering Andover in Sept. to carry on the Royal Blue tradition of Gramps Harold and Great Grandpa. '02. You're a good man, Charlie Edwards. "Supposed to be retired, but keep busy with community activities, 43 acres of prunes and 21 acres of almonds which are leased, home at Lake Tahoe, May trip to Greece for the 7th time," all of which adds up to good cause for Edwardian cheers. . . . Bill Adams and Ellie, between varied peregrinations, domestic and foreign, receive high marks from Dave Baker and Bill Frank, et uxores, for superior San Diego hospitality on the occasion of recent visits to S.D. Dave, still Darien resident, retired from First Boston Corp., "have kept my hands in by serving as investment advisor to an insurance company, and with some local volunteer jobs . . . winter in Sarasota, spend as much time as possible on the golf course, where we sigh a lot." Bill Frank, when on the Armonk, NY Domestic Front, continued to give most of his all to the attempted civilizing of Black Lab "Gringo," still a growing boy. . . . MISSING PERSON: The Alum. Office has suddenly lost track of Johnny Marsh, with mail bouncing back from Sedona, AZ, retirement address, whither Johnny repaired after folding his Norfolk County Trust Co. Chairmanship tent. If you know the whereabouts of this good man, kindly divulge pronto, to PA or yr. secy. . . . CLASSMATES Baldwin, Chapman, Dodge, Dudley, Fenn, Murray, et probably al: Thanks for communiques unrecorded above a/c space limitations, properly iced for future immortalization.

Readers of these notes over lo, these many years may recall periodic references to Mancel Clark, loyal and active CA Paster, faithful and entertaining attendant at '28 reunions (often accompanied by lovely daughter Deborah, "reunion mascot"), and possessor of a refreshingly elfin funnybone. Mancel died March 24 in his Montecito home after a long illness, survived by his wife Natalie, daughters Deborah and Betsy, and son "Tad" (Mancel 3d). There were graveside Episcopalian services at the Santa Barbara cemetery, and Deborah wrote: "In keeping with his wonderful spirit, father was laid to rest with a Dixieland band bidding him adieu. Although it sounds irreverent, let me assure you it was done in father's style—a little bit nuts but always in good taste."

In spite of arthritis Emily Sloper Shailer keeps going. She and Russ are busy enjoying spring gardening.

Katherine Fox Smiley reports, "A book published this past summer about a nice little old lady (2 murders) and other crimes as well! Who'd have picked her as the villain? 'The Granny Snatch'—a real crime suggested it! An excellent hobby now that I am lame is patchwork—new designs as well as traditional—in as bright colors as possible—to fight the gloom of illness in the family."

At Dartmouth's Blount Alumni Center, Abbot-Andover Alums in Hanover had a tea for Andover's Headmaster-to-be, Donald McNemar and his most attractive wife, Britta. Laddie Dunn Morse thinks Andover will be in most capable hands as both McNamars are fine workers with students and have great personality. Amazing how many alums young and old are in the Hanover area.

Dear '29ers

Several of you have been on the move since our last Bulletin. Charlotte Osgood Bennett has left her lovely home in Maine to move to a new lovely home in St. Augustine, FL. Dot Field Blakey has moved from Phoenix, AZ to Los Cruces, NM, and our "always-on-the-move" Deppy was last heard from on a trip to China. Her note around Christmas says "Bless Polly Loesch for keeping our '29 class glued together—for remembering the past, present and looking forward to the future. I sigh with surprise that I am finishing another year—still at work, still flying around the globe—in spite of my days at Abbot, I still have so much to learn."

We were sorry to hear that Eleanor Jones Bennett had had an accident but glad she was recuperating well. (Good for you, "roomie!")

It was good to hear from Marjorie Ellis Porter and from her roommate Gwen Jones Mallory Hammond when she gets to Tenants Harbor, ME this summer. Did any of you see the picture of Ruth Bourne Heston and her husband taken with President-elect Reagan when he was campaigning? She speaks of meeting "Bunny" at a Trailer rally—Would that be my "new girl" Bunny Atkinson? Betty McKinney Smiley answered that she is busy as usual with six grandchildren all grown up—one already married. She enjoys having so many Andover alumnae in Wellesley. Barbara Folk Howe plans to spend several months up in New England this summer after having lost her husband this fall. We are looking forward to some good visits with her.

Bill Hull, who regrets missing our 50th Reunion, writes, "I had hoped to be persuaded that Andover had recovered from its deviant absurdities of the 60's and 70's and might still be worthy preserving as something other than a shrine for lost hopes and fading memories." He is referred, elsewhere in this issue, to the adventures of our indefatigable Yardley Beers, who visited the Hill earlier this spring. Hayes Funkhouser has become a member of American Mensa (look up your Latin) Limited. The only qualification for membership is a score on an intelligence test higher than that of 98% of the general population. Ame Bradford is "into" skiing again and finds that "the new wonder skis and boots make it easier than when I quit 10 years ago." Ed Batchelder writes, "The 50th Reunion was tremendous in every respect. Retiring early in Plymouth to get over it and ready for the next one. Some of my classmates looked better than when they were at PA!" Len Phillips had a hip replacement but says he's recovering reasonably well, attested by his golf handicap of 14, back to where it was before surgery, he says. In central Appalachia Jack McLanahan, as he has for the past 50 years, continues to work through the Mountain Education and Management Institute, a grass roots program to help people in 85 countries in 5 states better control their own economic institutions. Our low pressure Alumni Fund agent, Gene Mintkeski, urges every classmate to dig deep—but particularly to dig. Our class participation should be better.

A new address for Kathie Fellows Leiserson 2280 Stickney Point Rd. Apt 429, Sarasota, FL. A card from Margery Hart Spencer recalling "mostly" happy days at Abbot. Yes, Margery, memories are great. How fortunate you are in having a son and family at Martha's Vineyard during your summer there.

Betty Quinby Parmelee wrote a wonderful long letter. She hopes to see Nini Owsley Warwick again this summer when she goes down to the Cape. Her grandchildren live only two hours away and she sees Dot Seiler most every summer in Maine and Bubby Healey Holland also. Janice Lovell Jenkins keeps busy with a large family—weddings and now three "greats." She loves their country place, bluebirds nesting and trailer traveling. Katherine B. Herberston writes of a treat having Betty Stout Volz come to Chatham to see her after the 50th Reunion. They had kept in touch but not seen each other for 45 years. Grace Hadley MacMillan made the advent of her first grandchild born to her daughter in Wisconsin. Better late than never Grace. All Abbotites enjoy reminiscing when Kay Dutton Leidy visited Alice Eckman Mason in Tucson, AZ and Louise Hollis Black (Aff. 1929) in Flagstaff, AZ. Yours truly Marianna Smith Hile will be traveling around for the month of June: her husband's 60th reunion at Penn State, friends and relatives in New England and then the two daughters and families in Indiana.

After several years of dividing her time between Italy, Andover and New London, NH, Rosamond Olivetti now feels as if she were really settling into her house in NH. Two of her sons live in the U.S. but David who went to Andover, is still living in Ivrea, Italy with his wife and three children. David's son, Dino, was at Summer School in Andover last summer. As long as she can she hopes to continue to summer in Italy (S. Felice Circeo—on the coast south of Rome).

Have a happy summer you all and do let me hear from you.

Following are glimpses of a memorable 50th Reunion held under the elms and bright blue New England skies—perhaps one of the most rewarding of our Andover experiences.

Fritz and Laura Allis staged the show from "origins to finish." President Hegeman and partner from Abbot led the procession across the greensward accompanied by Scottish pipers, wives, balloons, cameras, children and the inevitable dogs.

Retiring Headmaster Ted Sizer spoke eloquently about the need for superior teaching in this difficult day and age. In an aside, he took time to praise Allis as an inspiring educator and Jack Cooper for his skillful management of the nation's largest secondary school endowment.

Abby Kemper, Abbot '31 and Allis accepted the award for the highest percentage of Phillips/Abbot returning.

Ed and Norm King gave the school a check for $54,000 from 1931—$4,000 over the goal. Proudly looking on was Ed's recent bride, Helen. Norman has not been asked to live with them.

Chad Braggiotti and Charo won the long distance award. They came from Ecuador by way of Paris and are going home via Arizona. (Been anywhere lately, Bub?)

Ral Lewis was the hit of the banquet with an unannounced and very humorous account of our Abbot sisters. We all now wish we had seen more of these lovelies when we were on the Hill. One buddy confessed that the only other time he had seen an Abbot girl was peeping through a pair of binoculars while she was tying her sneakers.

George Vaill was in Andover for his second 50th Reunion. He has the distinction of being a member of both '30 and '31. George told a story about titillating an ocelot—and vice versa. Art and Martha Laundon say they spend about half a year in their house in Tuckers Town, Bermuda. He plays golf at Mid Ocean. Just recently, Art played for Bermuda in the World Seniors matches at the Broadmoor in Colorado Springs. He tells me it would have been quite a competition if he hadn't four-putted the first green.

The weekend was indeed an occasion to warm the cockles of one's heart. (A weekend is no fun with cold cockles.)

Those attending: Fritz and Laura Allis, Hugh and Marion Babcock, Marl L. Bacon, Dorothy (Hunt) Bassett, Cora (Budgell) Bourgeois, Chad and Charo Braggiotti, Inky and Jan Brightwell, Bucky and Peggy Buckingham, Emily Bullock, Doris (Allan) Carroll, Deac and Dottie Chilton, Ginny (Lillard) Collins, Jack and Cookie Cooper, Bob Conely, Fred and Betty Cuthbertson, Ferd and Ginny DeAngera, Marty and Jane Donahoe, Jim and Sally Elliott, Harold and Jane Foreman, Fran (Scudder) Glisson, Dick and Margaret Goodrich, Fred and MaryHelen Haas, Robert M. From Abbot 1931: Marie H. Whitehall, Mary Smead Homlar, Cora Budgell Bourgeois, Fran Scudder Glisson, Ginny Lillard Collins, Lisette Micoeau Tillinghast, Dorothy Hunt Bassett

Langill, Art and Martha Laundon, Tom and Bettie Lawrence, Thornton and Dandy Lewis, Ral and Ruth Lewis, Bob and Helen Milbank, Carol (Grosvenor) Myers, Faith (Chipman) Parker, Frank and Audrey Platt, Don and Ellie Saunders, George B. George Schlottterer retired from US Steel Co. two years ago and moved from Pittsburgh to Richmond, MA near Pittsfield. His return to New England is the fulfillment of a desire nurtured by his summers as a boy in Fairlee, VT and his years at Andover. Dolph Horn writes from Guadalajara, Mexico that the construction of a new plant prevented his return to Andover in June. Thanks, Dolph, for your generous contribution. We missed seeing you. Russ Withington retired in 1979 as professor of history at Phoenix College in Arizona. Although none of Russ's children went to Andover, he hopes his two grandchildren will.

We are proud to report that almost 50% of the Abbot Class of '31 were present at reunions, and the combined classes of PA and Abbot '31 had the highest attendance percentage at reunions. Abby Kemper was given a fine tribute by retiring Headmaster Ted Sizer. The buffet at Abby's was a huge success, Carol Grosvenor Myers' showing of an old movie of Abbot and the seniors at Intervale was just one of the highlights. Everyone said they had a marvelous time and are looking forward to the 55th. I would like to thank my committee of Abby Castle Kemper, C. The most exciting news we have for the summer Bulletin is that Miye Hirooka Mitsutani is coming to her 45th reunion at Wellesley in June. This news came from Mary Thompson Sherman who says she has been corresponding with Miye for over 40 years—I envy her and others who may see Miye at reunion.

Other reuniting classmates I've heard from are Isabel Arms who will be at our 45th at Mount Holyoke (which I am sorry to miss) and Ruth Tyler Smith will be at Smith and will undoubtedly run into others of our vintage. Isabel has just returned from a trip to Portugal and in August will go to Scotland where she will attend the Edinburgh Festival twice and hear the Tattoo. At home her time is filled with church activities and two garden clubs as well as the Worcester County Horticultural Society. Ruth and Ev escaped the northern winter by spending a week in Florida in January and then two weeks on Maui in February; they also had a trip to Portugal and Spain in April—Ruth says they believe in travelling while they can.

Sue Johnstone Milliken says she has no news but put quite a bit on her card: she is on sabbatical from teaching math which adds two months to her summer vacation; in addition she has just finished the required work to total 30 points above her M.A. Atossa Welles, after recuperating from a broken hip, is currently on a week's tour of Philadelphia which included an all-day walk sponsored by the Independence National Historical Society and covered houses and gardens. Kitty Cook Howland has been approached by the Massachusetts Commission for the Blind to teach yoga to sightless people, and hopes it will work out since she feels it would be most rewarding to work and serve in this way.

Bill and I have had an unusually busy spring. The first Sunday in April I oversaw an "agape" meal at our church which is patterned on mid-east food and is much like the Last Supper is supposed to have been. The next Sunday Bill put on a short play on the arrest and trial of Jesus, which didn't require much scenery since it was given in the sanctuary, but had a cast of 16 who all required costumes of some sort. Now, for 10 days, we are having a visit from my #2 French nephew, his wife and four-year-old daughter. Naturally this means my garden is not yet planted and my correspondence is far, far behind. I expect others feel the same way because I have not heard from the twins or Flop Dunbar who usually give me a run-down on their travels and their kids. I hope, however, that everyone is thinking strong thoughts about our fiftieth next year when it would be great to have at least double the number we had in '77. So much is going on at Andover that the weekend will not only refresh our memories of the days we spent there, but will also help us understand the world of our grandchildren.

We're typing with tears in our eyes this time. Even the resident moths in our PA '33 files are grumbling about their skimpy diet and making noises about giving their notice. Pending results of current negotiations with our spy satellite, we must warn you that in the next issue we may be forced to make up our own news of our vast unheard-from audience. If we lacked quantity this time, though, we made up in quality: Delighted to hear again from Dave Dove. Dave is living in Seabrook, NH with his wife Cynthia, having retired in April 1980 after a medical career topped off with twelve years as associate medical director with New England Life Insurance Co. Dave's five children, including Webster PA '71, have flown the nest and Dave reports having started "a small motor repair business" to keep him busy. We look forward to cornering him at our fiftieth. "Doctor, we have this ailing snowblower in our garage." Meanwhile, we just pray for no heavy snowfalls. And Bob Keeney writes from Somerville, CT, that he is "more or less retired" but still active in family, business and political affairs. Bob's wife, Jane Todhunter, died in 1974; however, Bob has six sons and a daughter distributed in New York, Philadelphia (University of Pennsylvania), Washington, Houston, San Francisco, and Hawaii. Enough to keep a man busy in family affairs. Bob also lists three granddaughters and two grandsons and says he hopes to have many more. We are not ever going to worry about Bob's being lonesome.

Life goes on much as usual in the McWilliams household, benevolently but firmly managed by our ebony feline Garfield, assisted by our All-American dog. High point of the winter was a trip to Arlington, VA, for the wedding of our son Andy PA '66, to Mary Anna Anderson, of Arlington. Mary, incidentally, was a student of our recently-retired Professor Ed Gulick at Wellesley, and we can understand Ed's long stay at Wellesley. And you can sleep soundly at night; our daughter Janet is still guarding the seas, if somewhat indirectly, with the U.S. Navy. As for your Kindly Old Editor, between bouts with this column we busy ourselves trying to promote the sale of printing presses, filling in the odd moments with church activities ranging from coaching a basketball team to you-name-it. No plans to retire—too busy. Once again we have to close with news of the death of two classmates. Bill Giles died November 25, 1980. He had been a practicing surgeon for many years at Newton, Wellesley and Waltham. He is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Joyce Reynolds, of Wayland, MA, and two sons, Ronald and Wesley, both of Marshfield, MA, and five grandchildren.

We have just received word of the death of Bob Hamlin on January 24 of this year of a heart attack. Bob is survived by his wife, living at Dawn Harbor Lane, Riverside, CT 06878. Our sympathy goes out to all their families.

My thanks to those of you who responded to the first card mailing. The rest of you will be hearing from me later. Send your news to the PA Alumni/Abbot Alumnae office.

Kay Damon Reed and I keep in touch. Kay spends the winters at the Boca Grande, FL, summers in New Hampshire. We met with Betty Clough Davis '35 at Betty's in West Palm Beach last year. Sandy Kinsman Dexter writes that she is adjusting to a retired man about the house. After husband's cardiac arrest and two coronary by-passes, she had surgery and a fall but still "try to carry on my usual activities."

Retired several years ago to Sarasota, Dot Lambert Robinson and her husband summer in Maine. She says "really not much news except we're happy." How many people would envy that! From Dallas comes news of Betty Scott Herries. She and Jim are semi-retired but are kept on their toes by children, grandchildren and friends. She hopes "life has been as good to all of you as it has been to us."

Ruth Stott Peters, busy as always, has taken on the presidency of the Chestnut Hill (MA) Garden Club—will widen her horizon with trips to national and regional meetings. She adds a P.S. of her satisfaction with the Fuess Award to George Bush.

Ada Carlson Prescott writes a nice long letter knowing that she was being contacted from the past when she saw the name "Ada." Sandy, as she is now known, has been a widow since 1974. After working for many years as a secretary in Marion, MA, she retired in January, sold her house and moved into a senior citizens complex. "The best change I ever made." She has four children, all on their own. Two live in Marion. She mentions our 50th Reunion, coming up in 1984. Not so far away—wish you would keep it in mind and make it a big one.

Finally a note from Beverly Sutherland Midgett in Bermuda with a beautiful picture of the view from her house, Far Horizons. Sorry we never got together on my Bermuda visits. In answer to several questions, yes, I do make my home in Florida. After going back and forth for several years, I made the permanent move two years ago. I still have roots in Pennsylvania. My daughter, Francesca, and granddaughters, Sarah, 11, and Elizabeth, 8, live in State College. My other daughter, Ann, has just made the move from Denver to Buffalo.

I know some of you feel that Abbot is lost, but it won't be if we all let the world know what we're up to. How about some news of careers and activities.

How great it was to hear from Pete Soutter after all these years. He regretted missing our 45th Reunion. About four years ago, he reports, he switched from advertising and sales promotion and is now an "expert" in commercial and industrial roofing. Pete says he travels about 600-700 miles per week developing roofing business, both new and repair, all over South Carolina. He hopes his new business will be in the black shortly. Pete may be reached at Regency Square 302-W, Columbia, SC 29204. Incidentally, your Class Secretary notes that Hadley Soutter '82, a lady, has been just elected the first female school president of PA. Any relation, Pete?

Arthur Lachlan Reed. Do you remember we used to call him Art? Now he prefers Lach. He has written to extend me congratulations and commiserations on my taking over as Class Secretary. Then he goes on to say that he and Martha will make their official home in Palm Beach, since he finds he can run his Middle Eastern business operations by telephone and telex from Palm Beach as well as Minneapolis. Another reason is that Martha has inherited a home there. After April 15th the welcome mat will be out at the front door and he hopes a lot of PA 35ers will stop by. Incidentally, your Class Secretary and his wife were fortunate enough to have dinner with Martha in Palm Beach in March. Lach was on his way home from the Middle East.

Barney Hurlburt writes from Honolulu that he received a telephone call recently from Elaine Eaton Perine Abbot '35 thanking him for a copy of a picture which Barney had sent her. It was taken of them at our Junior prom with Isham Jones! Elaine was passing through Honolulu with her husband but did not have time for a visit. You will recall that Elaine was in charge of the Abbot contingent at our 45th. Barney continues as medical director at Hawaii Planned Parenthood and is happy that they have increased the retirement age to 70. Once a year Barney and Mary take a grand trip. Last year they saw New Zealand and this summer they are cruising from L.A. to Alaska and back. Hurlburt promises to be back for our 50th.

Dick Lederer has been a student of Scarsdale and Westchester County history for many years. He is the author of The Place-Names of Westchester County published in 1978. He has recently been appointed by the board of trustees of Scarsdale to the position of village historian. Currently Dick is working on a glossary of words of the Colonial period that have become obsolete or whose meanings have changed. What a student and researcher!

We have received a short, rather factual update from Chan Hovey. "I have moved to Boston and my new home address is Harbor Towers, 85 E. India Row, Apt. 36C1, Boston, MA 02110. I have an office at Merrill Lynch, 125 High St., Boston, but I do spend at least one day a week in the New York office at 1 Liberty Plaza."

In the waning months of 1980 Norm and Sally Cross took advantage of one of Pam Am's attractive deals and toured New Zealand for two weeks. Norm reports that it was most enjoyable and the natives were friendly. They had three fine days in Sidney, an attractive vibrant city, they say, and finally went on to Singapore, where they had Thanksgiving dinner with their daughter and "baby-sat" for her while she went house hunting in Sidney. What nice people the Crosses! Going to Singapore to "baby-sit."

Now for some short miscellaneous updates. I don't have too many details on these classmates but perhaps I can get them for the next issue of the Bulletin. Al Adams's latest book Endangered Lands should be out shortly. Al Kerr is the interim headmaster of the Bishop Whipple Schools in Minnesota. Late last fall Charlie Meyer, a director and senior vice president of Sears, Roebuck for public affairs, retired. Charlie is a 1935er who did very, very well in the business world.

Silence from the class of 1935 for two issues is long enough. Double postcards sent to a few of you have brought me necessary material to go into production.

Shirley Smith King reports that her husband served as senior minister for 19 years in Farmington, CT, 23 years as senior minister in Weyzata, MN and has now retired. They continue to live in Weyzata. Of their four children, all have left the nest, all are married except Jonathan, Tod is a minister in Wheaton, MD and their two girls live nearby. Shirley is active on "Meals on Wheels." Both she and Harold enjoy taking trips. Lib Murphy Garrison continues to enjoy living at the Cape, watching the birds, and herring runs, and finds time to volunteer for public relations and education activities for the Emergency Medical Services Rescue Squadron. Herb expects to retire in early '82 as trade relations director for Becton-Dickinson Co. With 9 grandchildren, she says, "the cutest, brightest children in the whole wide world." Lib and Herb have the greatest number, I think.

In a note from Barbara Symonds Day she writes "Web and I are fortunate in having been able to travel a great deal, some business, some pleasure. Retirement from DuPont when it comes will mean a switch in jobs for Web. He doesn't want to stop working, just some day to work less. I had eight enthusiastic years as a real estate broker but life these days is so busy I don't have time for everything." Frannie McTernan Coan has written that her daughter Hillary has moved with her family from Westfield, NJ to San Francisco adding "Wow! How I miss them!" Hillary's husband is with Wells Fargo Bank. Frannie's mother now lives close by so that she is able to see her daily.

In February Jane Dawes McLenan and John took a week's cruise among the Hawaiian Islands. A more recent trip was to Houston to see their son receive his master's degree in photography. They now boast of six grandchildren.

John H. Castle, Jr. '34: the right memorial

His friends love to talk about him. "He was a big bear of a man—six feet tall and 210 pounds—a lovable guy, and so able," says his friend Tim Ireland '38. "He wasn't much for looks, but everyone who knew him loved him."

"I never knew anyone with such joie de vivre," says his football teammate for three years, Clint Frank, Yale's great All-American of the '30s; "but Jack was a tough gutsy player you could count on when the chips were down." Such friendships lasted Jack Castle's lifetime.

Because it bears his name, the new John H. Castle, Jr., Foundation for the Director of Athletics will symbolize the sportsmanship, stamina, camaraderie and fun that characterize the best of competitive athletics, as Jack Castle experienced them at Andover and later at Yale. Honored as first recipient of this new faculty chair is German Instructor Joseph B. Wennik '52, who coordinated the magnificent planning of the new Athletic Complex and has directed the Andover athletics with imagination and energy for the past four years.

Jack Castle died nearly 14 years ago—he was too briefly a Charter Trustee—but his personality, his astuteness, and sparkling sense of humor have left a deep impression on innumerable friends. "A giant of a man both in stature and ability," states Ireland. "He looked like an ex-athlete (which he was) full of fun and laughter (which he was), but he was a tiger of a man intellectually as well. Jack was a great addition to the Board of Trustees. He was for fiscal responsibility back in the late '60s, when other people weren't worrying so much about balanced budgets. He was also a very funny man."

As an Andover student, he was nicknamed "Jello" but no opponent pushed him around the football field—he was too strong and enjoyed competition too much. Physics Instructor Emeritus Jack Barss remembers him as a student of great personal appeal, but muses, "I never could understand how a young man named John Harvard Castle could go so fast to Yale." There Castle and his Andover teammate Bill Platt roomed together and played together on some famous Yale teams. Castle did go to Harvard for his M.B.A. He met his match in Dorothy MacAusland, married her, and was a devoted husband and father of four daughters. "Jack's unique quality was endless energy and Dot has it too," says their Rochester friend Martin Donahoe '31. "I don't know how the two of them living together kept from crashing into each other."

From 1941 to 1946 Castle commanded a destroyer escort as a lieutenant commander in the U.S. Naval Reserve. "He chased enemy subs all over the Atlantic with great gusto," Donahoe remembers. After World War II Castle returned to Rochester and the family sterilizing equipment company, The Castle Company, later merging it with other firms. His business acumen and his personal qualities were in great demand on the directorates of various Rochester companies and community agencies. "But he didn't neglect sports," remembers Donahoe. "Jack loved golf and bird-shooting and he and Dotty loved to go boating in the Thousand Islands."

Castle was vitally interested in his school and was in just as great demand at Andover on the Alumni Council, as Alumni Admissions Rep, and working on the Andover Program, 1958–60, before joining the Trustee board. Trustee Ireland remembers sharing a low point with the campaign chairman, Donald H. McLean '28: "Our keels were really dragging bottom, but when Don called Jack Castle to talk divide their time between the Andover base (where Kate manages to swim a mile a week at the "Y") and their NH spread (where Bill ferociously gardens in season). A gala 80th birthday celebration for Bill took place in Andover in January. Both Katy and Bill remain professionally active. Ned (almost 23 now) is finishing his second year at Harvard Medical School and this summer begins surgical rotation at Mass. General Hospital. Ann Cutler Brecheen accompanied husband Joel to Golden, CO for his first "70's" tournament (tennis) in April. He won, we hope! They were planning afterwards to take a trip to the Tetons, Tahoe, then down Route 1 to L.A. to visit daughters, Leigh and Laurie who, together, have purchased a house which they are "fixing up." Ann is funds control officer for their library and still loves putting kids and books together.

When Lucia Nunez Atlas visited Morocco and Portugal at Christmastime, she found Morocco utterly foreign in feel, Portugal an intimate and relaxing spot. She had a splendid trip. At this time of year (spring) she finds working in her garden full of joy. Doris Anderson Clark's daughter Carrie is pursuing a master's degree at Smith and son David Whittredge Clark is teaching at Pike School in Andover.

Having an addition put on our home has kept Wes and me in a state of confusion for the past year. It seems as though some of the loose ends may never get finished. We are now enjoying a spacious kitchen, bright dining room, a laundry room and garage with automatic door. Last fall I took a trip with Wes to Honolulu, a special treat for me. I think the next time I shall need news is in September. Let me hear from you!

Absorption in past memories and enthusiasm with future plans are the pleasant recollections of our 45th Reunion. Here is the list of Andover and Abbot attendees who spent a beautiful weekend on the Hill. Before listing this distinguished group, it must be acknowledged that we are now members of the "old guard." The next promotion will be to Senior Citizen which I am told has fringe benefits. Here are those who successfully made the 45th. John and Charlotte Bishop, Ned and Julie Bixby & Lea More, Herb and Milly Boas, Roy and Sally Bolton, Mary (Dooley) and Larry Bragg, Gordon Brooks, Bus and Dot Burdett, Mel and Liz Chapin, Clara (Holland) and Chevy Chase, John and Nicky Cone, Cleve and Jean Cory, Betty (Sargent) and Jack Crandell, Sally (Scates) and Harry Engelkirk, Al and Di Hammer, Bill and Jeanne Hart, Dray and Helen Heard, Dick and Eleanor Jordan, Paul and Peach Kalat, Spike and Annie Knapp, Jack and Gay Kausel, Bill and Anne MacIntyre, Ed and Phyllis Masback, Wes Oler, Loring and Ann Reed, David and Charlotte Rubin, Bill and Molly Shallow, John and Mary (Trafton) Simonds, Fred and Nan Scott, Bill and Jinny Trafton, Lucy (Hawkes) and Steve Winship, Dick and Charlotte Wyman.

Cleve Cory not only came the furthest but also traveled the longest way, crossing two oceans, one sea and one canal. He is the Viking Sky Lines biggest booster to get from Seattle to Boston.

Ned Bixby's sister, Lea More, Cleve Cory's daughter and son-in-law, Carmella and Ron Gallo, were welcome additions. The Reunion committee of Roy Bolton, Lucy Hawkes Winship, Loring Reed and Mary Trafton Simonds performed graciously. They have our thanks as do Fred and Nan Stott for the cocktail reception and Roy and Sally for the good-bye brunch. To those who could not be with us, and did send messages, our fondest greetings to George Seabury, Steve Moorhead, Mike Jennings, Lyman Wickwire and Peter Stericker.

The Reunion of 1981 coincided with several significant events: Ted Sizer gave his final address as Andover's 12th Headmaster; Don McNemar attended as Headmaster-elect; Mel Chapin is now the Chairman of the Board of Trustees (Andover's 25th); Fred Stott announced his plans to retire next year; last and least, your scribe became Andover's 2109th Class Secretary. Other classmates who made contributions to the Reunion included Dick Jordan who took part in the Alumni Memorial Services.

Reunions, by their very nature, are oriented to the past. Many events triggered memories. I, for one, had forgotten that "America, the Beautiful," the singing of which closed the Alumni luncheon, is an Andover product. The visible evidence of the part our class played in World War II: our list outside the gym was the longest.

But there were as many indications of the future: The headmaster of the past nine years taking on a most challenging new role in the nation's educational world; the infectious enthusiasm of the new headmaster; everywhere the physical evidence of the 200th Anniversary Fund Drive; the Commons Dining Rooms being restored to their original condition... generations of undergraduates thought butter-padded ceilings were a New England tradition! The new organ in the Cochran Chapel, to write with restraint, is spectacular. This leads to a further future. The "movers and the shakers" of the class have come up with a great idea. Mel Chapin and Fred Stott have served Andover with such distinction, it is proposed that the Class of '36, on the occasion of our 50th Reunion, make a scholastic gift to Andover in their names. You will be hearing more about this, but for now, plan ahead so that all of us collectively can be proud of their achievements.

Finally, your new secretary is the product of smoke-filled, back-room politics, and an acceptance in an euphoric (Helen wouldn't let me say alcoholic) haze. I was lucky that I had Reunion news for this first column. Now the cupboard is as bare as a Copperspate ad. But spare me from feeling like one when I again take pen in hand. Who then will be the first to write a letter of "condolence?" Or who will use this space to tell all of us what retirement is or will encompass? Or who has the largest number of grandchildren? Now that is a contest worth entering! No longer can you influence the outcome.

I look forward with enthusiasm to future communications with you on a two-way basis. Liz, have a nice summer.

Loring Reed sends news from Peter Stericker in England, whose address there is Homecroft, Old Mill Road, Chelston, Torquay, Devon TQ2, 6HW. After the death of his first wife, Peter married his present wife, Paddy, who had lived in Pittsburgh and Virginia for 17 years. Peter came over to give his stepdaughter away in marriage in '77, will miss this reunion but says they'll be back in the States in 1982. Peter reports that he still works part time in a printing company and enjoys it, paints and draws for his own pleasure, plays a bit of tennis and swims and "finds it all fairly agreeable." He goes on: "Fortunately a number of visitors from your country come here each year and I need hardly add that if you and yours or any old friends come over they would receive a warm welcome. We mean it." Fred Stott may have taken him up on this by the time you read this; he and Nan plan a vacation, if you can believe it, in England in June. More England news: Bill Mann and R.G. Jordan had a mini-reunion in London in September with their Yale roommate, Tony Barker, a native Englishman and long resident in London. Bill's son, Mike, is in the Girard Trust London office. Harry Groblewski became the new director of North Shore Middle School in Beverly, MA last August. Paul Kalat writes that he became chairman, but remained CEO, of the company he founded in 1963, Hausmith-Sysco Food Services, Inc., merged with Sysco of Houston, TX in 1972; "now maybe more time to see Andover." Ray Korndorfer is now Rev. Raymond, having graduated from Bangor Theological Seminary. He is an ordained minister in the United Church of Christ and in his second pastorate at St. Paul's Church in Taylor, PA, and president of the Taylor Ministerium for the third about the target amount for Rochester major gifts, Jack told Don, "Hell, we could raise the whole $6 million here in Rochester if we had to." His attitude picked us right up off the bottom, and in due course we topped our goal." As a result, thanks much to Castle's assistance, the school was able to expand its playing fields by building Rafferty Fields. Jack Castle spoke at the dedication of these fields to the memory of Kevin Rafferty '34, his Andover roommate who didn't come home from World War II.

Now the John H. Castle, Jr. Foundation for the Directorship of Athletics, established by family and friends, affirms the importance of athletics in Andover education: the truly liberally educated person is the product of both academic and physical education—a sound mind in a sound body, enriched by the values and friendships gained in sports.

Although my golf game is a bit rusty, I did shoot a few 77's this year." Chet Nourse says he will definitely be there with the class for the 45th; "Less than a year from retirement, recently bought a home in Dunedin, FL; expect to be domiciled there by Oct. 1, 1981—naturally, near a golf course." Louis Wiley writes that he is enjoying life in southern California. We hear from Ed Masback that: "If any classmates are involved with the American Field Service International Scholarship Programs, (officially AFS International/Intercultural Programs) or would like to be involved in an organization which handles about 7,000 teenage exchanges each year, you can reach me at AFS, 313 E. 43rd St., NYC 10017, where I am interim CEO and serve as board chairman." George Ryder writes he has retired (April 10, 1981) from his current employer and he and Margaret are moving to Pensicola, FL. They purchased a home there in 1978 in preparation for the move. If anyone is in the area, he would welcome them stopping by.

Lucy Hawkes Winship has forwarded some of the notes written about Reunion, so there is more news than usual to report.

Clara Holland Chase writes from Maryland that she saw Fran Mahoney Stewart at Connecticut at Thanksgiving time and that they had a lovely "do-you-remember" session. Barbara Reinhart Livingston writes she was not able to make Reunion since her husband had a 50th Reunion to attend. We were all sorry too! Grace Nichols Knight is recovering from a knee operation so was doubtful that she would make the 45th. However, she is hoping to go to India later this year.

Our travelers also include Priscilla Mailey who had 19 days in China a year ago and is planning to take off in June for Scandinavia, and Anne Robins Frank who will vacation in Europe this summer. Sally Scates Engenkirk and her husband enjoyed a trip to Spain and Portugal in February. Makes me feel quite tied down to my New Hampshire acres.

Anne Russell Loring writes from California that she and Mal are assistant managers for the mobile home park where they live. Since our 40th Reunion she has seen both Skeeter Ransom Tucker and Sarge Crandell, and recently had a visit from Molly Savage Van Stone of the class of 1934

Carl Jacobs advises that he has retired from Inland Steel Co. in Chicago and moved to Keene, NH, where he is busy rebuilding an old farmhouse and cutting wood for his stove. George Schreiber writes that he is "still going strong"—but does not specify in which of his fortes he is continuing strong. Pat Deming is celebrating his second year of retirement by running our Yale 40th reunion—as he stays deeply involved on a volunteer basis with several local community agencies. He reports that his family is well—Hunt, '68, works for the Corporation Councils office in Washington, DC; John, '70, works in the Grafton, VT, area, and George is at home with Pat and Anna.

Frank Munsey, in a brief note, reports, "A chest X ray routine last fall required surgical removal 1/3 right lung—happily tuberculosis, not cancer. All is well now and we are enjoying living here very much!" I do not know whether the "here" referred to is Marietta, GA, or Jeddah, Saudi Arabia—take your pick! Joe Macchell spent most of July, 1980, in the hospital but is now "OK." He describes himself as semi-retired, but busy.

Jack Powelson will be away from his normal post as professor of Economics, University of Colorado/Boulder during '81-'82 academic year while he enjoys a faculty fellowship in the Boston area writing a book on the history of land tenure and its relationship to economic development, doing his research in the Harvard library. This is handy for Jack and Alice as all five of their children are now in the East—Ken, '80, is now at Harvard; and Larry is entering Andover this fall as a Lower Middler. If any of you are feeling your age, hear this: Jay Rockwell's Christmas letter from Anchorage, AK, discloses that he had a prostate operation in the spring, that his convalescence from that was marred by a broken ankle, but that a month later he was being roped into an unexplored cave in the beautiful Chitstone Valley (which he describes as a cross between Yosemite and Grand Canyon where the only footprints were "our own").

In checking over the class directory cards which were sent to me recently by the Alumni Office, I found some interesting geographical and occupational information about our classmates. Ten members of our class live in Massachusetts. Nancy Burns McArdle in Andover; Alice Brennan Rock in North Andover; Liz McArdle McDermott in Lawrence; Lucy Hulburt Richardson in Essex; Priscilla Wonsan Hahn, manager of the Bookends (Northshore Shopping Center) in Lynnfield; Sally Gage Curtis in Topshfield; Jean Rae Haskell in Marblehead; Judith Wonsan Chamberlain, a librarian in Gloucester; Barbara Kelley Robbins in South Dartmouth and yours truly another librarian at Governor Dummer.

New York claims seven members of our class with Nancy Kincaid Breslin and Bobbie Daniels Goodman, a sculptress, living in New York City; Toni Wilson Benford, a medical secretary, in Larchmont; Connie Knox, secretary for Union Carbide, in Scarsdale; Sadie Sheldon Miller in Rye; Ellen Simpson Martin in Mt. Kisco; Mary Perrott Whitehill is a librarian at the Newburgh Free Library.

Connecticut is the next most popular state as Charl Boynton Connors, a physician, recently moved to Essex; Grace Vibberts Conlin lives in Cromwell; Louise Stevenson Andersen, director of Connecticut College Alumni Association, lives in Noank; Hope Humphreys Trench in New Canaan; Marge Boesel Van Winkle in Litchfield and Harriott Cole Fox in Suffield.

Maine is the home for part of the year for Kay Forbush Bass (Hilton Head, NC in winter); Lil Seiler Willins is in Bridgton and stays at Ormond Beach, FL in the winter. Caroline Curtis Carney lives in Brunswick; Dottie Hamilton Gammon in Limestone and Mary Jane Smith in Hallowell.

The whereabouts of the remainder of the Class of 1937 will be reported in the next issue of this Bulletin!

The Margaret Sanger award goes to Dr. Ed Friedman whose wife recently had a son (see Spring notes). Nat Abelson has taken a more conventional route, having retired as map director and vexillologist at the U.N., but is busy with his property and hobbies and time does not drag.

The school has cut down on Bulletins and the quantum of news, so: George Ingram: now living at 502 E. 87, NYC: 8 yrs. in materials distribution business after being officer and director of Raytheon and Champion Internat'l; trustee of College of Wooster; wife in real estate—NY; daughter Sara with three degrees thru M.B.A., and daughter Patricia has provided three grandchildren. Bob Young is the managing partner of the nation's fourth largest law firm, Morgan, Lewis & Bockius, Phila., with 7 branch offices. He reports 4 bairns married and a 15-yr-old at home: sees Viney occasionally, and keeps up with Bob Gillispie. This March, classmate Ted Harrison was inducted into the Massachusetts High School Hockey Coaches Hall of Fame. Well deserved!

Henry Steinhart, one of the class's more willing correspondents, writes letters too full of news and interesting comments for me to precis (Fuess) readily. He is largely retired from architectural practice, but became a Fellow of the AIA in 1979, and will work with Jules Gregory on an urban design team in May. Henry continues an active interest in backpacking, outdoor equipment and photography, the last an interest dating back to PA days at least. I had a nice chat with him on the phone in February, and owe him a letter. Another loyal man, Harry Adriance, echoes Henry regarding the Bulletins and possible newsletter, saying he'd rather have quality than quantity. (Looking back at this set of notes I see neither.) He and Sue did a travel documentary, taking a 38-foot cruiser the length of the Thames River, and is producing an AV presentation on Springfield (MA) Quadrangle of Museums and Library.

Doc Schwartz died February 24, 1981. He lived in Lyme, CT and ran an antique business in Hadlyme. I hadn't seen Doc since the late 30's, but he kept up with us and only from his widow, Mary, did I learn of some six years of final illness. I may have noted before, the death of Tommy O'Brien, one of our "lost" classmates. Can anyone tell me anything of TJ?

The opening and closing of this are in odd contrast. The first is the hope, but the last is the prospect.

I do wish more than three of sixteen had answered my notes for news. My imagination is dry and the School imposes brevity.

Several of our athletes have checked in. Bob Goodkind writes that he played tennis twice within a week with the great Don Budge. When not on the court, Bob is president of Goodkind & Co., members of the New York Stock Exchange, at 375 Park Ave. Ace Williams was elected president of the Connecticut State Golf Association last October. He says of this honor: "I find this a very pleasurable way to give something back to the game I have enjoyed for so many years but now find offering longer courses, larger sand traps, and smaller holes. Incidentally, it's fun to think back about playing against Bill Campbell in the Exeter match—as golfers know, he's about the winningest senior amateur we have." I envy these supple classmates. A touch of arthritis makes it a chore for me to get glass to lip.

Outdoor activity is not always benign. Tom Kelly reports that Holt Webster was the victim of a freak accident last summer. It seems that Holt and his wife Kate were watching a tree being toppled on a neighbor's land. The tree fell the wrong way and both Kate and Holt were struck by the branches. Kate's injuries were minor, but Holt suffered severe lacerations to his legs. He was hospitalized for over a month and had to have a number of skin grafts. About the same time, Tom went to the hospital to have a couple of discs in his back repaired. The two old roomies used the phone on a weekly basis to compare notes on the respective merits of hospital care in Seattle and Chicago. A later report from Tom provides the good news that both he and Holt are fully recovered, much aided by a joint February vacation with wives in Santa Barbara.

Congratulations go to Vern Williams. In September he left the fraternity of widowers and married the former Mary McLellan of Seattle. "Together we now have four daughters, two sons, one daughter-in-law, two son-in-laws and one granddaughter. Our two youngest are seniors in college. So there is daylight ahead."

Gordon Brough writes that he is looking forward to retirement after many years in plant engineering and administration. He and Elaine will head southward next winter but will be in close touch with their family of eight, including their two-year-old granddaughter.

Do any of you recall reading a poignant article in the New York Times Sports Section, dated January 4, about a young boy's hero worship for a Yale basketball player and how the star's words of encouragement were an inspiration to the boy? The writer was John Barres, Oliver's son. There is a twist to the ending. John turned down Yale in favor of Princeton where he excels as a basketball player, debater and student. John, '78, has a brother Bill in this year's graduating class at Andover.

Harry Anderson, Pete Anderson, Tom Flournoy, Pete Strauss and Ace Williams (am I missing anyone?) were in New Haven for the Harvard-Yale hockey game February 21. To these prejudiced eyes everyone looked as young as ever. Jack Northrop frequently attends this affair but was among the missing this year. endowed with oil, gas, coal and uranium, all of which can be seen being produced or mined in one spot when one flies over the Powder River Basin. Anne adds that Casper pays for all municipal facilities in advance and in full before construction is started. She recommends the same policy to New York City. (Oh, come off it, Ms. Lowe!) Harriet Means Kleiser, ("Kel") reports that husband Jack is planning to retire next year. Son Randal, (of "Grease" and "Blue Lagoon" fame) is currently hard at work on three films. Son Dave is at Columbia working for a master's degree in Fine Arts. (It's his second, the first being in Business.) And son Jeff, a partner in N.Y.C. Digital Effects Ltd., got married last June. "Kel" reports that she's waiting for a grandchild.

Phyllis Campbell Crowell has become an enthusiast for California. She is going to college two days a week to learn to be a travel agent. She works part time at a delightful shop that sells nothing but music boxes. Phyl spent last summer making an auto tour of Great Britain and Paris, all on her own. This year she'll be exploring New Zealand and Australia so she won't be able to come to Reunion. Oh yes, two new granddaughters bring the number of Phyl's grandchildren to ten—five boys and five girls! Eleanor Rafton Gordon tells of herself and husband Harold finding a new and nicer apartment. Same address but now it's Apt. South PH-1 for the Raftons. Son Alan's 979 marriage provided Ellie with two step grandchildren to enjoy. They live in Londonderry, NH, (which isn't so very far away,) where Alan is a counselor at Salem High School and wife Pam is an executive secretary.

All classmates' sympathies surely are extended to Nancy Whittier Atkinson whose father, Charles L. Whittier, died last November at the age of 85.

I hope I see a lot of you at Reunion!

A recent Sunday New York Times reported the marriage of Godfrey Rockefeller's daughter, Caroline, a Duke graduate. The story lists Godfrey as a retired executive director of the World Wildlife Fund.

Hank See wrote that he and Gail and his three younger children spent three weeks in Ireland last September in a rented house in Ennis, County Claire. From there he toured and played lots of golf, some fishing and even a little duck hunting. Jim Carrington sent a short note that he hoped to see George Bush at the inauguration. I'm sure many others had the same desire and hope Jim was successful in this pursuit. Fred Kahn reports becoming a grandfather on March 17, 1980 thanks to his daughter, Mary. It was a girl!

Just a short time ago, I was able to visit with Mace Thompson during a business trip to Kansas City. Mace looks exceedingly well and has been in the insurance business there for many years now. His original firm was acquired by Alexander and Alexander and now is merging with an English company. Mace has just one son living at home and in high school. The rest are on their own and doing well. They enjoy visits to Nantucket where the Thompsons have kept a summer home for many years. The recent Andover phonathon gave me the opportunity not only to raise a little money for our class agent, Peter Welch, but also the chance to chat with several of you that we haven't heard from recently. Bill Bixby, father of five, is in the real estate business in Indian River, FL. One boy is a steward with Pan American which helps reduce the cost of parental travel while another is a sail-maker in Boston for Ted Hood and the youngest, just out of school, is touring the world. One daughter lives and works year-round in Nantucket and another teaches in Boston. David Conroy is also in the real estate business in the very active cooperative market in New York City. He has left Greenwich Village and now lives at 3 East 75th Street in the heart of the high rent district. Ken Keuffel continues as head coach at Lawrenceville and doubles as an English teacher. He's been there since 1955 except for a six-year venture into college coaching. The Keuffels have three children, one boy and two girls and is currently making tuition payments to Colby and Kenyon Colleges—with one at home and yet to go.

Stuart Arnold lives in Chappaqua, NY and commutes to the city where he is the sales manager of the New Yorker magazine. He has two daughters, one at Marymount and one at home and in the 10th grade. Bob Hall was a practicing Ob-Gyn in New York till he decided to return to school. He is now a practicing psychiatrist in Westchester and lives in Pound Ridge, NY. Carl Knapp is living at 201 East 69 Street in New York and working for the heavy construction company of J. Rich Steers in the Wall Street area. One son graduated from Williams and earned a master's degree at Columbia. Another is graduating from Hamilton and has been recruited by Chubb and Sons while a daughter is currently a jockey at Santa Anita but moving into the less dangerous horse training area. Charlie looks forward, with no great joy, to a steady commute to Saudi Arabia where his company has a major construction project. Amos Prescott lives in Smoke Rise, NJ and runs the family household chemical business. Any one connected with the supermarket industry knows J. Prescott & Co. as a powerhouse in the private label segment of the bleach and detergent market. Through acquisitions the company now serves retail needs on a national basis. Both Prescott and Arnold spoke of returning this year for their 35th reunion at Amherst. I hope we do as well next year when our 40th arrives. Sedge Howard has been in the sugar business in New Orleans for many years now. He is the president of Supreme Sugar, a division of Archer, Daniels, Midland & Co. and this year he is serving as the president of the sugar club.

We have adopted the policy of saving the worst for the last and have had two sad notes in the last months. Bob Seaver wrote that his wife Mary died early this year after a long bout with cancer. Bob writes that "the future is uncharted." His children are still pretty well scattered. Paris, Berkeley, Philadelphia, Laconia and Amherst and now there are two grandchildren. Jean Boone wrote "I am sorry to say that Olin Boone died of a heart attack while playing racquetball on March 13. He was 56 years old. Surviving are his wife, Jean, daughter Peggy Allen—sons Scott and Dick and one grandson. The Boones live at 717 Boulevard in Westfield, NJ.

Roger Strong reports that because the Messrs. Hawes and Gerasch were superb teachers the North American Review recently received the prestigious National Magazine Award for fiction. To be specific, Richard Abrons, former Hawes/Gerasch student, is the author of Every Day A Visitor upon which the award was based. Congratulations, Mr. Abrons!

New York architect O'Brien sent a clipping (on Easter Sunday) reporting that Superior Court Judge Thomas R. Morse, Jr., had laid down the law to Boston city officials giving them five days to end their squabbling and "find a solution to the fiscal problems that threaten to bankrupt the nation's oldest public school system." It really seems like more than enough time, Tom. More news about Judge Morse—the PA alumni office sent a clipping from the Boston Globe reporting that good Judge Tom spent 20 years specializing in insurance defense litigation before being appointed judge in 1973.

Since then he has earned a reputation as low-key, reasoned peacemaker whose seriousness is punctuated with flashes of Yankee-dry humor. He probably earned these traits shooting craps with John Caldwell and Bob Williamson at PA.

From J.P. Stevens, III—in a Philadelphia Bach Festival envelope—comes the great news that J. Burchenal Ault has been named as the new provost of St. John's, which now has camp in Annapolis and Santa Fe. The clipping points out that Burch got a bachelor's degree in English literature from Yale in only three years. (Another feather in the cap of Andover's English Department.) A final grace note in the news item suggests that Burch will be treated with the deference due a member of the Class of '44 both in Annapolis and Santa Fe since "The Faculty Salaries Committee must advise him."

Thanks are also due Pete Stevens for the following tidbits: Leo McMahon and Jack Pringle have recently retired, respectively, from the Army and Navy. Leo, who retired as a full colonel, is currently living in New York but hopes ultimately to repair to Utopia, the "Sun Belt." Jack has already made his escape and is ensconced in Vienna, VA.

Able, alert Allen Allenby is currently heading up the King School upper school (grades 9-12) in Stamford, CT. Hopefully the English Department measures up to the PA level.

First the bad news then the good: Mel Bergeheim has had a serious heart attack, but he is recuperating well. He has left HUD which augurs ill for urban development. He will probably continue to live in the Washington, D.C. area.

Congratulations to George Selden on 1) the superb job he has done as president of Methuen International Mills, 2) his fine family, 3) contributions to his industry, but 4) most especially on escaping from the job of class secretary alive!

Virg and Ruth Goodall Pitstick expecting their first grandchild and a major move to a new home in Boca Grande, FL in '82. Daughter Kim moving to Alaska with husband and new M.B.A. Son Tod finishing his M.D. in pathology. More grandchildren announced by Pat Damon Niswander. Also son married last year. Pat working part time for mental health clinic and sees Betty Reid Buzby who is on Board. Molly Hubbard Mercer is president of hospital auxiliary and working part time for her tennis club. Her youngest graduates from high school this spring and enters Ohio Univ. #2 son graduates with honors from Bethany this June and their Nancy Stone Heymann visited me on a whirlwind tour of New England to see her son who is taking Dartmouth's five year-BA-ME program. She looked marvelous. Hadn't changed a whit. Very active at Toledo Museum. Nancy Emerson Viele reports in from York, ME that they have taken a "flyer" on a documentary entitled "Coaster." Watch for it. No other details. Alma Mastrangelo Strabala has become an avid traveller. While writing this she should be in China and returning through Japan. "Still loves Las Vegas Living."

The editors were kind enough to give me an extension on the notes deadline, because I objected so strenuously when the deadline for these notes was set for May 10 and the notes submitted for the previous issue on January 10 had not seen print yet. I am somewhat redfaced because I don't have a heck of a lot to say, deadline or no deadline. It sure would make this job a lot pleasanter if a few of you characters would write or call!

First of all, and by far most important, John Charles Ready '03 (2003 that is) was expected to arrive on December 21 but chose to show up on January 12 making us grandparents and short-circuiting our planned Barbados trip to visit the Colliers in one dramatic entrance. He is bringing his father and mother east to visit us from his Michigan home next week, and I have the baseball gloves and fishing tackle all ready for our week together. About three months ago it was announced that Harold McInnes was elected president and chief operating officer of AMP, Inc., a prominent Fortune 500 company located in Harrisburg, PA. "Seed" and Sally live in Camp Hill a suburb thereof and have three sons, Richard, Roger '72, and Charles. I sent him a congratulatory card but haven't heard back from him.

Tom Hopkinson was kind enough to send me a news clipping which was later augmented by a note from Crosby himself concerning the fact that Crosby Kemper was recently named "National Banker Advocate of the Year" by the United States Small Business Administration. He was presented with this award at a ceremony at the White House on May 13. The award is to the banker who has made an outstanding effort to make funds available to small business. 64 characters: classmates, relatives, offspring and friends were on hand for our 35th. The Gods were kind and blessed us with gorgeous weather. It was pure Kodak, with more 35mm SLRs around than you can shake a stick at. A first for '46 was the spirited addition of Abbot, including Patty (Bowne) Rickenbacker and her popular scrapbook, Flo (Fryling) Willis and Ted, "Long Distance" Luty Robertson (she won the prize) and Mike and Mickey (Troub) Friedman.

Friday night was gay (in the old fashioned way) with about half the group there. Dayt Neuhooff and Walker made it a one night stand. We met the new HM and his wife Britta at the "new" Addison. Don is very tall and very personable. Saturday was "pinners," as magnificent as you could imagine. After the parade, alumni meeting, and al fresco lunch in front of the gym, the 1st Jake "USGA" Whitney hole-in-one (into an empty case of Gordon's Gin) got under way. Sis Bancroft and Marty Begien prevailed on a picturesque 50 yd. layout along the west bank of Rabbits. Later on the teams of Nutt/Landergan and the Phelps tied for the round-robin doubles trophy. That evening the Sizars, Helen Bronk, Jack Richards, Helen Best, the Thorpes and Mary Stevens were guests for cocktails at Stevens House. Julie and Chris Cook, the Addison Director, were our special guests for dinner, along with Julie (Shaffner) Bucklin '48, co-chairman of the Alumni Fund.

Dinner Chairman Pratt served up a "Touch of the old Nostalgia": Mystery Meat, whipped canned Irish potatoes, and extraordinarily textured stringed beans of a most unusual flavor. The Wine, Valley of the Dolls '79, was superb. After dinner Rick Hudner had 'em rolling in the aisles with his droll, British stories.

It was good to see first time reunioners Ruthie and Cliff Crosby, Rona and Robert Rosenthal, Betsy and Ken Griffith, and Carm and Jay Cherry. In and out on Saturday were the Dawsons (trim and natty) and the Curtisses (so youthful and smart). Priscilla and Dr. Fred Doyle, and the PK Fishers, and Mary and Dan Anderson were there for most of the weekend's festivities. In addition we were delighted to welcome among the crowd, Annette and Arnie Cohen, Christine and Fred Pelham (with Stephanie), Adrienne and Brad Marvin, Judy and Bill Currier, and Dr. Arnie Schmidt with Eileen, and Erica and son Greg.

On Sunday, 28 of the stalwarts and walking wounded, hopped up and headed for Hingham with the remnants of the weekend safely stashed in the rear of Choo Choo's Malibu wagon. ¼ of an hour later, Lynd and Dick Phelps had a perfect picnic/brunch at their lovely house that overlooks the harbour, the islands, the yachts and the towers of Boston on the horizon. Joining us around the pool were Carol and Dick Fullerton, Helen and John Dupree, the Bancrofts, Mary and Cam Paradise, the Begins, The Cherrys, Patsy and Wally Pratt, the Griffiths, Cy Heard, Mary Beth and Walter Landergan, the Hudners, Joanne Brown and Bob Wexler, plus Sheila and I. Three magical hours flew by, and the Reunion was fine.

Going back is fun, particularly when you can see and chat with old friends, teachers, and characters like the Sanborns, the Bart Hayes, the Allises, the Ted Harrisons, the Bartses, and the DeClementes. Deke, by the way, can still "Out Chipp" and "Out-Press" anyone within Reppshot. Next time will be our 40th. Think of Harrow, "40 years and on..." Make a mental note of it. We'll have 40 back from 46 in 86. Special thanks to Frenchy Oudin, Jim Mellor, Whit Budge, and Tony Ritter for your letters and to all of you who took the time to scratch out nice notes on the post cards. They were all on the bulletin board, although somewhat overshadowed by "Rogers for Mayor" Posters.

Part II—Class notes from earlier. Back from Frankfurt after 3 years, but still working for the Govt., reports that rover, Lloyd Fitzsimmons. You can look up "the Horner" in the San Francisco yellow pages under, Misses-MX. Mary Creed and O.J. Anderson are now living in Vero Beach where Oliver is professor of Economics at St. Edwards School. Tourists are urged to "look 'em up" next trip to Florida. (We missed you all at the Reunion, John.)

Johnny Rogers, golfer, serious husband (25 years married to the same gal), mortgage investment magnate of El Paso, ran for mayor of that Texas spa earlier this year. For results, read the entire column. There are few professional bachelors from the class of '46 still at large. One who is boasting about a clean record is John Wheeler, a "blue water" bachelor out of Mystic, who seeks fellow travelers for an excuse to rejoice and commiserate.

A sharp double to left first time up for the JV "Bs" was William McLanahan's birthday gift to Dad Duer, who always dreamed of a career in "the Bigs". If you are ever in the Williamsburg area, you must visit the Bruton Parish Church. If you are as lucky as I was, you might catch Jock Darling limbering up on the Yamaha prior to giving a harpsicord lesson. Jock is America's premier organist and gave an outstanding performance at PA on the 23rd of May dedication concert for the new organ in the Cochran.

The incomparable New York "Yatch" Club was the scene of the AA of NY's dinner for Nancy and Ted Sizer back in March. In spite of a late winter snowfall that snarled midtown traffic, a sizeable turnout materialized including the prominent Barrister of Bernardsville, Steve West; sometime investment Banker and Ten Dollar Nassau Terror out of Sharon, Jack Lynch, McLanahan, and this writer. Sheila and I had the pleasure of sitting at a table that included the Bill Maccombers ('40). John Macomber's very youngest, Elizabeth, will attend PA this fall as a member of the class of 1984.

The May issue of Smithsonian carries a magnificent article on Dumbarton Oaks, "an enclave of beauty and scholarship." The fascinating story and superb photography blissfully delight the ear and eye. Dumbarton Oaks, familiar to many as the locale of FDR's 1944 Conference that formalized the idea of the United Nations, is now the incredible and exquisite place that houses the Center for Byzantine Studies, a major collection of pre-Columbian Art, and The Garden Library, a repository of 11,500 works on landscape design history. In charge of all this is "an imposing figure, with a bearing and diction that is distinctly to the manner born." Giles Constable, Giles, one of the many brilliant chaps of the class of '46, gave up an outstanding career as professor of Medieval history at Harvard to take over at Dumbarton.

Word has it that Bob Wexler has become a New Yorker—that's a good move. Word also has it that he now lives on Sutton Place—that's a very good move. Welcome to Manhattan, Robert.

Dear Class,
Classmates returning were Patty Bowne Rickenbacker, Flo Frying Willis and Ted, Mickey Troub Friedman and Mike, Nan Hellweg Warren and I. We chatted at tea with Miss Coolidge and Mlle. Baratte who both looked fine indeed. We were unable to see Miss Hearsey, but she did have lunch with the class of '41 and then returned to Wellesley. Jane Sullivan was there celebrating her 50th.

We all agreed that the combination of A.A. and PA celebrating reunion together has added a whole new positive dimension. Russ Thomes and his committee had arranged for everything including a pianist for cocktails and dinner and even a pitch or chip golf contest on the lawn of our dorm by the pond near the Andover Inn. The PA class had a large exhibit of old and new class photos and letters. I brought all return notes and letters from our class, plus phone news. Patty Rickenbacker's yearbooks and complete scrapbook of Abbot days were a great hit. Reminiscing about the old days with the fellows and their wives was great fun and if any of your ears were burning, they should have been! The experience of a co-ed dorm at fifty-three years of age should amuse our children!

Brief news: Patty and Dave Rickenbacker live in a lovely home in Vermont. I visited them afterward and was dazzled with vistas from every window. They have five grandchildren and their youngest child Nancy is a horse-woman of ability who lives nearby. Patty has purchased the quaint home across the road, completely renovated and remodeled it and it's now for sale. Flo and Ted Willis drove all the way from Erie to Reunions, and combined this with some Gloucester fishing for Ted and a Frying gathering on Sunday with Flo's parents and her sister in Marion, MA. Flo and Ted have grandchildren nearby and live across the street from Ed Mead, PA '45. Nan Hellweg Warren drove down from Exeter to join us Saturday. She never looked better and is thrilled to be living in an off campus home. Mickey and Mike Friedman combined their trip with a reunion of Mike's law school in Connecticut. Mickey reports: Right now I have the best of two worlds—professionally, with my new college degree, I work with older people and their families in rural Maine. It's satisfying, challenging and inspiring. They're survivors! And personally—Mike and I share community interests, a bit of traveling and a precious new granddaughter. With three of our five married, the family growth and gather frequently at the old homestead. WE love it! This feels like the best decade... so far!

We were sorry to miss Nancy Thomas Adams, who had been at school for daughter Abbey's graduation but had to leave before we came. Winnie Teeson Keller sent us a lovely, newsy letter and Mickey has a photo of Polly Thomas Peck who has turned out to be the glamour girl of the class! Who said brains and beauty can't co-exist? We were sad to learn from Cynthia Noone Wildes of the death of her husband, Warren, last July, in a freak accident.

After leaving the Rickenbackers in Vermont, I visited Elsa Hinchman Clark and Woody in Litchfield and loved seeing them and their children, Jessica and Matthew. We had dinner with Hope Whitcomb Gaillard and Benji who are recently parents of the bride. It was fun to meet son Sam and to see their beautiful home.

There is much more news from mail and phone about everyone, but no more space. The next Bulletin will update you. I am divorced, and blonde?, after thirty years of marriage and hope to have time to keep tabs on most of you. We enjoyed Reunion immensely and are hoping to see more, many more of you next time. With love, Luty

I received a gratifying response (20%) to my recent postcard solicitation even though the respondents had to stamp the cards. Here are portions of those responses.

Vic Tyler wrote in mid-March, "Mary and I have just returned from a fascinating nine-day vacation in Jerusalem and environs—to discover that somewhere in the distant past we started a family of four children (17 to 23 years old), acquired a home, befriended a dog, started a business, etc. What a shock!" Vic sends his regards to his friends in '47. From Jerry Underwood, "Enjoying rural life on the edge of the White Mountains in Eaton Center, NH with an easy no traffic commute to my employment in the hardwood lumber business in Fryeburg, ME. Michele and Kimberly are at home attending local schools and keeping my wife, Doris, and me aware of parental responsibilities. Christopher graduated from U. of Maine in '79—works at Perkins in Boston. Jerome will finish up at St. Michaels next spring & Kelly is working in California, but expects to return to U.N.H. this fall."

Fred Bahr is a partner in a new law firm in Troy, MI. In a note from Bob Brooks he says "I am working harder and, I think, smarter than ever to build this small wholesale business into a large one. Profits are harder to come by than growth. And forming a cattle/corn operation in western Virginia is fun but a gamble. Wife Pat and I recently spent a happy few days with her brother, Bill Moore, in northern California. Bill is a successful retailing consultant. We spent a day together touring and sampling Napa Valley wares." "A voice from the wilderness," responded Jim Boyd (his voice or mine?) "Life has treated me kindly over the past 30 odd years. Last of five leaves Jr. college in the fall. Two sons married with 2½ grandchildren. Two sons in business with me—a great joy. Martha and I enjoy health and happiness and moderate prosperity." Wally Anderson said, "Our boy Peter graduates from PA this June, and was off at lacrosse camp in Florida this March to see if he could make the varsity lacrosse team this spring. We look forward to the commencement."

After complaining that I failed to stamp the return card, my old roommate, Bayard Waring went on to say, "Am in the process of trying to start a new company, a recycling venture in the agricultural field. Could be large and exciting. Oldest daughter Kim married Jan. 3rd. to Bill Wright of Cortez, CO and 2nd daughter Laurie marries Jay Kelly of Randolph, MA this summer. Bea and rest of group all well."

Sandy Trowbridge managed to squeeze the most news on a small card saying, "Several items of notable interest—ranked in importance (mine). By mid-April I shall remarry, thus ending two years of bachelorhood (separation and divorce), when Ellie Hutzler of Baltimore joins me to start a happy new chapter. We shall live in Washington where I continue as president of the National Association of Manufacturers. Ellie has been associate director of Development at Johns Hopkins Hospital & Medical School since being widowed in 1977. I will enjoy my remaining year as Alumni Trustee at Andover, especially in that Bill Rosenau and Tom Wyman join me in giving '47 a strong posture on the board. We are all most pleased with the new Headmaster, Don McNemar and his wife. Ned Yost, in addition to running his business, Insurance Management Services, has been busy helping youngsters attain a rewarding scholastic experience through serving as president of "A Better Chance, Inc. of Cleveland" and through interviewing applicants from Andover.

My card elicited a letter from Dean Webster which I'll have to paraphrase. As part of a successful 1980, Dean's H. K. Webster Company acquired a feed and farm supply business including a feed plant and warehouse near Concord, NH as well as a number of retail stores. In addition, he is constructing a large feed mill in western New York. "A couple of major challenges!" Eliza and Dean still have two daughters, Anne, 11 and Lee, 9 at home with them in Andover. When he wrote, Dean was keenly anticipating a golfing vacation in Scotland. "I'm sure we'll come back with a treasure of memories: I hope not too many of them involving Scottish bunkers!" he said.

I noticed in the Phillipian that Dick Hulbert's daughter Mary was the number one player on the girls' varsity squash team and was selected female athlete of the winter term. Mary is ranked among the top three in New England, the article said.

From Belgium, Alan Calnan writes, "Still manufacturing and trying to sell electrical engineering products on the Belgian market. Son 14 and daughter 10 years old attending Belgian schools. Its been six years since my last visit to the U.S. We hope to make a trip this year or next. In the meantime, would love to see any PA '47 passing by Brussels!"

In a note on an Alumni Fund contribution form Dan Lackey wrote, "Son John being married to Susan Hough of Kalamazoo, MI. Would love to hear from any Andover friends in the area when he is in Kalamazoo for the wedding July 16-19 c/o Cass Hough."

In 1980, Aero Economics, Inc., the aviation consulting firm which I founded in 1979, became a publisher on a small scale," wrote Bob Knowles. "Our new venture is Aero Index, a quarterly index of articles of interest concerning civil aviation which covers ten widely-read trade journals."

Carol McLean Bly has written a book titled Letters from the Country published by Harper & Row. The following was sent by the St. Paul Pioneer Press/St. Paul Dispatch: "These letters were written from and about Madison, Minn., (population 2,242) and were first published in Minnesota Monthly, the excellent magazine of the public radio network in the state. They were widely acclaimed and now in this hardcover book will be available to a larger audience. Carol Bly is a sophisticated, well-educated, deep-thinking woman who writes with great clarity about ideas. This book is a collection of short essays on problems and situations that arise in a small midwestern town. Bly is for getting them out in strong light, discussing them openly and taking some action. The community she writes about is a typical small town—except that it had Carol Bly observing it and taking part in community ventures. But the kind of isolation from real conversation and real human contact in Madison that so concerns her can be achieved in other settings. So her essays have a universal application."

She found that in this "prairie country of the Louisiana purchase"—where the people are most often of German and Norwegian descent—there is a restraint against feeling in general. There is a kind of prohibition not only on actually feeling an emotion but on talking about it.

Instead of discussing or expressing feeling, the people are either silent or speak in clichés. There are proper responses to make on vital situations. Thus in Madison during the Watergate years there were two responses; some people said they did not approve of President Nixon but they felt sorry for him. This reaction, she said, was encouraged by the clergy. Other people wished the whole terrible scandal would end 'before it tears the country apart.' The 'forgive Nixon' syndrome covered a lot of timidity, she concluded.

There is an emphasis on 'niceness' in her small town. "If you can't say something nice, don't say anything" was a rule handed down to children. There is also an element of what passes for respect. The true, red-blooded American does not fault his president or protest a war. With these ideas crippling the thinking process there is no chance that real issues will be examined. And no one's feeling will be hurt.

People in small towns, Bly says, speaking specifically of her own, have so little connection with national life that they do not have real feel-

Clement A. F. Hastie '49: not just bread

On the 39th floor of New York Plaza, Clem Hastie's professional life is intellectually satisfying, planning computerized financial systems for Inco, Ltd., a diversified company in metals and electrical energy. But this is not enough for Hastie, who feels some responsibility to the city as his workplace. So he gets another kind of satisfaction from the energy he pours into his unpaid job—president and chairman of the board of Independence House, a short-term residence for young people who have neither homes nor structure in their lives. The minimum goal of the program is to give them basic skills necessary to function independently, without having to resort to criminal activity.

Much of Hastie's management work for Independence House is done on Inco time, with Inco's blessing. Hastie observes that more and more companies are becoming flexible enough, like Inco, to let their professional people make major commitments to the community they work in.

Independence House is a small private agency, yet more than 2000 young men have passed through it since 1970. They stay for an average of two to four months and 90 percent of them have jobs when they leave. Begun as an all-male program for ex-offenders, it now is aimed more toward prevention, and serves young women too. The program offers a place to live, the routine of regular communal meals and responsibilities, and a support system of personal and job counseling, all supervised by social worker Bill Peck, the program's executive director since its inception in 1970.

Clem Hastie signed on the board in 1971, along with Felix Rohatyn, Lena Horne, and Michael Burke, president of the Madison Square Garden Center, all believers in small programs. Since then Hastie has worked closely with Peck, as financial advisor and sounding board. He contributes his talents in financial management to the program and his personal warmth and encouragement to the residents.

Hastie arranges for residents to visit his office at New York Plaza periodically on some program business. He feels that welcoming them matter-of-factly into Inco's work atmosphere, among men and women doing useful work in pleasant surroundings, helps residents believe they too will attain skills and be able to hold down good jobs. Bill Peck told the Harvard Business School Bulletin, which recently ran an article about HBS alumnus Hastie: "You have to imagine the effect it has on a resident to be welcomed into Clem's office over at Inco. That's a kind of door that our residents never expected would be open to them."

Self reliance is at a premium at Independence House. Residents do the cooking and cleaning, and as soon as they have jobs and are able, they contribute a small fee toward room and board. But all is not roses: In January the program lost 40 percent of its government funding because of increasing disagreements with the bureaucracy of government agencies. Says Hastie in disgust: "They disapproved of our renting space to a good program for older ex-offenders, and they try to discourage us charging our residents anything after we find full-time jobs for them. How can you make people independent if you shelter them unnecessarily from the realities of life?" Loss of public funding has meant a cutback in the boys' program, but Clem Hastie and his board are looking for private funding to fill the gap. "Meanwhile, by going it alone, we gain the freedom from bureaucracy—providing we survive." Independence House is now in the process of selling its building in Manhattan's Chelsea, where property values have risen, and buying two residences in Brooklyn.

ings about it. She had some interesting ideas for waking up small towns. If a regional art organization wants to have a representative in a small town the local Chamber of Commerce or the city council should set up an art committee as part of its own organization. Only one member of either group would serve on the committee which would have official standing. This kind of set-up keeps things from getting too artsy.

Any theatrical group should stick to the classics. In Madison they had success by having adults put on children's plays—real fairy tales—as a gift to the children. A school counselor played a troll; a county judge was Biggest Billy Goat Gruff. It worked."

Unfortunately, I do not have room to print the whole review, but maybe it is enough to whet your appetite and you will go out and buy it.

Gerry Treadway Miller writes about her three kids: "Sue (Abbott '71) is hoping to be encumbered with offspring by next year. Bill's with Phelps Dodge in New York City; Kate's in 2nd year of Seminary at Fuller, and Sue's just been promoted at Ceva, where she's a chemist. Don is coping well with his 3 stepchildren and his own 3, his new career as artist and as my husband. It's a big load! I'm still in research at Arizona Public Service."

Beyond his two worlds of work, Clem Hastie has energy for his other world in Larchmont, where he and his wife, Maria, and their three daughters live, and he sings in church choirs and community choruses. When the Andover alumni in New York need volunteers for a phonathon, Clem is there. On the commuter train, he is instantly recognizable: the multi-colored afghans he knits for relaxation have become a famous trademark.

What motivates Clem's community service? He's had long bouts with illness—two nervous breakdowns before 1970—and he judges this may have given him a special empathy for young people in danger of becoming problems to themselves and others. Yet his interest in community service goes back farther, to his Andover days when he worked one summer for the Boys' Club of New York, and it has been a constant in his life.

Clem cheerfully recommends his kind of split career: "I couldn't get paid as much doing social work as I do in computer work, and my financial background helps my community group." He admits that there is probably a price to pay: "People have to settle for a little less lofty professional position, it's true. But in your search for satisfaction, why not settle for a little less prestige in the profession in exchange for helping to save the community? There's a crying need for creative managers out there in the community agencies, where there's often appalling mismanagement. We in community agencies must make our dollars go farther. I would like more people to see that we all do bear a responsibility for the community where we live—and for the community where we work."

He is now technical director of the George G. Sharp, Inc. a well-known naval architectural firm with domestic and international interests in marine systems analysis and design.

From Rancho Palos Verdes, CA comes a note from Jo MacManus Woods. She is enjoying teaching a combination 2nd and 3rd grade class. Two of her children have graduated from college and the other two are attending college. She usually has an annual reunion in N.Y.C. with M.K. Lackey Stowell and Julie Shaffner Bucklin.

I was sorry to miss a call from Marty Barber Lowrance this spring when she and her daughter, Laura, were in the East on a college shopping trip. She reports that they spent a delightful evening with Gene Young in N.Y.C. It came as a slight shock when she realized that she hadn't seen Gene since they were both Laura's age. From New York they went to Wellesley where they visited with Barbara Humes Easton and Miss Hearsey.

"An avid skier and former member of the Williams College racing team and Mad River Glen ski patrol, he invented a two-way radio system to assist blind skiers." This quotation is from an obituary for Charlie Leonard, who died recently as the result of an accidental fall. Charlie, an engineer with General Electric since 1956, lost his sight in 1965 because of diabetes. In addition to his skiing efforts, Charlie invented a sailing "audio compass" to keep the visually impaired on a set course and established a nature trail for the visually impaired at the Audubon Center in Huntington, VT. He was president of the Vermont Association for the Blind and was named Vermont Engineer of the Year in 1969. I do not know of a more courageous story. Classmates may write to his wife, Sandra, at 14 Elsom Parkway, South Burlington, VT 05401.

A recent clipping from Trusts and Estates magazine confirms Bill Byler's continuing interest in improving the health, education and social well-being of American Indian tribes and defending their treaty rights. Bill is executive director of the Association on American Indian Affairs, Inc., 432 Park Avenue South, New York, NY 10016. Nominated for election as directors of the Associated Harvard Alumni this year were Zvi Cohen and Lou Kane. Page long, eight-point type, listings of their accomplishments won't be repeated here, but I surely will endorse a (more or less accurate) quote from Zvi's writeup, to wit: "Alumni participation in fund raising, whether giving or soliciting, is crucial for maintaining... financial integrity so that admission is not restricted to the very rich and the very poor." Lou, a wide-ranging venture capitalist, has also devoted enormous energies to raising funds for such worthy causes as schools, colleges and other eleemosynary institutions, including Harvard College and Massachusetts General Hospital. Other causes he has supported include his co-chairmanship of 1972 Massachusetts finance committee for George McGovern for President.

Clem Hastie's work with ex-offenders at Independence House in New York, mentioned in my most recent column, has been brought to my attention by numerous classmates, many of whom sent me excerpts from the November/December 1980 HB5 Bulletin article about Clem's efforts. I chose not to inquire how the others found out about his good works. When General Tire recently closed its research center in Stamford, CT, Don Husted switched to working for Perkin-Elmer, Instrument Division, Norwalk, CT. Don and his wife, Lavinia, live in Wilton, CT.

Pre-reunion news: Bill Coakley has been appointed VP in charge of retail banking for Bank of Maine in Augusta. Bill, who went to Harvard after PA, has been a banker for 20 years, including a year in London, establishing a U.K. Retail Bank. After 18 years with Morgan Stanley & Co., the last 10 as a managing director, Jim Smith became president last August of Dusco, Inc., a subsidiary of Lend Lease Corporation, Australia's largest real estate development company, and president of International Income Property, a real estate investment trust.

"At exactly 10:37 a.m. EDT on Sunday, June 14, 1981, Jerry Ward, attending his first class reunion since his graduation thirty years earlier, pulled himself to his feet in the common room of Stimson House, stretched and announced to no one in particular that it was about time to get his act together." The foregoing is (choose one): 1. The beginning of a bad novel. 2. The end of a great weekend. If you selected 2, continue reading.

Col. Bob Cuthbertson, ably assisted by his regimental bartender, put on a magnificently organized weekend that came off with only one hitch: Bob gave Jane the wrong route number and she made a three-hour trip via Rockport to get from Natick to Andover. Bob did sulk a bit when he whistled mess call to clear us out of a Friday cocktail party to go to dinner and no one responded. Bob is transferring in two months to Ft. Lee, where he will be inspector general of all the US Army commissaries, commuting from Whiteside, VA, where he owns a summer home.

After a faculty-alumni dinner and a reception at the Addison for the Sizars and the McNamars we retired to headquarters for an evening of hyperbole and nostalgia. Among those present: Ron Ansin, who passed briefly through the cocktail party. Tony duPont, back for his first reunion, president of duPont Aerospace, building a 30-passenger plane for commuter airlines, the duPont DP-2. Also has a government grant for a coal gasification project in his backyard. Chuck Findlay and Erin with Norah '82 back from San Francisco. Gordon Humphreys and Ruth, on the first leg of a cross-country business trip for the British tool manufacturer of which he is managing director, gave us a lesson in combatting jet lag. Bob Keith '52 all the way from Caracas with sons Barker, an upper, and Sheffield. Bob Kimball and Joanne from Reno. (The majority of returnees came from outside New England.) Jerry Lasley, responsible for getting brother-in-law Jerry Ward back. Ward gave us a dissertation on the re-negotiation of his marriage that left him cooking two nights a week. Jim Pates and Marilyn with son Jimmy, 11. Tony Quinton, a survivor of the change of administrations, is still in charge of terrorism. (I figured he'd make it when I saw him quoted in a George Bush speech just before the election.) Reuben Taylor and Emily with sons Charlie '82 and William, 12. Reuben has a custom wood-working company of his own in Chicago. We discovered, incidentally, that Reuben's grandfather built the Wright brothers' engine. Win Adkins, teaching psychology at Columbia and marketing educational video programs, will be on sabbatical next year. He reports that brother, Doug Adkins, is an economist with the aerospace program. Nat Reed with Dabney and children, Wrenn '75 and Tim, were up from Amherst. Billy Ming Sing Lee rounded out the West Coast contingent. Bill was featured in a San Francisco Examiner series in May on Chinese professionals in America. It traced his history from Shanghai where his father was a prize-winning movie producer, through PA, Yale and practice in D.C. and New York to San Francisco, where he practices architecture with a childhood friend and his wife. The wrapup: "[A] sense, above all, that out of cultures East and West, productive work must come and with such work a return to society of some of civilization's best gifts."

After Saturday breakfast in the newly rejuvenated Commons, an alumni chapel service, the traditional parade with bagpipes, alumni meeting in the gym, class picture posing, picnic, seminars on the arts at Andover and a 2.2 mile race in which we were well represented, we gathered for cocktails, dinner and dancing in the Commons. Pete Baldwin and Carolyn; Tim Anderson, Nick Thorndike and Joan, Barbara Gibson Roth A.A. '51 and Tom Regan and Gerri joined us for the evening. Tom told us a little of what it is like to teach at PA and what the school is up to. (Incidentally, he and Gerri had just won first prize in the costume contest at the Beaux Arts ball celebrating Addison Gallery's 50th year, dressed as the American Gothic couple.) Pete regaled us with an account of his first visit to the Old Howard. Nat announced several moves to revitalize the class, including the formation of a class council. Lasley and Pates have agreed to help me ferret out news. (We are shooting to double attendance at the next reunion.) Among the guests on Saturday night were Bill and Evelyn Bennett, Bill and Vivian Buehner, Joan Walsh and Alice Hurst. Ken McDonald '50, the new Alumni Council Reunions Chairman, dropped in, as had Bill Wright '50 earlier in the day.

The weekend was the occasion for what Win Adkins described as a humane, non-threatening exchange with old friends. I sensed more interest in the school itself, what has become of this place: The ranks of teachers we knew have become very thin, and we inch closer to the head of the alumni parade, but the place still retains its character and vitality. Those of you who were absent missed something.

My job has also brought me in touch with Lois Lovejoy Johnson. She is as energetic as ever and a great asset to a committee. Had the pleasure of watching Sue Kimball Wheelock on the tennis court last summer. She is still a joy to watch stroke that tennis ball. My most recent contact with Suzie was at M.M. Wheeler Shepherd's memorial service. M.M.'s love for music continued to be an important part of her life. Tapes of her own compositions were played at the service. Suzie sang "Sea Fever," words by John Mansfield, music by M.M.'s sister. It was a lovely piece, beautifully performed. It was especially poignant for me because M.M. and I both chose "Sea Fever" for our senior themes... memories of happy times came rushing back. I regret I did not see more of Mary Macy after our graduation. But it is wonderful to be able to reach back in your mind and see someone who is pretty, vivacious, with great energy and zest for life, who was like a gazelle on the hockey field and the tennis court, and who will remain for you always special. This is how I will remember M.M.

Robert A. Feldman '54: a catalyst for art

On the corner of White and Church Streets, south of Soho, is the Baby Doll Lounge, a topless bar. Next door in a non-descript building is Parasol Press, Ltd., a publisher of fine art, which has no press. Inside only a littered desk and floor-to-ceiling shelves stacked with boxed portfolios on the first floor signal that business may be transacted here. One is more likely to find the president of Parasol upstairs in a livingroom whose walls are filled with prints and photographs, none of which are for sale. He will invariably be wearing tennis shoes and one of his considerable collection of large bow ties that are specially made for him by a former Assistant Curator at MOMA.

The president, and founder, of Parasol Press is Bob Feldman, whom Theodore B. Donson in Prints and The Print Market has described as "perhaps the most courageous print publisher in America today." Feldman pioneered portfolios of Ansel Adams and Eugene Atget photographs. He has commissioned "difficult" avant garde American art not because he thinks it will sell ("It doesn't," he says) but because he feels it is important. Among the artists whose work he has published are painters Wayne Thiebaud, Richard Estes, Julian Schnabel, Chuck Close, Sol Lewitt, Robert Ryman and Robert Mangold; photographers Berenice Abbott and Todd Watts.

The road to Parasol, whose logo is a beach umbrella, was circuitous. A '61 graduate of Yale Law, Feldman began his professional life as a securities lawyer, but soon discovered that his "style of operation did not fit into the New York Stock Exchange corporate image." He is probably the only lawyer who has come to closings in Bermuda shorts and tennis shoes because he had a tennis game in fifteen minutes.

By the mid-sixties Feldman had left the law and set up Trois Angles, a graphics publishing concern. In 1968 "a conglomerate," with no experience in publishing, ingested Trois Angles. By February, 1970 Feldman had been fired for signing up Ansel Adams for a portfolio. His new employer was convinced that signed and numbered photographs were unmarketable. Feldman left, taking with him his contracts with Adams, Estes, Close and Thiebaud. One month later Parasol Press, Ltd. emerged, first headquartered in the storeroom of Allan Stone's '50 Gallery.

Feldman's role as a publisher is that of a catalyst, bringing artist and printer together. His printers are among the finest in the world: intaglio printer Kathan Brown of Crown Point Press, who also collaborates with Claes Oldenburg, and Edition Dombberger, screenprinters in Stuttgart, Germany. His artists are generally younger painters who have never made a print before. Once artist and printer are together, Feldman steps out of frame. "I never know what is going to happen," he says, "and that's the fun of it."

Anything can, and does, happen. One artist decided to produce not a portfolio, but a bound book of 127 etchings. "Who is going to buy a $36,000 book?" he asks, knowing the answer. He once made a commitment to commission ten Sol Lewitt prints;

American School in Lugano, Switzerland; Laura will graduate this May from Connecticut College where she is active in crew and is a history major; and Jamie is finishing his freshman year as a theatre major at Northwestern. Rosamond's own bakery business has expanded into a gift basket business' with homemade natural sweets and wholesome treats.

What fun being the Class Secretary! I picked up the phone in April to hear "Ethel?" It was Nancy Jayne Lingamfelter Liles. She has lived in Houston for 10 years and we have been here for 5, essentially as neighbors. Nancy, gorgeously slim, came for lunch and a wonderful afternoon catching up on our lives and those of other classmates. Nancy has done some substitute teaching and has a 17-year-old son, Paul, and a daughter, Sue, who is a sophomore at Houston Baptist.

Patty Randall Baker teaches yoga and thrives in Orlando with her husband, 3 sons and a daughter. She sees Martha Artz at Lake Walloon in MI and reports that she is very happy and traveling a lot with her husband. Sarah Emmons Warren's husband is a teacher at PA. Daughter, Rebecca, graduates from Phillips in June. Sarah works at the Language Lab. there and keeps fit with paddle tennis during the winter. Joanie Wood Stephenson and I have kept up with Xmas cards over the years. She has 3 sons and their eldest, Tap, will be out of college and job hunting this year. Joan and her sister, Barbara visited their parents in FL as "snow birds" in April.

Persis Goodnow Hamilton lives in Holden, MA and teaches kindergarten in Princeton, enjoying it very much. Husband, Charlie, is headmaster at the Bancroft School in Worcester where their son, Johnson is in the fifth grade and daughter, Maggie, is in the third grade. "Walked in the door, received your card and decided to answer immediately!" Anne Merchant (Merch) Monaghan is principal of Vienna Elementary School in Fairfax Co., VA. Husband, Jim, is marketing mini-computers in Arlington called Data Inc. Her oldest step-daughter, Shane, was married in Nov. They have a 27' Pearson sailboat and sail right off the Bay in MD. Merch attended Nancy Penwell Hood's daughter's wedding 1 1/2 years ago in Andover. They hope to attend Nancy's son's wedding in August.

I am not sure whether they were recorded in the Bulletin, but I do know that in the last several years we lost two classmates, Anne Lord and Joan Baird, both wonderful people we all cared about. I am sure we all feel great sympathy for their families.

Let's do keep in touch. I'll send news of myself in the next Bulletin. The older we get the more we cherish past friendships. Write to me for addresses of your Abbot friends. I'm in the phone book in Houston and do hope you call when you visit this fun, dynamic city!

You could bet your money on it and never lose. That's how predictable it is that in any stack of mail from '53 classmates, at least one letter will end with an open invitation for all of us to visit the writer. I've probably read 50 such offers and everytime I mention one of them in our class notes, I still shudder that the worst may happen.

I see, for instance, a lawn strewn with bankers and lawyers, all having accepted the same invitation at the same time. I see a long line of doctors waiting to use the downstairs phone to get a reservation on the next plane home. I see businessmen in long black cars circling the block, waiting for a parking space. But, most of all, I see the look on the face of our host as he tries to explain to his wife that what is happening is statistically impossible!

Of course it can't happen. Especially to David Craton who writes from England. "I wish I could do more (a reference to his Alumni Fund contribution) and that I had more frequent opportunities for visiting the U.S. Perhaps it will come as the business grows, but meantime I'd be happy to see any of you who are in London." On the other hand, if I were Fran Weber, I'd certainly want to lay in a few kags. Writes Fran, "Saw Peter Wiese and Dean Groel in New York a few weeks ago. Peter is with Bush & Co., and Dean is still at Goldman Sachs. Anyone visiting Naples should stop by for a drink. Am in the book, and am now a full-time Florida resident." Get a jump on your classmates. Skip the rest of this column. Call the airline. Weber is ready when you are.

"All is well," writes Tony Barber. "Daughter Cathy is a freshman at U.C.L.A. Wife Babs has become the director of admissions to the Sacred Heart Schools in San Francisco. Business doing well—am a vice president and stockholder of Loomis Sayles. Took up golf about two years ago—frustrating to say the least. Am on the board of several organizations, the largest being Pacific Medical Center."

"My daughter Kendall was at PA Summer School and loved it. She fell in love with lacrosse and plans to take it up in college, hopefully Yale. Ted Sizer's son, Hal was down staying with us this weekend for spring vacation," continues Ken Sharp, "as were Sandi and Joe Mesics. Good times. Tennis, water skiing together. Etc."

From Zeus Stevens: "Our daughter Amy has been accepted at PA as a junior to start September 1981. Needless to say, we are extremely pleased and proud and look forward to getting back to the campus much more over the next few years."

"Visited Shelby Tucker in New Orleans over Mardi Gras weekend," writes Ray Lamontagne. "Shelby is still practicing law (surprise) and is still married (even greater surprise!) He lives in the Old Quarter so that we were right in the middle of the action (no surprise). Had a great weekend and spent much of the time reminiscing about PA and the great Class of 1953."

Quicknotes: Neal McCorvie is now a president at Glendenning Associates. Bill Joseph's son, Benjy, was chosen to be the "king" at a performance of Ringling Bros. & Barnum & Bailey Circus. Alice Joseph is now working on her third children's book. The second is filled with photographs of Bill and Benjy, and should win as many awards as Max The Music Maker, Alice's first book. Mike Chapman who seems to have moved out to Hollywood, was nominated for an Oscar for his work in cinematography. Every time I pick up the NY Times or some obscure magazine like Town & Country someone seems to be saying something nice about John Rattee (John Poppy's friend and Loomis Chaffee's headmaster). I note that Carl Andre and Peter Chermayeff were on a panel for the Addison Gallery's 50th anniversary celebration. Had lunch with Jack Donovan, one of midtown's leading financial people. Saw Dutch Wolff at a NY Andover meeting at Bob Feldman's downtown brownstone. Dutch had some great suggestions for the NY Alumni Association. So did Don Shapiro. I didn't have much to say, but I did eat 18 salines.

We'll be up in Connecticut in August. We'd love to have you visit. One at a time.

Bob Feldman has made a career of taking on projects that "as business propositions don't make sense." Although he would no doubt deny it, he is part of a tradition established by the intrepid Ambroise Vollard, the publisher of Picasso, Bonnard, Rouault and Chagall. Like Vollard, he seeks to stimulate and challenge, rather than to satiate, the public taste.

Pete and Barbara Bradley found themselves in Yarmouth, ME, and dropped in on the John Palmers whose recounting of the 25th Reunion was good enough to make the Bradleys sorry they missed it. Save the first week of June, 1985, Pete, Geoff Beaumont recently celebrated the first birthday of his Newport Beach, CA brokerage house, Beaumont & Company.

If the name Beaumont & Company sounds a trifle conservative, that's because the name Babette had already been taken by Bob and Nancy Bushnell for their gift shop in Salisbury, CT. The Bushnells are trying suburbia from whence Bob will commute to New York and his desk at Hoppin Watson, a company that deals in stocks and arbitrage and wanted a less whimsical name but somebody in California beat them to Beaumont & Company.

The South Eastern Pennsylvania Transportation Authority continues to operate at Gumpoint . . . Dave keeps Philadelphians moving as SEPTA general manager. Bob Rogers returned last year to his native Atlanta to conduct the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra and the Paul Smith Trio for An Evening with Ella Fitzgerald. More recently Bob assembled and conducted a volunteer orchestra of 32 professionals for the Wall to Wall Copland/Americana program for The Symphony Space, a New York non-profit performing arts center. A tall order for Bob from the managing director of TSS who may have threatened to burn his breakfast toast if he couldn't deliver. Her name is Linda Rogers. . . Y.

Tim Wagg, Jane Tatman and Frank Walker, Peggy Moore and Peter Yoars and Boat Rulon-Miller York. What a super list! All of the above turned out for our 25th Reunion, and what a reunion it was! Everyone looked perfectly fabulous. One PA '56 spouse told me at dinner she thought the Abbot contingent looked ten years younger than PA's which endeared her for life. Truly, I am proud to be part of such a super class. The profile indicates that we are all well educated, physically fit, and in there pitching to make our world a better place to live. The spirit of the Abbot girl certainly is very much alive in all of us and, I suspect, the weekend encouraged us to "extend our burning torches" still higher.

For those of you who were not able to join us, we missed you. You also missed two superb events. The first was Zanda's prayer at alumni chapel. It captured the essence of the weekend and was, like Zanda, beautiful. You'll all be receiving a copy with your class profile.

The other event was Mollie speaking at the alumni meeting. Put a microphone in front of her and she opens like a bud to the sun. Unfortunately we don't have copies of her remarks for you. Suffice it to say, she could have single-handedly written the Abbot social history of the early fifties. Her wit is fantastic.

I came away hoping that the enthusiasm will be contagious and that our 30th will bring still more of you to Andover. It is so much fun to see everyone and search faces for traces of seventeen-year-old friends from way back.

Circle June 1986 on your calendars now!

Hello everyone! It seems the theme of this brief article should be "people in change, or has the after 40 syndrome caught up with our class?" Bill Sikkenga writes from Middletown, OH that he has been appointed to the newly created position of tax counsel for Armco, Inc., and, Bill continues, that he and the family have moved from Ann Arbor and encourage any and all to call if in the Middletown area. . . . Rick called, has found a new home: New York—with the New York City Opera, even though Rick says he has crossed the U.S. several times in singing engagements. Please let me know when you are coming to Houston, Rick, so that if you really are planning to make Innsbruck, Austria your springtime home—I can work a tradeoff with you. . . . Rick Steinkamp checked in from the west coast where he and the family are enjoying San Francisco. As deputy director of the school department for Harcourt, Brace and Jovanovich, Rick really has the responsibility of the whole western region of the company, which should be quite a change from living in Atlanta. . . . Finally, and none of you will believe this: I, too, have made a change. On May 1st, I went to work for the regional brokerage firm of Rotan-Mosle to head up their insurance department. This is after 14 years of running my own shop. Oh well! The challenges are great and I'm excited. Until next time, Gee.

The penalty, or bonus as you cynics may have it, for your providing no news of the class is that no news of class can be printed. The Bulletin editor requests that whatever news is printed be "concise" and "lively"; since the class is collectively and personally so silent, we can guarantee that the news is concise, although it contains not much evidence of life.

Some liveliness, however, is provided by Bob LeRoy's indirect note to Charlie Kessler on the quality of the models in the L. L. Bean Catalog. Bob's comment, verbatim: "OK, Kessler, I give in! But only because I want to know why your mug keeps showing up in my L.L. Bean Catalog! Surely you're not a professional model! Do you own controlling stock? Well, at least I get to see you each year. Let me know if they want me to pose—then you could see me each year (and I could donate my fee to PA). Best Wishes."

Another evidence of class life surfaced on Kentucky Derby day in early May, when the smiling face of TV star, industrialist and class most-likely-to-succeed, Edward P. "Ned" Evans, appeared on national television along with Howard Cosell, Phyllis George, the Governor of Kentucky and thousands of less colorful personalities to accept for or provide congratulations to Ned's father for his winning horse, Pleasant Colony. It's comforting to realize that one of the potentialities in an Andover education is the prospect of growing up to be a horse-breeder and winner of the Kentucky Derby on the first try. Pleasant Colony, from Buckland Farms in Virginia, also won the Preakness.

Andy Combe writes that he has the privilege of being the first commanding officer of the USS Flatley (FFG-21), the Navy's newest and finest guided missile frigate. It is scheduled to be commissioned on May 30th at Bath, ME. Andy also passes on the hope that the 25th Reunion has a better turnout than the 20th—a hope which appears easy enough to fulfill in light of the experience of the 20th. In view of the dismal communication patterns of the class both at reunions and in writing, we're instituting with the school's help, a postcard program which will hopefully reach everyone in the class and in which you are actively encouraged to participate, by returning your personal news to the above Beverly Hills address. You may be assured that whatever dislikes you may have harbored or still possess for the restrictive Calvinist atmosphere of Andover in the late 50's will not be repeated or found in the above community.

May 10th was a wonderfully festive day at Andover. The Addison Gallery did not look its age, a mere fifty years old, but instead was spilling over with youth, good cheer and colorful activities for all ages. I enjoyed the day very much, the more so because Mimi Ganem Reeder, Jody Bradley Bush and Penny Holbrook Reid were also there. All are well. Mimi will have a son at Andover next year. Penny's daughter Cindy is now there and was featured in a lacrosse game that afternoon. Jody's whole family came with her to celebrate the kickoff of the Gallery Campaign. She is giving yet more of her time to Andover as one of two national co-chairmen for the Fund and is setting up a network of volunteer committees across the country.

I just missed including news of Penny Post in the last issue. She lives in Bolinas, CA about 50 minutes north of San Francisco, on the seacoast, in a community of writers, artists, musicians and craftspeople. She recently started a Ph.D. program in Environmental Health and hopes a book will come of it. In 1977 Penny caught pneumonia which, it turned out, was caused by toxic fumes from an adhesive used under her bedroom carpet. As a result, she is very concerned about hazardous chemicals in our everyday lives. I especially like hearing from Penny and I'm in touch with several of her old friends in New Haven. Karen Jones wrote Mimi Reeder and announced that she was marrying Dr. Mike Anderson on April 18. They will be living in Northfield, IL. Good news!

I am planning to take an intensive French course at Yale this summer to start getting one of my languages back in shape. again, the Class of 1961 came together, and celebrated its 20th Reunion. I don't know how or why it happens, but all of our reunions seem to follow the same pattern. Reminiscence has its place. Stories of ancient accomplishments and feats of derring-do while we were students have, as always, a place in our shared past. But the highlight of the reunion was the magical chemistry that brought together disparate lives and created a blend which can only be described as a true bond among the men and women who came together.

The school functions were interesting and enlightening to those who have not had much contact with the school. The formal functions were educational and more than one of us set his sights on Andover as the place where his children should go. Curiously, the realization that this might be a goal for many of us who are now parents came not in the sense of our children following us, but from the recognition that this place, this high school, really, is indeed a special place.

Record numbers attended our 20th. Many of our classmates had not set foot on the campus for 20 years, most had not been there for at least 15 years. Yet the interaction of the class made it seem as if we had seen and known each other on a regular basis throughout this whole time. Classmates for whom we had no particular affection as students became friends. Friends with whom we had enjoyed our youth became friends and brothers again. Wives and guests and children responded as if this meeting were a family Christmas dinner. Many of you who were not there were sincerely missed and many, many questions were asked about missing classmates. I can't speak to the levels reached or the spirit shared by the classes that wore the funny hats or the other visible emblems of togetherness which often permeate a reunion atmosphere. I can only say that our class enjoyed a real celebration and experienced the joy and satisfaction of being together and getting to know one another again.

I've now gone from famine to feast. From rags to riches. I have more notes than I know what to do with, at least for a short while. This particular column has space limitations. To those who attended the reunion and to those who have been kind enough to send letters, postcards and notes, you may be sure that each and every classmate will be acknowledged here. If space prevents your appearance in this column, you may be assured that you will appear in the next.

A trim, fit, Ken Hutchinson reports that he is living in Portsmouth, NH where he does extensive work in oceanography, fisheries and seafood market development. He imparts to his two sons, David, 14 and Chris, 12 his philosophy that one should, "Walk softly and carry a big carrot." At the class dinner I asked for whatever written material people were willing to see published in this column. The following is an unexpurgated, verbatim transcript of Paul Kalkstein's life story. While Paul omits the most important chapter of his life, his wife Marlene, and their children, his emphasis on the study of the English language should not go unnoticed: "Life of Paul Kalkstein I was born in Phila, Pa in 1943 without distinction. Since then I have went downhill and now I am an English teacher at a prep school in Anchovie, MA55 wish as you may now is North of Baastan. My goals for the future are to learn kids how to read and rite real good!"

The family that casts together, lasts together. Or so it would seem is the philosophy of Jim Perry who introduced his new wife, Kathy Kopach. Both are orthopedic surgeons and, they said, either one was available to do any necessary repairs after our afternoon on the tennis courts. They live with three children in Danville, PA where Jim works as Sports Medicine Clinic Director at the Geisinger Medical Center. Jim Durston is taking a break from the real estate business for the summer and has gone back to his one true love, baseball. Jim's with the New York Mets this summer. His job as Director of Group Sales is being slightly hampered by the baseball strike, but, to his credit, he is doing what he loves best. As an example to the rest of you, Jim has solemnly sworn that he will send me a note at least once every quarter. In the event he fails to fulfill this promise he has pledged double his normal contribution to the school. Kendrick probably hopes Jim never writes me a line.

An old friend, Jeff Newton, came to the reunion with his wife, Ellen, and their two children. Jeff is a psychiatrist, and when given tremendous grief about the psychological implications of his life story, psychiatrist Jeff nodded sagely and said, "Uh hm."

Space invades. There are 30 or so stories in this naked city — you will see all of them.

It was a good 20th Reunion for the nine of us who attended. I was disappointed not to see more of our classmates—twenty years is a long time! I know it seems like a colossal effort to many, but for me it has always been well worth it. Somehow catching up with old schoolmates gives my life a feeling of stability and continuity which I relish.

Phyllis Rogde Gleason, with husband, Paul, and sons ages 7 and 10, lives in Winchester, MA, is involved in a number of youth organizations, and is stitching luggage for fun in her spare time. Danan MacCorkle Korelich lives near Columbia University in Manhattan and is getting back into her acting career. Ann Buerger has moved back east after a stretch in California and is doing architectural work in New York City. Molly Upton, our terrifically successful class agent, is still working in the "insane corporate environment" writing the newsletter for Engineering Data Processing. She owns a house in Weston, MA and coaches crew at Buckingham Browne and Nichols in the spring. Ann Fahnestock is doing research and sales in the stock brokerage community in Manhattan, commuting from Long Island. Gray Hodges Wexelblat lives in Wayland, MA and has her own private law practice in Concord. Susan Rothwell Braucher is the mother of two daughters, Katherine (6) and Emily (3). She is a retired trust officer of Boston Safe Deposit and Trust Company and is married to Bill who recently formed his own law firm in Boston. Sue is in semi-annual communication with Julie Owen who is presently employed with the U.S. Department of State in Senegal, Africa. (Julie served two Peace Corps terms in Senegal also). Between the Peace Corps and the State Department, Julie managed to obtain a M.Ed. from Harvard and spent several years of energetic training in Washington, D.C.

As for me, Cally Butler Lisle, I have moved back to Boston from Baltimore and am participating this July in a program in public communications offered by Boston University. I am living in Lexington. I am also still your Class Secretary and will continue to badger you to send news of yourself until my bones are too brittle to do so.

Our class news confirms that women have more options than ever and we, as a group, are exercising them. We're working, studying, writing, painting, volunteering and raising children. Our children range in age from Beth Crane Accetta's Randy who will graduate from Andover this year to two expected children (more about them in the next issue). In school: Nancy Elwell Griscorn is doing graduate work in clinical social work. Her son is thirteen and will be looking at Andover this fall. Claudia Kerr Grose is finishing her M.L.S. at Columbia. She is also working for the Coro Foundation helping to establish its Public Affairs Training Program for Women. Claudia's husband Peter is working on a book about the U.S. and Israel which will be published by Knopf. Claudia's daughters are fourteen and twelve years old. Claudia would like to hear from classmates in the New York area. Jennifer Hesketh Thompson is finishing up her M.B.A. in addition to caring for her two children who are eight and ten years old. In the work force are: Susie Mallory Roberts who was recently promoted to senior programmer at Pan American Airlines. Susie's children are eleven and fifteen years old. Susie would like to hear from Susan Niebling Hendrie. Karen Grant McWhorter is in charge of training for Long Lines at A.T.&T., and a witness in the A.T.&T. anti-trust suit. Karen also has a twenty-month-old son, Alex. Karen's husband Jack is a physician who also teaches. The McWhorters spend their well-deserved leisure time at their house on Long Island. Polly Larned Herlihy is reservations supervisor for United Airlines in San Francisco and living in Half Moon Bay. Polly is still riding and competing with her two horses, playing the piano and traveling. Marcia Hill is working at the U.N. as a translator. Anne Ripley is a nurse practitioner who has made two trips to Cambodia in the last year. On her first trip Anne went as part of a medical team. Her purpose on her last trip was to improve the living conditions of the refugees with funds she had raised in Belmont, MA by establishing training programs and providing equipment to utilize existing skills.

On the home front are: Pauline Gray Briger whose oldest child is fifteen and at Milton Academy. Her other children are eleven and four years old. Linda Swanberg Musser's children are nine and five years old. Linda is volunteering as a parent counselor after an extensive training program. Linda and her family spend the summer in Mystic. Connie Matthews Macleod moved to Cincinnati two years ago when her husband Bruce joined Federated Department Stores in Real Estate Development. Connie's children are five, seven and nine years old. Connie is active in many volunteer organizations, especially fund raising for the Children's Hospital.

As energy resource development grows in that area, the challenges will increase for sure. Richard Mudge and I spent a lovely lunch hour together. He works on transportation and energy policy issues for the Congressional Budget Office. After graduating from Columbia (B.A.) and the University of Pennsylvania (Ph.D.), Dick worked for the Rand Institute in New York. Welcome to the nicely named Brandon Little and Gwendolyn Phillips, newest reported additions to the daughters of '64. Parents Maria and Buck and Pamela and Bruce are doing fine. Bruce extends an invitation to anyone visiting Kuala Lumpur to look him up c/o Esso Production Malaysia, P.O. Box 857. My old rock 'n' roll buddy from lower year studied, practiced and taught Chinese and other linguistics for seven years after graduating from Duke before he took a right turn and earned an M.B.A. from Wharton in 1977. He wasn't abandoning the far east, where he had spent most of his post-graduate career, including a school year as a linguistics professor at Fu Jen University in Taiwan, for he promptly signed on with Exxon's Asian subsidiary. Any thoughts, Bruce, on the relative merits of the Paris Sisters versus Pink Lady?

Not wanting to leave anyone in suspense from the last edition of these notes, I tracked down some further information on Dan Badger's November wedding to Kathy Dexter in Washington's National Cathedral. Yes, Dan sang a solo at the ceremony. He is now working for an international environmental agency in Paris. That leads to this issue's rumor, that Bob Stempson recently got married. Anyone with details should please contact your secretary. Not so secretive were former New Yorkers Randy Elkins and Fay Boyle, who came East to New York Times-country for their April nuptials. We wish them well, both in marriage and Los Angeles.

Back to Europe we go, as did lawyer Laurent Alpert, who has returned to the Brussels office of Cleary, Gottlieb, A.C. Johnston, meanwhile, has finished a stint in the nation's capital and headed back to the main office of Morrison & Foerster in San Francisco.

Terry Trimble was named a partner of the Brown, Wood law firm in New York in January, and a month later Eric Wallach got the nod at Rosenman Colin. According to Eric, who is a litigator, that unfortunately means less time to spend with Miriam and daughters Kate, 4, and Emily, 2. DeWolf Fulton, news editor of the Bristol Phoenix, reports his seasonal pastimes from Rhode Island: in summer, solo sailing in a 1939 Herreshoff 12½; winter, playing hockey with the Providence Pigeons. Further north, the Axelrod family has added the Sheraton-Lincoln Motor Inn in Worcester, MA to its chain, with our classmate John presiding there as well as over hotels in Chicopee and Mansfield. Robert Foreman is teaching AP chemistry at a high school in Cincinnati.

Top Phippen-watcher Randy Hobler caught Hardy doing double duty in adjoining display ads in the United Terminal at JFK: first, posed as a handyman placing a "National Energy Watch" sticker on a window, then next door serving as a "father" in a birthday party for Metropolitan Life. Randy estimates the odds of this occurrence as one in a billion and vows that it will never happen at IBM, where Randy has just been promoted to the corporate television advertising department in Armonk.

I am setting up a lunch in Philadelphia with Rich Bissell to discuss southern African affairs. Anyone wanting to join us—are you there, Wofsey?—can prepare by reading one of the three books or 30 articles written in the last eight years by Rich, who is associate director of the Foreign Policy Research Institute and political science lecturer at Penn.

Finally, if you miss the jokes that usually abound in this space, it's because I used them all up in the previously advertised Diary of A Yankee-Later. If anyone is at all interested in reading about the moral dilemma I discussed with Adrian Almqvist when we were on the JV basketball team together, check it out at your local bookstore. If they've never heard of the book, which is likely, don't be shy about asking them to order a half dozen copies. It exists. (Would I kid you?)

Martha Coleman Collins is assistant editor of Science magazine, a publication of the American Association for the Advancement of Science in Washington, D.C. Elisa Wright and David Hemond are the parents of a daughter, Elizabeth Mather Hemond, born on January 26, 1981. Constance Chamberlain Dimond and family are returning to Washington, D.C. in August after 5 years in Ann Arbor. Husband Paul will be teaching at American University Law School.

Daughters are Kate, 10 and Alison, 5.

Joan Harney was recently transferred to Capital Markets Division of Morgan Stanley in employee relations. She's planning a summer trip in the Caribou Range north of Vancouver. Jo Foster Myers graduated from Georgetown Law School in 1979 and is a law partner in Manning and Myers in Alexandria, VA. She and husband Gary have two sons, Reid, 10 and Evan, 6. While in Andover, she saw Jackie Meyers Eby who is now in business school and her two children and Friedel Laaff Manresa and husband Eduardo who are living in Barcelona. Her brother Dick Foster (PA 61) is living in NYC and writing for AP.

Dr. Gwyneth Walker is now living in Hartford, CT where she composes and teaches music at Hartford Conservatory—music theory and composition and a summer course in music and dance. She recently presented concerts of her works at the Hartford Conservatory and U Conn. School of Fine Arts. She also continues to enjoy tennis. Melinda Bateman Hawes' husband Robert received his doctorate in Education from Penn State in August. Sons are John, 8 and Bill, 4.

Thanks for all your news which helped my first effort. Please don't give up. I won't have any news if I don't hear from you. HELP! Where are Tana Centano, Mary Chase, Judith Lang, Alice Holmes, Priscilla Pederson, and Honora Helfferich? These classmates are missing—one of them is my roommate even. Please let me know if you have any news on their whereabouts.

"Well," said my friend Tinker, the inventor, over lunch, "what do you think of this what-samijigger?" as he held up his latest creation, a wooden framus. "It needs a better name," I said, ever the consultant. "Why don't you call it a 'watsit', since that's what everyone will say when they see it." "Great idea," he said, "but how can I go about forming a company to make and market it?" "That's easy," I said. "Look at all the talent around us. First thing to do is hire some lawyers to cut through the red tape and protect you against any patent infringements. Let's see, there's Lou Korimer in Cleveland (a proud new father); Ralph Swanson (formerly with the U.S. Department of Energy Office of Special Counsel where he worked for Pat O'Hern), now in private practice in San Jose, CA. He would be needed for the environmental impact and energy conservation studies you'd need when you build the watsit factory. Don't forget Roger Valkenburgh—he has just been made a partner in the firm of Gregory and Adams in Wilton, CT." "How am I going to build a factory?" said Tinker, showing some interest. "Easy," I said. "You get Alba Briggs to design it (he has been building boats, so why not a factory) and Sam Alberstadt's construction company in Maryland to put it up." "And where do I get the money for that kind of project?" said Tinker, now envisioning an unending line of watsits moving off an assembly line. "I've got it," I said. "Colby Snyder is with an investment group that buys companies. I'll bet they have a factory in their portfolio right now that can be turned into a watsit-maker pretty quickly." "And how do I get all the watsits distributed?" Tinker inquired, dabbing a bit of shrimp sauce from the corner of his mouth. "Get Doug Kenna to do it," I replied. "He's the new VP of J. Howard Sober in Ft. Wayne, IN. They're so big they distribute trucks to the truck companies." "I suppose I'll have to advertise," said Tinker. "Of course," I replied, "and who better to handle your campaign than Peter Burkhard of Green and Burkhard in Atlanta? They did $7 million in billings last year and Peter's now living in a 'semi-victorian' mansion in mid-town Atlanta. You'll also need a good film maker to handle your commercials. John Fox might be available when he finishes his newest film in New York.

"Derek Huntington is also in New York writing what he calls 'not yet popular' songs. I'll bet he could turn your commercial jingle into a real toe-tapper with some sophisticated input from Randy Bourne, now the assistant musical director of Minnesota Public Radio. Randy is also an organ and harpsichord performer and designs and builds new organs—he might even be able to refine the watsit design." "Never," said Tinker, taking a savage swipe at his chocolate mousse. "Okay, it was just a thought," I countered. "But thinking ahead, you're going to need to have some good medical care for all your employees in case anyone needs it. Mark Melamed is an ophthalmologist in Long Island who can help get splinters out of eyes and Bill Call is in private practice and in St. Paul, MN doing hand and upper extremity surgery while Jon House is president of the Physicians Union in New York." "What about going international?" said Tinker, now getting greedy. "No problem," I said. "Phil Young is vp/general manager of Chase Manhattan in the Dominican Republic and can not only educate your staff on international financial strategies but also teach some Spanish. Herb Ogden, who chairs one region of the New Hampshire Educational Association, teaches French and German in Gilford, NH. That should take care of all the language problems." "You know a lot, for a consultant," said Tinker. "Not everything," I said, as I called for the check. "Kit Meade gets around a lot with McKinsey and Co. in Cleveland (he has to with all three kids avid cross-country skiers.)"

"You've answered all my questions except one," said Tinker. "What happens if none of this works?" "Then you've bought me a nice lunch," I said, slipping on my coat and moving towards the door.

I am pretty slim on news. Please write me any time... I did hear from Sunny Morrill who has her own law practice in Gorham, ME. She specializes in family law and is taking on a partner. She has remarried and shares her life with husband Cliff Rugg, his son and her daughter, Jennifer Anspach. Kathy Stover Holian is still in Albuquerque working as a secretary while her sons are in school. They are an active family, skiing, swimming and traveling. Janet Barker is having a show of her Japanese brush paintings in Whitefish, MT. She is also teaching her art to adults and children. I talked to Sarah Watson DeCew last month and Kathy Abler Harvey keeps me amused with her correspondence and occasional phone calls. Ellen Huntington Bryant, her husband Bob, my husband Luke and I spent a weekend together at our house in Vermont last month. That's about all. Until the next Bulletin...

Greetings—We have just finished a small but successful 15th Reunion—here's the news: Carl "Dogie" Wales is currently a lieutenant in the Navy and is getting a master's degree in naval architecture at MIT. Charlie Sawyer is an independent architect in Boston at a firm called Associated Architects. Charlie is currently working on a number of residential projects on Nantucket and manages to frequently visit for long weekends. Kit Wise is also an architect on the Cape at Woods Hole. Kevin Leete is married and doing landscaping in Chatham. B. I. Cliff and wife, Julie, are leaving their construction and renovation business to take a yearlong trip around the world. Bill Rizzo and Geoff Davis are both attorneys at Ropes & Gray in Boston. Chas Phillips flew in from work at Morgan Stanley in N.Y.C. for a few hours on Saturday. Chas and wife, Candy, have just purchased a brownstone on the upper east side and are doing renovations on it currently. Lew Maranzana is an assistant football coach at Dartmouth and his wife, Patricia, who is a flight attendant commutes to Miami for work. Jim Kunen, who could not make the Reunion, has left the legal defenders in Washington, D.C. and is currently working on his first great American novel. His wife, Jan Drews, has been doing the covers for the New Republic and the art and caption work for ABC news. Rick Pieters is in his third year at B.U. medical where he plans to concentrate on OB/GYN practice.

Lt. Dogie Wales, Gina and Skip Freeman, Chris and Daggy Gurry, and Kit Wise

Phil Morgan is working in Worcester at Morgan Construction, a family firm dealing in large steel processing machines. Charlie Samson, while practicing medicine in Rhode Island, is also in the process of buying a farm and raising cattle. Andy Scott has been furloughed temporarily from American Airlines and is entering law school in San Diego. Spike Tolman works for Kohler Products and has threatened to send us a tape of the flip sides of every 45 record he has. Gib Plimpton is a Jehovah's witness in Aspen. Topper Lynn is working for his family's firm, Blast Deflectors, Inc. in Los Gatos, CA. Craig Miller and wife are living in Charlotte where Craig is a lawyer. Rainer MacGuire and wife, Roz, are also in North Carolina where Rainer is practicing medicine. Long distance award went to John Erskine and his wife, Eva, and two boys who drove through the rain from the Lake Forest, IL area. Keep the cards and letters coming—Best Regards, Skip.

Dear Classmates, I have just returned from our 15th Reunion, so there is first-hand news to report. Marcia Watson Goldberg was there from Branford, CT. She has a daughter, 3½, and teaches aerobic dancing part time. She and her husband, a plastic surgeon, are hoping to relocate in Maryland soon. Margy Ryder Dell Isola is living in Foxborough, MA. She works in personnel for a computer company and has a 5-year-old son. Martha Church Moore and her husband Mark both attended. They have 3 children, ages 9, 6, and 2, and live in Belmont. Bev Armsden Daniel continues in her job as assistant to the president at Wheaton. Her daughter Julia is 2. Dawn Woodward Von Gillern lives near Keene, NH. She and her husband Bill have a music business. They brought their children, ages 12, 7, and 4, along with them. Judi Bricker Seibert traveled the longest distance to be at Reunion. Her son Andrew, 20 months, was with her. She and her husband work for IBM in Atlanta. Lonnie Somers Stowe is an adjustment counselor for the Norwood schools. She lives in Westwood, MA and has just finished her CAGS in family systems therapy. Ruth Sisson Weiner runs a magazine subscription business with her husband in Andover. They have a 2-year-old son, Michael. Blake Hazzard (married name unknown) had planned to come up from Ann Arbor until she learned there was no guarantee of evening sitters for her three children. I attended Melinda Miller Patterson's wedding in May along with Bonnie Ware Steppan. Bonnie and John have a daughter, 6, and live in Winnetka, IL. Melinda and John are building a house in Durham, CT. Peigi Donaghy Huseby lives in Palo Alto. She has a young son and has been working in the field of cancer nursing. Rumor has it that she and her husband hope to move east soon. Louise Fletcher Taylor has been in touch with Melinda lately, but the details of their conversation escape me, other than that they have just moved from Charlottesville. I hear from Betty Barker Conkling once in a blue moon. She and her husband have built a house in Whitefish, Montana and when we last talked had a daughter. Unsubstantiated news is that Rose Jane Bendetson Sulman has 4 children. I finished my masters in counseling 2 years ago and am working as a high school counselor. My 2 daughters are aged 4½ and 10 months. We are almost finished renovating our second (and hopefully, last) old house. Many names of old friends with whom each of us has lost touch were mentioned at Reunion. I hope those of you who couldn't make it will drop me a postcard with your news.

Dorothy Leavitt Cheney: '68 those vervets are talking!

The first real evidence that animals in the wild use a rudimentary language emerged several months ago from the animal behavior studies of Abbot graduate Dorothy Cheney and her husband Robert Seyfarth, an Exeter graduate, in the Amboseli National Park of East Africa. The husband-and-wife zoological team from the Rockefeller University published in Science their findings that vervet monkeys they have observed in East Africa over four years use a word system in their predatory alarm calls.

The evidence?—tapes and films that demonstrate that adult vervets use a different and distinctive alarm call, eliciting a specific response, at the appearance of each of the small monkeys' chief predators—the leopard, the martial eagle and the python. Moreover, when these alarm calls are recorded and later played back on hidden loudspeakers, the researchers films showed that the vervets would look up in the sky when the eagle alarm was sounded, look down at the ground at the snake alarm, and run for the trees when the leopard alarm was given—even though no predator was present. "We showed," Dorothy Cheney points out, "that the vervets do use a rudimentary system in one situation." The New York Times pointed out in a page one story in November that although some apes in captivity have been taught to use signs, this is the first evidence of semantic content in animal calls in the wild. The Cheney-Seyfarth findings are important and controversial news for animal behaviorists and anyone interested in the antecedents of human language. Dorothy and Robert and their vervet films were featured on TV's "Today" show this spring.

Dorothy is the daughter of Sally Leavitt Cheney '45 and the sister of Margaret Cheney '70, managing editor of Washingtonian magazine. It may be news to many Abbot and Andover students of her era that the Dorothy Cheney they remember as Bianca in Taming of the Shrew now spends half her time watching monkeys at the base of Mt. Kilimanjaro. At Wellesley she took her junior year abroad to study at the London School of Economics, aiming for law school. But in London she met Robert Seyfarth, just out of Harvard and aiming for a doctorate in animal behavior at Cambridge. They married in 1971 and as soon as Dorothy graduated from Wellesley in 1972, they took off for Tanzania for a two-year study of baboons. "I was going to help him for two years. When he finished his doctorate it would be my turn, at law school." But animal behavior proved more interesting than (but similar to) human lawsuits, so husband and wife got their Cambridge Ph.D.s together in animal behavior, and began studying vervet communication four years ago. She is delighted that Andover has a Animal Behavior course—"a chance to look at the whole animal!"

Dorothy Cheney says the tented camp in Amboseli Park where they spend half their year, "is cliché Hemingway and I love it: we share it with another research group studying elephants. It's very luxurious—a sleeping tent, and eating tent and a bamboo kitchen. We shop every three or four weeks in Nairobi four hours away. The only problem is when elephants come through and destroy everything once in a while. These are 'garbage elephants,' something like certain bears at Yellowstone. The Masai tribe, who live in the area, are pastoralists who raise cattle. We have a wonderful life there."

Cheney and Seyfarth spent the other half of the year analyzing their field data at Rockefeller University, Millbrook, NY. Here they have not just a joint career but a joint appointment, as assistant professors. Is this a good way to share a career? "It's ideal in every way except one," says Cheney. "A joint appointment means just one salary. But positions are very hard to get, especially working together, and we are very glad to have it. Rockefeller exists primarily for PA '67 continues to move—both up and away. Fletcher Chamberlin has displaced himself from former haunts to Portland, OR, along with his wife Liz and sons Christopher and Timothy. Fletch is now U.S. finance manager for Tektronix, Inc., a maker of oscillo scopes, computer terminals and assorted tests and measurement equipment based in Beaverton. The Chamberlins spent one enjoyable Saturday last December cutting Christmas trees with fellow Portlandite Walt Mintkeski. By the time this scandal sheet hits the newsstands, Walt and his wife Vicki will have had their second child. Walt recently completed terms as chairman of the Oregon chapter of the Sierra Club and member of the Portland Development Commission. Further down the Pacific Coast, Harvey Kelsey has started a year's leave of absence from his job as geologist at Redwood National Park to do some itinerant geological research around the western U.S. Graham May has moved to the quaint American town of Rockville, MD, where he is employed as a foreign expert at the National Institutes of Health. Fellow physician Rob Smith has just moved to Lynn, NH where he is an internist at Mary Hitchcock Hospital and assistant professor of Medicine at Dartmouth Medical School. Rob's wife Peggy commutes frequently to Boston to continue her work in maritime history.

1980 was a busy year for Rod Lewis: He married fellow Portland attorney Valerie Fisher, became a partner in the firm of Ragen, Roberts, O'Scannlain, Robertson and Neill, and completed the Portland marathon in 3:27:54. In December, Rod visited J.B. Moore and his family in San Francisco. Despite being president of his company, Roanoke, J.B. has time to devote to wife Monica, children Betsy and James, and his pet pinball machines.

Chris Donahue may not have time for pinball as he recently announced the birth of his fifth child and fourth daughter, Kristine. Chris did find time to visit Dan Cunningham in New York. Writes Norm Cross: "Doing well at YPI (Yale Psychiatric Institute). Bat Atkinson in Boston, MA: is steadying self for inevitable Brenda Baby (due in June)." Bill Robinson has been living in western Michigan for over a year, and recently joined the firm of Herman Miller as writer/editor. Bill is writing the texts for company publication and audio-visual presentations for this manufacturer of office and health systems. Buck Walker is now in Munich, Germany where he will remain until 1983. "Cathy and I are enjoying living here, trying to take advantage of all that a European tour has to offer. If anyone is in the area, please look us up."

Andre Davis graduated U. Penn in 1971 (remember 1971?) and, after some experience in research, so it's really an ideal place for our work. Now we're analyzing recordings of vervets' grunts in interaction with each other, and the filmed responses, frame by frame. The grunts are calmer, more like human conversation, and harder to analyze than predator calls, but more interesting to study.

"If one of us had a more conventional job, it would be hard to do this work. One of us always would be inconvenienced. And aside from the aesthetic pleasures of living in Africa, if you want to get a better understanding of the factors that cause people to behave in certain ways, it's interesting to speculate about the evolutionary antecedents of our human behavior. Language is supposed to be what separates humans from animals, but if you believe in any kind of evolution, you have to assume language evolved. What factors really pushed primates to develop complicated forms of communication? Can they make sentences? There are so many unanswered questions."

the Real World, studied Law at U. Maryland. A few distinguished clerkships later, Andre is working for the Federal Government in Baltimore.

News Briefs: Charles Harrison, is living in New York, where he continues to work in textiles and other sculpture media while giving periodic one-man shows around the U.S. and the world. Joey Kahn lives in Cambridge, MA, where he does freelance writing for the Atlantic Monthly and similar distinguished journals. Baxter Holland lives in Wyndmoor, PA, and practices pediatrics in the Philadelphia area. Tom Parry wrote only to say that he was pleased with the terrific job the Andover Alumni Fund is doing for the school.

This column is coming from the multilingual border town of Basel, Switzerland, where your secretary is doing his last orthopaedic fellowship. Come September, I will be assuming the position of assistant professor of Orthopaedic Surgery and director of the Sports Medicine Center at the University of Chicago.

Bob Cohan, currently of Silverman and Kudish, Counsellors of Law, Boston, was back at old PA, a member of a brief rock group, "Calm Before a Rising Storm." They made one album, what is known in the trade as a vanity pressing. Cohan thought all that was behind him, but he recently sent a note to his fellow musicians: "You may find this difficult to believe, but it would appear from the enclosed article in the March 3, 1981, Phoenix that our album is now a collector's item worth between $300 and $500. I don't know how this makes you feel, but I, for one, will die a happy man."

Going from west to east this time, Theda Brad-dock Hitchcock writes from Alameda, CA, that she is currently practicing law and specializing in estate planning and corporate law. The next stop is Louisville, which is where I won't be by the time you read this column. Finally, where else but back to Boston, where I had a great reunion with Sara Delano and Nancy Porosky Harris on a weekend visit in January. Sara has a fascinating job as an associate editor at Inc. Magazine, a national monthly for managers of small businesses. She even has her own column in the magazine as well. Nancy continues to teach (this year it's 3rd grade), raise 2 children, and in her spare time, do workshops for independent school teachers in social studies.

A spring wedding: Dr. Claudia Arragg, now a resident in Ophthalmology at Mass. Eye and Ear Infirmary, Boston, is marrying Dr. Howard K. Koh, a diplomat in Internal Medicine, now a fellow in Hematology-Oncology at Massachusetts General Hospital.

Does anyone read this column for style? Doubt it. Most people just want the facts. With the exception, perhaps, of our various classmates working in belles lettres.

Freelancing here in Boston is Woody Tasch, and down in New Haven we have Fred Streibich instructing young Yalies in the ways of the written word. Fred has also been writing for magazines such as Quest. Vic Henningsen, recently transferred from Stanford to the Harvard Ed School, is about to start a writing project himself. Vic will be writing his doctoral thesis in educational history.

This past week saw the publication party for Jeremy Blum's book, The Choices of Power (Harvard U Press). With Harvard Prof Marc Roberts, Jeremy co-authored this study of the ways in which the environmental decisions of six utility companies are affected by the companies' organizational structures. Good reading—whether you're interested in energy, environmental issues, or organizational management.

Family news: Dr. Dan Kent is about to start a 2-year fellowship in general internal medicine at Stanford. He and his wife Peg are the proud parents of a son who weighed into this world at 8 lbs. 3 oz. No other parental stories, but news of a couple of marriages. Fred Adair married PA counselor Catherine Steiner this past fall. Vic Kiarsis's marriage to fellow Citicorper Margaret Woodward will be in July.

Investment banker Larry Uhl says he ran into Tad Brockie in San Francisco. Larry also recently spoke with Jim Cunningham, who's out of Wharton and heading into investment banking himself. Warren Matthei writes to say that NY finance is keeping him busy. He's living in Greenwich, keeps up his squash, but says he sees little of old classmates.

Down on West 72nd I recently attended an unusually elegant black tie party celebrating the 30th birthday of a classmate who wishes to remain anonymous. This person did a lot of painting at Andover, and went to Bennington for awhile. Now he handles corporate accounts at Tiffany. You know who I'm talking about.

Bits and pieces: Jim Volker is practicing law in Dover, NH. Jack Richards saw Crosby Kemper in Florida, and Kelley Wise says hi to all his fans. My own current preoccupation is the fate of the St. Peter's Angels, a Little League team I'm coaching. Classmates could improve the quality of my summer by locating a 12-year-old who can throw a very fast, straight fastball.

She is on maternity leave from her work at the Cortical Function Test Lab at Mass. General (psychological testing—her one and only job!) and from her work on her doctorate at Boston University School of Education.

Sara Gray Stockwell also had a baby, Carl Weyand, born on February 11, 1980. Another boy, Ethan, was born September 15, 1980 to Beth Samel Fried. She has been working as an account executive at a Boston ad agency handling the Gillette account. Luckily she can do most of her work at home. Linda Lacouture bought a house in Denver and is still accepting reservations.

This may be old news but I want to make sure it gets to you all. Ann Aldrich had an 8 lb. 4 oz. baby, Reno Alexander Hectman, on April 26, 1980. Nancy Steele is happily married in Oakland, CA. Maggie Beal is also in Oakland and very skinny!

Greetings from the sunny South! Can it be possible that a year has passed since the Class of '70 Reunion? How great it was to see old friends, make new ones and catch up on everyone's news.

A lot has happened since spring '80. Corky Chisholm Blackwood and daughter Tabitha are living in Pittsfield, NH where Corky is a sales representative for Pittsfield Printing. It was a wonderful move for them as Corky wrote that "the job, babysitter, kindergarten and everything worked out so well." More good news from Lisa Doyle Duerr. She is expecting a baby in June, so her five-year-old daughter, Katherine, will soon have a little playmate. Maura Markley Pollak moved to Omaha in September and was experiencing a little trouble adjusting to the cold weather. Her husband Michael is a faculty member at the University of Nebraska Medical School. Last fall, Elise Straus Bowers and her husband moved in a house that they designed themselves. What a busy gal she must be! Elise wrote that in addition to her 1½ year old, she was expecting her second child, playing in the Portland Symphony and working in the hospital lab. Anne Crowley wrote that she was busy setting up a pottery studio in her house in the D.C. area. Several people were married during the last year. Priscilla Sandford married Ben Wade last summer in New Hampshire, but they are now living in England where Priscilla works for Morgan Guaranty Trust Company and where Ben works for the BBC as a film cameraman. Priscilla mentioned that she sure would love to hear from anyone. Pamela Huttenberg was married to Brent Bergin last summer in New York City where they both work. Pamela transferred to New York from Detroit with Arthur Andersen and was promoted to manager. Brent, who she met in 1974 at the University of Michigan, is employed by Chase Manhattan Bank. Sandy Lindgrove Pait has moved down to the Florida Keys in Marathon, FL where her husband, Spanky, works in the bank. At the high school, Sandy is teaching three music classes and doing guidance work in counseling for careers and future education. This job, along with her five year old and two year old must keep her running! Sandy wrote that Debbie Prudden Lathrop and her husband Craig have moved from Dallas to Wallingford, PA and that Debbie was happily expecting a baby. Chris Steele, now assistant product manager for Parker Brothers, had an exciting two-week trip to Europe last fall. After cramming on German courses, she travelled on her own to Austria and into southern Germany. Although Chris admitted to avoiding any heavy conversations on philosophy in German, she did manage to make her requirements known to the Europeans.

I had a wonderful time in May chatting with Sandy Urie Thorpe and hearing all the news which she had learned while being involved in the phonathons. Sandy, Associate Secretary of the Academy, has experienced a hectic, demanding, but extremely rewarding year. Not only is Sandy the Director for the Annual Giving, and responsible for various alumni programs, but she is also involved with on campus duties at Andover, as well. Her husband, Ron, is in his first year in the Harvard Graduate School of Education. What a remarkably busy couple! Sandy told me that she had recently returned from a grand visit to the D.C. area where she thoroughly enjoyed staying with Margaret Cheney who is managing editor of The Washingtonian. (Congratulations to Margaret!) Margaret lives in a condominium in Washington where Sandy stayed overnight and in the morning, Sandy and Margaret watched Margaret's sister, Dorothy, on the "Today" show. Dorothy '68 and her husband are specialists in animal behavior and they have made some revolutionary discoveries in that field. Also in the D.C. area is Lexi Anderson Strickland, who is rumored to be still living on a houseboat with her husband and their young son.

News clips from the phonathon are as follows: Marcia Rickenbacker had a baby girl, Elizabeth, on April 2. Beth Andrews and her husband are the proud parents of a baby boy Jacob, born in March. They plan to move to Boston where Beth's husband will attend law school. Debby Naman Meyer was expecting a baby, her first, in May. Pauline Cerf Resnick is taking some time off from her graduate studies at Columbia University to raise her son, now a year old. Also in NY is Leslie Breed who is in sales with Houghton Mifflin. Francine Amore Koris is currently a teacher and reading specialist but she is awaiting word from graduate school. Good luck! Sue Cleveland Jacobson is still living in Wyoming. She has two children and her husband is an engineer. Stephanie Dantos is working for Paine Webber in Boston. She and Melanie Rosen travelled to the West Coast to visit with Deedee Rudolph over the New Year. Marsha Lawton is currently taking courses to prepare for a degree in nutrition. Tammy Elliott Rogers had a baby boy, Alexander, in April. Lisa Sweitzer is working in radio broadcasting in Concord, NH. She is covering the state house. Lisa was recently at Andover for the celebration of the Addison Gallery's 50th anniversary.

Lastly, we are building a house here in Rock Hill, SC. Home building has proved to be a fascinating and time consuming project, but how we are enjoying watching our new nest go up! I can only add how very nice it would be to have company, so y'all come on down—you are more than welcome. My best wishes to each and every one of you! Sincerely, Lynn Waller Stelling

A notable group of celebrants and perfect weather made our 10th Reunion a great success. Nearly 50 classmates made it back to deprecate the local supply of beer and lobsters.

Bill Cahill turned over the Reunion Chairman/Class Secretary duties to me with an unassailable excuse; he was honeymooning in Bermuda, having wed Wendy Hibbard June 6 in North Hampton, NH. The wedding party included Charlie Perkins and myself. Jake Cahill '74, Jim Cahill '70, with Trip Anderson performing a reading.

Quite a group sojourned East from California. Tom Bolles is a commercial artist in San Francisco. Luis Buhler is at Stanford Business School. Kevin O'Brien brought his wife, Heidi; he is a broker. Doug Post is practicing law in Los Angeles, while Mike Propper is beginning work as a General Practitioner after completion of med. school.

Many came up from the New York area. Andy Bridges is working there this summer after Harvard Law. Cleveland Burton has a new position with ITT in New Jersey and is moving down there. Doug Buxton will enter Cornell Med. School for his 3rd year; he's doing hair research. Mike Carlisle is a literary agent. Dave Cuthell brought his wife, Dawn; he's practicing law in the city, as are Jim Duncan, Terry Richardson and Steve Sherrill. Fellow city dwellers are Peter Dewitt, Frank Dupont, Fred Pepin (the youngest man at Polydor records), Kurt Kuchta (securities broker), Pete Sachs, and Class Agent Tom Foley, who showed himself in fine physical condition with a prize winning finish in the campus road race. Chien Lee made it up for Sat. night; he's a banker.

Ernie Adams is quarterback coach for the New York Giants (Bill Belichick coaches defensive backs). Grover Butthey is set to start practicing law in North Carolina. Dave Ennis has moved to Nashua, NH, to sell defense-related electronic components.

Bob Frisbie and his wife, Kim, live in Plymouth Meeting, PA, where he is developing real estate. Chris Gardella will soon be off to Santiago, Chile, to work as port manager for an import-export firm. Phil Hooper lives in Philadelphia (with wife Tessa), working as an architect. Fred Johnson just moved down to Texas. Vaughan Lee is an artist. Evan Livada is in business for himself as a securities analyst, in Portland, ME. John "Falstaff" Smith is a college math teacher in Burlington, VT. Mack Stevenson is working in real estate in D.C. Didn't get a chance to talk to Harry Tracy, but he was an avid returnee.

From the Boston area, Trip Anderson and his wife, Sue, brought 4-month-old Brian (1997). Peter Bensley and Dave Knights run a R.E. development company. Dick Cashin made it up with wife Lisa; he's working for a venture capital firm. Ethan Cohen is at Harvard Law. Scott Hughes works in real estate development. Dennis Lombardo came out with wife-to-be Cindy; he runs his families' convention center. Joel McBee is an engineer. Greg Bigwood runs a bank data processing center and lives in Wellesley.

Jim Bakker runs an antique shop in Littleton, MA. Drew Cheney is an attorney in Keene, NH, while Ethan Warren and Dave Gravellese practice in Boston. Jeff Tacconi has been racing motorcycles. Steve Weiner and his wife, Katie, live in Andover; he works for a chemical co.

Some classmates were forced into last minute cancellations. Milton Holt had an emergency session of the Hawaii State Senate, of which he is a member. Gregg Meserole, his wife Katherine, and their two children were to come down from Dunstable, where he is a minister. Charlie Perkins is editor of the "Snowmobile News" in Madawaska, ME.

Andover is a special place where we all made special friends. Demands of family and career make it difficult to keep in contact. I would like this column to help support our ties. To do so, you must write with news of yourself: attendance at this reunion proves how much your classmates are interested. Especially, update your mailing address: I am compiling a class mailing list, available on request.

Classmates at reunion have asked that Messrs. Gardner, Robinson, Seaman, and Todd write this column with your recent activities.

Special thanks to Doug Post and John Smith for helping me clean up.

We had a great time. . . .

Thank you all for coming! Our 10th Reunion was not quite as big a crowd as the 5th, but we ate enough food to make up for it! I tried to take notes in the dark on my lobster shell strewn table, as to what everyone was doing, so if I've made any mistakes I apologize — at least it will get you to write in and correct them!

Didi Salling Larochelle and Bob own a fish market and restaurant in Andover, the Sea Train, and they catered a great lobster and steamer's dinner for us. The two junior LaRochelles were in tow for much of Saturday as I bored them with how hard their mother studied in high school. Catherine Gilman is teaching several levels of acting classes in Boston for professional and aspiring-professional actors. She is also on the audition circuit in NYC. Sara Ingram, who my mother forgets is not a second daughter, only barely escaped from the McCabe household in time to head back to NYC with Nancy Cohen, where Sara hopes to find a letter waiting, offering her a job in a brokerage firm. Sara will have to confine her artistic endeavors to after hours, even though she, Sandy Rollins and I did spend the afternoon lusting after antiques in Morton House; I, because they may be worth a buck, but Sara and Sandy for more esoteric reasons. Sandy is still curator for a large private collection in Philadelphia and numerous other locations — like her beach house on the Vineyard . . . and she often speaks with Heidi Kropp. Nancy Cohen has recently re-located in NYC, now that she has her master's degree in Fine Arts-Photography, and is pursuing her career there. Sandy has passed the Class Secretary's mantle on to Doctor Mary Anna Sullivan — who was present! (Sandy got the job in absentia). Mary Anna is training at McLean Hospital in Belmont through Harvard University for a specialization in psychiatry. Joel is in internal medicine at the Deaconess Hospital. They're about to move, maybe to be the next "Phyllis and Dave" (or "Mammas Mooma") in a school dormitory. Fiona Baxter is teaching and counseling emotionally disturbed children, and those with learning disabilities in a private school. It's a pity she never got an honorary degree from Abbot. You'd never know she'd left us in the 10th grade. She'd better keep coming to Reunions!

Another non-graduate who'd better keep coming is Jean St. Pierre. We had a great time with her Saturday night. She's still teaching English at PA, will be teaching at the Summer Session, vacationing (she tried to say "studying") in Ireland and England this summer, and attempted to bribe me (unsuccessfully — the stakes were too low) into getting her off jury duty this month. Those not trying to avoid the courtroom include Candi Kattar, who, I was told just passed the Mass. Bar Exam, and Nancy Axelrod, who is about to take the Bar. Barbara Levine Kravetz just completed her first year at New England Law School. Her husband Rick is helping run the family owned restaurant and club, "Jasons" in Boston — another good place for sister Abbot Alums' to patronize. Bonnie and Rick have a daughter, Pamela, and a new address at 15 Fearling Drive, in Westwood, MA.

My own legal career includes being assistant clerk-magistrate at Lawrence District Court. My husband, Walter Shea, is an assistant district attorney in Suffolk County. We are presently co-teaching a training course for para-legals at Boston State College, and have just bought a house in Lawrence.

Selma Hershfield, who is also an attorney, is living in Brookline, but was in NYC Reunion weekend. Some others who wanted to attend the Reunion but never made it, include Cynthia Johnson, Peggy Partridge Johnson (new address 623 Laporte Ave., Fort Collins, CO 80521). Susan Dampier King and Tom, who spent their honeymoon with the class at the 5th. Peggy Haskell who got married 6/13/81 (congrats!). Sue McCouch, who's living in Amherst, MA for the summer, Lisa Russem Samel, who is living at 72 Cranberry Road in Dracut, Nancy Phillips Peoples, who's in Florida, running a travel agency school, and whose husband runs an agency (I think), Dori Street who's getting married, moving back East, and getting her B.A. (congratulations!), Abby Johnson, who Ellie Bradshaw keeps running into, Judy Fletcher, who's also a practicing attorney, and sorry she couldn't make it down from Maine, Ruth Raser Timbrell, whose husband was graduating from Stanford on the 14th, but she was thinking of us, & Gacy Viele Halpern, in NYC with Gerry. Sara Gay Stackhouse and her husband are moving to Boston two weeks after the Reunion, Anne Rappaport is doing social work in Worcester and has a daughter; Deborah Kelsey, who spent New Years Eve with Ellie Bradshaw; Lynne Comley Tinker and her husband Michael have a two year old son; Mimi Walker Sherwin, from California, and Tottie Wasilewski, who is always a faithful correspondent. She's still working as a nurse in Cambridge, England, always eager to make room in her "digs" for any of us. (We're going to Britain in September — maybe we'll take her up on it). She sent her last note on tea-stained Abbot stationery that she dug up, saying she was on her way to Poland with her father on a speaking engagement.

More news on Reunion attendees: Ellen Bradshaw (33 Chester St. Somerville) is doing freelance graphics and illustrations, and reports that Jennie Martin is working at the Smithsonian. Sue Baybutt Spirito, who's an architect in Boston, is working on schools and other large projects. Sue's husband, Tony is soon to be a clinical psychologist. Sally Brownling is going to do her medical internship in radiological therapy (I think); Joan Liversidge Drucker is doing her residency in internal medicine at Faulkner Hospital, and Bob is doing his in pediatrics at MGH. They're living in Jamaica Plain.

Debbie Sammataro-Hutchins and her husband just had a baby boy 11 weeks ago, Tynan Sammataro-Hutchins, and she was extolling the virtues of midwives with Bea McConnie Strohmeier who delivered Fernando 4 weeks ago. Bea, Mark and baby are living at 77 Brookline St. in Boston. It's also reported that Liz Hill Howe and Peter are living in England and have two children, and that Linda Bistany is going to school in Washington, D.C. Denise Mallen is a double manager (Customer service and retirement pensions) at the Home Savings Bank in Boston. Go give her some money!

Debbie Huntington just bought a new house that she is rehabing, and will be working in Mexico this summer. She had a great old Abbot scrapbook with her at the Reunion containing some embarrassing remnants of our youth. Jean Rappaport Devincentis and her husband Richard were with us. They have two daughters.

The Reunion ended Sunday, and I'm still chasing around straightening out the bills, and now they want these notes in by Friday! If I left something out I apologize. Thank you all for coming, and for donating to the Alumni Fund. It's not too late, if you want to send it now.....

Two days on the job and my first column is due. This reminds me of my days as a newspaper reporter. For a class of literati, I fear most of the information I will draw upon for this report may be stale. If I misspeak your whereabouts or doings, please reveal the current truth about yourself: where you are, where you've been and what you're up to.

Aleta Reynolds Crawford remains in Durham, NC where she was studying to be a nurse but has set those goals aside for the moment to be mother to Bristol James, born March 1980, and to Baby Crawford II expected in June. Others in the medical field include Annelisa Addante, who graduated from Holy Cross in Worcester, MA, now a third-year student at the New York College of Podiatric Medicine (following in her father's footsteps). Annelisa lives in Greenwich Village. Mardy Rogers Scully is a medical secretary with the N.E. Neurological Association in North Andover, MA. Dr. Jacqueline Carter is a resident at Vanderbilt University Medical Center in Nashville, TN.

Merry Weidenman graduated from Mount Holyoke with a magna cum laude degree in psychology and completed most of the master's program before she started working with alcoholics at the U. Conn. Medical Center in Farmington. If she finishes her thesis then she also has a master's degree. Liz Hall is a vet student at Tufts. Alice Sweeney is married, living and working in Washington, D.C. with a child welfare agency, according to Aleta Reynolds, who also said Linda Calvin is in our capital and works for the Department of Agriculture.

Way across the country to the northwest, Libby Pennick has settled into a home with her true love (her words). After receiving an undergraduate degree from Vassar, an M.A. in 18th century French literature from Columbia, she has settled down working for a hi-fi/speaker business in Seattle. She wondered quite audibly from afar where Sandy Reynolds, KT Nourse and Megan Shutte were. You guys hear? Since KT's our class agent—I hope everybody paid her a great deal of attention.

Missy Baird is in Florida doing some sort of rehabilitation counseling, while Margaret Couch lives in Lawrence, MA also doing counseling and teaching English as a second language. Leigh Brecheen is a law student at Arizona State. Andrea Putman is a headstart teacher in Warren, WI. Ginger Chapman is lost according to a list prepared by the alumni office. So is Angie Deitrick. Only I know better. Angie may be confused, but she lives in a big house in Dorchester, MA with her one-year-old, blue-eyed, blonde squirt. She works for a Boston investment broker. Kate Lilly is living the life of an equestrian in West Falmouth, MA while in Salem, MA Liz Padjen is an architect.

Ellie Mish is an intern in curating and costume restoration at the Margaret Woodbury Strong Museum in Cooperstown, NY. And though Maud Lavin sports a Philadelphia address our omniscient list has her working for the Guggenheim Museum in New York City. Some commute. Linda Rawson is a hotshot lawyer for Harper and Row Publishers, Inc. in NYC, after Radcliffe and New York Law School. Sally Jo Gilbert Lerner, another Cliffie, is teaching special education at a private school in Des Plaines, IL. Sarah Richardson works in Durham, NC for the federal government in personnel. anybody need a job?

Abigail Shaine is a Washington, D.C., lawyer with the firm of Howey and Simon involved mostly with anti-trust and energy litigation. Moving north, Joni Blaxter is doing something in Philadelphia. Brenda Friend is an actress in the Big Apple. Lydia Eccles spent four years in Baltimore doing the accounting for her brother's contracting firm, Struover Bros. & Eccles, but this spring and summer she's in Newport, RI doing research and editing in military history. Lynn Graham Goldberg is a student at Columbia's Business School. Pam Caverly Gunn is an accountant with the Charter Oil Co. in North Bend, OR. Ann Woodd-Cahusac (a.k.a. Mrs. Douglas R. Augenthaler) lives in Greenwich, CT, and is a buyer for Lord & Taylor stores. Beth Urduang works for Massachusetts Mutual Life Insurance Co. Like Maud, she sports a Pennsylvania address, Norristown specifically. Something seems awry.

Suze Weaver became a lady engineer upon graduating from Rochester Institute of Technology and after a stint in Florida, she and her honey, transferred to Texas where they are concerned with the photoengineering aspects of printing (unless I've got it all wrong). Connie deSilva is hanging in there as disc jockey for WHEB-FM in Portsmouth, NH, while Joanne Mosca is news director for WCGY/WCCM in Lawrence, MA.

As for me, I was a newspaper reporter for Gannett who went to work briefly for ITT as a public relations supervisor and stopped working full time to have a baby. My life is steeped in political involvement and community service at the moment, having organized the Meals on Wheels program for my community and being in the midst of organizing a symposium, workshops and art exhibit from the Smithsonian on wildlife art for a neighboring nature education center, of which I'm a board member.

My husband, Peter B. Cooper, brother to Sally '73, and I have been renovating an old farmhouse in a semi-rural area of northern Westchester county, NY, and on Nov. 10, 1980, we gave birth to Anna Ripley Cooper, a smiling baby with red-gold hair, blue eyes and already an inveterate mountain climber. All baby-sitters welcomed with open arms.

Seriously, write or visit you all if you want me to be up-to-date. Otherwise suffer in silence with my outdated information.

Roger Anderson Jr. is presently a fourth-year medical student at Duke and will be starting an internship in internal medicine in July 1981. Bradley R. Buchbinder is also in medicine as a first-year medical student at Boston University School of Medicine. Rumor has it that Phil Kemp is due to be married and moving to Chicago after finishing business school at Stanford. Philip Bauman is in his last year of medical school at Columbia.

From handwriting on the wall to instructing calligraphy—Gordon Scott Clemson has graduated from Harvard University cum laude and is presently teaching at the Tower School in Marblehead, MA. He is engaged to be married in June. David Kay—we miss you! David has finally taken off his hat (I think) and is engaged to be married! He is working on a Ph.D. in history at the University of Chicago. Bill Adams and John Christoforo are also at U. of Chicago. John is studying hospital administration, Bill is an M.B.A. student.

ABC Sports presents David Downs! David is now an associate producer for the 1984 Olympics. He will be broadcasting both the Winter Olympics in Yugoslavia and the summer games in Los Angeles. David Donahue is a sales representative for Berger Instruments of Boston, MA. He brings new of Jim Hackett who is finishing this spring his M.B.A. at Wharton, and Steve Rooney, who after graduating from Fordham Law School, is living and working in Manhattan, NY for a federal judge. John & Melissa McDonald are expecting a child (this news may be late—perhaps we need to add a name already!).

Christopher Ferris has postponed his graduate schooling at Boston University to attend Military Intelligence Officer Advanced Course and the Special Forces Officer Course prior to final assignment to the 10th Special Forces Group (Airborne) at Fort Devens, MA. Jim Hilböld will be finishing law school at the University of Michigan and then hopes to study law in either Paris or Brussels for a year. He claims Doug Mavor is "solving tomorrow's energy problems today as a Mother Earth employee at Asheville, NC." To date we have not heard what he is doing about today's energy problems, perhaps we will hear from him tomorrow!

Steve Harding is now working as an energy management engineer for the Puget Sound Power and Light Company. Steve, my address is above in case you find an empty envelope! Ying-Wing Ho has moved to Seattle, WA, where he is attending a Ph.D. program in clinical psychology at the University of Washington. Bahram Irani, I know is now living in southern California but does anyone know what he is doing for work? Also at the University of Washington is James (Ned) Jackson who is studying for his Ph.D. in organic chemistry. He is due to be married in August. He loves you Ron Minnel!

Alan Louie is still studying internal medicine, now in internship at Stanford. Matthias Kurth has three more years yet to go at the Baylor College of Medicine. He hears that Randy Tagg is working on his Ph.D. in physics at MIT.

Roger Lawrence is finishing his law degree this spring and is planning on working in New York City. He is presently a teaching fellow and the editor of the Syracuse Law Review. Carl Lavin, after one year as copy editor and staff writer for the L.A. Herald Examiner, now works for the University of Chicago's Public Information Office. He is engaged to be married in August. Mark Loo is finishing his fourth year at Cornell Medical School in New York City. Thomas Minehart after graduating with an M.A. in mass communications from the University of Minnesota is now working for the associated press in Raleigh, NC as a reporter. Thomas claims that John Kawano is presently teaching English in Tokyo.

Steven Martin finished his B.S.M.E. from the University of Washington in Seattle and is now working for Boeing in Environmental Control Systems for the 757. (Steven keep sending news—for now that's enough, of course later...). William Owen has been appointed first-year resident in internal medicine at the Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston. He was the winner of the Kaiser/National Medical Foundation Merit Graduation Award. Arthelbert Parker (alias 'T' Parker!) is still working with IBM in Cranford, NJ as a marketing representative in the data processing division. Charlie Boyd is working in Cleveland with Republic Steel. Dave Swanson, what are you doing in Omaha, NB?

Walt Bukawyn is studying law and business at Pace University in New York. After having spent one year in Singapore and Hong Kong, Tom Sommerfield is now living in London working for the Hong Kong Shanghai Bank. Tao-Heng Sun will receive his M.B.A. degree from the University of Southern California. He is married and has an eighteen-month-old daughter. Premchai Karnasuta was married this past January in Bangkok, Thailand. Jesse Watson has been working with American Airlines for almost two years now. He is hoping to complete his M.B.A. at SMU this summer.

Will Chris Haney, Steve Pinchuck '74 and Steven Rockwell please write! Congratulations to everyone!

Sorry about the news drought for the last few months! And look out, the flood of news is out. There's such a variety that organization is lacking but fortunately I don't have to turn this in to K. Kelly or others.

Bill Sneeder is working on an M.S. and L.D. at Georgetown and enjoying Washington. Anne Munkenbeck is splitting her time between graphic art for a publishing house in Stamford, CT, photography, and a variety of running, swimming and biking with her eye on her second triathlon in August. In New York, Carroll Coward is a fixed income analyst for Bank of New York and Jim Zech is at NYU Law. David Briggs is not peddling stationery as previously reported, in reality he is a starving actor most recently stationed in East Village. News of Peter "Winnie-the-Pooh" Sellars comes in a review of his New York theatrical/directorial debut in November. Prior to that achievement, Peter was recognized conducting the New Hampshire Symphony in a performance of Don Giovanni at Monadnock Music Festival. How about spicing up the Denver scene, Peter?

Rounding out the New York crowd news is a letter from Anne Rollings who works doing in-house advertising for Sotheby Parke Bernet. She reports: Bill Buttenwieser, Public Advocate; John Oldham, '74, law school; Don Rimsky, Y&R (sorry to be dumb but who's that, or what's that?); David Vipond, banker and pseudo-professional roller skater; John Hamm '74, smiling; Frank Lee, no comment; Mike Marinageli, student; Steve Goldberg, insurance; Roger Strong, "50 Rock" (again, what's that?) Mike Boldt, New Jersey newspaper; Andy Craig, Prentice-Hall; Lynn Meighan, paralegal. Other residents include Phil and Judy Hueber, Peter Castleman, Peter Wyman, Kate Rohrbach and Steve Bache. Anne, thanks for all that news—obviously NYC attracts a substantial number of classmates. And in Boston, Lisa Doyle, Gillette.

To briefly get back out West, Ruth Cogan has been in Vail for the last year idling her master's in Public Health from Tufts and utilizing her arms and legs skiing and bartending. And last summer in Wilson, WY, Lisa Bennett married Scott Pierson.

Back East, Barbara Bostwick is going on for a master's in psychology. Frank Lavin, after a year in Taiwan, returned to Washington with his bride Ann. Frank works in presidential personnel for the Reagan Administration. Terry Vaughan, wife Jacquie and daughter Nika are in Delaware, OH where Terry works as a market analyst for Standard Register. Tim Fitzgerald, having graduated from Wesleyan, is apparently pursuing boxing with the New England Golden Gloves this year.

In the bridal department, Peter Dorsey is married to Nancy Mendillo, Kim Miller is engaged to William Casazza, Gren Blackall is engaged to Joyce Maker and Mary-Jo O'Reilly is married to John Smith. Mary-Jo is a registered nurse and now living in Brooklyn Hts., NY.

And from Philadelphia, Felecia Elias writes that she is between jobs in real estate investment and at that time was considering going to work in the Reagan Administration. Other Penn grads: Carley Pennink is in her second year at Parsons School of Design in NYC; Richard Smith is maybe working for the State Department in Africa; Jay Finney is in advertising in NYC; Brad Marvin and his family are in Pensacola where Brad is in Navy flight training school; Geoff Richards is finishing up an M.B.A. from Wharton.

And in Denver, Sandy Smith lives about 8 blocks from me and works for CGG, a French geophysical company. She's also raising wonderful golden retrievers. And Priscilla Perry, back in Boston/Marblehead is getting married in June. Jenny Parmelee '76 is working the graveyard shift for Associated Press in Denver, a quick transfer from her job with them in Paris.

A college friend tells me that Matt Finnie and Paul Suslovic are somewhere in New York State working for National Gypsum—who knows with those two?

Holly Vickers, after graduating from Mill with a degree in economics, spent 16 months as a para-legal for Pettit and Martin in San Francisco. Now she is back in Massachusetts looking for work as a research associate in economic consulting and hoping for grad school in 1982. Annette Bond is at Harvard Med school and John McClement is working in NYC.

Got down my new address—I'm moving to the other end of the city in June and hope to have my mailbox filled with news from classmates who are surfacing from their various pursuits. Here endeth the flood—have a great summer.

Reunion was almost too much to be believed with attendance in excess of 100, and plenty of activities to keep the hoards busy. I am forced to say, if you will permit me the indulgence, that the weekend was a success.

Friday night saw the arrival of most of our guests, including near finishers like Duncan Donahue, Thatcher Townsend, John Burke, Murph Gregg, and full fledged alumni including Dennises Murphy and Driscoll, Rosey, Liza Parker, Pam Richards, Pam Eaton, Chris Bens- ley, George Chadwick, John Trafton, Hope Barnes, Kelly O'Brien, Chris "Tiny" Coan, Scott Bone, and the list goes on and on.

Dennis Murphy, Julie O'Donnell and friends at the '76 Reunion

Key to Friday night's agenda, after the run-of-the-reunion-mill parties was Mr. Chadwick's after hours club in Paul Revere North. Do you remember?

The crowds rolled in on Saturday for more of the fun begun Friday night, and soon after the picnic many returned to Pomp's Pond, scene of many an Andover debauché five years ago. Dinner and dancing/drinking in the gym proved an amusement, and a pleasant change from the Borden gym of old with ropes and cargo nets strung all over the room. Thanks to Abby Mason for the wonderful dinner — including the banana fritters. Truly, though, the weekend would have short-circuited without her help.

Briefly — we saw lots of Jim Horowitz and his bride and new son James, Marc Lewis and spouse, Bobby Kelley and guest. Chris Mullen, Howard Allen, Cliff Long, Dan Algrant were there, and one might have thought a session of Novel and Drama Seminar was being held in the gym office if he didn't know better. Thanks also to the Wises and the Clarks, the Richards and the Thorpes, for joining us.

The remainder of the list will be published soon. Pam Eaton has agreed to compile the list, and will be in touch with me on that soon.

To those who couldn't make it — you wish you could have been there. See you in five. It is with deep sorrow that I must report the death of one of our classmates. Francesca Woodman passed away on January 19. I trust all will join me in sending sympathies to her friends, and family in Boulder.

Marriage seems to be chic for the class of '76 this spring, if not sooner. Stephen Porter will try his hand at matrimony after graduating from the University of Michigan—Jenny Booth his victim. He'll be in D.C. by August, in search of employ. Jim Horowitz gave in long ago, marrying in October of 1979—he and wife Marie having born their first last September. James junior, of course, And Craig Conrad will be marrying in August up in Boston—to Susan Higgins. Bart Partington reports favorably after graduating Middlebury '80. He had the poor taste to then spend the summer on the continent, not running into Fish, who allegedly spent the year in Greece. Bart will try to break job ice in New York before summer is too long under way. Chris Coan of October '80 Newsweek fame ran into Bay Roberts this winter, and is trying to get the hell out of Columbia with a history degree. He reports that Bay is still (?) at Santa Cruz—to finish before this article makes it to press. Cynthia Rolph graduated Trinity '80 to return to Montreal and home. Working at the International Department of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, she seeks PA alumni in the Montreal area.

Yes, Sloane Boochever did graduate from college, and is moving to the Apple for to find a livelihood. Dicky Babson has taken root at the University of Virginia, quite handily. I might add. He is vice president of the Jefferson Literary and Debating Society down there, if you can stand it. His colorful prose style will undoubtedly soon be the subject of a lively debate at the forensic society.

Graduate school news has filtered in from Jill Hartwell, who spent the summer in Zaire on an assistant pastorate, now at Princeton Theological Seminary. She sees much of Pam Eaton, and seeks more than grapevine style news from her friends of '76. George Tombropoulos and Adith Cheosakul have spent the last five years together at Cornell—in the same department. Both will receive masters' in Engineering in May. Adith to go on to seek the coveted M.B.A. John Rokous is now at R.P.I. in Biomedical Engineering, working in all of that spare time he has as a research assistant, whatever that is. Stephen Erban has passed on the option of settling down into a job, choosing instead to attend UPenn Med school, a dubious selection at best. What's worse, he went for his final exams over our glorious fifth reunion. Tacky.

Adam Rosenthal is processing sludge in Phoenix. If I had any smarts, I'd invest in this kind of company—who knows what they'll find in the glop.

Tom May, Alice Mary Leach, Shelley Slade and myself have spent the last few days toiling away at a local dinner for the new Headmaster, Donald McNemar. All of the former are well, and good citizens to boot. And that's the way it is, before the reunion, 1981.

Wow have I got news! I don't know what inspired you all to write me recently, but I really appreciate it. Keep it up! As usual, we have a strong contingent gallivanting around the world. Laura is enjoying her Junior year in Begien, Wales. She's been doing lots of travelling, hiking, and exploring the foreign countryside. In Cambridge, England Mary Stacey is considering entering publishing as she contemplates life after college. Gary Levine is presently attending the Univ. of Toulouse in Southern France. In Switzerland, Eve Crowley is studying International Relations and French at the Univ. of Geneva. Caroline Sheahan is attending the Univ. of Cadiz in Spain. She writes that she has "to put up with a lot of amazed people who have never seen a girl running, especially a rubio (blonde)." She'll be working in Jackson Hole again this summer.

Steve Steckel sent a letter with pictures and all from Japan! He has been studying at the Waseda University in Tokyo, living with a Japanese family, and teaching English. In need of some "intensive enjoyment", Steve spent six week traveling through southeast Asia visiting Thailand, Hong Kong, and east Asia. Erika Hartmann sent me a long letter from Sri Lanka. She is on "Semester at Sea" and has been traveling around the world for 3½ months by boat. This fall Erika will return to the school of education at UVM and continue her double major in elementary and specialized education. The last time Erika saw Lisa Worthington she was living in a cabin in the mountains outside Burlington with no electricity or plumbing, going to school, and loving it. John Starosta spent the past year in Bogota, Colombia. He had a real "eye opening" experience living in a third world country and seeing the major effects the influences of foreign capitalist countries have on it. John is hoping to paint houses on the Cape with Nick Stoneman this summer.

Back on the domestic front... some of our fellow classmates are already becoming celebrities! Jim Spader is involved with the film "Endless Love" with actress Brooke Shields and director Franco Zeffirelli. Mark Resnick joined the "toughest punk band in Boston" called Leper, and their first single (a 45, not a LP) was released in March. Anyone interested in a copy should write: Record-46 The Fenway, Apt. 7 Boston, MA 02115. If you ever are in Boston be sure to see Leper; Mark guarantees it's an experience you won't forget! Jeff Strong, who took a year off from Yale, spent 5 months in Syracuse, NY as a newspaper photographer. He now is "living in sin" in Denver, CO and pursuing an "alternate lifestyle." This past winter Robert Smythe and Brian Snedeker drove across the country in a Mercedes. Hitting the various highlights along the way, they finally ended up in San Francisco and stayed with Nancy Jacobs. They then took a bus to Chicago and visited Wayne Robinson "who is on his way to stardom at North-western."

Speaking of "hot shots," William Bellissimo was recently awarded the James I. Israel Yale—Andover Scholarship for the second year in a row. The award is given to PA graduates who have made a contribution to the Yale community. Congratulations! Darcy Fernald reports that this past winter Perrin Tingley was playing #1 in squash and Hope Mead played #4. Hope was written up in the Providence Journal for having the best winning record on the team. Perrin (who is co-captain) and Darcy are both playing on the lacrosse team. Josh McCall is looking forward to the lacrosse season at U. Penn. He is a brother at Phi Gamma Delta where Bob Benner '77 is president. (Way to go, Benner!) Susan Prochniak, vice-president and social chairman of her sorority, took a year off from Smith and attended Williams College. Last year Bill Mudge took time off from Washington University and worked for the Resources Center at U. of Chicago. During the summer he volunteered on an archaeological dig in Israel, which he says is "one of the most exciting things I've done in years." Now he has transferred to U. of Chicago. Christine Mummert relays that she is attending Bennington College. Peter Bunnan who transferred to Georgetown about 1½ years ago is enjoying the exciting atmosphere of D.C. He attended many of the inaugural events this past fall including the Inaugural Ball. "It was like the coronation of a warrior who had just conquered the city." Jeff Haggin is studying at Berkeley and doing research for Western Electric in San Francisco. For those of you thinking of entering the corporate world, Jeff informs me that "blue and white striped ties are definitely out." Last but not least, Mary Winn asks "Whitemore, where are you?" I wonder that too, along with where Bruce Stanley and others I wrote moved to? Drop me a postcard sometime. Those of you who wrote... Great to hear from you all! Have a wild summer everyone!

Hello again to you all. My apologies for the last article (or rather lack of). At the time the Class of '79 seemed to be non-existent. This time thanks to a few well-informed classmates, I have managed to find news about some of you.

John Moynihan '78 spent this year at the Trinity School in Ireland. At Wesleyan Kay McCabe is dancing and is as crazy as ever. Lynne Kosobucki is stroking the varsity women's 8 for Georgetown. Andy Thomas has been living in a co-op in Hamilton and is enjoying the quiet life there. And if anyone happens to be in Haiti, Andy's family has moved there! Ann Sherwood, a French major at Skidmore, has been very involved in field hockey at school. She also spent January working in a Georgetown law firm. I hear that Carroll Bogert gave a very commendable speech at the dinner for the Siziers in Boston. Good job Carroll!!

Danny Wheeler is into art and music. He has been working at a concert agency in Providence and will continue to do that during the summer. Also at Brown "Suzanne Nichols is singing" (that's all I know). Taylor Gray is out of school but still in Providence working and playing in a band. Toni Lipscomb is very involved in a combination of the women's center and Third World studies. I hear that the Frat Boys, Billy Way, Rick Mosely and John Kennedy, have had enough of playing the Greek life.

Ken Oasis confirms that there is life after spaceball; he was captain of his dorm's broom-ball team this year. At UVM he and John McCorvie are in the same dorm and run into each other often. Karen Albert and Sylvia Platt overlapped long enough in Chicago to have lunch together. Karen is an American Culture major at Northwestern, and Sylvia is now at Harvard after taking a year off. Amy Morton is very into art at Carnegie-Mellon.

Next year seems to be a popular time for travel, play, work, school abroad, whatever. Tori Abbott who has now become a running fanatic, is taking the year off and may be in England some. Sarah Moore will spend the fall term at Michigan and then perhaps head for Europe. She is also spending this summer in Switzerland working with multi-lingual children (something like that). Margaret Shuwall is working at a restaurant in Rockport for the summer before heading to school in Paris. Eliza Deery, who is training for the ski season as always, will be at Dartmouth summer school. She plans to take the fall off and may also get to Europe. And finally, Beth Rokous will be in school in London. I'm sure that there are many others bound for foreign lands so if anyone else needs a place to stay or an excuse to go, it shouldn't be too tough to find one.

At Princeton Taylor Bodman is still very involved in singing, and this year he was in an opera! Kaaren Shalom spent a term off from Princeton at Berkeley. Along with playing B-Ball Robert Doar headed the anti-bicker campaign.

Robert, Dexter Wadsworth, and Greg Moten all roomed together this year!! Dexter and Greg are both "cool".

David Ulin had a lead role in "Hair" at Penn this spring. This summer he may be a research assistant. Howard Blumenthal is also having a great time at Penn. He is technical director of the school's television station, and outside of school his record business is thriving. This summer he plans to take off for the Cannes Film Festival. Scott Garabedian is in Salem this summer working for the Park Department. He has had a good time at Williams. Mary Frances Withum has been in Puerto Rico while in the Navy. I think that she is working in Florida for the summer before attending Wheaton in the fall. Mimi Won will be working at the Boston Fine Arts Museum in the Instruments Collection this summer. At Smith Mimi has been playing her harpsichord lots. Dave Daskal and Dave Herskovits are both into theatre at Yale. D. and Tom Rubin will both be in the media world for the summer. Dave in cable TV in Chicago and Tom at Channel 13 in New York. Dick Flaherty has opened his own corporation and become a multi-millionaire. Briggs Tobin is sailing around the world.

In Ann Arbor the Andover crowd is doing fine. Rumor has it that Bill Miles is becoming conservative, but from what I've seen of him (too little) he is still the same "Smiles." He may be in New York this summer. I see Spike Moore and Stevie Lake here and there. Both seem quite happy. Chris Coughlan and I have become known to some as the "Air-Head Twins." Chris is waitressing in Maine again this summer. We had a very punchy and wonderful dinner with Hunt Stehl when he visited from Northwestern one weekend. Earlier in the year Hunt, Brian Linse, and Rick Wolk all came up from Chicago for a Dixie Dregs concert and a football game. Rob Mobley also dropped in to visit Michigan, but I missed him.

The Dead were at Yale. And mellow. Each and everyone of you write, call, and visit now. Thanks. Later. Yo.

Bob Hooper is having to adjust to a hard new way of life; he is partially paralyzed from a swimming accident; mail or visitors can reach him at the New England Regional Spinal Cord Injury Center at University Hospital, East Newton Street, Boston, MA, 02118. Bobby has a 112-page hardcover book coming out this summer, Pictorial Manchester, an outgrowth of his research at the Manchester Historical Society for his History 35 paper. Produced with his friend, Alfred Rossi, it is Manchester's first photographic documentary, with 70 pages of Bob's black-and-white and color photography of his native town, and 40 pages of old photographs, some dating from 1830. Going for $17.50, it will soon be a collector's item.

Floyd Humphries writes that he and Sarah, at the Vice President-elect's invitation, stopped over for the inaugural festivities in Washington on their way to Florida. They returned to Kennebunk, ME at the end of March to find that fellow townsfolk Bill and Evelyn Bennett were comfortably settled in the new Bennett dwelling. Back in Vermont from Florida, where they entertained their new grandson and his parents, are Jack and Nancy Hawes.

It's hard to believe that Miles and Helen Malone have been away from PA for nineteen years. Miles says: "I teach only part time here at the Daytona Beach Community College, only six hours a week to be exact." He was a full-time member of the faculty until he was "retired for the second time." He adds that "Helen has returned to work with garden clubs." Talk about keeping active!

Dine and Deke DiClemente seem to be following in the Malone footsteps since both are still active in PA affairs on a part-time basis, he as a correspondent with the Alumni and she as an instructor in typewriting. Deke says that they are "relishing every minute" of their retirement.

It's a pleasure to report that the Gillingham Gardens are flourishing in Berwick, ME, under the skilled hands of Clare and Allan, and that their good neighbor, Alston Chase, is in fine shape and maintaining an exhausting round of social engagements, including a recent outing with Bill and Vivian Buehner and Steve and Ethel Whitney.

A Farewell Gift

More than 186,624 stitches by more than 100 women and a few good men fashioned this needlepoint Andover wall hanging which Priscilla Bellízia presented to Nancy and Ted Sizer with appreciation and affection from the Ladies Benevolent Society, the women faculty and faculty wives of Phillips Academy.

The sixteen squares of the needlepoint, designed by Ann Parks, carry symbols of the Sizers' life at Andover these past nine years. Among them: Phelps House; the Bell Tower (with a student rappelling down); a beehive with a few stray bees; the cherry tree by Evans Hall; Non Sibi; the Sizers' dog, Heidi; their children's names; the Bicentennial weathervane; Ted's green book bag and Nancy's knitting bag; a varsity A baby sweater; the Elm Arch; Abbot and PA rings, and the Chinese characters for "teacher."

(MS)²: a summer outreach

Andover has new funding for its five-year-old Math & Science for Minority Students Program directed by Elwin Sykes. Here's a look at (MS)² by one of its teachers.

by Frank M. Eccles '43

On August 13th, twenty-nine black, Hispanic, and Asian students were honored in a simple, moving ceremony marking the completion of three summers of intensive work in mathematics and science at Phillips Academy. They were graduates of the Mathematics and Science for Minority Students Program, better known as (MS)², which Andover has been operating since the summer of 1977. This past June, the Ford Foundation announced a grant of $150,000 to cover half of the operating expenses for the Program during the next two summers. After five summers of increasingly successful experience and this strong vote of confidence from America's largest foundation, it appears that (MS)² has come of age as a significant part of Andover's long-term commitment to minority education.

The Program was initiated in response to the stark underrepresentation of blacks and Hispanics in the nation's engineering, medical and scientific professions. By the mid-70's it was increasingly clear that the number of blacks and Hispanics studying for careers in the technical fields had scarcely risen at all, despite the substantial rise in the college minority population over the preceding decade or so. In 1975 fewer than one out of 40 engineering degrees was awarded to a black or Hispanic. Minority students (excluding Asians) who arrived on college campuses intending to prepare for the technical professions were encountering great difficulties with freshman calculus and the basic physics, chemistry, and biology courses. A great many quickly became discouraged and shifted to fields not grounded in mathematics and the physical sciences. A person can't wait until age 18 to start to develop the patterns of thought and intellectual skills required for effective work in mathematics and science. From this viewpoint, the most promising way to open up the scientific professions to bright minority students is to involve them deeply at an early age with good mathematical and scientific thinking. On this premise in 1975 Jerry Foster, then Head of Andover's Complementary Schools Program, sold Headmaster Sizer on the idea of an (MS)² Program and secured foundation support to fund it on an experimental basis.

Each summer at the end of their ninth grade year, about thirty new students almost entirely from cities east of the Mississippi join (MS)². The expectation is that they will spend three consecutive summers in the Program, and that all of their costs will be borne by (MS)². Students are chosen on the basis of their perceived ability and interests in the areas of mathematics and science, together with a strong academic record and preference for low income.

To make students aware of the (MS)² opportunity, Andover relies primarily on public school counselors. Since (MS)² does not threaten to siphon off their top students (participants in this summer program are not eligible for regular admission to PA), these guidance counselors usually cooperate enthusiastically with our recruitment. The Hardy House Admission staff also has been extremely helpful in publicizing the Program, and the (MS)² students themselves have been particularly effective advertisers back at their home schools. The first summer's recruitment was difficult, but since then there has been a steady burgeoning of interest in the Program. This past year there were nearly six candidates for each (MS)² slot.

The (MS)² academic program at Andover is highly focused; participants do not enjoy freedom of choice in courses. Each student has ten class periods a week of mathematics, ten periods of science, and two periods of expository writing, and about 20 hours a week of homework. The courses are designed as a three-summer sequence, tailored to meet the needs of the students and the goals of the Program.

These courses do not emphasize review work since they are not remedial. They do not preview the work of the coming year. Instead, teachers try to present topics not offered in the usual high school curriculum and to reach for greater depth and understanding of mainstream ideas.

In mathematics this translates into an emphasis on algebraic proof, function concepts, graphing, use of the computer, and exposure to probability and statistics. In the science courses there is much laboratory experimentation as students examine topics in physical science, fresh water ecology, and organic chemistry. In both math and science, instructors stress the understanding of concepts, reasoning from facts, the clear expression of ideas and sustained analysis. Students need to do more than simply learn the facts and plug into formulas.

A key strength for (MS)² is being a part of the Andover Summer Session. Outside of their specialized academics, (MS)² students are integrated into the life of the larger school — in the dormitories, the dining halls, the athletic program, and in the recreational activities. Thus they enjoy the rich offering of cultural and social opportunities that gives the Summer Session an exhilarating lift. Otherwise a concentrated math/science diet could seem pretty grim to even the most dedicated youths.

Another benefit derived from the Summer Session is that (MS)² students, many of whom attend overwhelmingly black schools, have a chance to associate closely with a diverse group of students, mostly white, from widely varying backgrounds. (MS)² students make it plain that they deeply value this type of exposure. (MS)² students aspire to predominantly white colleges and yet they often feel anxiety about living in such an atmosphere. Three summers at Andover clearly build confidence to deal with a college experience in

"Phillips Academy's continued enthusiasm for the (MS)² Program makes the Program's goals, formidable as they are, quite attainable. The Program deserves real support."

— Elwin Sykes

Director Sykes conferring with physicist Dr. Walter Massey, Director of the Argonne National Laboratory and more than 2100 scientists in energy-related research what otherwise might seem an alien environment.

(MS)² is now well established on the Andover scene, but not long ago it was struggling for existence. In the spring of 1977 — in the absence of on-campus leadership for the Program — two black alumni, Ed McPherson '72 and John McCulloh '72, were appointed to take charge. On this short notice they succeeded in recruiting the first group of 26 students and pioneered the Program through its initial summer. The directorship then passed to Diane Jones, an experienced math teacher who joined the PA faculty for a year and guided the Program through its next two critical sessions. The first group of students who completed the three-year sequence numbered eight: as this attrition attests, the first three years of the Program were difficult. That (MS)² survived was a tribute to the efforts and faith of the first three directors and to PA Math Instructor Sherm Drake, and to the original (MS)² science team of Dick Jones (Sinclair Community College, Dayton) and Bill Bassett (St. Paul's School, Baltimore). Math Department Chairman Dick Lux, Summer Session Director Jim Bunnell, and Admissions Officer Jean McKee also gave vital support to the Program.

(MS)² took a decisive turn in the fall of 1979 when Elwin Sykes, a black English teacher with six years experience on the Andover faculty and four years as Dean of the Summer Session, became Director. As an English teacher with no previous affinity for mathematics or science, Sykes was hesitant about directing an enterprise focused on these areas, and agreed to take on the directorship only if the PA Mathematics and Science Departments would play a considerably more active role than heretofore. In response to Sykes' challenge, the Math Department got behind (MS)²; since then Math Instructors Doug Crabtree, Frank Eccles, Frank Hanna, Dave Penner and Jack McClement have added their efforts to the Program, and Bob Wilson has joined the (MS)² science teaching team.

Among the features Sykes has introduced are the addition of an expository writing requirement to the curriculum and a corps of five teaching assistants to the (MS)² staff. Finally, he has brought Andover's college counselling capabilities into the service of the Program. Expository writing was instituted in 1980 at the suggestion of the math and science teachers, and in summer 1981, English Instructor Jean St. Pierre joined Director Sykes in teaching the writing classes. Andover's associate director of College Counselling, Robin Crawford, worked closely with (MS)² this summer and is preparing appropriate recommendations to support the third-year students applying to college this winter.

The five black and Hispanic Teaching Assistants have been especially important to (MS)² because most of the teachers in the Program have been white. These T.A.s, mostly June college graduates and all headed for technical professions, are highly valued as role models as well as for fine work in providing supplementary instruction. 1981 T.A.s included three alumni — Eli Avila '77, Greg Cleveland '79 and John Evans '77.

Kris Douglas: after Andover, a National Achievement Scholarship and Brown University

The inevitable question for any experimental program must be: "Is it working?" Several years must go by before anyone can determine to what extent (MS)² graduates are moving into science-based careers. But already a number of indicators suggest that the Program is going well:

1) Students now want to be in the Program and virtually all are persevering for the full three summers. Writes Kelly Dixon of Chicago, who graduated first in her high school class of 486 in June and is an Illinois State Scholar at Penn's Wharton School of Business: "My brother is in the fifth grade now and I'm already working on him so that he might possibly get into the (MS)² Program. I also look forward to becoming a T.A. for the Program one summer."

2) All 27 (MS)² scholars in the first two graduating classes were admitted to four-year colleges, most of them to universities strong in math and the sciences. Six are at Brown and six at Purdue, the country's largest engineering school. The 19 graduates who entered college in September, 1981 had an average of nearly four acceptances to choose from, and many received graduation prizes and prestigious scholarships: four National Achievement Scholarships, a Vice Presidential Scholarship and others.

3) Student questionnaires returned in 1980-81 supply strong evidence of the Program's effectiveness — both in intellectual and in broader personal terms. (MS)² students are valedictorians, student government presidents, active in student tutoring programs, in math or debating clubs, athletics, musical organizations, church and civic groups.

4) Visitors who have observed (MS)² in action have expressed high regard for it. Black physicist Dr. Walter Massey, Director of the Argonne National Laboratories, and black mathematician Dr. Dwight Lahr, Dartmouth's Dean of Graduate Studies and head of the Science Division, have each spent two days visiting the Program. Both have endorsed (MS)² strongly.

While the Program appears to be in a very healthy state, it is not without problems. Most obviously, the PA faculty includes no black math or science teachers to draw on for service in (MS)² — incidentally, evidence of need for the Program. Another difficulty is selecting 9th grade students for their potential and motivation for scientific majors in college four years hence. A third problem is the tendency of (MS)² students to hang around together. But this tendency is probably inevitable, given that (MS)² students share a common minority experience, have all their classes in common (separate from other Summer Session students), and spend three summers at Andover rather than one. However the obvious esprit de corps of the (MS)² students provides unquestionable personal reinforcement to them and is a significant factor in the very low attrition.

The problem of getting money to run the Program is a challenging and persistent one. The School currently absorbs the overhead expenses, but the direct costs (approx. $150,000 per year for 87 students) are covered by funds which otherwise would not come to the school. The success in raising money for (MS)² is due largely to the untiring efforts of Pat Edmonds, Andover's Director of Foundation and Corporate Support. Beginning with the original $25,000 grant from the Hearst Foundation that launched the Program, (MS)² has received $844,925 from 10 foundations and recently, four corporations — Borg-Warner, Bristol-Meyers, Morgan Guaranty Trust, and Polaroid Corporation.

For long-term maintenance of the Program, Andover is looking to corporate support, since once corporations are convinced of the effectiveness of a program, they are more inclined to give sustaining gifts, while foundations tend to give seed money. Edmonds is now seeking grants from corporations willing to underwrite scholarships for (MS)² Scholars from their cities. Her continued success is crucial to the maintenance of the Program.

Now (MS)² has spawned a related program to begin next summer for public high school math teachers — preferably from the same schools that send students to (MS)². Along with its grant to substantially fund (MS)² for two more summers, the Ford Foundation has committed $166,400 to completely fund two summers of the Andover-Dartmouth Urban Teachers Institute in Secondary School Mathematics. It will be a four-week, cost-free, intensive residential institute for 30 teachers each summer.

Andover mathematics faculty will conduct the Urban Teachers' Institute, aiming to strengthen the skills of first-year algebra teachers and give them the capability and well-founded confidence to teach higher level math courses. Dartmouth College will provide both an advisory committee to follow the Program closely and special lecturers for enrichment. Of crucial importance, Dartmouth will affix its name to a certificate of attendance for each Institute participant, thereby giving their study at Andover standing in the eyes of the public school system. A unique feature of this Institute will be the opportunity for participants to observe the teaching and learning going on in (MS)² mathematics classes.

Independent schools are enjoying great favor these days in the eyes of parents with high expectations for their children's education. But many teachers are apt to feel discomfort that much of this recent popularity is based on the misfortunes of the public school systems. The Ford Foundation grants strengthening (MS)² and creating the new Urban Teachers Institute challenge Andover. If the School can extend the life and effectiveness of (MS)² and successfully launch its offspring program for teachers, Andover will be serving high school students well and helping beleaguered public schools improve their teaching of mathematics — a vital need as our society grows more dependent on technology.

Together these programs can embody theSizer vision of Andover as a complementary school and meet Headmaster Don McNemar's principle that Andover's role in education must include a commitment to service for others — non sibi.

The Investiture of Andover's Thirteenth Headmaster

The atmosphere of warmth, welcome and community surrounding Headmaster Donald W. McNemar's Investiture owed something to the good fortune of rain on Saturday, September 19. The prospect of an all-day rain brought the investiture procession and ceremony and its more than 2000 participants indoors to the Case Memorial Cage. The bright enclosure of this renovated old campus landmark encircled the school community and concentrated the essential elements of the investiture ceremony. The Clan McPherson Bagpipe Band piped in the new headmaster, the Trustees, and distinguished guests representing more than 100 universities and schools, and Trustee Carol Hardin Kimball '53, presiding, bade the Andover family "a warm if wet welcome" to the great occasion.

Here, more than 203 years after it began, stood the School — 1211 students strong — at another beginning. Surrounded by well-wishers, the Trustees were here to entrust Phillips Academy to a new headmaster, only Andover's 13th in the two centuries since the first of them, Eliphalet Pearson, had opened school in a nearby carpenter's shed with 13 students in 1778.

Trustee R.L. Ireland, III '38, speaking for the Trustee's Search Committee, presented Mr.

McNemar: small town editor's son, Boy Scout, 4H-er; Quaker political scientist from Earlham College, Indiana, Phi Beta Kappa; Princeton's Woodrow Wilson, Danforth and Corwin Fellow, Ph.D.; associate professor and Associate Dean of Faculty of Dartmouth; husband of Britta Schein McNemar. "It's safe to say that Andover is acquiring a team," said Ireland. "A friend calls them 'the nicest tough-minded people I know.' I take pride in presenting Donald William McNemar the 13th headmaster of Phillips Academy."

At this point the President of the Board of Trustees, Melville Chapin '36, read two telegrams of congratulations: the first, from Trustee Emeritus George Bush '42: "... I join with pride in saluting Don as he takes the helm of this 203-year-old institution. Our Administration is indeed aware of the fact that you are thriving as a private institution for the public good. Don is ... a testimonial to the best of both public and private education. Barbara and I wish we could join you today for another milestone in the history of my alma mater." The second telegram was from the President of the United States: "... During the 203-year history of the Academy, many fine young people have been numbered among your graduates. I am especially grateful for one who went on to become Vice President of the United States. ... Again, congratulations. Sincerely, Ronald Reagan."

The Charge

Then Trustee President Melville Chapin to Donald McNemar: "I charge you in your capacity as the duly elected Headmaster of this great school, with the care, counselling, education, and moral standards of the young women and young men who are students at Andover during your term of office, this year some 1211 strong; ... and with the leadership, understanding and encouragement of the faculty, and with a continuing understanding and happy relation with our alumnae and alumni, calling on them for appropriate assistance, both practical and educational, and perhaps at times even financial, and in all this, do respect those wonderful parents who send us a continuing highly qualified and motivated student body, often at considerable sacrifice . . . " (This highly qualified and motivated student body, School President Hadley Soutter '82 had remarked earlier, was as brushed, combed and well-scrubbed that day as anyone there was likely to see that group again.)

Finally, 13th Headmaster McNemar received the gavel of the first headmaster, Eliphalet Pearson, from 12th and former Headmaster Theodore Sizer, symbolizing the continuity of two centuries of headmasters — 12 at Phillips and 16 at Abbot Academy. "All share with us," said Mr. Sizer, "the conviction that this Academy shall be a place of excellence and of justice, of intellectual honesty and rigor and decency and democracy. What better symbol of democracy and rigor than this gavel? Good luck, good friend, in forwarding these ideals, and God bless you."

Earlier, Philip Zaeder, the Academy's Protestant chaplain, had prayed for "the master who chooses to be servant." After Headmaster McNemar outlined the principles of his headmastership in his acceptance address, Jewish Chaplain Everett Gendler, in benediction, wove Solomon's Old Testament request for "a heart which hears" with the newer Quaker tradition of the inward voice, "For the gift of listening with the heart — by trustees who heeded their hearts' hearing, by a headmaster who has a special gift for listening so inwardly." He brought Donald and Britta together for a traditional Hebrew blessing and the resonance of that moment surely derived from both the historic words and the support of all those present, flowing together.

Afterwards the reception line to meet Headmaster and Mrs. McNemar and Trustee President and Mrs. Chapin was sheltered from rain in the hockey rink. The Class Agents were there to meet the new headmaster: their fall meeting the day before had merged into the Investiture celebration at an informal Trustee and faculty dinner honoring the McNemars; English Instructor Thomas Regan '51 was its good humored master of ceremonies. Dartmouth Provost Leonard Reiser was on hand to point out that Dartmouth had early appreciated the McNemars, only to lose them to Andover. Abbot alumna Louise Stevenson Andersen '37, executive director of Connecticut College's alumni association, spoke of her friend Britta McNemar, recently alumni association president, now trustee of that college.

The tempo of Investiture weekend, planned and directed by Associate Headmaster Peter Q. McKee, was predictably lively; the mood confident, welling out of a happy transition and an auspicious beginning for Andover in 1981.

Address by Donald McNemar, September 19, 1981

I accept the responsibility and the challenge of maintaining the purposes and traditions of the two great schools Phillips Academy and Abbot Academy now re-founded as the new Phillips Academy. I welcome the opportunity to join in the succession of great leaders of these two schools stretching back in this century to such Headmasters as Stearns, Fuess and Kemper at Phillips and Miss Bailey, Miss Hearsey, Mrs. Crane, and Mr. Gordon at Abbot Academy. Britta, who joins me here on the platform today, and I hope we can provide the same strong leadership for the new Phillips Academy that Ted and Nancy Sizer provided this community over the past nine years.

We gather today as a community of students, faculty, alumni, alumnae, friends, neighbors, and fellow school and college leaders to give thanks for the resources and opportunities we have and to rededicate ourselves to the purpose of this Academy — offering an excellent education to talented “youth from every quarter.” While we pause today to look back to our founding purposes, we also look forward to the challenges and tasks ahead for Phillips Academy in the 1980s.

We begin the 1980s at a time of crisis in American education. Teachers are striking, curricula are being questioned, standards are eroding and students are disappointed, even the school bus routes are ending. Throughout our society, schools are under attack.

At the basis of this crisis is a loss of confidence in our schools and their mission. We, as a nation, have a fine tradition of education. This purpose was stated clearly by Bart Giamatti, who some will remember studied here on Andover Hill in preparation for leadership of another great blue institution. Giamatti said that “a basic belief in America is that education in this officially secular society is an almost sacred process, a process meant to open opportunities, promote access and mobility, foster excellence, recognize merit, do all that urges Americans to make themselves productive, free, and equal.” Today we worry that our schools are no longer accomplishing this. We must re-establish the clarity of this purpose.

The educational crisis is deepened by the lowering of our expectations. Whether it is the level of writing expected of students or the breadth of requirements for the diploma, there is a widespread sense that our expectations for students do not further their learning or grant sufficient respect to their abilities.

Any efforts to restore confidence and standards for our schools must be undertaken at the same time we continue to expand opportunities for all young people from every part of society and our nation. The importance of the education of all youth as the hope of the future was not new with Samuel Phillips when he founded Phillips Academy in 1778. Long before, Aristotle said:

“All who have meditated on the art of governing mankind have been convinced that the fate of empires depends on the education of youth.” At the heart of our purpose for American schools is a belief that they are ever open to all youth to permit each individual to develop and to use his or her talents to the fullest. As Ted Sizer so wisely described our own Academy, “It should be a privilege to attend Andover, but Andover should not be a school of privilege.”

American education stands poised at a dramatic moment. For the last decades we have been obsessed with an emphasis on quantity in our educational programs. The focus has been on including more students, more courses, more audio visual equipment, more meals, more of everything in the educational effort. The ideal of universal education — the American Dream — is an appropriate quantitative goal and we are coming close to achieving it. However, we must now focus our attention on the quality of our educational process. To make the shift from quantity to quality requires high expectations, enthusiastic teachers, a learning environment, and an emphasis on values.

The success of American education requires a constant effort to maintain the creative tension between the pluralism of individuals and a commonality of purpose. At the national level we have a grand diversity of schools — urban, rural, vocational, college preparatory — yet all sharing a common purpose: to educate citizens for the future. At Phillips Academy our student body brings together diverse individuals from widely varying backgrounds of class, race, religion, experience; however we ask of them a commonality of purpose: the pursuit of excellence in education to make this an effective residential learning community.

Likewise in our curriculum, we discuss the importance of a common core of courses in English, History, languages, math and science to provide a unified set of studies. At the same time we seek diversity through electives in photography, religion, astronomy, and archaeology.

We strive for a constant balance between the respect for diversity which allows individuals to flourish and a commonality of purpose which knits together a community in a school, a town, a nation and the world.

Phillips Academy is a school which has worked hard to balance the tension between pluralism of opportunity and commonality of purpose. The School is endowed with a rich tradition, a dedicated faculty, a talented student body, a lovely setting, and extraordinary resources — all of which we must use wisely. We are proud of these resources at Phillips Academy.

The School, as the Constitution instructs, brings "youth from every quarter" together to live, to learn and to serve. These young people studying here are not separate from, but rather, part of the larger educational process in America. I hope Phillips Academy will at times lead in the educational world as we have attempted to do in our program on Math and Science for Minority Students and, our program to develop competence in communication, or in the integration of the Addison Gallery's renowned collection of American Art into the visual studies curriculum. At other times we will cooperate, complement, or follow the lead of other schools, public and private — all in an effort to bring forth the best from the youth of this nation and the world.

In responding to the crisis in education, we must focus on the quality of education and on this balance between pluralism and common purpose. The crucial time for success in education must be the adolescent years. The Phillips Academy Constitution understood the importance of adolescence in saying:

"Youth is the important period on the improvement or neglect of which depend the most important consequences to individuals themselves and the community."

Britta and I made our decision to leave Dartmouth College and come to Phillips Academy because we share that strong belief that during the time between the ages of 13 and 18 young people learn much about themselves; establish their personal goals and visions for the future; and build the courage to lead — to march to the tune of a different drummer.

As a Quaker, I approach the task ahead with joy and excitement, sustained by a belief in the uniqueness and the creativity of each and every individual. A fundamental belief of Quakers is "There is that of God in every person." The educational process is a liberating time to encourage each young person to bring forth his or her finest contributions.

The educational task for the '80s will be a very special one, since we are now educating the leaders of the 21st century.

The task is difficult. The students before us will lead a world greatly changed from what we have known, a world which will be global in scope, yet a world which will know hunger, hostilities and the ever present threat of destruction.

What is necessary in today's education to prepare young people for that future? I believe that education must include four qualities:

- a striving for excellence
- a liberal learning
- a global perspective
- a commitment to service

STRIVING FOR EXCELLENCE will be generated from high expectations from teachers and from parents and by heightened goals. Personal pride in work well done leads to an internalized sense of the importance of performing at your very best.

The second quality, LIBERAL LEARNING is essential for the future. Here at Phillips Academy there must be a breadth to what is understood, an ability to appreciate the classics, to enjoy the fine arts of the Addison Gallery, and the music performed in the Cochran Chapel, as well as to develop a clarity of communication, both in writing and in speaking, to develop a sense of history, and an ability to cope with a rapidly developing world of science and technology. Not specific skills, but rather the broad understanding of methods of inquiry, and genuine curiosity, are the talents that liberal learning provide for coping with a changing world.

Third, A GLOBAL PERSPECTIVE will be essential to understand and to work in a future trans-national world of life within many varying cultures. Our future leaders need a sense of empathy and understanding for those who are different, who face other problems, profess other ideologies, and experience other cultures. The ability to speak other languages, to understand the history and the traditions and the perspectives of others, to think not in provincial terms but in global terms — all these will be crucial to our survival into the 21st century.

Finally, education must develop a SENSE OF RESPONSIBILITY to serve others coupled with the COURAGE TO LEAD. Phillips Academy must prepare leaders in the arts, in business, in government, in education, and in social service — in a great diversity of fields. Last January when Vice President George Bush returned to the campus to receive the Fuess Award, (an award to honor a graduate of Phillips Academy for public service), he emphasized to the students that leadership was not easy, that it takes courage and it takes a sense of responsibility. We hope that in this community we can continue to build that sense of responsibility and of leadership — to maintain our NON SIBI tradition of service beyond the self.

We do not start afresh today in 1981 — Phillips Academy has a great tradition, much talent, and tremendous resources. The future use of these opportunities depends upon our determination to contribute to quality education in America. As my colleague here in the English Department, Michael Lopes, wrote on the occasion of the 200th Anniversary of Phillips Academy in 1978:

"This place, for all its faults, is home to us and home-away-from-home to those we take in charge.
I sing NON SIBI, and to it add PRO SIBI, for one who does not serve himself cannot serve others.
FINIS ORIGINE PENDET I sing;
in our beginning is our end.

We journey here to find our selves;
and having found, we travel on to lose them to the world."

I look forward to leading Phillips Academy on this new journey.

An early Abbot Academy Association Board meeting, 1973-74

The A.A.A. and the '80s

by Helen M. Eccles

There is rejoicing in George Washington Hall over each foundation grant to Andover to support a program or students, and some foundations have come through with repeat gifts — but none with the dependable regularity of one charitable corporation. Its directors meet not to decide whether to grant money to Andover, but to decide how many Andover projects to fund.

In late fall they are gathering with Headmaster Don McNemar and Dean of Studies Phyllis Powell to talk over the needs of the School, read the submitted proposals, hear teachers or administrators defend their own proposals; finally they will vote grants for perhaps a dozen projects. By the time President Sybil Smith '61 adjourns the meeting, roughly $70,000 of the income of the $1,483,172 endowment (market value June 30, '81) of the Abbot Academy Fund will be divvied up for about a dozen grants by the directors of the Abbot Academy Association. It is unique for a school to have an in-house venture fund with its own outside board of directors, and with the Academy as its only recipient. Also unique: in spite of its origin in an all-female school, the purpose of the Abbot Academy is NOT "to do things for girls," nor are all its directors women. The policy of the Abbot Academy Association is "to carry forward Abbot's historic interest by serving present and future education. The Association seeks to support the fullest realization of coeducation at Phillips Academy. Its concern is the nourishment of the individual's potential within a climate of equality in a residential academic community."^{*}

^{*} Statement of policy, Sept. 29, 1973

"The Abbot Academy Fund keeps us thinking, and spurs the faculty to try things the Academy probably wouldn't or couldn't do otherwise."
— Phyllis Powell
Dean of Studies

"I don't know of any school that has a fund like this, or any college, for that matter," stated an "outside" A.A.A. Director Ralph West, who is head of the New England Association of Schools and Colleges, at his first A.A.A. directors' meeting December, 1980. "It's not just something to perpetuate Abbot; that wouldn't interest me that much. But I am interested in encouraging things that will perpetuate and foster values and improve the quality of life. This fund has to do with priorities and leverage."

The grant proposal process is fairly simple, but the directors spend two days over the deliberations. Application forms for Abbot Academy Association grants are distributed throughout the school at the beginning of each academic year, with proposals due by October 15 to Dean Powell, for projects for the following academic year. The program committee of the Association meets with the Dean in mid-fall to listen carefully to school priorities for the coming year. When the full 11-member board of directors gathers, in November, the headmaster meets with them first, to address broad conceptual issues in the life of the Academy, raise philosophical questions, and share impressions and problems with the Board. "This insures that the Board's decisions can be laced strongly with reality," says President Smith.

The Fund supports a single project no more than three years. If its continuance is important, a program will be picked up in the Academy budget. If not it will be dropped.

Why does the Abbot Academy Fund exist? The idea grew as much out of the sense of pain and loss surrounding the Abbot-PA merger as out of the hope and promise some saw in the combination of the two schools. To some at Abbot, merging into Phillips Academy must have seemed like dropping Abbot's students into the cold North Atlantic, to sink or swim. Even those who favored the merger feared the loss of Abbot's real sense of community, Abbot's emphasis on the social and emotional as well as intellectual development of students, and (modern) Abbot's exploratory approach to education. To all, the disappearance of the Abbot name would be symbolic of even larger losses.

Three Abbot Trustees were principal midwives to the Fund and the Association and became term trustees of Phillips Academy at the merger: Beverly Brooks Floe '41, Mary Howard Nutting '40 and Melville Chapin PA '36, who now is the president of the Phillips Academy Board of Trustees. The idea for a venture fund to support Abbot values arose simultaneously from several sources, according to Beverly Floe: "It became clear in the summer of 1972 that the new Andover headmaster was interested in such an unusual idea and the concept moved forward in Abbot Trustee discussions under Chairman Phil Allen ('29). Myndie Nutting and I were particularly concerned to get over and look past the difficulties and losses of the present and focus on the long-term future of a school for boys and girls, one different from both schools. The idea was to carry the best of what Abbot meant into the new environment, in a way we felt was positive for all concerned. It was important that the Abbot Academy Fund be able to receive additional monies, so that people who might not otherwise give to Phillips Academy could make capital gifts to the Fund and feel confident they would be used in ways consonant with Abbot's educational purpose." A small Abbot-PA group hammered out the phrasing of the merger's Articles of Agreement at 11:30 one night after an Abbot Trustee meeting in January, 1973.

"Mel Chapin was the real hero of the merger. As an Abbot Trustee, he insisted that the language of the merger agreement reflect the ideals and spirit as well as the legal facts of the merger. He said, 'I want this manifest in our legal documents because this is something people will come back to, two generations in the future. If this agreement has the spirit of our enterprise written into it, then that spirit can always be refreshed and still have energy when we are all gone.' Then it was Mel, who is a superb lawyer, who petitioned the Supreme Judicial Court to apply funds from the Abbot Academy endowment — some of the restrictions going back 150 years — to the purposes of the endowment of the combined schools. It almost didn't happen!"

One million dollars was kept separate to be the Abbot Academy Fund and the remaining funds moved into the Phillips Academy endowment. The Association was incorporated in the summer of 1973 as a charitable corporation with power to disperse the funds for educational activities at the Academy with the concurrence of the headmaster. Mary Howard Nutting was the first president, with Beverly Floe as vice president. Anne Oliver Jackson '53 was president from 1976 until 1979, when she was elected a Phillips Academy Alumni Trustee. Sybil Smith, who replaced her, subsequently has been elected to a full term, 1981-84.

By October, 1981, capital gifts amounting to $194,519, (a substantial amount added at the outset and 70 gifts in the intervening nine years) plus appreciation, have brought the $1 million Abbot Academy Fund's market value to nearly $1.5 million. During that time the directors have made over half a million dollars in grants.

Are all the projects successful? "Of course not," says former President Nutting. "The Time Study never came off, the Senior Synthesis course didn't catch on and sustain itself, but the interdisciplinary course on Hunger is a spin-off from it. By definition this is a venture fund, giving the school the flexibility to try some things, and see if they work."

There is a pattern to A.A.A. grantsmanship that has shaped Andover in some new ways in the eight years. In the independent school world, Graham House has become a model because of its array of services for the whole school community — counselling for the students and adults, study skill courses, sex education, student leadership training, cluster based human relations, drug and alcohol programs, etc. If Graham House is a monument to Andover's growing concern for the whole student, that monument was largely built with Abbot Academy Fund dollars.

Where have all those dollars gone? In the Fund's first eight years, the directors have made more than 130 grants of more than $550,000 within five areas broadly defined in their 1973 policy statement as serving the Fund's educational purpose (see summary).

The bulk of the grants, and the money, goes to exploratory approaches to education, funding faculty proposals to enrich or extend academic departments, improve the teaching/learning or developmental process through new approaches.

The directors' willingness to initially underwrite salaries — as well as programs — has provided Andover with a leading edge in educational development. "That's what other headmasters really envied," says former headmaster

Ted Sizer. A.A.A. funds brought Psychological Counselling out of Isham and into Graham House and helped develop and staff its programs and establish it as an academic department.

Three-year grants initially funded an instructor in Philosophy and a Hispanic instructor in Latin American Studies (a joint appointment between Spanish and the History & Social Sciences Departments), as well as funding a dozen Teaching Fellows and a female Chaplaincy Intern to provide a different perspective to Andover's three (male) chaplains. Also included are scholarships for special trips: the winter-term exchange in Antibes, France; the Chorus' musical tour of England, the Russian language trip to the USSR. The board's position is that if these special learning opportunities are to be offered to some of the students, they should be open to all. Each April, the Fund directors return to campus to hear progress reports from the previous year's grantees, now carrying out their projects. Last spring, Don McNemar, then headmaster-elect, tuned in early to the workings of the Abbot Academy Fund and met its directors.

The Fund has pushed Andover to think in cross-disciplinary terms, which may be a valuable way to think in times of economic stress. The faculty workshops, for teachers to immerse themselves in another department's specialty, also promote this cross-fertilization. Finally, Sybil Smith says it should be clear that the Fund's directors are encouraging the School's efforts, through several grants, to increase the minority presence in the student body, the faculty, and in the curriculum, as a quality-of-life priority. These have been priorities of the first eight years and first half-million dollars.

What about the decade ahead?

Headmaster McNemar counts on the A.A.A. to "continue its key role — supporting the kind of program development that helps young people reach their personal and academic potential."

"Andover is in a new period with new leadership and evolving priorities, partly from economic and political factors beyond its control," says Abbot Academy Association President Smith. "I've urged the board to ask themselves: 'What does educational venture mean in the 1980s?' Our purpose has not changed, but the shape of venture may change. We want to work closely with Don McNemar and his administration as it responds to the new environment of economic restraint.

"We'll be looking for proposals from the school community that lead into and support the priorities as they emerge."

Campus News

457 handshakes later . . .

During Orientation in September, Headmaster Don McNemar shook hands with each of the 457 new students and gave each a certificate of matriculation and a personal welcome to Phillips Academy's long tradition and its school community. Over in the Oliver Wendell Holmes Library, new Library Director Lynne Anderson Robbins introduced herself to every student, new or old, and stated her expectations of each student's conduct in the Library this year: "an atmosphere of quiet throughout the building, and respect for the rights of others who are entitled to an environment conducive to study." "It's working," noted Burke Doar '82. "The Library is quiet now, and she has the librarians really on their toes to help students find what they need." Some day students, accustomed to using the Library as a point of departure for home, miss the old social atmosphere. For this, Mrs. Robbins proposes opening up the old music room in the OWH basement. If the students volunteer to set up the room, she'll provide paint, furniture and rugs.

Library Director Lynne Robbins

Rain and fire

The Library got a new roof over the summer but in the process almost lost many of its books, when the contractor's temporary covering gave way in a rainstorm, letting water slosh inside down through the stacks. Library Director Robbins, just weeks on the job, called in all on-campus bodies to remove the books to Commons, where she set up a drying operation with fans, and put the most soaked books into the freezer until they could be repaired individually. Only 110 books were lost, 4200 dried successfully at Commons — an extraordinary recovery.

Drying thousands of wet library books in Commons

Some 700 remain in a freezer in Lawrence, awaiting restoration.

Peabody House burned in an electrical fire this summer. The shell of the building remains up while the administration gathers data for a Trustee decision late this fall. The Afro-Latino-American Society, which had centered its life on the second floor of Peabody House for 12 years, lost everything — including its library and cherished round table — in the fire. Af-Lat-Am now is centered on the second floor of Cooley House. Details later.

Cheever House is no more. After being empty for two years, (as unsafe) the old white house was finally judged past all repair, and razed. The thin pie-slice of land between School and Main Street will remain a green area.

Curriculum: RelPhil is in

The Religion diploma requirement, dropped back in 1972, is back as a RelPhil requirement. The faculty voted to require at least one term of Religion and Philosophy for all entering three and four-year students, beginning in September, 1983.

The motion came from the Course of Study Committee, chaired by Dr. Carl Krumpe. RelPhil Department Chairman Dr. Vincent Avery called the requirement a modest one, since it can be met by taking any of 16 RelPhil courses for which a student is qualified; these include courses in Old and New Testament, ethics, philosophy, logic, and one on the Holocaust.

Several departments, using an Abbot Academy Association grant, are reviewing their curriculum with minority consultants to determine the extent to which minority contributions are recognized. Dr. William Cook, a black tenured professor at Dartmouth, addressing the English Department on "The Literature of Marginality," was asked if white teachers can present the masterpieces of black literature adequately; "I've been teaching Oedipus Rex for 16 years," Professor Cook replied. "Do I look Greek?"

Seniors Courtney Starratt, Rob Long and Biffy Herskovitz — all superb in Arsenic and Old Lace

The History Department is next, bringing Professor Robert F. Engs, associate professor of History at the University of Pennsylvania.

Foreign Exchange

Valentina Kruglova, a Moscow secondary school instructor of English, is spending ten weeks at Andover teaching in the Russian Department and living with Mr. and Mrs. Georges Krivobok. Next year Krivobok will live with the Kruglova family in Moscow and teach English at her school. Sponsored by the American Field Service International, Mrs. Kruglova is the third Soviet teacher to come to Andover since 1973. In a direct exchange, George Facer of the Sherborn School in England is teaching chemistry at Andover in the place of Dr. Thomas Rees, teaching chemistry at Sherborn. The Reeses and Facers have exchanged faculty houses for the year as well. In the student body, three new one-year seniors from the People's Republic of China arrived in October, delayed by the red tape of both countries, but cheerful and ready — Cai, Zhi-Qiang; Chang Yan-Ming; and Zhang, Yi-Chen. All three boys are from the city of Harbin itself.

PA's Special Olympics

A service opportunity presented itself when Andover was asked to host the 1981 Special Olympics Floor Hockey Championships, and the Athletic Advisory Board jumped at the chance. Organized by Alexandra Chivers '82 and Patti Doykos '82, nearly 150 PA students helped plan or carry out the event. It drew 175 mentally retarded or handicapped young people to whom the opportunity to participate in real athletic competition is tremendously important. PA students helped cook the picnic lunch, refereed the games between 11 Special Olympic street hockey teams, or ran soccer clinics and gymnastics clinics to provide activity for them between games. The PA Band played the Olympic fanfare, the torch was run around the cage, and legendary ex-Bruin Bobby Orr was there to lead the athletes in the Special Olympic Oath.

Gesampkunstwerk

Peter Sellars '75, a young director who has been making theatrical waves, and getting critical raves, from the PA stage to the Loeb Theater and Off-Broadway (see "Theater People," Andover Bulletin, spring '80), is teaching a course at Andover this fall. For two hours before and two hours after dinner every Monday, Sellars and 14 students grapple with Greek drama, Japanese Festivals, Medici weddings, Wagner opera and Hitchcock films in The Aesthetics of Synesthesia, Kinesthesia and the Kitchen Sink, a one-trimester course dealing with the inter-relationship of the arts. The Germans, says Sellars, have a word for it — Gesampkunstwerk!

1981 Alumni Council

Below: Council President Bill Rosenau, Baron Kidd '54

The 1981 Alumni Council spent a long weekend on campus with Headmaster Donald W. McNemar, deliberating on "What are the issues facing Phillips Academy in the '80s?" The largest Council attendance in recent years, working under Council President William Rosenau '47, looked for the issues under three broad topics — Curriculum and Quality of Education, Composition and Size of the Student Body, and Community Life at Andover.

"You focused on new questions we may not have asked, with vigor and rigor," Don McNemar told them after hearing their reports Saturday morning. The message from the Council: Quality is the top priority in academic life, even more important than diversity; quality in the student body implies diversity so keep trying; and finally, the big decisions should be made for educational reasons, in an economic environment; not vice versa.

This was the last Alumni Council for Frederic A. Stott '36 in his capacity of Secretary of the Academy. At the opening session, he reminisced that the Alumni Council was in its fledgling stage when he began working with it in 1951; since then it has progressed from a largely social event to become a serious resource to which the Academy turns for insight, advice, constructive ideas and criticism, and as a sounding board for ideas and directions. Headmaster McNemar noted that selecting Fred Stott's successor — soon, to provide overlap with Fred's knowledge and experience — "will be the toughest and most important appointment I make." He asked for considered recommendations before the search narrows down.

Curriculum; Composition; Community

Council members considering curriculum and quality of education, led by Margaret Moore Roll '54 and Tone Grant '62 said "Quality is most important. Diversity is good; but what's being taught is not as important as how it's taught." They saw needs for 1) systematic evaluation of faculty; 2) more improvement of the Academic Advisors; 3) certain competency requirements of each student in science, a science literacy, if you will. On academic pressure, the alumni concluded that certainly it exists, but often it's caused by self-indulgence, characterized by procrastination and/or frenetic activity that leads nowhere. "Andover has an unlimited range of options; kids must learn to know when and how to shut off the valve."

Steve Clarkson '55 and Frances Troub Roberts '41 led the discussion on Community Life. The group, concluded that the community life at PA is good — students and faculty enjoy working together — but there are signs of strain. The chief culprit is the still growing pressure on the faculty workload, and alumni recommended "some good forward-looking strategic planning so Faculty Dean Richards can continue to get good applicants." The triple-threat role of teacher/house counselor/coach is still the model, they learned, but there are trade-offs.

Alumni discussing Composition of the Student Body, led by Dick White '48 and Don Shapiro '53, were critical of the sharp rise in the day student ratio to 21%, "obviously due to budget pressure," and suggested other approaches, including a larger school, with a seventh cluster. They heard that Andover's minority enrollment still hasn't risen over 5% (black and Hispanic), despite a very high apportionment of Admissions recruiting time and money to this effort. The alumni encouraged the Admissions Office to keep trying, concentrating minority recruiting on junior high schools, since they are more receptive than high schools.

The Junior year was the hottest issue — whether to reduce it, as the Faculty Composition Committee unanimously voted, or to keep the status quo, taking advantage of a favorable marketplace at the moment. The alumni found no compelling documentation yet for either of these positions, or the third option available, to eliminate the Junior class.

Jack Doykos '55, Steve Clarkson, who will become Alumni Council president in July

Alumni Fund Committee

Co-chairman Clint Kendrick '61 on strategy: "When in doubt, raise money. There's no way this has a negative impact. All other ways affect what the institution is and becomes. We need long-range goals and objectives: by 1985, to provide 10% of the operating budget; that means $2 million (this past year, 7% and $982,000). By 1984: to reach 50% participation, from 9000 donors (this past year, 34% from 6034 donors)."

The tactics, from co-chairman Julie Schauffler Bucklin '48: Exeter and Hotchkiss are over 50% in giving. We're not. Our 1982 goal is 7000 donors and $1 million. The Parents Fund goal is $175,000. We're going to do this through Class Agent networks and meaningful Reunion gifts for every re-joining class, each choosing its own emphasis, and through increasing the Non Sibi Program — people who give $1000 on an annual basis.

Budget & Finance, Admissions, Academic Program Committees
Baron Kidd '54 and Mo Zukerman '62 reported the Budget and Finance Committee's strong consensus: "No matter what, the size of the school should be a strictly educational issue." The committee recommends: a look at investment opportunities other than stocks and bonds, and additional investment advice to T. Rowe Price. On Faculty Benefits, the group urges more efforts to alert faculty to existing tax benefits; more Academy effort to assist faculty toward home purchases or college educations; and effectively organized faculty evaluation.

The Admissions Committee met in Hardy House; Jody Bush '57 and Chris Harte '65 reported that choosing matriculants never gets easier.

Alumni on the Academic Program Committee, chaired by Graeme Henderson '52 and Sybil Smith '61, looked at the Science Division as a microcosm of all the departments. Alumni found many students scared off from science courses by their own grade-consciousness or by courses geared to interests of faculty and high-performing "science types." The committee's conclusion: since "non-science types" need science study more than they realize, they need to see its relevance to the decisions they have to make. Recommended: a trend toward case studies and problem solving, rather than acquisition of facts.

SPORTS

Tom Strong '82 (son of Roger L. '44)*

During the fall term, athletic teams at Phillips Academy have compiled an amazing record of thirty-one wins, nine losses, and five ties. The boys' teams stand at 11-5-2 and include a football team which has won four games and tied another. The girls' teams boast an even better mark of 20-4-3 and include a soccer team which is unbeaten after eight games and a field hockey team which holds six wins and three ties.

Football Coach George Best is currently enjoying his best start since he became head coach in 1978. Post-graduates John Doherty and Frank Ciota share quarterbacking chores, while four-year senior Charles Gildehaus (Thomas A. '59 & Barbara Quimby '59), upper Rufus Jones, and new seniors Mike Sabina and Rick Baldacci form the offensive backfield. In the season opener at Deerfield, Doherty completed seven of eleven passes for seventy yards and one touchdown and Baldacci had runs of five and three yards for scores as the Blue defeated Deerfield for the first time in eleven years. Worcester fell 29-24 as Rufus Jones scored twice on a Doherty sixty-yard screen pass and an eight-yard run. Pat McCormick '82 blocked two punts to aid the cause. At home, PA upset Choate 13-7, Choate's first loss in ten games. Hometown boy Jon Pelletier '82 had three interceptions. Lawrenceville scored fifteen fourth quarter points, the last two with twenty-one seconds left to tie Andover 18-18, ending the 86-year-old rivalry between schools. In its last game, the Blue beat NMH 33-13. Doherty had three touchdown passes, two to senior Greg O'Connor. The Gaziano brothers, Joe and Frank '82 from Scituate, provided crunching blocking up front, along with senior Captain Chuck Richardson.

Andover's "Sam" Chivers will get there first dith Price, boasts not only a 4-2-1 mark but also a Kemper Scholar, senior Carlos Valls Martinez who is the team's leading scorer. Co-captains Stefan Wennik '82 (Joseph B. '52) and upper Greg Simon have combined with new senior Kirk Fernald to produce a devastating halfback line. Hal Movius '82 (Geoffrey H. '58) and Adam Wise '83 share goaltending duties. In its first contest, the Blue routed Tabor 7-2 as seven different players tallied. PA tied Babson, a perennial power, 1-1 on a Fernald score, and beat Tufts 6-1. Upper David Trowbridge's goal late in the second half against M.I.T. ignited a rally as Andover triumphed 5-0. Valls Martinez added a hat trick. Andover beat Cushing 2-1, then fell to Harvard by the same score as Scott Amero '79 netted the winner. NMH last beat PA 5-4.

Sherman Drake's girls' soccer squad sports an 8-0 mark. Co-captains Sam Chivers and Mary Ogden '82 have been joined by phenoms Katrina Sorenson '82, who has sixteen goals, upper half-back Electa Sevier (John R. '52), and senior goalie Kim Simmons. Sorenson had a hat trick in the opener, a 5-0 shutout over Hyde, Chivers had two as the Blue beat Groton 4-1. In a 5-0 win over Concord, Drake said of Sevier, who had two unassisted goals, "she put on the most fantastic display of ball handling yet seen at Phillips Academy." Sorenson's goal was the only one as PA beat BB&N 1-0. She had four against Holderness while Odgen had three in an 8-1 victory. The girls had little trouble with Exeter, Sevier and Sorenson each netting two goals. In its last contest, the Blue trounced a NMH team which had been 33-1 over the last few years by a score of 6-2.

Coach Frank Hannah says the boys' cross country team "has an awesome task of replacing many talented runners who graduated." With a record of 3-3, it seems the team has begun well. Lower Jim Moore, ranked nationally this summer in the Junior Olympics in the 5000 meters for his age group, joins veterans such as co-captains Ken Seiff '82 and Phil Harrison '82, senior Steve Donahue, and new upper Bruce Frask. A strong Naval Academy Prep School team thrashed Andover 15-46. The top four NAPS runners broke the course record. Moore finished first for PA. Harvard visited Andover, and left with a convincing 18-43 win. Andover was awarded three wins in a four-way meet against North Andover, Trinton High, and Manchester High. The Blue got outstanding performances from seniors Phil Knight (David H. '54) and Dan Collins (Daniel J. '50), beating NA 22-38, and Trinton and Manchester 15-50. Northfield Mt. Hermon ran way from PA in the last week 18-43. Hannah says the biggest weakness "is not having perhaps two additional runners with times close enough to Moore's."

After a School Year Abroad, Elwin Sykes has returned to coach the girls' cross country team, undefeated last year. Sykes described this year's team as "an exciting team because it is so inexperienced and so full of potential." Veterans include seniors Hilary French (captain), a quiet yet strong willed leader, and Yolanda Fannin, a tough and cagey competitor. There is a long list of potential stars headed by upper Jenny Mosse from Beverly Farms High School, Anne Stout '84 (Merrell L. Jr. '54), Deidre Grimes '82, and lower Rachel Simpson. Fannin led the Blue to a convincing opening day win 22-39 over Concord, but Milton beat PA twice, 20-38 and 29-35. In the second Milton meet, Andover defeated Concord 35-104, the third team in the tri-meet. Northfield Mt. Hermon recently triumphed over the female harriers by a score of 17-44.

As usual, Marjorie Harrison has fielded a strong field hockey team, which, after nine games, possesses a mark of 6-0-3. Assistant Coaches Lucy Hanna and George Facer, on exchange from England's Sherborn School, have helped Harrison build a winning team. Key players are senior captain Kathleen Kinsella at forward, and linemates Elise Balboni and Amy Starensier '82. Among the newcomers are inner Martha Gourdeau '83, Becky Bennett '83, and star goalie lower Kathy Mulvey (Donald J. '50). Mulvey has given up only four goals in nine games, registering five shutouts. In the opener, Gourdeau's goal beat Tyngsboro's goalie in the first half, when the teams were tied. Bennett had three scores in a 5-0 romp over Lawrence Academy, Kinsella the game winner in a 2-1 victory over Governor Dummer. Harrison said the best game was a 5-0 whitewash of Middlesex, as the forwards utilized their speed and stickhandling.

In only its third year of competition, the girls' volleyball team has posted a record of 4-1. First year coach Patty Caton even hopes for a 6-1 finish. Captain Ritchey Banker '82 provides experience and leadership; upper Naomi Mulvihill shows hustle and spirit while Leslie Tucker '83, senior Barry Stout (Merrell L. Jr. '54), and uppers Cathy Vinciguerra (Salvatore '55) and Renee Kellan round out the team. After an opening day loss to Lynnfield, the squad has defeated Cushing, Lowell Vocational, Andover High, and Northfield Mt. Hermon. A strong JV team brightens the hope for the future.

Georganne Soutar Stott

We report with great sadness that Nan Stott died October 29 in the Lahey Clinic of cancer. The Andover family knew Nan as Fred Stott's partner. Her hospitality welcomed thousands of Andover and Abbot alumni and parents to Moses Stuart House on their return to campus over the years for Alumni Council meetings, Reunions or individual visits; in a very particular way, her friendship made the trip to Andover special for the Trustee wives. Students knew her in another way, in her post upstairs at the Andover Bookstore, where she was in charge of the paperback section. We knew her as an utterly loyal and sympathetic friend, albeit a keen observer of human nature! She was someone very close to nature, particularly the seacoast and the mountains — someone to whom a 325-mile walking expedition 18,500 feet up Mt. Everest alone with only Fred, three Sherpa guides and a handful of Nepalese carriers back in 1965 was the best imaginable way to spend a sabbatical. We all miss her. Gifts in her memory may be made to Phillips Academy, to Smith College or to the Lahey Foundation Clinic (Nurses).

1917 Elmer R. Beeler, Hallandale, FL; July 17, 1981

1917 John E. Brennan, Belmont, MA; June 8, 1981. After Andover, Mr. Brennan served as a corporal in France from 1917-19. He retired as sales manager of General Motors Acceptance Corporation in Boston in 1961, and served Andover as Class Secretary for the Class of 1917 from 1971 to 1980. He is survived by daughters Joan F. Goodwin of Dedham, MA, M. Constance Ryan of Portland, ME and a son, John E., Jr. of Canton, MA.

Col. Earle W. Lancaster, Meredith, NH; May 3, 1981. Following his graduation from Andover, Col. Lancaster enlisted in the Ambulance Corps in the French Army in WWI. He was later transferred to the United States Army and served in many European engagements, receiving the Silver Star twice and the Croix de Guerre twice. Later Col. Lancaster served as an executive in a Boston advertising agency. Commissioned in the National Guard, he rose to the rank of colonel. During World War II he served in the 26th Division and became chief of staff.

Colonel Lancaster was graduated from the Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth. Following World War II, he became director of public relations for a Massachusetts advertising agency.

While in New Hampshire he formed the Winnepesaukee Power Squadron, a branch of the U.S. Power Squadron, and was elected its first commander. Later he was named district commander.

Col. Lancaster served Andover as an alumni council member, a class agent and on the Andover Program Committee, 1958-60.

He was a member of the Griggs-Wyatt Post of the American Legion of Meredith.

Surviving Col. Lancaster is a stepson, Frederick O. Osborn of Treasure Is., FL; two daughters, Mrs. Edward Moore of Lynnfield, MA, and Mrs. Herbert Russell of Danvers, MA; seven grandchildren and 12 great-grandchildren.

Anthony A. Piazza, Wakefield, MA; June 26, 1981. A lawyer in Wakefield for more than 40 years, Mr. Piazza retired in 1977 at the age of 88. He was born in Sicily, came to this country as a boy and after attending Andover, graduated from Harvard in 1921. He received his law degree from Boston University in 1926. After graduating from Harvard, he worked for the Massachusetts Parole Board for a time interviewing inmates, investigating their background and preparing brief summaries for the Parole Board. After passing the Massachusetts Bar, he practiced law in Lawrence in the early 1930s, before moving to Wakefield. While living in Wakefield, he was a member of the Lions Club and also the Sons of Italy and the Justinian Society of Boston. Mr. Piazza served in the U.S. Army during World War I from 1918-1919. He had been an attorney for the Wakefield Savings Bank and was a former member of the board of directors at the Wakefield Savings Bank. He leaves his wife, Louise (Pelosi); a daughter, three brothers, a sister and five grandchildren. (See Profile, Nov. '77 Bulletin).

1918 Crawford F. Failey, Chicago, IL; September 11, 1981. He was a distinguished professor of biochemistry at the University of Chicago until his retirement in 1951, and a visiting professor of biochemistry afterwards. He obtained a Ph.B. degree at Yale in 1921 and his Ph.D. from the University of California in 1926. Professor Failey began his teaching career as instructor of pharmacology at Johns Hopkins, 1929-30, was assistant professor of biochemistry from 1930-37, before joining the faculty of the University of Chicago. He was elected to a three-year term on the Alumni Council in 1962. A generous and interested alumnus, he served on the Advisory Committee which helped plan the new science building, Evans Hall. He was a member of the Society of Biology and Chemistry, the Chemical Society, and the N.Y. Academy of Sciences. He is survived by his wife, Hoylande D. (Young), former head of the technical information division of the Argonne National Laboratory.

1919 Robert Finney, Short Hills, NJ; March 20, 1981 (See Class Notes)

John W. Johnston, Brookline, MA; August 11, 1981 (See Class Notes)

1920 Samuel A. Lamson, Wellesley, MA; June 4, 1981

1921 Carleton S. Coon, Gloucester, MA; June 3, 1981. A pioneering anthropologist and author of The Story of Man, Dr. Coon was a leader in the field of the development of race. In his 1962 book, The Origin of Races, he argued that the five races evolved into modern man at different times and places. The theory was never widely accepted by scientists, but was sometimes used by racists to support their views, a practice he strongly repudiated. After finishing his secondary education at Andover, he graduated magna cum laude from Harvard in 1925 and received a doctorate in anthropology there in 1928. He taught anthropology at Harvard from 1928 to 1948 with time out for a stint in the Army in World War II. He taught at the University of Pennsylvania from 1948 until his retirement in 1963. Dr. Coon had led anthropological expeditions in the Middle East, North Africa, Chile and India. In Tangier, Morocco, in 1948, he found bones of Neanderthal man believed to be 150,000 years old. In 1951 in Iran, he unearthed skeletal remains of Hotu man, dating back 75,000 years to the Stone Age. From 1949 to 1964, Dr. Coon was a panelist on the CBS television show, "What In the World." He was a member of the National Academy of Science and the American Anthropology Association. He is survived by his wife, Lisa, and two sons, Carleton S. Jr. '44, and Charles A. '48, of Gloucester.

W. Melville Greene, Syracuse, NY; April, 1980

Frederick W. Kaufmann, Jr., Rancho Mirage, CA; August 23, 1981. An active member of New York's financial community, he was a founding partner of Erdman & Co., and a member of the New York Stock Exchange. Following Andover, he attended Dartmouth College. During World War II, he served as an officer in the United States Army Air Corps. Before retiring to Rancho Mirage, CA, where he became a member of the Tamarisk Country Club, he had been a governor of the Sunningdale Country Club of Westchester, NY. He is survived by his wife, Evelyn, 1420 Tamarisk West, Rancho Mirage, CA 92270, a son, F. William Kaufmann, III '53, two grandchildren, Kathryn F. Kaufmann and Frederick Clark Kaufmann, and a sister, Edna K. Erdman.

1923 Percival Dove, Jr. San Antonio, TX; July 19, 1981

1924 Philip D. Block, Jr., Chicago, IL; May 28, 1981. Son and grandson of the company's founders, Mr. Block was chairman and chief executive of Inland Steel from 1967 to 1971. He was an honorary director of the company at the time of his death.

Mr. Block joined Inland in 1928 as a trainee after his graduation from Yale University. He was elected director in 1942, senior vice president in 1956 and vice chairman in 1959.

He was a life trustee of the University of Chicago, where he led many fundraising campaigns. He also had served as director of the Jewish Federation of Metropolitan Chicago, president of the United Charities of Chicago and a director of the Jewish Children's Bureau of Chicago.

Mr. Block was a patron of the Art Institute and a member of its governing board. He was also a member of the Illinois Health Education Commission and was active in the Community Fund of Chicago.

He was a former member of the board of directors of Continental Bank. He also had been a director of the executive committee of the American Iron and Steel Institute and a director of the International Iron and Steel Institute.

He is survived by his wife, Margaret, two sons, Philip D. III '54 and Andrew K. '57; five grandchildren and a sister. (See Class Notes.)

John Rogers, Kennebunk, ME; August 2, 1981 (See Class Notes)

1925 Leslie B. Osborne, Guatemala; December 1980 (See Class Notes)

Walter H. Partridge, Andover, MA; August 24, 1981. After graduation from Andover and MIT, Mr. Partridge was head of engineering for the B.B. Chemical Co. until his retirement in 1972. He was also a member of the National and Massachusetts Societies of Mechanical Engineers. Active in civic and church affairs, Mr. Partridge was a director and treasurer of the Andover Historical Society and vice president and director of the Andover Home for the Aged. He was a deacon at South Church in Andover. Surviving him is his wife, Dorothy C.

(Trott) of Andover; a daughter, Joy Chrisman, Abbot '57, a son, David '62 and three grandchildren. (See Class Notes)

Floyd T. Smith, Jr., Glenview, KY; June, 1981

1926 Edward L. Hill, North Palm Beach, FL; May 21, 1981 (See Class Notes)

William C. Scott, Newburgh, NY; April 5, 1981 (See Class Notes)

Sherwood W. Smith, Rochester, NY; August 19, 1981. "Termed one of Rochester's great civic leaders of the 1960s," Mr. Smith was a former president of the Community Chest of Rochester and Monroe County and active in many civic causes. After graduating from Andover, he went to Yale where he was an outstanding athlete. An All-American soccer player, Sherwood Smith was a member of Yale's 880-yard track relay team that set a world indoor record in 1930 at Madison Square Garden. After college graduation, he began working for the old Sherwood Shoe Co., a firm founded by his family. In 1935 he left the shoe firm and joined the stock brokerage firm of George D.B. Bonbright & Co., a firm founded by his father-in-law. He was admitted as a general partner in the firm in 1939 and rose to senior partner. He retired in 1973 when the company merged with E.F. Hutton & Co. Mr. Smith served with the Navy in World War II as a lieutenant on Atlantic convoys. He was known as being really committed to the community though never flamboyant about it. He was a member of the board of Convalescent Hospital for Children and was an honorary life member of the Rochester-Monroe County Chapter of the American Red Cross. The family kept a summer home in Nantucket, MA for many years and Mr. Smith was a member of the board of trustees of Nantucket Cottage Hospital. A past president of the Country Club of Rochester and a member of the Genesee Valley Club, Sherwood Smith was also a 32nd-degree Mason in the Frank R. Lawrence Lodge and a member of St. Paul's Episcopal Church. He is survived by his wife, Barbara; two daughters, Sherley Newell and Nancy Bates; a sister, Barbara Hall, and five grandchildren, all of Rochester.

1927 Edward P. Dean, Greenwood, SC; June 13, 1981 (See Class Notes)

1929 Robert G. Anderson, Hyannisport, MA; June 27, 1981. A Chicago native, Mr. Anderson was a retired industrialist who was credited with recruiting some of Yale University's biggest athletic names of the last four decades. After attending Andover where he later became a Class Secretary, he graduated from Yale in 1933. It is estimated that 150 football players went to Yale as a result of his efforts. Since 1977 an award in Anderson's name has been given to the Yale football player "who best exemplifies Bob's intense interest in the sport by combination of athletic skill with team spirit and pride in accomplishment."

Mr. Anderson lived in Hyannisport and Chicago. He was a member of the Hyannisport Golf Club, Hyannisport Yacht Club and the Beach Club, Centerville. He leaves his wife, Doris, one son, Robert, Jr. '68 of Chicago and Hyannisport; one daughter, Abbe Anderson of Chicago and Hyannisport; brothers, W. David '26, Peter C. '39 and the late W. France '30. (See Class Notes)

Albert L. Bartlett, Jr. writes he is 91 years old, and of course, is retired and living alone. He is in good health, plays golf, drives a car and can tell a green light from a red one. He can also drink and eat anything. So far he can't complain!

Recently I had a telephone call from a lady in Concord who apparently gets the Andover Bulletin. She said she wanted to let me know that she always reads the 1910 notes. This was vastly reassuring news for me because I was not aware that they were read by anyone except possibly the editor of the Bulletin. I assumed that most of the 1910 survivors "looked through a glass darkly" as I do. I write these notes with the help of my friend and secretary who is the only one who can decipher my scrawl which I can't read myself. I go on writing them so our grandchildren and great-grandchildren may know that there was once a Class of 1910.

A friend and summer neighbor of mine, who is a retired Episcopal Bishop, gave me to read recently a copy of Front Row which is a quarterly letter of the Committee on Pastoral Letters of the House of Bishops. This letter contains an account of our Henry Hobson at his first meeting of the House of Bishops after his election as Bishop of Southern Ohio. He was supposed to sit in the back and be seen but not heard. The business of the meeting was to read and vote to adopt a Pastoral Letter which was to concern itself with a statement of the current concerns of the church. Henry did not agree Ridge, NJ; Richmond, VA; Cedar Grove, NY and Melrose, MA. "She was the perfect pastor's wife," said her husband. "She smoothed so many troubled paths with her love and understanding." Both she and her husband travelled extensively over the years, visiting 49 of the 50 states and 40 countries. "She was very creative," recalled her son, the Rev. Dr. William Loesch of Boston "as seen in her poetry, short stories, plays and articles in several magazines; her arts and crafts in drawing, painting and puppetry. She was a lover of life, of animals, children and people of all ages and interests." Mrs. Loesch's memberships included the American Association of Retired Persons. She is survived by her husband and her twin sons, the Rev. Dr. William Loesch and the Rev. Robert Loesch of Norwich, CT and by three grandchildren.

1931 Mary L. Bacon, New York City; August 27, 1981. Class Secretary for 1931, Mary passed away while visiting her brother, John, in Bethlehem, PA. She was a bacteriologist and medical techniwith some of the contents of the letter and stood up to speak out. A fellow new Bishop said we are not supposed to speak. But Henry advanced to the front of the hall and stated with his usual eloquence the reasons why he thought the letter should be amended. As a result the letter was voted down and referred back to the Committee for amending. This happened years ago but many times since Henry has stood up for what he believed to be right both as president of the Andover Board of Trustees and in his concerns for the Yale Alumni Fund. Now in his 90s, Henry, like your Secretary has become "legally blind" but his voice is not stilled.

As the years roll on, it is constantly harder to report news on the bright side. An exception occurred in July when Norman and Mimi Elsas were in San Diego. We had a delightful lunch together and spent a lot of time recalling the old days at Andover. Norman is a very interesting person. He had some trouble with his contact lens, losing them often, and he decided to do something about it. So he invented a safety net and has applied for a patent. You will probably see it advertised. In August he and Mimi enjoyed a summer cruise of New England waters, Chesapeake Bay and southern intercoastal waterways on the Coastal Cruise Ship Independence.

The sympathy of the class goes to Ruth and John Erving who lost their only son, John M. Jr. '42 September 11, 1980. During World War II he served two years in the Air Force in the China Theater, without a scratch, and had a bad case of polio in 1950 when the scourge was rampant.

cian for Exxon Corp. in New York before retiring in 1971.

1949 Barbara Hamby Beatt, Tonka Bay, MN; August, 1981. She was noted as an instructor and project leader at the University of Minnesota and in Family and Children Services in Minneapolis. More recently she devoted herself to creative floral arrangements to express her love of nature, winning many prizes. She was a graduate of Vassar College in Child Study and held an M.A. from Teachers College, Columbia University in Education for Marriage and Family Living. She served on the Board of Directors of Planned Parenthood of Minneapolis, Minnesota Council on Family Relations, Child Study Association of America, and the Advisory Board of the Minnesota Day Care Association. She leaves, besides her husband, Earl, her daughter, Susan McLane of Long Beach, CA; sons, James McLane, Oakland, CA; Peter and Matthew McLane, both of Tonka Bay; parents Mr. and Mrs. William Hamby of New York and sister, Lynn Messner, Connecticut.

Good letters from Tommy St. Hill and Leo McMahon. Tommy seems to be overcoming his troubles with angina. Like the rest of us he dislikes to limit his activities. Leo and Wilda are enjoying retirement by frequent contacts with their relatives, aided by their son, Leo, Jr. '44 who has retired from the U.S. Army as a full Colonel. It is pleasant to learn that Bill Moore, Jr. '45, the son of our good friend and classmate who died in 1967, is co-chairman at Andover of Non Sibi Associates, a special group of alumni formed in recognition of leadership giving to the Alumni Fund. There are presently 199 members. May their tribe increase! We regret to say that Henry Blank passed away September 14th.

The last issue of the Bulletin listed in its necrology the death of Earl K. Carpenter. He died January 14, 1981 in Francis, Oklahoma where he had a ranch. After Andover, Earl attended Bucknell University where he received a degree in civil engineering. In World War I he served in the Ambulance Corps of the U.S. Army and later was a civil engineer in the Corps of Engineers of the U.S. Army in Alaska for many years. His wife, Ema Boyer, died in 1966 in Anchorage. He is survived by a daughter, Patricia Mallan, of Francis, three sons, David C. of Denver, Kenneth of Everett, Washington; William J. of Anchorage, and nine grandchildren.

Edwin A. Henn died January 9, 1981. He attended Columbia University, receiving an AB, then Georgetown where he achieved an AM and Ph.D. He served in the U.S. Army for many years, retiring as a full Colonel. At the time of his retirement in 1951 he was in command of Camp Kilmer, New Jersey. Ed is survived by his wife "Dede" and two daughters, Elizabeth known as Jeffrey, and Constance. Ed was a loyal Andover man and we will miss him.

Woodland Kahler, our great humanitarian, died May 31st in Bangor, Maine, of cancer of the pancreas. He attended Yale where he was a member of the wrestling team. In World War I he joined the Army Aviation Service. Following the war he had a brief experience as a banker, then went to Paris to write. There he married the Baroness Olga Clewesahl Steinheil, a White Russian refugee. They returned to America at the start of World War II. Following the war they lived for 35 years in India, England, France and Spain. After Olga's death Woody returned to America and married Amy Lorton McKay, the widow of a life-long and beloved friend. For the past several years they have spent winters in Palm Beach and summers in Frankfort, Maine. Lack of space prevents listing all of Woody's activities and honors, most of which have been recited from time to time in this column, but the range of his interests is shown by his presidency of the International Vegetarian Union, The Council of World Government at the Hague and the World League for the Protection of Animals. In addition to his novels he wrote up to 70 essays in support of world peace. He received honors from Spain and France and was awarded a gold medal by the International Community Service (London). In his travels he met and formed friendships with world figures such as Salvador Dali, Albert Schweitzer, Gandhi, Gertrude Stein, Alfred Adler and Prince Rainier. In 1953 he was a representative to UNESCO.

Woody was a genial person with a great sense of humor. He was devoted to world peace and possessed a genuine love of friendship. He had high hopes of living until the year 2000 which would have given him life in three centuries. He is survived by his devoted wife Amy, Sundown Farm, Tyler Lane, Frankfort, Maine 04438 and by a sister, Mrs. Bruce Cole of Tuscon. We all will miss Woody. It is interesting to note that all three of our deceased classmates attended our 60th reunion in 1974, including Ed's wife Dede. The sympathy of the class goes to the families of all of them.

Good news has been very scarce this summer. I checked the list of members of the class at this time. We have forty-six names which is just twenty more than I have heard from over the years. It would be a Banner Day if our missing classmates would send me a card. At least I could report what they are doing.

We missed Bill Page of Manchester, NH at the Reunion, and regretfully learned that he passed away on June 25th. Bill had led a busy life. He was head of a large shoe business, but also found time for yachting and world travel. Our sincere thoughts go to his wife, three sons and a daughter and his many grandchildren and great grandchildren.

We also learned a few days ago that Charlie Alloway of Lake Worth, FL passed away on June 14th. Our sympathy is extended to his family.

Send me news for the next issue.

Temp Brown, as Class Agent, has accomplished an excellent showing for our class in the past Alumni Fund year, with a 54% participation and, with our depleted numbers, a total of $6,251. Here's hoping we all do even better in the upcoming drive. Tim Durrant writes: "I am able to go in the ocean a few days each week and expect to live until I decide I've had enough."

My brother Charlie '24 and his wife Kitty A.A. '26 were in Hong Kong last summer and tried at my request to make contact with "Chinny" Mok. They did not get together, but she learned that in Hong Kong he is known as Mok Hing Shung and is a respected director of The Wing On Bank, Ltd. Maybe he is one of the inspirations of the personages in "Noble House." Henry Penfield recently celebrated his 81st birthday. He tells us that Henrietta has had a lung operation, but is slowly recovering, and the doctors report everything O.K. He regrets reading in our Class Notes that so many of us have gone (and writing about them also saddens me); but I am glad to add that Henry himself reports that he is "still hanging in there".

Mert Perry is a prolific and interesting source of information about the island of Maui. For the ninth year he has been at Napili Surf for August and September and will undoubtedly continue to do so in the future, since their daughter has just obtained a condominium at Kaanapali Beach. Every morning the Perrys walk a half mile to the Napili Kai Beach Club for coffee, biscuits and fresh pineapple.

Now comes the part of these notes which I hate to write, but it is still interesting and impressive to observe what so many of our classmates have accomplished in their lifetimes. Bob Finney died recently after an extended illness. After Andover, he went to Yale, Class of 1923. For 50 years he lived in Short Hills, NJ commuting to New York and his firm of Street & Finney, an advertising concern specializing in packaged products and proprietary medicines. He was an excellent golfer and, as a member of Baltusrol, was the chief host at the U.S. Open a few years back. He was also a member of five other clubs, including Pinehurst. His wife died several years ago, and the only survivor is a stepson, William G. Johnson of Springfield Hills, NJ. John Walter Johnston, whom we knew as "Walt", died last August. After graduating from PA, he attended Dartmouth. Following that, he was in the grain and flour business in Concord, NH. Later he moved to Brookline, MA and was associated with Jordan Marsh. His wife, Evelyn, lives at 1211 Beacon Street, Brookline, MA 02146. John E. Kennedy, who at school was known as "Jack", passed away in August. At Andover he ran the quarter mile and was captain of the track team. He went on to Harvard, graduating in 1923. He was a well-known advertising executive with several Boston firms, including John C. Dowd, Inc. A resident of the Back Bay, he was active for many years in various neighborhood organizations and was secretary of the Badminton and Tennis Club. He leaves his wife, Mary, of 9 Hereford Street, Boston 02115; two daughters, Anne K. O'Neil of New York City and Ailsa K. Steinert of Manchester, MA; and three sisters, Winifred Kennedy of Baltimore and Mary and Frances Kennedy of Newton, MA.

Martha Stockwell Mumford writes from Corvallis, OR that during July she and her husband toured for ten days in a senior citizen bus. They went to Spearfish, S. Dakota to see the Passion Play and pronounced it "marvelous". Included in the tour were the rodeo at Cheyenne, Mt. Rushmore, Yellowstone National Park and the Tetons. Two grandchildren received diplomas in June, one graduating from Oregon State University, and the other from Oregon Medical School. She adds that three times a week she swims at the "Y", "and from the knees up I'm fine."

Lillian Grumman writes from Bridgeport, CT that she keeps quite busy assisting at the health center, and transporting residents to and from doctors' offices. She also knits for the Southbury Training School. She anticipated going to camp in Weld, ME after Labor Day and a visit from K. Hamblet was recalled with great pleasure.

Helen Thiel Gravengaard sent a few lines, once again, from Jacksonville, FL, expressing satisfaction in her new apartment, but regrets that she can no longer enjoy "New England winter with snow."

Mildred Linscott Havighurst wishes to report, as her most important bit of news, the marriage of her grandson, Scott Porter, to Marcy Victor in Newton, MA on August 9. It was indeed a wonderful occasion. As Class Secretary, Mildred wishes to add that she would like to hear from more classmates, even if only a line or two.

According to a recent computer printout from PA, our class list is 98. My thanks to those 38 who returned cards about reunion. Photos taken at our class dinner were thanks to Don Loker, 2373 Woodacre Drive, Oceanside, CA 92054. Al Wilson, who had originally planned to come, was unable to because of a grandson's wedding on that day.

Basil Walker passed away Sept. 22 in Great Barrington, MA. Ted Stevenson is no longer practicing medicine but recently has had two periods of volunteer medical service in India and Kenya. Ed Parnall still keeps his hand in medicine but one of his avocations at his home studio is figure carving which Charlie Forbes introduced him to in his shop.

With the Bulletin back on track, thanks largely to the efforts of Helen Eccles, we trust this winter edition will reach you before Christmas and with it we send our best wishes and thanks for all the news you're going to send in '82.

Al Harris reports that he is enjoying his retirement at his apartment right on the ocean in Palm Beach, FL. He serves as a member of the Budget and Finance Committee and chairman of the Planning Board of the Town of South Palm Beach. Al and his wife, Louise, are planning a tour of the Far East in September including China, Japan, Singapore, Bangkok, Hong Kong and Hawaii.

Wally Booth and his wife returned home to Myrtle Beach, SC in mid-August after a 4,256 mile tour of New England and the Atlantic states. They attended Wally's 55th reunion at Princeton and visited many school, college and service friends whom they hadn't seen in years.

Walt Rentschler reports good health and a pleasant winter of 1980-81 in Arizona and California. Hopes to return for our 60th reunion next June. Larry Philbrick makes his home in Wolfeboro, NH but spends about six months of the year in Florida.

Among those present at their 55th Yale reunion: Hoddy Cole, Ben Cutler, Keen Cutler, Dick Elwell, Frank Lackey, Jack Watson and Don Walker. Ben Cutler provided some excellent music for singing and dancing.

Your Secretary will attend a planning meeting in Andover on Oct. 16th to prepare for our 60th Reunion, June 11-13, 1982. Circle these dates on your 1982 calendar and plan to attend. It will be a memorable event.

A letter from his wife, Muriel, tells of Bill Hobson's death from lung cancer on Jan. 15, 1981. They had enjoyed a wonderful three-week tour of the Orient the previous summer. Mrs. Hobson's address is: 35 Riverside Dr., New York, NY 10023.

Thanks to all the girls who replied to my request for news; another set of cards will be sent next month.

Sally Bodwell Nelson still lives in Florida during the winter and in Weld, ME summers. For years Sally has been active in Audubon groups from north to south — an interest her husband shared. It was just after a good birding trip to California in June '80 that he passed away, well and happy to the last. Sally spent many hours this past winter as a volunteer in the local hospital auxiliary, work she terms a lifesaver for her.

In August of '79, Kay Damon Kletzien and her husband were honored by their children on their 50th anniversary — a complete three-day family reunion at the home of their daughter, Edith. Nineteen people attended including the nine grandchildren. Four are in college — two at Mt. Holyoke, one each at Bates & Colby in Maine and one granddaughter at Northfield School in MA. (Remember the time '22ers were there at some convention?) Kay is still close to church activities altho' she has recently resigned after serving 8 years with the FISH organization. Her scattered family, Rochester, NY & Chicago, IL are in frequent touch but Damon's family is only 5 miles away. Wish I had space to list the interesting fields their offspring labor in! Husband Seymour acquired a pacemaker in May '80 and is now much improved. He has a large garden and did four days of jury duty at the local courthouse recently. Sounds great — keep it up!

"CP" Damon Mason wrote briefly that she "gave up the clam-digger life about three years ago and is now enjoying apartment life in Westfield, NJ, seeing old friends and making new." She keeps busy, has no health problems "so will probably live to be a hundred."

Celia Kunkel Payne was glad to have news of '22. She had a stroke last winter but has learned to walk with a cane — good for her! Lydia Kunkel Howard is in retirement in Rochester, NY and Celia misses her very much. Cele also talks with Carol Iredell & Jane Baldwin now and then.

You have heard about Alice Tower Kirkby's progress since her very serious auto accident in '71. While still dependent upon her husband Norman for much of her care, she does get out and her last letter told of enjoying three fine concerts during the summer.

Now I have a real surprise! A letter from Mary Polk Overstreet, the first in too many years! Her nickname has followed her through the years; living at 79 in a retirement home outside of Kansas City, she is still "Bug" to her many friends and to us. She met her husband, Lee, at the University of Missouri, where he later became a professor of law. She had lived in Columbia even after his death in '55 until three years ago. After several operations she moved to her present home to be nearer her two daughters. One lives in Kansas City and the other in St. Louis. There are five grandchildren: twin girls that were freshmen at the university this year, two others married and an eleven-year-old son that they all consider pretty special. Bug's final paragraph sums up what most of your cards and letters said: "Would love to see all those who made Abbot so special to me. Am in pretty good health and hope that you are the same. Love to you!"

By the time you read these lines Reunion will be only a few months away. I would appreciate hearing from those who think they may attend. Any suggestions as to what you would like to do and where, etc. will be a real help. Remember I have an up-to-date list of addresses. Do get in touch with our special D.O.G.'s and please try to come.

My love and best wishes to each of you!

Some news is late but better than never! Red Cleaveland and Katie are well, keep busy with church, golf and bridge. After a search of sunbelt states Thelma and Bob Hereford settled in Alpine, TX. The allergy-free, dry climate at 4,600 feet elevation means cool nights. Says Bob, "When we get dressed properly, we blend right into the landscape and look and sound just like the other Texans."

Frank Newman visited Sanibel, FL, last Mar., was impressed with nearby Shell Point Village, a retirement home, intended to be residents. Sad to say, his wife Betty could not tolerate the humid climate, so they will stay in Swarthmore until an opening comes in a place north of Philadelphia, Rydal Park. Frank will retire from his practice of psychiatry in Jan. 1982. He and Betty plan to attend our 60th in 1983. They have plans also to visit India for a Congress of International Christian Physicians in '82.

Al Buttrick spent the first two weeks of July on Peaks Is., ME and then retired (second time) after 15½ years of service to the Danbury (CT) Hospital. Al retired from J.P. Stevens in 1963, did not like retirement, volunteered for work at the hospital, later served full time. In good shape at 78, he wants to keep busy but set August aside to relax, think and read. On Sept. 27th, Malcolm Burton will have preached in his last parish for the 150th anniversary of the founding of the First Congregational Church of Pontiac, MI. He had a heart attack in 1979, but has published five books of sermons in the last year, doing the printing and binding in his home. Malcolm is prolific and dedicated. His sons' families being in Chicago and Portland (OR), Johnny Fitchen travels west instead of east to Europe. He promises news ere long about his forthcoming publications. He urges your secretary to reveal his own dreary story, but the editor ration's space. Some answers are: weight and girth same as when at Andover, upper lip not too stiff these days, no pain in the gluteus maximus, jog 2 miles four times a week, do hundreds of push-ups daily as well as 90 belly grinds (prone position), laugh at myself, cry when bereaved, read newspaper, Wall Street Journal, Time, and Imprimis (a publication of Hillsdale College), do volunteer duties at Memorial Hospital as much as 80 hours a month sometimes, deliver "meals on wheels" one day a week, help pot and nurture poinsettias for sale by churches to benefit abused children. Does anyone want to know all that, John? Don Harris is buoyed by the Reagan administration's accomplishments but is fed up with "media's exaggerated expectations of great things already accomplished, without any work or sacrifice." I can't understand why he wants to get rid of Kennedy, O'Neil, McGovern types. Perhaps he is conservative somewhat.

Harry Remington claims his age precludes any news of import. He is newly returned from his Adirondack camp, roots for the Brown football team (can't think why) and the Phillies, and plans to be at our 60th. Let's all join him! Arriving at milestone 75 in Sept., Phil Simonds insists that what now happens to him is personal and of no interest, but Johnny Fitchen believes otherwise. I agree with John, so all ye classmates please to send in your news without pleas from me. Phil's family of two adults, three children and the local (Little Compton) family of four were present at his birthday celebration. In March he journeys to Sanibel, FL. Since I visit there from time to time, I might see him there. A typical good summer day for Pim Epler is a ten-mile sail in the Sound (L.I.), home for clam chowder, and later a lobster dinner with one of their sons. Sounds good, pun intended. I recently had a most enjoyable evening with cocktails and dinner as guest of Bill Foster and his wife Flodie.

Ralph and Grace Blank dropped by the end of June. The next day they headed for Maine. In Kennebunkport they visited the Red Sanborns. Ralph's card reported much reminiscing about Andover faculty as they had several classes together. Georgie and Liz Parmalee received the most attention. Red, of course, was also on the PA faculty for forty odd years.

From Conroe, TX two letters mentioned that Dike Howe was semi-retired but Amy writes he still brings work home for his construction company. They hope to take a cruise after the controllers strike is over and they can get to the sea. Fred Beck writes he has no significant news but he is busy keeping their home and yard in good condition and says he and Anne are not yet candidates for an apartment or nursing home. As Yale plays in Ithaca this year he hopes to see classmates, especially Sam Connor and Frank Hamlin (Yale).

Mary Duke, Rocky's widow, sent along much news of Green Valley. She has visited this summer in Andover, Maine, New Jersey and Vermont and will return to Arizona soon. Vic Earle sent a card from Santa Monica, CA where he was visiting his married daughter. We contacted Mary Ann a few years ago. Van Johnstone has written several times to say he enjoys hearing about all his classmates. His wife, Nancy, told us of the surprise visit to Van by V.P. Bush and Barbara while they were in Miami.

Al Foote sends thanks "for glorifying his landmark." Says he has only 25 years to go. "In answer to your question, what have you been doing in your retirement? My stock answer is rejoicing that I am not dependent on writing articles for the Saturday Evening Post entitled what do I do in my retirement. Sounds dreary what I do but I like it."

Dick Morris enclosed a dollar in one of his many letters. We had bet on the Chris Evert and Borg-Connors tennis matches. I bet on Chris. Dick has found a way to air condition his apartment with a combination of air-conditions and also fans. More about Dick in our Newsletter. Laura Williamson attended the Abbot 60th of a friend and being of the "old guard" had to stay in "the uncomfortable infirmary." She took a M.F.A. tour in the Regina Maris starting in Lisbon. She was also in Amsterdam, London and then New York.

Gordon Brown sent greetings to the "horde of '24s who bask in the Green Valley sun." Said Bill Jones wrote "I did almost nothing (in Paris) but visit museums which were always too crowded." Brownie said he did not elaborate on the "almost nothing." He adds "Let's make '81 the year!" (To get together with him and Marian).

Bob and Esther Clark flew to Calgary, bussed to Glacier National Park (Montana) then to Lake Louise on to Jasper, then Baniff and back. His card contained a picture of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. "The equine posteriors evoked comment because it brought to mind a common vulgarism," says Bob. Prentiss Glazier sent along a card from England with the Royal couple on it. He couldn't understand why he wasn't invited to their wedding. Les Hicks and Florance report they spent last winter in Wenham, MA, which was warmer than Florida. Perhaps it was that new Vermont Vigilant wood stove they set up in their living room which kept them warm. Art Tait wonders if we are coming to El Paso as they are having a big bash in July to celebrate four centuries. "Come join us."

Morry Skinner reports that the fertility of the state of Oregon keeps him busy weeding. At the time he had over a dozen bags full to haul away. He does have time for a little golf. He was glad his twin, Ed Thompson, fed him a story occasionally, as his supply has dwindled. More of Morry in our Newsletter. Phil LeCompte thinks the Pritikin Longevity Center program is good but an occasional alcoholic drink is good for reducing heart disease. Dr. Phil backs this up by several pages of statistics he sent along. Also a cartoon showing a man and wife at the table. The man passes his plate and says, "More, please, Americans overeat, and, by God, I'm an American!"

Jim Kern and Grace are busy trying to keep up with two families as both their sons live in Florida. "Rick is building a house 5 miles south of son Jim's place with the help of a carpenter." Not unlike Dick Vaughan, Jim Sr. takes a daily swim in a pool. Says he enjoyed reading Fritz Allis's book, Youth from Every Quarter.

Henry Hitchcock writes "Aren't we lucky to have survived to the ¾ century mark." He was glad I sent along a copy of the article on Bruce Caldwell I received from Bob Redpath. Louie and Peggy Wienecke's daughter is in the news again — a clipping sent in by Dick Vaughan. Gretchen Wyler will play a lady shrink in "Dallas". She will help Pam Ewing. Dick mentions that wife, Adele, may also be in pictures as she is taking acting lessons. Stillman Hobbs (Mr. Chips) is my senior by two months and wants me to catch up. Wife, Billie, writes that Chips came through with flying colors at his annual check-up! We hope the Hobbs can repeat their visit to Green Valley this winter. While in L.A. we always get in touch with Dave Mdivani as we did in March of this year. Dave was very fond of his time on Andover Hill. We hope he and son, Michael, will be at our 60th. Dick Chace never passes up a Shakespearean play. "Much Ado" and "King Lear" were in town as well as his grandchildren. He wondered if they might curl up and sleep during the plays. His latest bumper sticker for the month: "Nurses are Pan Handlers".

Joe and Ruth Smith report "the weather has been crazy" in Umatilla, FL and their utility bill will be likewise. The book The Last Convertible which we read and returned was a movie on T.V. Joe's next suggestion was Century by Fred Stewart and at present he is reading and being scared by The Hill of Summer by Allen Drury.

Bud Mordock writes he and Nancy are all settled in for the summer but a West Coast trip was planned for July and the East in August. Bud sent along the news account of Phil Block's death on May 28th. Phil was one of the stalwarts of the class, respected by everyone. A nice note arrived from Maggie in reply to our expression of sympathy. Phil and Maggie attended all our reunions and his warmth and friendliness were combined with a strong character. A list of Phil's achievements and appointments would be tremendous. Our three days visiting the Blocks has always been a pleasureable memory. The Gardie Browns joined us for dinner one of the evenings. Phil's death is a great loss to the Class of 1924.

Another recent death on August 2nd was that of John Rogers. John graduated from Williams. Born in Kennebunk, ME and lived there when the Sanborns had him for luncheon while Bunny and I were visiting them. John was president of the Roger's Fiber Co. and was active in many business organizations. I have written to his widow, Anne, to express the condolences of 1924. We were sorry to hear from Dick Miller's children of the death of their mother, Jeanie. Dick, himself died in March, 1980. What an incredible letter written by their daughter, Martha, part of which was included in our '24 Newsletter.

To end in a more happy mood, while in Nantucket Bunny and I were delighted to see four of our classmates while visiting my brother Roy's widow: Bill and Min Dickerman, Eddie and Louise Jackson, George and Sallie Penny and Sam and Ruth Connor and an added bonus of a swordfish dinner with the Connors and meeting Ruth's brother, Ed Macomber, Andover '37 and his wife.

Peg MacDonald Vester — My sister & I took pleasure in accepting Peg's invitation to drop in anytime, when we were in St. Pete's to watch Stu come in first in one SORC race, (but not on handicap) on the Kialoa. We planned for a 2 hr. visit, but we could only stay 30 minutes, because our new map only showed one Occelea, not in Clearwater. We loved Peg's sky-high, bay & island view apartment made gay by colorful petit point made by Peg. We agreed we would not have recognized each other — even our heights had changed! But we had immediate recall of old memories. Peg said I could now tell a story her loyal friends never would tell, though Peg did not care. Miss Bailey dismissed her as our senior class president for a month until she started studying & stopped playing so much to get her marks up. Peg has had far more than her share of physical & family problems, still she seems even more cheerful & stalwart then ever.

Boston alums urge Florida alums to give themselves the fun of a minny reunion. Peg says she would like to have one, but she is just too busy to get in touch with Virginia Gilmore Pyle in St. Pete's. She is vp of her huge skyscraper, after being pres. this summer. "There are lots of funny things." Other Abbot '24s to see in Florida: Madelyn Shepard Curry, Boca Raton; Elizabeth Bragg King, Palm Harbor; Virginia Gilmore Pyle, St. Pete's; Eliz. Wilson Naetzker, Cocoa Beach.

Peg Colby Williamson — Had to cancel summer plans to visit their aunt in Seattle, because of her sudden death. Instead they enjoyed caring for their gardens in Sunapee & in Norwood. Kay Hart Mitchell writes, among other things, she has taken on another job, representative of the "Retired Officers Wives Club" — to the "Officers Wives Club". I find my first task is the big welcoming tea in September. Fun but another thing. Kay wants a special reunion at Pillar House for Sybil & Peg who had to bow out suddenly on our last FUN one. (Won't you run this too, Peg?)

Sybil Bottomley Talman has also had the lonely experience of family leaving home. Her niece, husband & two adorable little ones, must leave for a new job in Manchester. Sybil sent on a large clipping from the Sun Chronicle (3/10/81) with 2 big pictures of Syb in connection with the start of the 1st Girl Scout troop in 1919, whose first task was to meet in new uniform the boys coming home from the war. Syb was a member of Troop One that met in the building where she went to school for years & a building she has helped her scout troop repossess "after much dickering". She is a director of the building! (Laura Williamson — Several cards have not been answered from classmates. I am not surprised, for news for the Bulletin to be in just after Labor Day does not prove to be good timing, for me either!)

May I recommend a happy way for septogenarians to travel? I am just back from a 2-week MFA trip on the Regina Maris which started in Lisbon & ended in Amsterdam, with short bus trips to cathedrals, monasteries, churches, vineyards, museums & native restaurants in 12 cities etc. You returned to your ship's cabin most easily. My only complaint, I could not get to Cowes to watch the Kialoa take off with Stu aboard, just flew over him on the British Airways on the way home!

Our peripatetic classmates include Al & Ada Keedy and the Jack Whithams. The former made a quick trip to Finland last August to visit some old friends. They expect to return to the West Indies this winter, where Al will be ministering again in St. Thomas, V.I. The Whithams visited Britain by coach last August including Edinburgh, York, Stratford, Bath & London. Came home after the controllers strike, taking 31 hours for their return, arriving quite exhausted.

Last year Lawry Clarke ventured into a woodworking project, Litchfield Associates, from his home in Hingham, MA. Much to his disappointment, he had to give it up due to illness. He had a most difficult winter & spring with two hospitalizations. His cardiologist put him on a new drug last May and he's made a miraculous recovery. Lawry wrote that he's been working in his vegetable garden & raspberry patch and is now operating at about 60% capacity.

It was most appropriate that Winslow Ames, a former curator and well-known art authority, assisted in the Addison Gallery's 50th Anniversary Celebration, where he saw many old friends & fellow art historians. He had been at the opening of the Gallery in 1931. A few weeks later Anna and Winslow celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary in a gold & white striped tent on their lawn. All their children, grandchildren & siblings were present as well as Carl Loveland, who was his roommate for 3 years at PA and an usher. Winslow is still on the review board of the R.I. Historical Preservation Commission & the N.E. Committee of the Archives of American Art.

Emily Ridgway very thoughtfully wrote that Bill and she had a good winter in Florida, came back to Short Hills and summered at Fisher's Island. Bill is doing reasonably well, appreciates hearing from old friends and enjoys having their letters read to him. Henry Ransom's daughter advised that he's the quintessential Class Secretary

None of us were surprised to see George "Swede" and Bunny Larsen at Don McNemar's investiture. The Larsens' deep loyalty to Andover, its aims and interests and its people, brings them to Andover gatherings on campus, in Boston and at their home in Arizona, where they spend the winter, among many Andover friends. Swede and Bunny were on hand at the investiture not just for their own satisfaction but to observe and report to the class of 1924. It's a good bet that within two or three weeks, members of '24 received a newsletter describing this important event in Andover's history. Probably Swede's newsletter also carried the unexpurgated version of his Class Notes for this issue. This is not because Swede's news is not fit for a family magazine; it's because Swede Larsen, with Bunny's support, is the quintessential Class Secretary. He cares so much about the lives of his classmates and faculty friends; his personal correspondence is so voluminous; and the response from his classmates so strong, that at deadline time he always has more news than the Bulletin can carry for one class. So Swede trims his Class Notes down to what he deems essential, and supplies all the details in his own supplementary newsletter. The devotion and conscientiousness of this Class Secretary, the retired proprietor of the famed Pillar House Restaurant, in Newton Lower Falls, has created a supportive network that ties alumni of 1924 closely together and closely to Phillips Academy.

1924's Reunions are known as the school's best-organized and best-attended, under Swede's chairmanship — which is really a partnership. Bunny and Swede arrive for a Reunion planning session weeks in advance, to assure the best for '24. Bunny takes notes as Swede makes the arrangements for just the right location, food, program, distinctive and useful souvenir gifts, just the right faculty speakers. "He's always trying to get more people involved and thinking of considerate extra touches," says Admissions Officer Bob Hulburd, who as Alumni Director worked with Swede on 1924's legendary 50th, and its 55th Reunions; "When I think of Class Secretaries, and Reunion Chairmen, I can't help thinking of Swede as the standard."

The Larsens jubilantly headquartered the 50th Reunion at 1924 House, the new Pine Knoll Common Room which was 1924's 50th Reunion gift to Andover — an occasion of great joy for the Larsens, and particular credit to Class Agent Bob Hamilton.

There's nothing one-sided about the Larsen partnership. Swede works just as hard for Wheelock College — where Bunny is deeply involved in alumnae activities — as she does for Andover. "We were married when I was a Wheelock junior," explains Bunny (Carolyn S. Bonney '30) "so my classmates have known Swede (Yale '28) more than 50 years." The Larsens have four children — Sally, Robert '52, a TV producer, and the twins, Barbara and Tom — and a good dozen grandchildren. Tom now is in charge at Pillar House, Swede's popular restaurant at the juncture of Rtes. 128 and 16, while his father is "semi-retired." Bunny explains: "Our son Tom works 50 weeks a year, and we work two. Every July we close The Pillar House down for two weeks; Swede and I go in, turn it upside down and have it completely cleaned and redecorated."

By now the Larsens have begun their friendly pilgrimage to Green Valley, AZ for the winter, visiting 20-25 Andover friends along the way. Their hosts know the Larsens are addicted to a favorite soap opera and hate to miss an installment, so that's always planned into the afternoon. If they are on the road, Swede tells friends, they just check into a motel, pay up, turn on the TV and leave when the soap opera is over. Swede says some eyebrows are raised when they check out after just an hour and a half, "but I look on it as a compliment."

The quintessential Class Secretary and his partner move along to their Arizona home. There more Andover classmates and friends will share the Larsen's hospitality and news of friends — with grief at a classmate's loss, and joy over a classmate's good fortune. No one else does it just like Swede, Fred Stott notes. "He cares deeply about people and gives unhesitatingly of himself. Such loyalty to his classmates and such genuine, unvarnished faith in the school, unencumbered by claptrap, has a great power for good."

not in good health and is now in a rest home. This is indeed sad news, as Henry was in fine fettle at our 50th.

I regret to announce the loss of Col. Leslie B. Osborne last December in Guatemala. Ozzie had a distinguished career in the Air Force, serving on numerous bombing missions over Germany in the 2nd W.W. He retired and lived in Mexico and then moved to Guatemala. Hugh McCandless reported the death of T. Floyd Smith last June. Floyd had been the pres. & chairman of the board of Louisville Paper Co.

Your scribe had the sad mission of returning to Andover for the funeral of Walter Partridge on Aug. 27th, joining Al Whitney, the Whithams and the Poores at the memorial service at South Church, where Walter had played a most active role for many years. He was head of engineering at the B.B. Chemical Co. when he retired. He was an officer of the Andover Historical Society and the Andover Home for the Aged and served our class so ably as treasurer of our recent reunions. Our deepest sympathy to the families of these classmates in their irreparable loss.

Congratulations to Dorris Krum Little who celebrated her 55th wedding anniversary last November.

Madeline Boutwell von Weber writes that she wishes someone from the Class of 1925 would take on the Class Secretary position. When she finished her term as Class Secretary at the 55th reunion, she expected another classmate to take over. Anyone who would like to assume the responsibility which is both fun and important to the school should let the Alumnae Office at Andover know.

Fran Tully of Brandon, VT sent in the following information on: Louis Ehrlich who received an award after completing what he called "a most pleasant assignment" as Kansas City Centennial Chairman for observance of the American Red Cross centennial last May. Presiding over a dinner for 800, planning for which had taken much of Lou's time the past year, was his final task. Lou came naturally by the assignment, as his father was a member of the chapter board of directors in 1932 and chairman 1937-45. Lou has been a director since 1961 and was chairman 1966-68. He is chairman of Rothenberg & Schloss, Inc. of Kansas City, a director of the Cigar Institute of America and a member of the American Bar Assn.

Fran went on to say that Fletcher Nyce was cited by the Southern Ohio region of the National Conference of Christians and Jews for the positive principles that have guided his professional career and the leadership he has given to a wide variety of community causes. The citation to Fletch read in part: "For the inspiration of your exemplary life and career in banking and financial management enabling a broad spectrum of community service achievements for all our citizens; for consistently expressing in your private and public life those gentle and humane qualities which represent the highest ideals of our Judeo-Christian tradition established by NCCJ's founders."

Edward Lewis Hill died May 21, 1981 in North Palm Beach, Florida, after a long and difficult illness, a slow, progressive paralysis that led him first to a wheelchair and then left him bedridden. Friends and classmates were deeply moved by the courage, determination and cheerfulness with which he faced his illness. Lew studied at the Lycee Jaccard in Lausanne before coming to Andover. At Andover, he was on the varsity football squad and was the school fencing champion, later to be captain of fencing at Yale. He sang in the choir and the glee club.

After an association with Manhattan General Advertising Co., Lew joined Proctor and Gamble in Cincinnati, where he became a brand manager. Several years later, he went with Ted Bates & Co., New York advertising firm, where he wound up as senior vice president and account group manager until retirement in 1967. Later that year he began 18 months of study in archaeology in the Yale Graduate School. During the New York years, he and Betsy lived in Darien, CT. They moved to North Palm Beach not too long after his retirement.

A Yale ROTC graduate and Reserve Officer, Lew served in the Field Artillery and went overseas in World War II with the 100th Infantry Division. He was in combat non-stop for 6 months under the 7th Army in France and Germany, and was discharged as a lieutenant colonel after six months of occupation duty. He held two Bronze Stars and the Purple Heart. Lew and Betsy Dupuis of Cincinnati, a Wellesley graduate, were married January 15, 1940. Their two children are Jeffrey Dupuis Hill and Mrs. N. Roger (Judith) Cooke. Mrs. Hill may be addressed at 12224 Seaward Dr. East, North Palm Beach, FL 33408.

William Clement Scott, Jr. died April 5, 1981 in Newburgh, NY, where he was born and spent his lifetime. Bill spent a year at Andover as a junior or "prep", completed his secondary education at Pawling and graduated from Sheffield Scientific School at Yale after completing his studies in industrial engineering. After 6 years with Curtis-Harper Co., contractors, Bill began in 1936 an association of 40 years with Interstate Bag Co., Walden, NY. He was executive vice president for some years until he retired in the mid-1970s. At the same time, he was also vice president of John Schoonmaker & Sons, a Newburgh department store.

Bill had been vice president of the Yale Club of the Hudson Valley and a vestryman of St. George's Episcopal Church in Newburgh. Soon after his graduation from Yale, on July 12, 1930, he was married to Susan Louise Cameron of New Windsor, NY. The Scotts had three children, Mrs. Jean S. Warden, Mrs. Margaret S. Lemont and William C. Scott '52, and 10 grandchildren. Mrs. Scott may be addressed at 11 Foster-town Road, Newburgh, NY, 12550.

Bob Crowell at the ripe old age of 72, has just taken up golf. Finds it fascinating. From Grand Rapids Fred M. Deane reports "The only news about me is that I am still alive after 3 years of retirement. We travel some, especially out to Tahoe where our son lives and works. He is 34-years-old, is now president of the Nevada National Bank and, like me, graduated from Andover."

The following is a note from Gordon A. Donaldson, M.D. "After 46 years following graduation from the Harvard Medical School, I am still moderately active at the Massachusetts General Hospital as a senior surgeon. I have been involved in a number of outside activities over the years, both surgical and civic, and life continues to be full. Our periodic excursions to Isle au Haut, Penobscot Bay keep us rejuvenated and optimistic about the future."

Dick Dole is married, has 2 sons and is working as a title abstractor for a title firm in Honolulu. The following is a note from the Right Reverend Richard S. Emrich, 10442 Sun City Boulevard, Sun City, AZ 85351, "After serving as Bishop of Michigan for 25 years (48-73), we retired to Arizona, where we are enjoying ourselves greatly and are as active as we want to be. In the church I look upon myself as part of a reserve corps, ready to help when needed."

Coly Hardy, while touring southern France, visited Domaine Saint Jean in tiny Villecroze. "This is a delightful country estate (built around an ancient castle) in the midst of a garden/vineyard. The wines were superb and, hopefully, will be on sale in the U.S. ere long. Unfortunately, Allan Hersh and wife, Denise, were in the USA indoctrinating their children on the wonders of the Wild West."

Reports Bob Judge, still practicing law/accounting in Arlington, MA, "If all goes well, Millie and I will spend 6 months in Bonita Springs, FL soon."

When you visit Charleston, SC, take time to see the Gibbs Museum where there's a tribute to Dudley Vail '30: a Book-Binding Center set up as a memorial by his many friends.

"Your grandfather was a lawyer, your great-grandfather was a lawyer, and you're going to be a lawyer!" That admonition from his mother was the beginning of R. Clarke Smith's legal career, and, as he says now, "It never occurred to me to question her authority to tell me that. I just went ahead and did it."

Clarke Smith, or the Colonel as he is known to his friends, is the Smith of the well-known Rutland law firm of Ryan, Smith and Carbine. At 72 he is the senior partner in the firm as well as the Chairman of the Board of Bar examiners for the state. A recent visitor to his home on Grove Street found Smith working in his garden at sunset, wearing his Boston Red Sox cap and wondering why anyone would want to hear what he has to say about the many years he has been active in local and state affairs. These are the opening paragraphs of a lengthy article in the May 7, 1981 issue of the Rutland Herald, containing biographical data concerning Clarke's education, his military career as a field artillery lieutenant colonel during World War II, including participation in the landing at Normandy on D-Day plus 2, his law practice and his involvement in politics. The story is a great tribute to an outstanding statesman.

We have been informed that Edward Paige Dean passed away suddenly on June 13, 1981 as a result of a heart attack. He and his wife, Jane, had just celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary on June 10. Mrs. Dean may be addressed at 449C Grace Street, Greenwood, SC 29646.

James R. Adriance

On behalf of the Class of 1928, a warm welcome herewith to Don McNemar as Phillips Academy's new headmaster and successor to those we've known during and since our days on Andover Hill — Al Stearns, Claudie Fuess, Johnnie Kemper, Ted Sizer. Thoughtful and enthusiastic reports from a variety of sources, including Hanoverian colleagues and neighbors, indicate clearly that in Don and his wife Britta, PA has acquired an extraordinarily able and dedicated team that bodes well for the future of the school. Over the years '28sters have shared in criticism, sometimes vigorously, of various administrative policies — in particular the abolition of fraternities and the advent of coeducation. But I think it's fair to say that no class within recent memory has been more consistently loyal and generous to Andover, in its financial support and in invaluable service and leadership in the many roles in which alumni backing is so vital to any institution. The media and books like David Owen's High School make all too clear the dilemma facing our secondary schools in these times. Andover doesn't claim to have all the answers in training its young people for "the Great End and Real Business of Living", but it is close to, if not at, the top of the U.S. secondary school heap. In tackling his new assignment, Don McNemar will need the strong support of alumni and alumnae, as well as faculty, students and parents. Let's hope that the Class of 1928 will continue to lead the pack.

And now, to meet the early Sept. deadline of the hard-driving, no-nonsense Bulletin editors, these notes are concocted in the waning moments of the season customarily dedicated to solar-flecked omphaloskepsis and sniffing the flora in the manner of Ferdinand the Bull. When and if you read them, kindly accept the very best wishes of the compositor for Yuletide '81 and all of '82.

For openers, a good letter from Don McLean, in response to felicitations on his stepping down as trustee pres., described the dinner that marked his retirement, as well as those of Honorary '28ster Ted Sizer and Trustee Jack Cooper (of the fuzzy-cheeked Class of 1931). 1928 was further, impressively represented at this Gala Soiree by Rog Murray, Al Rowland, and Bob Walker. Orchids to Rog for being named "Employee Benefits Man of the Year" by Pensions World Magazine, and to him and

Agnes on proud grandparenthood of Deborah McDede Murray, offspring of Roger 3rd, '65, and wife Linda. — Telephonic confab with indefatigable, indestructible, in-trepid, incredible Class Agent Rowland revealed he had recently completed a 3-day, 43-mile, 555-foot drop, Outward Bound sponsored, whitewater expedition on Utah's Green River in preparation for a 36-day, globe-girdling air trip scheduled for Oct. Of the Utah pilgrimage he hinted that once is probably enough, despite his youth. Of his Alumni Fund devoirs, to which he applies himself so assiduously and successfully, he reported sadly a lapse on the part of 2 or 3 previously faithful donors, and gladly a most generous, 4-figure from a classmate unheard from for several years. It is to be hoped that all concerned will be "back on the books" next year as evidence of support of new Headmaster McNemar. — A well nigh matinee idol photographic likeness of Bob Walker, complete with no necktie, graced the verbal "Portrait" of Classmate W. in the attractive brochure describing the kick-off of the Addison Gallery's $4,765,000 fund drive, of which he is chairman, with eminently suitable background as chairman of Swarthmore Art Dept., Print Collector, 1928 Pot Pourri illustrator, infectiously enthusiastic Addisonian. — Returning to the topic of linkspersonship previously featured in this space, Bill Chapman wrote of 1979 hole-in-one at Scotland's Gleneagles with 6-wood on a 192-yd. hole ("downhill and downwind"), followed "not to be outdone" by wife, Patricia with a 1980 Lyford Cay ace with 5-wood, into a "blind spot" cup, making for extra rejoicing and Bill's entering Pat in the Drambuie "Rusty Nail" contest. This provides the winner with a 1-week tour of famous Scottish courses, plus all expenses paid and $1,000 "pin money" (pun intended?). There has been no subsequent word re. success or failure of Drambuie venture. — Heinie Fenn reported from Gainesville, FL, home base, of son Sandy's '59 vice presidency of Bristol, Conn., Union Bank & Trust; summers at Adirondacks lake retreat where gather 5 children, 11 grandchildren; grandpaternal reading, puttering, fishing, splitting wood. "Teaching 1 course a year" at U. of Fla. Law School. "Mary is painting madly in preparation for a one-man (woman? person?) show next summer." — From Harger (Wells) Dodge in Milwaukee: "Still enjoying retirement after 15 years sampling. 6 weeks in Jamaica. Attitudes much more buoyant and spirits better under new P.M. but a long, slow process recovering from 8 years of Cuban influence. July and August at summer place in northern Wisc. Get to board meetings of old company when and if I'm in town, just to keep my finger in the pie." — Similarly eschewing the wintry blasts of Barneveld, NY abode, Fred Baldwin has a cottage for 4½ mos. on Scotland Cay in the Bahamas off the coast of Abaco, relishes "lovely, clear water, fishing, beaches, boats, etc." As of April he was "blowing my 1909 silver cornet daily, as I must be in shape to play with a Williams 1932 classmate and his band in June for reunion doings. I remember the Riveters so fondly." (and so does the drummer, Fred, particularly the breakfast dances in the recently burned Peabody House and "one more chorus" of Sweet Georgia Brown) — Tardy for inclusion last time around, a magnum epistolary opus from Dave Dudley spoke of many things, including 5-day educational conference in Las Vegas (of all places) in which he squandered nary a nickel on 1-armed bandits or more advanced separators of hopeful pilgrims from their bankrolls. David was on a panel considering the use of computers in college admissions and confessed to being invited to "present the Neanderthal point of view alongside the sophisticated modern." In planning for the program, the local computer predicted a 500-1,000 person audience. "So we sat on the platform, all five panelists, waiting for the audience. And four people came. My point of view toward the computer was respected." A subsequent experience with the N.Y. Times circulation dept. ("Do you have your cancelled check? Do you understand the problems of the computer?") did little to allay the "inherent (Dudleyan) distrust." No word since re. resolution of this hassle (if any) or of possible move from Columbus, Miss. to more equitable, somewhat less steamy summertime climes.

More next time, including Egg Lewis' involvement with "4 mortal, fat feet of quintessential rattler." Don't miss it.

MERRY CHRISTMAS

A nice note from Dinty Moore, a fifteen-year former secretary who gave me many useful tips on how to perform this task and also news of his own family and classmates. Dinty continues to live in Darien, CT with two of his children and their families living close by. One daughter is married to an Italian and lives in Florence, Italy; ditto a daughter of Art Rogers. Webb Briggs, troubled with failing eyesight, still maintains his wonderful sense of humor. Charlie Reed and wife, Helen Marie, are living in Stuart, FL.

Bill Dinsmore, now living permanently in Bay Head, NJ and who is still active as a public relations consultant, had an interesting article in the spring issue of Public Relations Quarterly, "Must Litigants Be Mum in the Media?" They never are. The lawyers who are trying cases in court take a dim view of clients who, also at the same time, want to try cases in the newspapers.

After 10 years at the National Academy of Sciences in Washington, D.C. Perry White retired in 1977 and lives in Chapel Hill, NC. Still not ready to quit, he is a teaching aide at Chapel Hill High School four hours per day. "All very agreeable girls and none over the age of twenty-one."

Ed Traxler is enjoying the first year of retirement. He doesn't say how, but maybe Perry White needs an assistant teacher's aide.

That is all my loquacious classmates have told me. I do have the following sad news to report, although those of us who have survived 70 years should feel blessed.

Bob Anderson died at the Sydney Farber Cancer Institute on June 27, 1981 at the age of 71. Bob, as we all remember, suffered from polio as a youth, but through determination, became a fine swimmer both for Andover and Yale. Although he was unable to play football, he loved the game and was singlehandedly responsible for much of Yale's success over the past 40 years. He attracted to Yale from the Chicago area, many of its best, in every sense of the word. He was a loyal friend and we shall all miss him. He is survived by his wife, Doris, and son, Robert G. Anderson, Jr. and his daughter, Abbe. Doris may be reached at Scudder Ave. Hyannisport, MA 02647.

It is also sad to report the death of Scotty Calahan who died in June in Leisure City, FL. Scotty was a master at the Hill School in Pottstown, PA and was dean of the faculty at his retirement in 1973. Among his survivors are his wife, Edith, who may be addressed at 14455 S.W. 293rd St., Leisure

City, FL 33030.

The last of my sad news is that Hall Stiles died in June, survived by his wife, Harriet, and four children. His wife is at 97 Beach Bluff Ave., Swampscott, MA 01907. He was the owner and president of a department store in Lynn, MA. He was active in civic and charitable affairs in Lynn. Like so many Andover graduates, a blessing to his community.

Dear Abbot '29ers —

Such a busy summer! — and I hope yours was fun too. There is not much news to report — I do miss Polly when I come to report our class doings! I am sure you all join me in sending our sympathy to Charlotte Butler Plummer whose husband, James, died on July 17, 1979 after a short illness. Duffy Newcomb Smith and husband, Arnold, spent two delightful months last winter cruising on the Royal Viking Star to the South Pacific.

Charlotte Osgood Bennet invites us all to stop and see her as we go through St. Augustine, Florida, where she and her husband are escaping the "long, cold winters, the rampaging ocean, and the constant maintenance of a house by the sea." I am so appreciative of those of you who have so generously responded to the suggestion of a memorial to Polly, and it is good to hear what you are doing. Mary MacDonald writes that she is in good health, enjoying an active retirement, boating, travelling, and cutting grass!

Jane Linn Gale's husband, Ken, has had a hard year with several bouts with surgery but hopefully, is on the mend. We wish him well! Betty Taylor Amazeen has moved to 60 Greentree Lane, South Weymouth, MA 02190, which must be quite near Marguerite Neville Batchelder. Both Eleanor Jones Bennett and her husband have had difficult physical problems but Eleanor keeps busy as a trustee of the Record Ambulance, works with senior citizens and loves being involved in local politics.

I have just spent a delightful couple of days with Barbara Folk Howe who has been in New England this summer. While she was visiting me, we had word from Duffy that Gay (Grace E.) Stephens had died August 21 at her home in Easthampton, NY. This was a real shock although I had known Gay was in poor health for years. I remember so many happy times with her and she will be greatly missed.

Your Secretary, once more, finds a paucity of classmate news. The indefatigable Ken Keenly was elected last year as city treasurer (for 4 years) of Ontario, California. To his financial expertise he's added skill as a certified graphoanalyst applied to personnel selection. He says, "In addition I am doing a lot of public speaking before many groups on a variety of subjects such as: Handwriting Analysis, Survival in the Desert, The Beauty and Legend of Oriental Art, Golfing in the 1920s, A Look at Life 60 Years Ago, and Elements of Humor. Still playing golf twice weekly and enjoying life to the utmost." Obviously Ken's doing something right!

"Chick" Whittelsey is active as a realtor with his own firm in Greenwich, CT: Gateway Properties at Whittelsey & Associates. Your Secretary spent two weeks this past summer aboard a mail ship touching at Norwegian ports and making its ultimate destination Spitzbergen and the polar ice cap, 79° - 58' North, a fascinating, if chilling experience, with photos to prove it.

YOU make class news. Please, let's have it.

Dear Classmates: — Much appreciation to a few who replied. Midge Turner Fisher's chatty note says "How nice to hear from you. Dick and I are fine and enjoy life at Hilton Head. We play a lot of golf and Dick has a part-time job at the Sea Pine courses. We are involved with some volunteer projects. Our three daughters are scattered. Janet in Mountain Side, NJ, Carol in Glenview, IL and Sal in San Francisco. We have six grandchildren — 3 boys and 3 girls. Janet has 4 and Carol 2. Our oldest granddaughter is a senior at Bucknell. Oldest grandson a sophomore at Lafayette. They are the Jerseyites. The rest in grade school and high school."

Flossie Balus (better known to me as Florence Gardner) writes "When most people have been or are about to retire, I have gone back to working! By profession I am a dietician (was for 14 yrs.) and my avocation is bridge. I am doing both. I am a kitchen supervisor and a bridge instructor. Also run a duplicate bridge game at the Groton Senior Center. I enjoy both phases."

Christine Hollands Struck picks up my nickname used only at Abbot and given to me by Eleanor Ritchie Doepken. "Dear 'Smitty': Janice and I just had a couple of days together at her home near Wilkes-Barre, PA. Jan and George have a charming house trailer in the countryside where deer feed and bluebirds nest in a house that George built for them. We exchanged stories and pictures of grandchildren and plenty of laughs. In other words 'No friends like old friends'. We'll forever be grateful to Abbot and all the faculty etc. that gave us such a full basis for our past years."

Now here is a very special notice to all our class regarding a classmate Elenita Cowee Chickering. She was the project director for Handwrought Silver 1901-1937 made by Arthur J. Stone. A show of this silver took place August 17, 1981 through September 30, 1981 at the Library of the Boston Athenaeum, 10½ Beacon Street, Boston, MA. I was sent the complete project brochure of this show. A splendid piece of work Elenita, hats doff to you.

Hank Crawford is one of two known '31 retirees to have settled down in Wilmington, NC. The other is Ange Smith. Hank enjoys the year 'round golf and fishing and reports that Ange and Twinie gave a rousing Kentucky Derby party at their house on Middle Sound. Our class's master carillonist, Bob Covell had promised to climb the 112 steps of the Memorial Tower to ring the bells for our 50th. Fate intervened when Bob was injured in the collapse of a roof in 1979. We have quite a bit of news this time, some that arrived too late for the summer Bulletin, but I'll run it all together, by the alphabet (maiden names).

Betty Bigler deMasi and her husband, both retired, are building a house in the country — she doesn't say where, but I guess in Maryland — and they are doing all the work themselves: "fun, exciting and time consuming." Since Bill and I have been doing the same thing for four years we know exactly what she means. Betty Boyce is also retired from her job as assistant head catalog librarian at Brown University Library and after an operation to get a new knee she moved to Yarmouth, Maine. New address: Juniper East, B1, Yarmouth, Maine 04096.

Kay Brigham and Gardner Callanen had a grand trip to Europe earlier this year, staying at a 16th century chateau (with 20th century plumbing) in Belgium and then two weeks in southern Ireland. She says: "We found a whole-hearted welcome from the Irish people despite the tension of the North Ireland situation which is ever present."

From Wells, Maine, Helen Cutler Appleton writes that for five weeks she has been sitting or hobbling around on crutches after having broken her knee (doesn't say how) but was glad she was in Maine where she can watch the hurricane waves, read a lot, and enjoy their many visitors. Flop Dunbar Robertson and Randal had several weeks last spring in Yorkshire, the Cumbrian fells, London, Shropshire and Surrey, the most unusual aspect of which was a blizzard in Yorkshire. This summer they were able to get to several Tanglewood concerts from their summer home in Massachusetts, after she returned from her 45th reunion at Mount Holyoke. Flop says two of her offspring have been moved to Texas, one to San Antonio and the other to Austin.

News from the twins: Betty Holihan Giblin and Jack went to their son's marriage in Indiana and greeted (long distance) the arrival of their fourth granddaughter in Africa. Marie Holihan Foley also has a new address: Century Village, 33 Winterwood Drive, Londonderry, NH 03053, which she says is a delightful townhouse, quite a change from their old, lovely Victorian house, but so comfortable and convenient that she doesn't miss the latter at all. She and Betty have been golfing with Helen Allen Anderson a couple of times this summer and Betty said, "She's good!"

Susan Johnstone Milliken started a sabbatical leave in February and took enough classes at Columbia University Teacher's College to finish 60 points above her B.A. She doesn't say what's next, except that she will probably continue to teach (math for the New York Board of Education). Molly Marshall Dudis, on the other hand, retired in June '79 after 22 years of teaching 3rd grade; at first she missed it terribly, but now is thoroughly enjoying a more leisurely life, especially a 7-week trip around the world in '80! This fall she hopes to go to Czechoslovakia, Hungary and Austria and then return to Athol, to her garden, bridge games, and church work.

Dorothy Rockwell Clark, still teaching aspiring lawyers how to pass law school entrance exams, says she hasn't much news except that she is so busy she quite forgot that 50 years have passed and we have a reunion next year, adding, "I wonder how many of our classmates still have access to the Abbot-Andover world, i.e., could send grandchildren there. How lucky we were." Bill and I had a chance to see Dorothy several times this summer when she was at Lake Sunapee, but we still haven't held a mini-reunion with the Andersons and the Wylies.

Jean Will Wilson who lives in Pittsfield spends her summer growing, drying and making "yummy" herb products which are sold at the Berkshire Garden Center, a hint for those who might be in the area next summer.

Finally, those who plan now or hope to be at reunion: Betty Bigler, Helen Cutler, Flop Dunbar, the twins, Molly Marshall, Dorothy Rockwell and I. Let's hear from some of you others out there!

We have one — count'em, one — note from PA '33 this time. Being the eternal optimist, we conclude that you have all had fantastic summers and will be writing forthwith to regale us with the particulars. In the meantime, we are shaking the mothballs out of our Humphrey Bogart suit and trench coat and preparing to do some intensive sleuthing. No one will be spared. Be careful, though, about swatting that late fall mosquito; it could be your roving reporter in disguise.

Having embossed a halo over his head in his Pot Pourri picture, we report from our lone correspondent, Dave Haviland, good news and bad news: the good first, the approaching marriage of daughter Cathy, for which Dave was preparing with arthroscopy on one knee (now there's a devoted parent!); the bad news, said arthroscopy (had to see if we could spell it a second time) has "slowed . . . program of golf improvement." Anyway, congratulations and commiserations are tendered herewith. Also, thanks, heartfelt.

We have several notes from the Alumni Office which we regret having to pass along to you. We have just received word of the death of Edward S. Underwood, Jr. We have no further information. The Alumni Office also has notified us of the death of Harold L. Colbeth. He is survived by his wife, who lives at 16 Haddington Lane, Delmar, NY 12054. William C. Chester died on 29 March 1981 of cancer. We had not seen Bill for some years, but we shall miss knowing that he is there. He was a loyal Andover man. His wife Pat lives at: Green Spring Valley Road, Stevenson, MD 21253.

I'm a little uneasy that someone may have noticed that I haven't written any Class Notes for a year, more or less. I was competing for the Strong Silent Type Citation of the Retiring Teachers Club. But finally — the flood. To those whose herein news is months old, my apologies. I'm trying to make up for it by retiring from the faculty, moving to Boston, where Betsy practices law at Houghton Mifflin, and devoting 100% of my time to the Class of 1934 news. We leave this Friday (Sept. 25) for a month in Italy.

Did you know that Bob Sides has won new sailing laurels by finishing seventh in the Etchells World Championship, sailed off Marblehead in August? Joe McMahon, my childhood buddy from Pittsfield, has broken "radio silence after 47 years" with a promise to write more soon. Now here's a role reversal: Dick Phillips, retired USMC Major, is active with Evelyn's antique doll business. Bob Adamson "in retirement" is busy, with Kay, as Director of the College at Sixty Program at Fordham-Lincoln. Don Badger recently lost his wife, Jerry, but consoles himself with the multifarious activities of his sons, grandson, and two granddaughters. Ed Olsan reports that he enjoys following the news of Andover and its educational innovations, which he wishes others would follow.

Everyone who writes expresses pleasure that Tom Campion has been willing to become our new Class Agent. About Tom and Nardi — I found an exhilarating news story in a Dartmouth publication, reprinted in part as follows: "Yes, the Executive Director of the Dartmouth Parents Fund is a Harvard graduate, . . . but, we don't mind a bit. In addition to his other claims to fame, Thomas B. Campion, H'38 is the parent of three Dartmouth graduates, Tom Jr. '65, Edward '67 (Med. '74), and Russell '79.

Tom's career, prior to joining the Campaign for Dartmouth in 1977, has included: an 8-year stint with Proctor & Gamble; 23 years with the New York Times where, in the last seven years, he was Director of Operations; 3 years at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst campus, as Vice Chancellor for Administrative Services; and finally 3 years at Deerfield Academy as Associate Director of Development.

Tom is married to the former Narcissa (Nardi) Reeder, a well-known author (Little Brown), and recently the President of the Wellesley College Alumnae Association. They have five children. Tom and Nardi were not unfamiliar with Hanover, and they have taken to (and been accepted by) the "green scene" with gusto.

Tom probably should have been a Dartmouth man. At age 64, he can be seen riding his bicycle about town, playing tennis, or skiing. He and Nardi have been extremely active in their support of local social services, their church, and various educational and political programs. They are doers, not spectators.

My second big story about a prominent member of the class concerns Fran Belcher, who for over 25 years has served tirelessly as Executive Director of the Appalachian Mountain Club and in that time has become a legend of the mountains. A feature article in a recent Boston Globe recalls some of his exploits, including the expansion of the membership from 5900 to over 25,000 and his early membership in the 4000 Footer Club. It also notes his first contact with A.M.C. in the 1930s as president of the PA Outing Club. Fran's early career was as legal counsel for the Boston and Maine Railroad. He has combined his knowledge of railroading and mountaineering by publishing last December Logging Railroads of the White Mountains (250 pp, 60 photos), available through A.M.C. in Boston.

Well, there's much too much to tell about Fran in this limited space, but he retired last October, was made an Honorary Member of the AMC, was awarded the Unsung Hero Award of the Massachusetts Conservation Council — later became their treasurer — and was recently made Bulletin Editor and Trustee of the Mount Washington Observatory. Fran, in retirement, is not at all retiring.

For those of you who received the recently mailed cards with such a short deadline, please send me some news for the next time. This time a nice response from Betty Jamison Crandell. "Married in 1936. Lived three years in Hanover, NH, where John was attending Dartmouth. After Pearl Harbor, John went into Military Intelligence. We moved to Bronxville and have spent all of our married life here except for three years in Los Angeles. We have three children, two boys and a girl and five grandchildren, two in L.A., one in Indiana and two in New York. John is publisher of Money Magazine and retires in April. We retire to Sawgrass, Florida, which is in Ponte Vedra. Will have been married forty-five years in September. Still play tennis but the 'Bing' seems to be missing in my cannonball serve."

So another classmate moves to Florida. My count is now eight. Wish we could have a mini-reunion at a central location, perhaps in January. I have names and addresses in St. Petersburg, Largo, Sarasota, Boca Grande, Palm Beach, Ponte Vedra and Vero Beach. Any others who come down for the winter please get in touch with me. Maybe we can work something out.

A few classmates have wanted to be brought up-to-date on Lowell Clucas and his status in our class. After several efforts I have extracted this fine letter from him. "You have requested me, a New England expatriate residing on the Pacific Coast, to clarify my Andover status: Was I — Am I — a member of the Class of 1935? Or was it — is it — '34?"

"I regret leaving this matter open for the past 46 years. Will you accept this tardy explanation which may clarify my peculiar status. This problem arose because I was one of that remarkable breed, The Williams Hall Whiz Kids, closet 10-year-olds half aged with precocity. Although entering school in the class of '34, I was hardly 14 at the end of senior year. Certain faculty members believed that a student of such absurdly immature vintage would clearly benefit from a fifth year of Andover seasoning. Shortly before registration in Sept. 1934, I had the misfortune to fall from a roof while endeavouring to retrieve a stray shuttlecock, in an incident that cost me two broken ribs. Confined to a bed and under various parental constraints, I was absent when '35 began the fall term. When the ribs had healed, I had lost so much time that I went to New York to learn the trade of a switchboard operator for an impoverished insurance agency, a process that consumed the next several months. Subsequently, I can report, I joined several members of Andover '35 at Yale. Now a sophisticated man of the world, it is with this distinguished group, which, of course, includes yourself, dear Charlie, that my loyalties lie. I trust old friends in '34 will understand. As self-appointed alumnus of Andover '35, I operate my own consulting business, Harlan & Clucas, Inc. on Montgomery St., San Francisco, commuting to the city from Menlo Park, a mile from the campus of Leland Stanford, Junior University. I know, Charles, that you will be enormously relieved to have the record set straight. I am happy to claim '35 as my adopted class, if it will have me."

We'll have him and adopt Clucas, won't we '35'ers? Wasn't that a great letter?

Our good classmate Bob Reigeluth was awarded the Mory's Cup at a dinner in New Haven on May 14th, writes Norm Cross. Norm said that he had great pleasure in the "roasting" of Bob's ribs. Bob was cited for the great things he has done for Mory's, for Yale Fund raising, for improving Town and Gown relations, and for making New Haven a more attractive place to live. Congrats! Bob.

Al Adams writes that he and his wife Lucy spent about six weeks this winter on the Carribean Island of Carriacou, which is the southernmost of the Grenadines and part of the country of Grenada. Al reports that it is a delightful spot except for the growing influence of the Cubans. However, Al says that all are friendly on the small island. Al further reports that his new book (incidentally, his tenth) is now out. It is entitled The Disputed Lands and not The Endangered Lands, as reported in my last column. It is an account of the Far West from the Rockies to the Pacific from the time of the first white man to the end of the frontier.

We regret to report the death of John Francis Adams on May 21st at the Boston City Hospital. You may recall that Johnny or "Jo Jo" was a non-returning middler. Although from Exeter, NH, he enrolled at Andover and thereafter spent most of his life in politics. He was a Republican but in 1958 he went over to the Democratic side for a few years. Adams made political hay out of this famous name, but he never claimed kinship with the John Adamsons of Braintree, the second and sixth American Presidents. Adams held many political offices and appointments in MA and NH. His obituary in The Boston Globe was one of the longest your Class Secretary has ever read. What a political life he had! Adams was buried in his hometown of Exeter.

Now for several updates. Two columns ago I thought I had covered Bob Cushman quite well. This spring Bob received an honorary degree, a doctorate actually, in Business Administration from Anna Maria College, Paxton, MA. Some of his other connections I didn't know about at the time of my last writing (but I do now) are trusteeships of the Worcester Polytechnic Institute, The Worcester Foundation for Experimental Biology, and the New England Aquarium. He also serves on the Boards of Sturbridge Village and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

You will recall that I asked Pete Soutter in this column if he and Miss Hadley Soutter, the new school president of Phillips Academy were related. I gather from what he wrote that she is his grandniece and he reports that she is most attractive, bright, and talented. Pete has moved again and his present address is Treetops, 34301, Hilton Head, SC 29928.

Why don't some of you 1935ers pick up the pen and drop me a line about yourselves? I think I'm going to be facing a scarcity of news for my next column. I'd enjoy hearing from you.

A note from Betsy Armington Arms arrived just "under the wire" to be part of these Bulletin notes. To quote from her letter, "We've just returned from our usual summer on the Cape . . . Dick took early retirement as of Jan. 1, we sold our home in Pittsburgh and moved back to New England on April 20. We bought a small home in Noank, CT where we are absolutely delighted to be — in sight of Long Island Sound and the mouth of the Mystic River, which starts, incidentally, under the bridge on our oldest son's property in Old Mystic. It's great to be back and near our schools and colleges for the next round of reunions, football games and our children. We have four grandsons by two of our three sons. The bachelor, our youngest, practices architecture in Chicago but plans to move back to Boston eventually. All is well with me . . . I am busy getting our new home and the grounds ready for the winter and, at the same time, sailing as much as possible, so it's slow going." Many thanks, Betsy, for bringing us up-to-date. Welcome to Connecticut!

In June Barbara Chamberlain MacCready's son was married in Chicopee, MA. Joining Barbara for the festivities were Francie McTernan and Pres Coan, Ellie Johnson DuToit, Wes and me. At the reception luncheon I sat next to Barbara's son-in-law who had bicycled all the way that morning from Newton. That seemed an amazing feat to me. Barbara, her daughter, granddaughter, and Ellie came the more conventional way, by car!

Later on this summer the same Abbot foursome got together for another mini-reunion weekend at Frannie's in Sheffield, MA. We were part of a huge crowd (18,400) attending the concert at Tanglewood August 21. The evening ended with the cannons booming at the conclusion of the "1812 Overture," followed by fireworks. It took us over an hour to get out of the parking lot — Ellie shared with us highlights of her trip to Sweden and Norway taken earlier this year with one of her daughters — Frannie has just written that she is taking a September trip to Orinda, CA to visit her daughter and family. Their move from Westfield, NJ to California makes this first visit very special.

My husband, Wes, who had never visited the Cape, was introduced to its wonders when we spent a week of vacation there in August. Highlights of the trip were seeing two Abbot chums. We stopped in Harwich to see Skip Murphy Garrison who was her charming, hospitable, humorous self in spite of the inopportune hour of our stopping by.

Barby Rheinhart Livingston (1936) and I have had the chance to see each other only briefly on a couple of occasions since Andover days. I was pleased to learn after calling her on Martha's Vineyard that she was free for a get-together. Barb and her husband Dee met us at the boat, gave us a tour of the Island, and served us lunch at their charming spot on Chappaquidick on a hill overlooking the water. We talked and talked until it was time to return to the boat for the two-hour trip back to Hyannis. The day had been very special. An extra treat was meeting their daughter and her two darling children.

Reviewing the computer printout of our class membership list, sent from Andover, I note some changes in address. Surely you must have some news to share regarding these moves. Please share your Christmas newsletter with me for news to make the next Bulletin.

Lou Dolbeare writes "to applaud the idea of a 50th reunion gift to PA in honor of Fred and Mel's many years of dedicated work. This is a worthy undertaking and in five years the class should be able to scramble together something more than a pourboire!"

Lou goes on from his Washington, D.C. address "there's no exciting copy to be had from this Capitol Hill house spouse. Our most memorable activity lately has been a house party of children (and one grand; no sweepstakes entry here!) and old friends to celebrate our 25th anniversary. Cushing continues her ex- and in-tensive activity as president of the National Low Income Housing Coalition. This is the organization she founded that has now become generally recognized as THE organization in lobbying the Congress and the administration for housing for low income people. My contribution is continuing (and, in the best PA manner, I hope, complete and gracious) domestic support; also, a bit of volunteer work in the office when, as is true not too infrequently, the coalition's activities become frenetic. We enjoy the considerable cultural life of Washington — and seeing friends passing through; Come sample the hospitality!"

Your "scribe" is greatly indebted to Lou for his letter. It was the first I received from a classmate in response to my first Class Notes.

Other words have come from: Fred Donaldson — "Since the Dept. of Public Welfare terminated its regional office structure, I have been assigned to program planning in our central office (Boston) out posted to Worcester." And then adds cryptically "We'll see what comes of this." Fred Field writes "I am semi-retired. Work part time selling shoes at Morton's Shoe Store in Rutland, VT. Rest of my time is spent fishing, hunting, camping and working around home. You skiers might want to drop by Morton's."

Russ Bessom — (that is the Colonel out of Corrales, New Mexico) sent his regrets (and a contribution) at not being able to attend the 45th Reunion. Parke Masters wrote the following news to Fred Stott: "Son, George Eyre, was married last November to Deborah MacVicker of Warren, NJ. They are now living in San Rafael, CA. Daughter: Sarah Woodroffe, married Dr. Jay Clark Buckley, Jr. in Summit on May 30th. They are both Cornell graduates, will live in NYC while he interns at New York Hospital. Sarah also received a MA from Penn and is a research/editor with Norback Publishers," (two marriages within six months, where does all the gold go?)

House Speaker (Mass), Thomas W. McGee is on the podium and is saying "this is my 25th year in politics and along the way I've met some wonderful people. Chet is one of them." Chet is our own Chester L. Nourse, Jr., chairman of the board of the Lynn Five Cents Savings Bank. The place is a testimonial breakfast sponsored by the Lynn area Chamber of Commerce. The occasion was Chet's August 1 retirement. In case you have forgotten, Chet went on to Princeton, Harvard Business, WWII Navy Lieut. with his last duty as communications director for the port of San Francisco. War stories — he's got them. A great career. Chet, what are you going to do now?

Thanks for news about yourselves. Now I would like to put the finger on some of you that are beginning to be just memories. Let's hear it from Ted Ballard, Gerry Bradford, Ted Childs, Ted Day, Harry Groblewski, Hank Gross, Bill Hegeman, Bob Knight, Rollie Mersereau, Howie Roome, Ted Sharretts, Jack Swartz, Schuyler Van Ingen, Bill Watson — all members of the silent minority. Next issue more will be added to my hit list.

As far as grandchildren, Jack Kausel reports three grandsons, one granddaughter. The significance of the granddaughter is she is the first female born to the Kausel family in seven generations. Politically the Massachusetts Kennedys better watch out. There must be enough Kausels around to start their own party.

One of the nicest reunions imaginable took place in Torquay, Devon, England in mid-August when Peter and Paddy Stericker entertained Nan and Fred Stott over a weekend. It was the first "reunion" for Peter in 45 years, and he was full of interest in the Andover of 1936 and the Andover of 1981 (thanks to the Bulletin) and classmates such as Ted Ballard, Loring Reed, John Bishop, Mel Chapin, and many others. Peter and Paddy are superb hosts — as easy and relaxed in their welcome as they are warm in their invitation. 1935-6 at Andover was a special year for Peter, sandwiched in between his English schooling and the start of a career in investments which included India, followed shortly by WWII service in the British Army and three long years in a German prisoner-of-war camp. The Stott's will long attest to the hospitality and cuisine of Paddy and Peter, plus dogs Rosa and Trilby . . . and the great beauty of the Devon coastline!

It is with sadness we report the death of Dwight Allyn on June 26, 1981 (after a long illness). He is survived by Marjorie Peaslee Allyn who may be addressed at 3200 South Ocean Blvd., Apt. A-401, Palm Beach, FL 33480. Until two years ago, the Allyn's lived in Branford, CT. Donations in Dwight's memory may be made to the Princeton Alumni Fund, Class of 1940.

Word has been received of the previously unreported death of Arnold Nye on April 20, 1973. He is survived by his widow, Margaret Simmons Nye, two sons, a stepdaughter, and a stepson and sister.

Our 45th Reunion is now just around the corner — next June, in fact! Mindful of the great job Pat Deming did organizing and running our 40th a few years ago — and Yale '41s 40th last June — I called him a few days ago to seek his help in planning for our 45th. He promised his help — but said I would have to wait a while for it as he and Anna were about to leave for a three-week trip to England. His help is worth waiting for! Among the members of PA '37 attending the Yale reunion last June were, Dines, Ehrman, Fisher, Heck, Kiphuth, MacCarthy, Jack MacDonald, Sheft, Bill H.Y. Stevens, Tweedy, and Ware.

Jack Ware has been appointed by the Executive Committee of the Andover Alumni Council to a four-year term on the Class Agents and Alumni Fund Committee. His Alumni Fund efforts have garnered grist for this column as well as funds for Andover: he reports that Wally Chessman, Professor of History at Denison University, is engaged in preparing the pictorial history of that university's 150th anniversary, and that Howie Selby is planning on early retirement, "while I can still do things" — Howie will spend much time at his summer place, 7,000 feet up, in northern Arizona; but he does get east from time to time, as one daughter is an interior decorator in N.Y.C. and another is a commercial lending officer at First National Bank of Boston, and hopes to get to our 45th next June!

Last July a trustees' meeting of the North American Electric Reliability Council in Portland, Oregon, gave Pat and me all the excuse we needed for a four-week drive out to and through the Pacific Northwest, including Vancouver Island. Unfortunately, we were not able to see Spence Ehrman in Portland, but otherwise the trip was a smashing success.

A group of Abbot classmates from the Class of 1937 met in September for lunch at the Wentworth-by-the-Sea. It was a regional get-together of those living in MA, NH and ME. Those attending were: Skeeter Ransom Tucker, Nancy Burns McArdle, Sally Gage Curtis, Alice Brennan Rock, Pri Richards Phenix, and yours truly. Much news was exchanged. Skeeter and her husband visit their daughters frequently. One lives in Syracuse, NY and the other is in North Carolina. They occasionally stop off to see Betty Joost Todd in Maryland on their way south. Nancy has a daughter living in Atlanta and another daughter is a biologist living in the state of Washington. Her older son lives in Portsmouth, NH and the younger boy has just graduated from Tufts. Sally has two sons at home, the oldest and youngest. Her daughter works in Boston and is home on weekends. Alice has two sons at home too. She also has a son teaching at the Univ. of Toronto and a son who is a priest. Alice is still working part time at Jordon Marsh. Pri is still holding the fort at Channel 11 in Durham, NH and can be seen and heard when they have Fund Raising phonothons.

Ruthie Hill Haberland writes from NJ that she has three sons all happily married. All three have gone into the accounting field and two of them are CPA's! Two of her sons live in MA and the other in Manhattan. She also has three darling grandchildren. She and Roy are making plans for a 4th European trip this coming fall and will "do" Germany. They had a great trip to the Orient two years ago. They are still living in Montvale, NJ.

Three other classmates also live in NJ. Jan Nevius in Flemington; Joan Todd Hathaway in Rumson; Anna Walton Ernst in Morristown and Marge Williams Crothers in Princeton. Marge is an interior decorator.

The Pennsylvania contingent includes: Martha Sweeney Read in Gladwyne; Betty Swint McFarland in Telford; Barbara Pierpoint Craig in Pittsburg and Mary Athy O'Brien in Scranton.

Cooper City, Florida claims Cyn Holbrook Sumner. She teaches and her husband is a sales manager. Barbara Waite Lincoln lives in Nokomis where her husband is in insurance and Mary Emily Pettengill Smith-Peterson, our 45th Reunion chairman, makes her permanent residence in Naples but comes to Lunenburg, MA in the summer. You will be hearing from "Pet" soon all about our coming Reunion next June 11-13, 1982. Pat Burdine lives in Sumnerfield.

Four classmates live in New Hampshire. Skeeter Ransom Tucker in Portsmouth; Pri Richards Phenix in Durham; Margaret Bain Cross in Dublin and Betty Melcher Anderson has recently moved to Grantham.

Betty Joost Todd is still raising horses on Greenbank Farm in Monkton, Maryland and Bunny Risley Stever lives in Washington, D.C. Ruth Rose Stothoff recently moved to Tryon, North Carolina.

Heading west we have Anne Sawyer Greene in Dayton, Ohio where her husband is a stockbroker; Janie Stevenson Wunsch in Traverse City, Michigan; Betty Jean Wilson Tennant in La Porte, Indiana and Mary Wilson Brown in Kenilworth, Illinois.

In Texas we have Millie Collens Laurens in Austin and Bar Randolph Bowman in Houston where she is a state employment counselor.

Farther west we have Janet Caldwell Klos living in Kirkland, Washington and Jeannette Partridge Harrison in beautiful Pebble Beach, California where her husband is president of Loomis Sales. Corinne Brooks Cornish has recently moved to San Francisco, CA and her husband is a professor of art.

Betty Inman Kirkpatrick writes that she and her husband are now spending the winter months in Deltona, FL (111-M Caribbean St.) and summers in Milton, Nova Scotia, Canada. They have 7½ grandchildren. The one due in April will be born in England and she will go overseas to be there for the event. She and Bob spent three delightful weeks there last October. Betty is into arts and crafts and playing lots of golf.

The class extends its deepest sympathy to Pri Wonson Hahn whose sister Lib died last summer and to Charl Boynton Connors who lost her father last July. My mother passed away last October a week before her 97th birthday.

Keep the news coming. Hope to see you all at our 45th Reunion next June 11-13th.

Prior to September '81, Joe Koch's last note to me was, I think, for our 1963 "Yearbook." This is one of the joys of this job, picking up with old friends. Joe has joined the retirees — in name at least — after 20 years with Boeing. He and Alice live at 4030 134th Ave., SE, Bellevue, WA 98006; their three offspring are all married, one living in Maine and the other two in Seattle. Beside some traveling Joe fills up his time with gardening, fishing and woodworking. Coupled with that lovely area, it sounds enviable. I gave him Henry Steinhardt's address, Henry living at relatively nearby Mercer Is. Another retiree is Andy Palmer and he is thinking of leaving Long Island for the mountains of North Carolina, or possibly Puget Sound! (So see above, Andy.) The Palmer's acquired a second British grandson a year ago.

Ted Yardley is moving to East Falmouth, MA, on Cape Cod after 11 years as Head of the Religion Dept. at St. Paul's School. He says he hopes "for a penultimate non-retired career . . . to go on doing something useful." He and Barbara have a younger family, their 13-year-old being still at home; a 19-year-old at college, and one a news director, WFEA, Manchester, NH.

Bob Gardner's career somewhat parallels my own: 32 years practicing law, but in his case with the same firm, one founded by his uncle Henry, P A c.1902. Bob has seen that firm grow from 18 to 90! The Gardners' kids are scattered from Florida to Maine, and he's glad he's through the college bit. The only '38ers he has seen are Stevenson and Wilhelm. Again, it's been a long time since I've heard from Bob, and many thanks to you for writing.

A very attractive Wendy Cohen (Marty's daughter) was shown as a prospective bride in the Sunday NY Times for July 5, 1981. Wendy was a Phi Beta at Rutgers (I missed this by a small margin . . .) and is an advertising and promotion copywriter for Time, Inc.'s Home Box Office.

I called Sandy Murray, whom I have not talked to for many years. He lives at 24 East Broad Street, Bethlehem, PA 18018, and has been in the legal department of the First Valley National Bank in Bethlehem for five years. He still has two in college (Mt. Holyoke and Connecticut) and a married daughter in Oregon. He has seen Scotty Bowen and Scratch Kranichfeld, neither of whom I've heard from in some while. Scotty is with the Columbia Univ. Alumni Magazine so he ought to sympathize with my efforts here. Sandy's father, a retired Rear Admiral, USNR, is probably known to some of our V-7 ensigns of WWII. He was skipper of the "Prairie State" in N.Y.C. I went to see him in August. He's 92, a fine guy, and it was he who led me to Sandy.

Tom Whelan is first in with the most news. He and Norma celebrated their thirty-seventh wedding anniversary by moving into a new home, fortuitously located within two blocks of the Waialae Country Club. Tom continues as professor and chairman of the Department of Surgery at the University of Hawaii Medical School. "All six children are finally out more or less on their own." In descending order by age, Sharon is a pathologist at the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology, Tom, Junior, is a teacher in Honolulu, Rosie is a nurse, mother and actress in Baltimore, Sally lives in Cambridge and will make art her life's work, Chrissie is talking her dad into sponsoring her for a Ph.D in Italian Literature at the University of Padua, and Mike is attending Brooks Institute to become a cinematographer. Tom's stationery commands immediate respect. Its crest is a single star signifying Tom's rank as a retired Brigadier General. Success hasn't made him stuffy. He is still the proud owner of the green tie adorned with tiny jock straps which he won at the fortieth for having come the greatest distance.

I am grateful to John Blum for news of Jack Walsh and Gordon Tuttle. Jack gets great joy from his three grandchildren and satisfaction from his work on the Board of the Millard Fillmore Hospital. He settled for a 95 on his last round of golf. He describes himself as "snow white but in great shape." Gordy is executive vice president and general counsel for AVCO and lives in Darien. His eldest (a son) graduated from the University of Virginia, the second (also a son) is at Princeton and the youngest (a daughter) attends Williams. He notes that they are "hedonists who go to colleges with beautiful scenery."

Bob Applegate writes that he is still working as a volunteer for the Christ Truth

League and "would not trade it for anything else."

I am sad to note the death of Frederick F. Davis, Jr. After graduating from P A, Fred received his degree from R.P.I. and was a project engineer with United Aircraft for twenty-nine years. He belonged to a number of yacht clubs and was a director of the Maine Retired Skippers Race and Commodore of the Mount Desert Sailing Association. He is survived by his wife, Isabel, a daughter, Emily, and a son, Stuart. The home address is Landfall, Blue Hill Falls, ME 04615.

Lucia Buchanan Livingston writes that she and Ralph have finally joined the grandparent ranks. Their daughter, Marnie, and her husband, Eric, had a son last November. They try to visit as often as possible. Their son, Kipp lives in Boston, has his own importing business and is still a bachelor. Barbara Bellows Kaiser reports that she and Bill are still both working, playing tennis and sailing. They love Florida. Barbara wonders why more people in the class don't give just a little something to Andover.

When I make a mistake, I really make one. The following letter explains:

Dear Stu:

I find it difficult to decide whether it is flattering or unnerving to read elegiac but premature comments about my demise. Time has scathed me the expectable, but I still exist.

One of our classmates was Edward H. Mahoney, who died about a year ago. His parents lived in Newton, Massachusetts, and I think he was in the Navy in WW II. My parents, who lived in Boston, did entertain many of our classmates, and I was in the Ski Troops, so I am sure that you were mistakenly referring to me in the April 1981 Bulletin.

His obit appeared in Boston papers, the same mix-up occurred, and word spread that I was dead. As a result, my appearance at various, subsequent festivities scared the hell out of a number of people I know but do not see often. To avoid similarly frightening any classmates I may bump into, I would appreciate an explanation in a future copy of the Bulletin.

Sum ergo — cogito?

With happy memories, Ed.

My apologies to Edward F. who lives in Wellesley Hills! I can say, as Mark Twain so aptly did, that we are all delighted that reports of his demise were somewhat premature. At the same time I extend our deepest sympathy to Edward H. Mahoney's mother. This error should never have been made for I had the opportunity to entertain Edward H. some years ago when he was the very able director of Art for one of New York's largest advertising agencies.

On a further sad note, I have to report the passing of two other classmates, Winston Price and Edward Knight. Winston, as pointed out by the New York Times, in a fulsome obituary was pre-eminent in research on the common cold and viral infections. Ed Knight was prominent not only in law and the Legislature in his beloved West Virginia, but also as the custodian of a family-owned show place — the famed Tuscavilla Farm, a 315-acre estate dedicated to selective swine breeding. Both men were a credit to our class and Phillips Academy with their great dedication to public service and I extend our belated sympathy to their families.

It's a long way from May to September, but a local postal strike prevented receipt of gleanings from the Alumni Office, so forgive the absence of Class Notes in the summer issue.

Malc Donohue, our faithful treasurer, not only caught my Mahoney "faux pas", but also forwarded news that Butts Macomber had received an honorary degree from Roger Williams College in Providence. Further news of Butts tells of the great job he is doing at the Metropolitan Museum.

Bill Hayler, old salt that he is, continues to instruct by precept and example at the California Maritime School. This year he took his pledgling officers on a cruise to Tahiti and Tonga, retracing Captain Bligh and the Bounty's course. Bill has recently edited a revised edition of the American Merchant Seaman's Manual — Cornell Maritime Press — a steal at $25.00 and a must for amateur sailors and navigators. Now that Norm Bemis's progeny have flown the nest, he has sold the family homestead, and moved with Dottie to an apartment nearby. Norm has retired from the rigours of retailing, and I for one wish him a happy relaxation.

Pete Wiseman also became a gentleman of leisure forsaking General Motors Overseas for a life of ease in Chatham, MA. Pete says there's an open door for any sea-faring classmates in that area. Dick Ogrean is the latest member of the 40's grandfathers. Jack and Betty Malo spent a week in Bermuda in May. We had, as always a pleasant get-together, and I can report that Jack, despite recent eye surgery, still strikes a tennis ball with the same authority he did at Andover. Bruce and Libby Benepe, both looking most fit, also sojourned here in June. It was good to hear from Bruce that Gid Upton makes steady progress after recent surgery.

News from various sectors of Connecticut advise that another Bush is preparing to hit the campaign trail. Pres, I gather will seek the Republican Senatorial nomination for the Nutmeg State next fall. May all good fortune attend him.

And now, as the days dwindle down, I leave you with the "bon mot" of a classmate who prefers anonymity. "Dear Stu: Do you remember the salt peter they put in the milk in the old days? Well, I think it's beginning to take effect!"

P.S. News from Walt Curley advises of a class first, I believe: "Mabe" Child's daughter, Sally, to marry "Knobby" Walsh's son, Alex, September 19th.

As your new Class Secretary, I am fortunate to begin with Joan's Reunion report, which is her grand finale to a job well done.

Forty years? Our Fortieth Reunion? It seemed impossible but there we were, ten of us plus four gallant husbands, trading memories of four decades. Present were Beverly Brooks Floe and Nancy Whittier Atkinson with husband Ralph of Massachusetts; Josephine Hartwell Boddington and Bill from Colorado. Julie Nelson Williams and Red from Virginia; Frances Troub Roberts up from Connecticut; Doris Jones Hannegan and Bob arriving from Illinois; Emily Mills Courtice all the way from California; Nancy Kelley Park from faraway Oregon; Margery Martin Martin and your correspondent, Joan List Van Ness, with Steve, from New York.

From Friday evening beginning with an Andover-Abbot combined cocktail party at Davidson House, hosted by Scotty and Ann Royce, till a final brunch on Sunday morning, we had a fine old time of it. Rain at the barbecue supper? A mere bagatelle! The weather was glorious the rest of the time and the town and campus never looked more beautiful.

We enjoyed the reception for incoming Headmaster McNemar and outgoing Headmaster Sizer, (headmasters certainly look boyish these days!) and paraded with spirit on Saturday morning. We cheered several kinds of good news at the Annual Meeting of all Alumni/ae. And we ate dinner and danced that night at the Lanam Club. Cheers for the husbands who saw to it that we all got to step out on the dance floor. And we proved the youthfulness of our spirits later at an after-the-party party at Bishop Hall where most of us were quartered.

But the most special occasion for us was a luncheon at the Sheraton Rolling Green Motel — a ladies-only affair where we were joined by two very great ladies indeed, Miss Hearsey and Miss Sweeney. At last we could demonstrate as a group the love and gratitude we feel for these wonderful women. How we wished you all could have been there with us and with them.

After luncheon Beverly Brooks Floe had something exciting to tell us about. It concerned the establishment, at the time of the merger of Abbot and Andover, of a foundation known as the Abbot Academy Fund. The Fund is a part of the Phillips Academy endowment and the income from it is used for educational purposes consistent with the ideals and traditions of Abbot Academy. The directors of the Abbot Academy Association recommend to the headmaster projects on which the income should be spent. A unique feature of the Fund, thanks to Bev's hard efforts, is that Abbot women will always have considerable influence in the management and administration of the Fund. It is also possible for any of us to make gifts to the Fund. Kudos to Bev for her work on this.

Sunday morning was a time of lingering farewells and final confidences and then it was time to go our separate ways. But we all send our greetings to all of you and our heartiest thanks to Dorie Jones Hannegan who organized this memorable reunion.

Joan has served us well and deserves our sincere thanks. News from Addie Waterhouse MacKay with regrets over missing our 40th. She & Phil are now living in St. Augustine, FL and love it. Bob and I had a brief visit with them in their new home a couple of winters ago. Addie dug out her Abbot photo album and we had a ball reminiscing and cackling. I, too, am sorry she couldn't make Reunion.

Eleanor Rafton Gordon welcomed a new granddaughter on Aug. 3, 1981. Little Bethany Rose Gordon is the daughter of son, Alan, and his wife Pamela, who live in Londonderry, NH.

Peggy Little Dice's son, John, was married last October '80 to Janis Lasden, and they reside in Peabody, MA. Her daughter, Meg and husband are living in Honolulu where she's teaching in Straub Hospital's "Healthing" program. Daughter, Betsy, lives in Salem, MA and works for a graphics firm in Reading. Youngest daughter, Suzanne, recently graduated from Mich. State University.

I also have a new granddaughter, Anne Gifford Sherman, born Aug. 24th to our daughter, Judy, (Abbot '67) and Marcus Sherman. She was born in Bangkok, Thailand where her father is on assignment for 2 years with VITA. They love it there, but this old grandma isn't very enchanted with having them on the other side of the world; tho' photos and tapes help somewhat to bridge the gap.

Reunion was great in all ways! One aspect which touched me deeply was to find everyone truly interested and concerned about fellow classmates. Despite 40 years it's pretty much the same — we had a super class that age or time have not changed.

I count on your keeping in touch. Whatever I have to offer for the next Bulletin is up to you. As class secretary, please help me make it, not break it.

Lest we forget 1982 is a Reunion year. If any of you in the western or southern states are planning a trip east in the spring or summer months, now is the time to start thinking about tying it in with the reunion weekend of June 10th. If the weather is fair, there is no lovelier time in New England than those early weeks in June. Why not call one or more of your Andover friends you haven't seen recently and arrange your own personal Andover reunion. I would welcome all the advice and help I can get from anyone. The only reason that I am acting as Reunion chairman is because no one else has volunteered. We would like to make your 40th a memorable Reunion. How can we help to do that? As soon as I return from a meeting of Reunion chairmen up at Andover I will post you on all the details.

Some weeks ago I sent out self-addressed postcards to see if I might solicit some news from a few of you. First we found out that we have wrong addresses, which means no addresses, for Walter Kingsley, Martin Feldman, Carl Badger, and Bill Barnard. If anyone reading this column can bring us up-to-date we would be most appreciative.

We did get a card back from Ken Bitting, who is still in the St. Louis area but with a new career as C.E.O. and organizer of a contract drilling subsidiary of his brothers oil company — South Ranch Drilling Company. They have rigs in North Dakota and East Texas. Ken is keeping up on his holdings by flying his own B55 Baron. His son recently married Louise Gardner, daughter of Hank Gardner '41. Another son is married and living in New York where he works for Kidder-Peabody. A third son will be married this fall while the youngest boy is off for a year of college in Germany.

Gene Lyne writes: "My new venture is Lyne-Nicholson, Inc. which developed the Venodyne intermittent compression system to prevent blood clots, phlebitis, and embolism. After 8 years of work the concept has achieved acceptance. My daughter, Susan, is a producer with Alan Ladd studios in New York. Daughter, Barbara, is vice-president of Interquest, Inc. legal head hunters in New York. My son, Dan, just graduated from law school and joins Gaston, Snow, Ely Bartlett in Boston and is married to Sarah Hollister Steele of Rochester, NY. My daughter, Diana, is an account executive with the Ketchum agency in New York and daughter Abigail is a media buyer with N.W. Ayer in New York. Ruth and I sold the big house in Chestnut Hill and moved to Cabot Estate condominiums in Boston." We failed to note above that Ken Bittings daughter-in-law is also working with N.W. Ayer.

Frank Brady writes: "I am now Professor of English at the Graduate School, Hunter College, CUNY; and am Chairman of the Yale Boswell editions, commuting to New Haven from New York City one or two days a week. Right now I'm on sabbatical trying to finish a biography of Boswell, and hoping to raise some more money to keep the Boswell Project afloat." Bill Bixby writes: "B.J. and I had a most pleasant visit with Howie Larkin at his family compound (with tennis courts, pool, etc.) at Inverness, Florida."

Bob Furman writes from Cleveland that he is president-elect of Association for Child Psychoanalysis and director of a Nursery School-Kindergarten. His oldest daughter is in medical school and married to a Princeton classmate. His youngest daughter is Princeton '82 majoring in geological engineering.

In response to the postcard mailing, I received a long letter from George Bailey Jr., Publisher of the Winter Garden Florida Times. He has been a "community journalist" for 11 years now and enjoyed it greatly. George and Anne had two recent sad losses. His son, Terry, died in an automobile accident at the age of 22, two years ago. Last May his son, Steve, died in a diving mishap in one of central Florida's lakes. Two sons, Andrew, 22, and John, 19, are at home in Winter Garden.

Hope to see everyone who was at the 35th Reunion and at least 20 new faces in June at our 40th. HELP!

An out-of-the-blue phone call from John Bonn in La Jolla, CA, illuminated a recent evening. Nothing spectacular to report: work going well, family doing fine. Come to think of it, what could be more spectacular than that? We reminisced about cabbages and kings, philosophized about how things ain't what they used to be. Nice. Well, Labor Day is past, and it's deathless prose time again, folks!

I received a letter from Ed Hawkins just too late for the last issue for which I am sorry. Ed is now minority tax counsel for the Senate Finance Committee in D.C. He went from "majority" to "minority" in a big hurry in January, but says it was really exciting to be in the thick of the tax bill battle. Among the PA's involved in the fray were Senate staffer Ed Neff '51, Congressman Jim Shannon '69, and, of course, V.P. Bush. Ed exudes enthusiasm for his job which is great at our stage of the game.

Bill Moore has been elected a trustee of Topwood School. He and Vera are the parents of five, two of whom go to Topwood. Sounds like Bill is going to emulate the Hudners or Farringtons!

I returned from a late (late not long) lunch one afternoon in July and spotted a guy who looked very familiar, sort of a cross between Monty Wooley and Sebastian Cabot, reading a paper in our boardroom. I was pleased to have same identify himself as Lou Kutscher. It's really amazing to see whata full set of whiskers will do to a familiar visage. In Lou's case, I thought he looked great. He and Joan had recently returned from a camping trip on the West Coast where they visited the Kingerys, and saw the Bishops and the Sterlings.

Speaking of the West Coast, Reg Collier recently called and during the conversation told me of his attendance at this year's Bohemian Club outing in San Francisco as a guest of Bob Beach who is a member along with Len Richardson. There has been a lot of press about the Bohemian Club in recent years because many of the most prominent businessmen, politicians, theatrical people and other prominent citizens belong to this all-male organization. Guess what organization doesn't like this at all. Gil was there for a week and says that it was one of the most entertaining and educational experiences he's ever had. The numbers of celebrities that they met and heard speak sounded like who's-who! He also saw Ross Hoy, another S.F. transplant, while he was there. We are looking forward to spending next weekend with Reg and Lois at their home on Long Island to hear the rest of the report.

It is with deep regret that I must report the death of Alan 'Pete' Carter on March 5, 1980 of a heart attack. He is survived by his wife, Alice Lindabury Carter, three daughters, Ms. Alice C. Hunter, Ms. Katherine Carter, and Mrs. Joy L.C. Faris; and one grandson, Peter Alden Hunter. At the time of his death he was the Chief Information Officer for the New Jersey judiciary.

I almost forgot to mention that Marv Minsky was the subject of another full-page write-up in the Sunday N.Y. Times on June 28. Marv is in the forefront of computer technology in the area of artificial intelligence at MIT, and this article had to do with the analysis of music and musical composition. Maybe a new version of The Royal Blue from IBM???

In closing may I urge you once more to get behind John Blake and the Alumni Fund. They are both worthy old causes, and John keeps on threatening to retire. Let's give him a boost this year. Just about the time the class news is coming off the press our annual get-together will be at the Yale Bowl this year for the Harvard GAME on November 21st.

Keep those letters and postcards coming!!!

Twice since last May I had the good fortune to drive down from Hamilton the "backway" through the rolling farmland of Upstate New York, along beautiful Lake Otsego, with a lunch layover each time in that wonderful spot at the head of the Lake, Cooperstown. Kate ('80) and I did the museum and found Mel Allen much in evidence booming behind every giant blowup of Speaker, Kyler, Ruth et al. When Sheila and I cruised through in September, the crowds had gone and it was easier to view the splendid manse of the spa's namesake, that ancestral hero of our own classmate, James Fenimore Cooper. I was reminded in a letter from Folger "Frenchy" Oudin earlier in the season that Jimmy Cooper is, indeed, not lost as reported in this book last winter. He and his wife, Edna, reside in gumbo country, Lafayette, LA, where Jim is a geologist for the oil boys.

One note not too clear in the last jotting had to do with Jonathan Rogers, who became mayor of the 3rd fastest growing city in the country this year. If you should find yourself passing through El Paso, call City Hall, maybe he'll buy you a taco and a glass of Lone Star. Jon has done about everything down in Texas. Can Austin be on the horizon?

Reunion Aftermath: I reviewed riotous shots taken by Heard at the Phelps's picnic. This was one nite at the Yale Club with Cy and John Friday. Cy's back in town. Friday: golfing in Greenwich, toiling on Wall. Duer Mac and his old roomie, O.J. Anderson had their own reunion at a coming out party in Locust Valley. Speaking of the latter, a nice letter from Jim Mellor invites all down to Arizona to buy a chunk of sand along the "finest golfing development in the United States." A group headed by Jim is developing a huge tract (thousands of hectares) in the land of the perpetual sunshine, and there are still a few minor plots available. An envelope of Kodacolor "winners" from the SLR of Kate Begien brought the June weekend back into focus and led to a wonderful weekend in Brookline with the Begees — Harvard/Dartmouth Game and the head of the Charles, where we encountered numerous Andoverians. In late August, we spent a grand day with Mary and Cam Paradise at the Scudder-Paradise compound on Shelter Island. Tennis, boating, lunch — all within sight of our beach just across the bays in out-hold. Thanks to Lee Nutt, the Baltimore attorney, and Audrey and Paul Fisher of Islesford, Maine for their kind letters regarding the 35th.

Summer marriages included Otis Chandler to Bettina Whitaker of Tulsa on Aug. 15th, and Bob Wexler to Joanne Brown in July in Boston. We were lucky to meet Joanne with Bob at the Reunion.

Caught backstage at the Amateur Comedy Club in September were Caroline and John Macomber, following the opening night performance of your Sec'y in "Steam Bath."

So long for now, lads. Have a wonderful Holiday season, and send along the good word.

Dear Class,

There is news of several of you and I fully intended filling you all in, but after rereading Winnie Teeson Keller's letter to us I would be unfair not to share it: (June 10)

Dear '46ers, one and all:

I'll certainly think of all you good people gathered together after THIRTY FIVE YEARS! I actually had to stop and do the math for that one on a piece of scrap paper because I simply can't believe it! I will have a difficult time envisioning you somewhere on the PA campus and not in Draper or the chapel or all over the Circle. I can only hope that a nice long report somehow gets printed . . . Have a glorious time!

As for news, I really can't think of anything startling or particularly interesting about me or us, the Kellers. Our children are all grown up and have long since fled the nest, so to speak. Meredith, A.A. Class of '72, is married and lives in Rochester where she is assistant to the director of an organization which does educational research. No grandchildren nor hints of any so far. They've been married for nearly six years but are locked into careers and enjoy that. Sue, a printmaker, works for a publisher in Cambridge and does all the free-lance art work she can find time for in Boston and Cambridge. Gordon is a cabinetmaker and works for a small custom furniture design group in Boston. I work mornings for the chaplains here at Williams College during the academic year, but am now on summer vacation which is just lovely. We will be away for the month of July, some in Maine and mostly on Lake George where we keep a sailboat and camp on one of the islands.

But August is usually very pleasant around here with good summer theatre and Tanglewood so near and the livin' is easy. Frankly, we are looking very hard for a place to live up around Ellsworth, Maine — Penobscot region. Would like to find just enough land to grow most of our own food (either in the ground or on foot), sail, cross-country ski, weave and perhaps run a very small restaurant. When that happens, that will be news. All of us are very active in the anti-nuclear weapons movement: Ross and I being especially involved locally. No, I didn't support our "fellow alumnus" George Bush.

We had just moved to Williamstown and hardly decided where to put everything or unrolled the rugs when Patty R. and her husband stopped for a visit and that was delightful. If ever any of you are out this way we would love to see you. We're easy to find on the edge of the campus and down the street from the Clark Art Institute. I do always hear from Georgia Lee at Christmas time and have been meaning to write her a decent letter, especially in response to her note last Christmas — Geordy, are you there, old dear?

My Abbot is really all of you people, Alice Sweeney with her keen insights and marvelous wit, dear wise old Miss Roth with her causes and effects, and Miss Gay down in the Draper basement classroom, who with her wonderfully wrinkled, dry hands described man's artistic endeavors through the ages in a way to enrich my life forever. It is all so much a part of me that you might say I enjoy a reunion daily throughout my life and in this I'm sure I speak for all of us. My very best wishes to all of you for a happy weekend. I should mention that a wedding is keeping me away.

Love to all,
Winnie

P.S. I just remembered — Over a year ago I was doing my weekly volunteer stint at the Williamstown Women's Exchange when a woman strode in wearing "good, sensible walking shoes," a navy blazer/pocket emblem (may even have been Abbot's) and a tweed skirt. She was bringing things in on consignment but was at the other end of the room from me. It was very busy at the time, but as soon as I could I checked out her card and, lo and behold, it was Barbara Humes?! She looked exactly as she looked way back in '46! Well, I immediately tried to find her but she left immediately so I never got to talk to her. I mean, she hadn't changed! At all!

Thanks, Winnie. I couldn't have said it better, or as well. A real tribute to Reunion. All of you, keep on sending news of yourselves and your families and we'll have an update next time. I am delighted that Mary Howe Brumback has moved to Chicago. Have spoken with her and hope to see her soon.

Love all round,
Luty

This June, as Andover sends forth her class of '82, earlier classes will celebrate their reunions. For us, our 35th! You will be getting more information on particulars, but do plan to join in what promises to be a thoroughly enjoyable weekend, June 11-13.

The following is an excerpt from a newsy letter from a very busy guy, Joe Champlin: "I have continued for the past three years to be involved in diocesan administration for the diocese of Syracuse as Parish Life & Worship Vicar. That is my full-time task. In addition I help out on weekends in a large suburban parish in Camillus, New York. At the same time I have continued extensive speaking around the country and giving a number of retreats for priests. This probably takes me 50,000-100,000 miles a year. In addition I have continued my column which appears in about 15 Catholic papers around the country. During that time I have published 3 more books plus a cassette series. Several of these have dealt with the question of the dying and grieving process. That particular area of concern has become a major concentration during the past two years. I also do a daily 5 minute radio program and have done some national television including an appearance on 'Firing Line' with Bill Buckley and a monthly 2 minute segment for a pioneering Catholic series called 'Real to Reel' patterned after P.M. Magazine. Like all in our class, I presume I passed the great 50 divide and found that did not go by unnoticed nor unfelt. Part of the mid-life change (or as one of my classmates called it for me — the beginning of entrance into old age) was to have a marvelous opportunity to buy 300 feet and 7 wooded acres on beautiful Skaneateles Lake. I am in the process of building a camp there and have found already the investment has done wonders for my physical, emotional and spiritual well being."

Bill Rosenau continues to serve Andover, this time as chairman of the "Advisory Committee on the Search for the Secretary of the Academy" seeking a replacement for Fred Stott who will retire in June of 1982.

In the category of inferences from a new address list: Al Blackburn has returned from Oxford, England to continue his teaching career at the University of Colorado. Jim Boyce has moved from New Jersey to Leawood, Kansas. Geoff Kimball, formerly of Bennington, Vermont, now resides in Clinton, NY. Harry Slifer, still with the State Department, has returned to Washington from Jakarta.

I'm sorry to have to report, belatedly, on the death of Miles Levine. He passed away suddenly on June 18, 1979 at home. His survivors include his wife, Joan B. Levine, children, Kenneth, now twenty and a junior at Harvard University, Daniel, 17 and entering Syracuse School of Art, Karen Anne, a high school sophomore, and a sister, Sally Sommerfield.

Carol McLean Bly sent me a short note adding additional information about her book Letters from the Country published in May by Harper & Row. "It has two direct references to Andover and Ted Sizer in it (specifically to the STI program) and the book is dedicated to Alice Curtiss Sweeney, AA '14, who was advisor to COURANT in '46-'47."

Believe it or not our 35th Reunion is coming up June 11-13. Be sure to put it on your calendar. If any of you would like to be on the committee with me, I would appreciate hearing from you. Let's get together for a fun weekend!!

New addresses: Shirley Sawyer Fletcher (Mrs. James), Ringtop Road, Kingston, New York 12401 and Barbara Turner Ives (Mrs. George S.), 1411 Kimlira Lane, Sarasota, Florida 33581.

Two of my postcards cast upon the waters floated back with news from Lee Booth Witwer and Sally Lunt Weatherall. Lee and her husband, George, are still in the newspaper business in Kendallville, Indiana. Their three daughters are married and the Witwers are grandparents of Dorothy Jane Housholder, born July 26, 1979 and Peter Richard Stolz, born February 6, 1981. Their daughter, Violette Witwer Fernandez, will graduate from Georgetown Law School and son, George, was graduated from Amherst this year. Sally Lunt Weatherall has a new job as executive director of the Ipswich River Watershed Association. This spring, with her father, she travelled to Germany and England to visit nephews in Bavaria and her son, studying in London.

Rosemary Jones is an editor with Gale Research publishers in the company's Fort Lauderdale office. She recently founded an association of free-lance writers, Writers Bank. The latest word on our littlest class baby — Jeremy will be entering the third grade this fall.

I am sorry to report the death on April 28th, of Carolyn Jenkins. Jackie Kay Schlosser attended a memorial service held in May at the Riverside Church in New York City. Carolyn's professional life was involved with the theater and with opera. At the time of her death she was serving on the Theater Advisory Board of the state Commission on the Arts, the Advisory Board of the American Stage Festival and the Board of Concord Players. The class extends its sympathy to her father, Walter Jenkins, of Concord, New Hampshire.

I recently spotted Jim Brown sampling the chow line at Trinity College. His daughter, Lisa, and my son, Andrew, are entering the freshman class there this fall. Jim and Sidney continue to live in Darien, CT, and Jim commutes to New York City, where he continues to be in institutional sales with Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette, Inc.

Sandy Bowers presides over Stewart Capital Corporation, headquartered in New York City. Stewart Capital was one of the pioneers in developing a federal oil land acquisition service, inventing a computer program to analyze the monthly oil and gas lease offerings on government lands and selecting leases on which clients purchase chances on the offerings, the winners of which are selected by government lottery. Needless to say, it has been an exciting business in recent years.

Peter Grant's daughter Hallidie has completed her year as the first woman president of a Dartmouth senior class and moves on this fall to Bankers Trust Company in New York, where she will be in the Banking Department Training Program. Peter saw Dick Lombard at the Dartmouth graduation and reports that Dick is heavily engaged in Dartmouth's capital campaign.

From Frank Jewett comes news that he is remarried, to Marguerite Thomas, a painter and writer on food and nutrition. Frank is practicing psychiatry in New York City and teaching a course on Values and Ethics at Columbia Medical School. Frank's children of his first marriage are Ellen, PA '77, who graduated last spring from Wesleyan, and Hilary, PA '82.

The New York Times of August 25, 1981 carried a six-column story recognizing Ed Packard's literary success as the originator and principal author of the Choose Your Own Adventure children's books. The books are aimed at 8-to-13-year olds and allow each reader to write his own story by making two dozen choices that can lead to as many as 42 possible endings. According to the article, there are 4 million copies in print; 8 of the 11 titles published so far were among the top 25 juvenile best sellers at the B. Dalton bookstores in June; and a recent Publishers Weekly survey ranked the series sixth in popularity among all children's books published last year and this.

Class agent Barry Phelps, ever vigilant for new ways to track down non-contributors, is currently president of Computer Identification Systems, Inc., a company newly organized to manufacture and market forgery-proof identification cards. Barry's early summer communication reported that he planned to be remarried in late August, to Angela Absher. Barry and Angela will live in Sacramento, California, where Barry may be reached at 874 57th Street, Sacramento, California 95819.

Old soldier Fred Reynolds dies recently that he would retire from the Army on July 31, 1981 (something to do with "maximum length of service"), but expected to be recalled to active duty immediately for at least a year. Fred will be, as previously, in the Office of the Secretary of Defense, working on overseas construction programs, particularly in the NATO area.

Si Spengler and I have enjoyed our work with Andover's new Planned Giving Committee. The Committee is developing and will be communicating in due course a number of programs designed to be of financial interest to both the School and the donor. We believe they will be worthy of serious consideration by each of you who has an interest in the future of private secondary education in general and Andover in particular.

I am sorry to report that Jack Peckham died in a helicopter crash in Westchester County, New York last May. At the time of his death, Jack was president of Peckham Industries, Inc., White Plains, NY, a construction materials company. The crash occurred as Jack and the helicopter pilot were returning home in bad weather from a business trip to several upstate New York cities. Jack is survived by his wife, Janet, and two sons and a daughter.

Similar sad news concerns Tony Escoda, who died in early September at Memorial Sloan-Kettering in New York. Tony, who was the first Asian to head the Philippine news operation of The Associated Press, later became managing editor of the Philippines Herald. The newspaper was closed after imposition of martial law in 1972, and Tony then joined Asia-week, a Hong Kong based weekly, and also worked for NBC radio. He was most recently a consultant to the Philippine News Agency in New York. His wife, Isabel, and two daughters live in New York City.

Heard from Anne Stevens Bailey this year. A happy surprise. She and her husband, George, PA '42, own a weekly newspaper, The Times, in Winter Garden, FL. Definitely a family enterprise, they edit, publish, report, sell advertising and clean up. Their sons are Andrew, 21, attending college and working for the family paper; and John, 19, who is in the nursery business. Tragically, the Bailey's oldest son, Stephen, died May 2, 1981 in a diving accident. Their second son, Terry, died 2 years ago in an automobile accident. Our deepest, deepest sympathy to the Bailey family.

Tita Gonzalez Mann reports a good strong marriage of 29 years, with two married daughters, one in law school, one a teacher, and two sons at Dartmouth and Deerfield respectively. Her husband has a new business and Tita helps out there, as well as involving herself in a myriad of community and church activities. They manage time for back-packing and a 1980 trip to Nepal!

Janie Woolverton Wrench was incredibly newsy this year, which is only fair since she writes about once every 10 years. Happily, she includes news of other classmates in the San Francisco area. She's working for ITTEL, a leasing company, and raising Jacob, 15, and Lydia, 12. Jacob is entering high school and Lydia is a clarinetist and a gymnast. (Janie's daughter, a gymnast!) She sees Edna Bogardus who lives 17 miles away in Marin County. Ed sings in the choir of the Unitarian Church where Joan Webster Post's husband is the organist. Are you following this? Ann Sarolea Bartholomew was in San Francisco a year ago with Sara, 20 and Katie, 16. Son Jamie, 19 was in New York. Ann and Alec live in London where he is sr. editor of a publishing company. I'm grateful for all news first or secondhand.

I was stunned to hear from the Alumnae Office of the death of Barbara Hamby Beatt on August 3, 1981. I have no more information other than the stark announcement. Our condolences go to her husband and family. Hard to accept that such a bright, vital person is gone. (See obituary)

Please keep in touch. Love to you all. Jeff.

Last week I went to see "First Monday in October," starring James E. Brodhead, Walter Matthau and Jill Clayburg. As reported here some months ago, the plot has to do with the advent of the first woman Justice of the Supreme Court. It is a timely and highly entertaining film, in which Jim Brodhead gives a very polished performance as Marshal of the Court, with all the unction and pomposity that one imagines that office could inspire. As a Washingtonian, I especially enjoyed the film and I commend it to all of you — not least the 78% of you who are lawyers.

Not long ago I heard from Sigurd C. Sandzen, Jr., M.D. Sig and his wife, Marcelle, in 1979 moved to Dallas, where he is director of hand surgery at the Texas Scottish Rite Hospital for Crippled Children, and also a member of the Department of Orthopedics at Southwestern Medical School and Parkland Memorial Hospital. Sig finds this combination of surgical practice and teaching both demanding and stimulating.

Mickey Fisher's son will enter Harvard this fall. This news I have from the PA student who called Howard S. Fisher, III, of RFD 4, Manchester, NH, in the Andover Alumni Fund phonathon last spring.

Having become an alumni council functionary this year, I attended PA Reunion Weekend last June and joined 1951 at their class dinner. Their 30th Reunion proceedings — splendidly organized by Colonel Bob Cuthbertson — have already been reported, but the occasion made me realize what a pity it is that the quinquennial tradition guarantees that we never reunite at the same time as any of the other people who were at the school while we were. There might be something to be said for organizing a reunion of two or three adjacent classes. In our case, this could allow us at the same time to see the elderly members of 1949, the beardless youth of 1951 and, of course, 1950 in its prime.

I am writing these notes in Williamsburg, VA, where I'm attending the annual conference of the International Institute for Strategic Studies. I hope to tidy up the matter of America's Security in the 1980s this morning in time to tour Yorktown battlefield this afternoon. I should also report that in July I left Newport and the Naval War College to return to Washington, where I'm now directing an official history program.

We recently received word of the death on November 1, 1980 of Mike Rider. At the time of his death he was president and owner of Haynes Brothers, Inc., a Ford dealership in Hoosick Falls, N.Y. He is survived by his wife, Sheila, and four children.

When I returned from summer vacation I had a note on my desk that Al Moe had called, no number, no message. He had either: (1) gotten word that we decided late one night at the 30th reunion to invite him to do an encore of his famous handstand on the boom of a construction crane at our 50th, or (2) seen in this column that his old roommate, Tony duPont, was at the reunion and wanted to know how to reach him. If it was the former, we'll look forward to the performance. If the latter, it's 2300 Via Pacheco, Palos Verdes Estates, Cal. 90274. 213/541-8635.

One of my tennis playing law partners, Herb Browne, tells me that he saw Doc

Houk on TV recently giving tennis instruction.

Jerry Lasley, who has volunteered to beat the bushes for news in the greater metropolitan area, sent me a list of people who were not in when he called or whose wives are looking for them too, together with the following news: Roger Gilbert, currently president of Oriol Corporation in Stamford, CT (scientific instruments), reports he is currently involved in the leadership of a marriage encounter program, in which he and his wife, Marty, lead weekend retreats. Recommends them to all PAers. Son, Jeff, is at the University of Colorado at Boulder. Daughters, Louise, Jane and Katrina, are attending Barnard, Tulane and the Taft school. Dick Steadman, after several years with J.H. Whitney in NY, has withdrawn as a partner in that firm and reports no visible employer. Spent the summer at his vacation home on Nantucket and will continue to concentrate on several board positions he enjoys. Bob Behan, senior vp of the Connecticut Bank and Trust in New Haven, is on the board of St. Raphaels Hospital and is active as a board member of the United Way of Greater New Haven, whose 1980 drive he led.

The September 14 Newsweek carried a note that Tony Quainton is expected to be named ambassador to Nicaragua. Newsweek speculates that the appointment of Quainton, an expert on terrorism, to replace the liberal diplomat, Lawrence Pezzullo, as ambassador may not sit too well with the Sandinista government. Tony, you've been typecast. Don't worry, it happened to Doris Day and she ended up rich.

My daughter, Emily, reports for duty as an upper at PA this weekend, leaving us with one at home. Our oldest, Grace, is a senior at Princeton and Osborne is a sophomore at UNC at Chapel Hill.

We are starting a concerted campaign to make contact with each of you for some sort of word, Lasley with his handy WATS line and I by postcard. Don't wait to hear from us. Let us hear from you.

Assuming that most of us have recovered from last spring's cavortings at our college reunions, please reserve June 11-13 for an extraordinary 30th Reunion at Andover! For what must be his fifth or sixth demi-decade since 1952, Fred Sharf has agreed to co-chair the event with your tubby scribe who joyfully awaits your suggestions and/or willingness to serve on the Reunion Committee.

Unhappily, I missed an important reunion with PA roomie Dick Sagebiel, wife Daisy, and children as they toured PA and the East last summer. Eibuh was on an extended photography expedition in New Brunswick at the time, preparing a one-man exhibition for the fall. MD Dick is at Children's Hospital of San Francisco, but with a son at PA, surely the Sagebiels will make another transcontinental run to our 30th in June!

Signing himself Rt. Rev. D. Peter McIntyre, DD, 1952 ("The Mob"), Peter writes, "As Dean of Cathedral congregation of the Blessed Pepo and Convening Bishop of the Order of Primitive Christians of the Heterodox Observance, I was asked recently by a couple to officiate at their wedding this coming summer. Last week the groom-elect flew to Saudi Arabia, and the bride-elect booked passage to London. Some sacerdotal shuttling may be required of y'r. h'mbl', ob't., & obs'q's. s'v't. I didn't have the chutzpah to ask where they planned to hold the reception. Current experimental preparations regarding the space shuttle make me slightly uneasy. Utica was shaken by Joe Falcone's dramatic announcement, "After five tries, I finally beat Roger Hinkson in squash!"

Last fall Geoff Brittin took a vacation from his Fresno medical practice to tour the East. He writes, "Had a delightful afternoon visit with Dr. Alston H. Chase at his farmhouse on School St. Extension, Berwick, ME. Enjoyed the food and lodging of the Andover Inn and (for the first time) the Exeter Inn. Attended services at the Cochran Chapel, and would enjoy playing baroque trumpet there after the new organ is installed in 1981."

Last spring Ben Gittes was appointed Elliott Carr Cutler Professor of Surgery at Harvard Medical School. As Chief of the Division of Urology at Brigham and Women's Hospital, Ben has developed a new surgical procedure to remove unusual kidney stone formations. Ben continues to lecture regularly in South America.

Bob Grossman's law firm of Roan and Grossman continues to expand, with a new office in Denver added to their locations in Chicago, Sarasota, and Kansas City.

Tony Fisher "had a busy year as usual at Moody's (despite market conditions), rating financial services companies. Continued singing with the New York Choral Society whose Christmas concert in St. Thomas Church in New York was filmed by CBS-TV. Wife Beth continues development of her flower and vegetable garden. We enjoyed a recent two-week trip to Europe to see the Passion Play in Oberammergau and visit friends over there."

After his successful leadership role in PA's Capital Drive, Eddie Elson continues to serve Andover as the Major Gifts Chairman for the Addison Gallery's 50th Celebration.

Just before his return to Santa Barbara early last spring, Charlie Greene wrote from Ice Station Fram III where he was part of the East Arctic '81 Expedition. He said, "Knowing there would be slack times during this expedition, I brought some unread mail, including the Bulletin in which you threatened us with two pages of mid-life crisis. Please go ahead! . . . There are currently 17 of us out here, carrying on various types of scientific research. Three of the 17 are women; arctic exploration isn't what it used to be! . . . Are there any other tandem bike riders in the class? Two years ago Barbara and I pedaled around Puget Sound (380 miles) and next month we plan a six-day ride around the Colorado Rockies." Our eldest son, Bill, graduated from Duke in '80 and works for the Burroughs Corp. here in Houston. Charlie, our second son, is a jr. at U. of TX at Austin. He is majoring in communications. Tommy is 19. He is autistic.

tic and attends a residential school nearby. Bruce will soon be 15 and is in the high school band. His favorite pastimes are attending movies and rock concerts. Lisa is 13 and enjoys playing the flute, scouts and parties. I seem to be doing more car pooling then ever. My husband is sr. vp of Gulf Oil Co. — U. S. We all like to boat and water ski and manage to get out most weekends to Lake Houston.

Please send me a postcard. I really need your news.

Our class will be celebrating its 30th Reunion on June 11-13, 1982. Make your plans now to attend. It should be fun!

Guess who has the highest percentage of annual alumni contributors of any class with 100 or more members? We do! And, if that weren't enough, we also have the largest number of contributors for all classes. Do you know what that means? It means that we're Number One! What's more — we're also number two! Second in total dollars contributed behind (just behind) reunion classes. Is that great? But then, look at our starting backfield of class agents: Mesics, Scranton, Shapiro, and Sullivan. How could we be anything but number one. And two.

Here's a note from Ray Oliver: "A curiosity: at this advanced age I'm about to have a first book of poems, Entries, published by David R. Godine of Boston. They're all short and lucid and look like old-fashioned poems on the page — in regular lines, even with capital letters. In all well-stocked bookstores, for those who want to join the back-to-Herrick-and-Marvell revolution" . . . Who you ask were those three toddering old men at this year's father's day weekend at Wheaton College, why Bill Bride, Fred Mahony, and Bob Maes, of course . . . The cost of a newsstand copy of Time magazine is about the same as a small house in the country, but nevertheless I went ahead and bought the August 24, 1981 copy because of its overwhelming tribute to our classmate, Peter Chermayeff. In a cover article that features his latest work Time said: "As architecture, the new National Aquarium in Baltimore is striking: as a scientific and educational showcase, it already ranks among the nation's best" . . . Time continues: "Designed by Peter Chermayeff, 45, chief architect of Cambridge Seven Associates, the building improves upon concepts the firm used in 1970 for Boston's successful New England Aquarium. Chermayeff describes the layout as similar to a symphony, with a linear structure following an "ABA" rhythm." . . . Did I tell you that Skip Cole was scheduled to be in New York to lecture at The Metropolitan Museum of Art? I read it in a museum bulletin, but I think it got mixed in with the "definitely pay next month" file . . . Carson Parks wrote me about his son who is now performing Shakespeare in Central Park for Joseph Papp. Mike Segal's son, Douglas, is also an actor, now studying at New York University . . . I know you want to hear about my trip to San Francisco . . . because . . . I saw John Poppy and Floor Kist. John, (John Ratte's old roommate) I saw, at his terraced mansion overlooking the hills of Marin County. He's still writing, and now, so is his wife, Julia. They look obscenely young — or at least did until I started to tell them my life story (it does tend to bog down a bit around the fifth grade) . . . Floor, the Consul General of The Netherlands in S.F. was good enough to listen to some of my wonderful stories until he rather suddenly remembered some urgent diplomatic business. Lyda, his wife, currently studying for her next diplomatic position in The Netherlands, felt she should join him . . . If anyone else is interested in my train ride from New York to Orlando, Florida when I was seven years old, I could probably make it in time for supper . . . As a final, personal note, I did want to mention that my father Frederick W. Kaufmann, Jr., '22, died this August. He was a great friend of the Class of 1953 and this column's most devoted reader. (See obituary) Merry Christmas . . . Happy New Year and Love.

You really are making this job much too easy for me!! Paper, typewriter, and "liquid paper" in hand, and only minutes of words to send your way.

From the West Coast comes a note from Suzanne (Suki) Kent Evans who now, after ten years of teaching, has switched careers to Hotel Administration. Suzanne and Dave happily abide with cat and dog, high on a hill overlooking the ocean. Suki sends special regards to her "look-a-like" Carole Cox, and to Dee Fleming King ('55) and would love to see any Abbotites coming her way . . . traveling eastward to Minn. we find Mimi Ludlow Crandall busy with her conignment shop featuring crafts and collectables, and a daughter in Junior High — son John is a soph. at U. of Wisconsin and Bill is a frosh. at U. of Minn.

Edie Williamson Bacon has a daughter at Andover! Rachel entered this fall as a lower middler . . . and speaking of new schools, our son Eric is a frosh at St. Lawrence U., and Betsy began her junior year at Vanderbilt, while 15 yr. old Sandy settled in for her soph. year at Shady Side Academy after an exciting NOLS Wyoming experience!

It is with deep regret that we read of the death of Karen Keating Graves. This news reached me after class notes had been mailed. I wish to share with you some most eloquent words written to me from Doris (Nemo) Niemand Ruedin: ". . . we remember her quick wit, contagious humor, sparkling eyes, and empathetic manner . . . without complaint she fought to overcome her disease . . . courage, caring, and Christ, exemplify Karen . . ."

OUR 25th — or,

WHO ARE ALL THOSE OLD FOLKS?

Actually, we aren't really old . . . I like seasoned better. Or mature. Or distinguished. Or something.

Anyway, it was great fun, and if you weren't there, you should have been. Certainly, we've all changed (except, of course, for Haj Ross, who looks and acts precisely as he did on graduation day — complete with guitar). A few paunches here and there . . . receding hairlines (Jim Taylor has overdoned this one a bit) . . . spousal reorientations (Bob Clark introduces his bride as "my new wife") . . . lots of kids.

Seems like early 40s is a good age for our crowd. We appear fit and alert, clearly capable of taking liquid nourishment. Joe Pellegrino staged one hell of a clambake for us, with Dave Zurn applauding a lot.

Speaking of kids (I was — just to go back a couple of lines), several of us are so far along that we've got kids entering (or already there) Andover. Two that come immediately to mind are Dave Paresky and yours truly, each of whom is watching lovely daughters matriculate this year. Daughters? Damn — I knew I was born too soon.

I was going to list everybody who showed up for the reunion; but I either folded, spindled, mutilated — or ate — the roster. My shaky recollection includes the following:

Pete Andel, Bob Clark, Pete Herrick, Phip Hirsch, T. J. Kelly, Lanny Keyes, Gar Lasater, John McBride, Bill Moses, Dave

Nancy Ruhlin Skala '57: don't open doors for me!

When Nancy Ruhlin Skala lost light perception three years ago, she had a decision to make. "There were just two choices — to sit in a rocking chair and let someone take care of me, or get going and do it myself." A "brittle" diabetic since her Abbot days, Nancy was an elementary school teacher all her adult life until the spiderweb-effect of broken blood vessels began to block her vision. She was the mother of an active nine-year-old, had remarried in 1978, and was immersed in teaching, family life and community work. After two operations failed to save her eyes, Nancy "got going to do it herself" without eyes.

"Every once in a while, still, I try that rocking chair; but that's not for me!" Nancy does everything about the house — cooking, cleaning, taking care of things. She is a volunteer teacher two days a week at the Voorheesville Elementary School; Nancy and George Skala co-chair the Education Commission at the Methodist Church; she also seems to get involved in all the usual little volunteer jobs that kids' mothers get, everywhere — bake for this, call for this, collect for that. "My son, Galen, is 11 now — that's day-to-day coping. I also have four stepsons, 19-26 whom we see a lot, but they aren't living here with us, so that's NOT day-to-day coping. In a small community like Voorheesville, people know me well enough that they don't treat me differently from everyone else, and that's great. They just say, 'There she goes, with that dog of hers'."

"I've always been independent, — sometimes too much so. Early in my blindness, when I was with my mother and making a cake, she watched me and said: 'You spilled some batter!' I snapped right back: 'Would you rather I stop making cakes, or take the chance of making cakes, and spill the batter every once in a while?' We both laughed, because that really symbolizes the whole situation perfectly. You just have to go ahead and try everything."

But first you have to get the right training: Nancy got hers from the New York State Commission for the Blind, which provides Home Training and Mobility Training, and she also took Braille training. The next step was to arrange to get a Seeing Eye Dog. Nancy met her Golden Retriever, Argo, at the Seeing Eye Training Center in Morristown, NJ. "After three weeks of my being trained, I brought him home where I had to train him, teaching him the routes I wanted to travel."

Nancy soon went back to teaching, now as a volunteer two days a week in the elementary science program. With groups of four students, she works on comprehension of science material, which they read aloud and discuss, toward preparing written reports and presenting oral reports to the class. She also visits other classrooms and community groups to talk about blindness. "Children can learn to respect handicapped persons and appreciate their own sight."

"Children seem to accept blindness more easily than adults, and their matter-of-fact curiosity is easy to deal with. They want to know how I can read, so I tell them about reading machines and tape recorders. I tell them there are only three things a sighted person can do that I can't — read a picture book, ride a bicycle and drive a car. They meet Argo, and understand why they shouldn't pet him. They also seem to understand why it's usually better not to open doors for blind people."

"People need to do things themselves. When you hurry to open a door for a blind person, you may make it more frustrating than letting him do it himself, even if that takes a little longer."

"Handicapped? Yes I am, but it's my theory that everyone is handicapped to some degree. Every one of us has something we can't do that we wish we could; maybe it's making good music or making a quilt. Blindness is just a further place on the spectrum. How about a multiple amputee? Now, there's a real handicap!"

"Blindness is my middle-age crisis. I'm grateful I had my sight so long for my four years at Abbot and at the University of Maine, and was able to teach school so long before losing it. I think we're going to have a whole generation of much better prepared young blind people. Now we're mainstreaming the handicapped — putting kids who lose their vision early into regular classrooms. They will be well-adjusted and much better educated. They will have more opportunities and go right out into jobs. That's great."

Paresky, Toby Schwartzburg, Jim Taylor, Haji Ross, Tony Wolff, David Zurn, Lyle Barlyn (we knew him as Barlofsky). I know there were others, and I apologize for the omission. But, at our age, the memory begins to falter a bit . . .

This is my first shot at this Class Secretary routine. Give me a break, guys, and drop me a note with a sentence or two about what's happening with you. Otherwise, I'm gonna make it up, and I can assure you, you won't like my version.

So, write me. Hell — I may even write back.

Well, John didn't write, but the word gets around and through the grapevine of his mom and Andover we know that John Ledyard is alive and well as a full professor of mathematics and economics at Northwestern. John received his A.B. from Wabash C. and then his M.S. and Ph.D. from Northwestern. He has had five National Science Foundation grants, and numerous papers and publications such as "A Convergent Pareto-Satisfactory Non-Tatonnement Adjustment Process for a Class of Unselfish Exchange Environments." It's amazing what is going on and most of us have no idea what is happening outside of our little sphere. John has had numerous other honors and activities, is married with three children and living in Evanston, IL.

Back in May it was reported that Dermot Sullivan was married to Alice Patricia Harvey in New York. Dermot is a management supervisor with Wells, Rich, Greene, and his wife is an account executive with Benton & Bowles.

That was a good month for us with Mike Cardozo 5th getting married to Haryoln Sue Lando in Washington, D.C. Mike served as deputy counsel in the Office of Counsel to the President during the Carter Administration. The bride was a special assistant to Hamilton Jordan. I guess Mike is out of a job now, but the release didn't say what he is doing now.

Dane Smith is also in Washington as the Chief of Food Policy Division, US Dept. of State. He represented the State Dept. on the three-man team that negotiated the US-China Grains Agreement in Oct. '80. Mac Gordon is working for I.M. Pei & Partners, Architects in NY. Eric Norlin has acquired a hospital equipment business away from Parke-Davis/Warner Lambert and is now on his own as Lionville Systems, which is now a household word unless you happen to be a hospital pharmacist.

Bill Weeden, pianist-composer for the group collaborated with David Finkle, lyricist for the group, on the senior musical at Andover. They wrote and performed as fellow students at Yale and after graduation were contributors to the Julius Monk revues and to the Upstairs at the Downstairs. They have written special material for Carol Channing, Lily Tomlin, and Stiller and Meara.

Two years ago, Weeden and Finkle were joined by Sally Fay who was described by Rex Reed as a "Valentine-faced performer who surrenders to the madness like a dimpled Margaret Dumont." The trio writes everything they sing, and sing everything they write, and the zonked out audience reaps the rewards.

"Empires wax and wane, states slieve and coalesce," said the Chinese philosopher, "but the scholar-bureaucrat, in my case the Foreign Service Officer — endures," writes Jack Leonard. "And, as a veteran of almost 20 years of slurping from the public trough — first in the old non-volunteer army, then as a mandarin in the State Department — I can tell you, friends, that you're getting a bargain in my services. I mean, where else but in a State Dept. could you get the services of someone who combines the penetrating insights of Bismark, the suave dexterity of Talleyrand and the eloquence of Harpo Marx — and all for $5.95 an hour plus whatever leftovers I can snatch from the cafeteria. But it's rough out here on the ramparts, friends; who knows when an ayatollah might throw a sack over my head and drag me off for a ransom? So, if any of you happen to know George Bush, or have a line on a good job in Washington, let me know will you?"

After 17 years with General Electric, Andy Fichthorn changed companies, and is now sales manager for Chrome Crankshaft Locomotive Sales Co. in Illinois.

Many thanks to those of you who sent in their news — greatly appreciated and welcome. Keep up the good work!! And let us hear from the rest of you, please. Remember, we are nearing our 25th Reunion, so begin to think about making plans to return to Andover in 1983.

Sandra Bensen Calhoun is editorial cartoonist for the Alexandria Port Packet. Her husband, Bob, is the vice-mayor of Alexandria, VA. "So far our interests haven't conflicted too much. In his spare time Bob is a partner at Sullivan & Worcester. We have three boys, all soccer players; an attack cat, a dog which thinks it's a kangaroo, and a hippy Guinea pig." Sandra was in Bay Village in late July for a family wedding and gave me a call before leaving for a vacation at the family cottage near Pentwater, MI. Certainly brings back lots of happy memories when old friends call!

From West Hartford, CT comes news of Nancy Russell Curran. "First of all — the 6 of us are busy planning a special Christmas trip to Europe this winter — probably our last "big" family trip together as young Mike will be heading to college next year! Will Eu-rail pass it in 5 countries! This past year, Mike gave me a surprise birthday (big 40!) present: two weeks in New Zealand with a few days in Fiji! Just the 2 of us — absolutely wonderful!" Nancy is now working as the therapist in a school for severely emotionally disturbed children — "interesting & rewarding!"

Out on the West Coast, Jenny New Forbes, her daughter, and her husband have just spent the first half of the year building a vacation home on the Big Sur Coast. "Returned to Taos (New Mexico) a few weeks ago in time to catch the tail end of the softball and tennis season. I have mixed feelings about weathering another Taos winter, but hope to enjoy the skiing anyway. I'd really like to make it to our next class reunion."

"I am still a speech clinician in Quincy (Illinois) — eleventh year," writes Sandra Castle Hull. "My husband, Gary, sells for Knapheide Mfg. We come East often as Cathi is a freshman at Smith and Alfred begins Andover. It's rather quiet here in Quincy! Gary travels a great deal and I keep busy with community projects, the latest being an Historical Commission for Quincy and helping to restore an 1835 mansion (not old for East Coast but old for us!)"

A long note came from Joan Foedisch Adibi. "Vickie Kohler did come stay for a few days with Siamak and me and our 3 children in our summer home on Chappaquiddick Island this past July. We had a great time . . . lots of giggles. The guests (she brought a friend from Australia) had to work for their keep. They assembled trestle legs for our dining room table so that it wouldn't wobble any more. Auto transport was verboten so they got lots of exercise on bikes. One night we went out in the harbor in our motor dinghy to observe the eclipse of the moon. It definitely bewitched us! We probably woke up all of Edgartown singing, etc. In sober moments Vickie and I did discuss what our career options were. (I'm a Reagan cut-back victim and she's unemployed because her boss at Harvard died.) She's thinking of something to do with travel and I'm looking at either public policy research or financial planning. Two years ago I did complete half of a masters in public policy management at Carnegie-Mellon University." Joan's eldest daughter, Elise, will go to The Putney School in Vermont next year as a junior. She wants to be a farmer, but also likes field hockey and tennis. Elise will be missed at home by both her parents and her younger brother and sister (ages 13 and 12). Joan hopes she and her husband can "weather this period of constant testing and questioning and rebelling . . . not to mention expense."

Jerry and I and our two children had a perfectly marvelous trip during July. We travelled to the Yellowstone area, with stops at such hot spots as Wall, SD (a la Time Magazine), the Badlands, the Black Hills, Custer State Park, Cody, Wyoming, and, last but not least, the Grand Tetons. Of course, we spent several days in Yellowstone enjoying the scenery. The trip was enhanced by a week's stay at a dude ranch near Yellowstone and a family reunion. There were 15 of us enjoying the rides in the mountains and the fantastic scenery. Our last ride was up Monument Mountain, over 10,000 feet, from where we could see the snow fields, elk herds, and for about 40-50 miles around. Hard to come back to the real world, but here we are again enjoying fall, school, and the children's routine.

Let's hear from more of you — would love to include your news in the next issue!

So what's a good card carrying preppie to do? After years of standing up for the poor, the weak, the disenfranchised, working endless hours non sibi pro bono publico, and watching the world go from staggering to staggered, we all vote for the right (or, on November 5th at least claim to have) hoping they're right, and now look at what we've got! Half a baseball season, twice the national deficit, James Garner back on TV, and Ed Koch winning both the Democratic and Republican nominations for mayor in a race delayed by the Supreme Court on account of Voting Rights Act violations in the only city outside Dixie subject to that Act's provisions. It gives one pause.

In fact, it gave me so much pause that my not writing the Class Notes for the last issue of this mag was not accidental, it was a deliberate act of civil disobedience. I felt it necessary to go underground as a protest against the vast changes that are not taking place in this country. It is with some chagrin that I report that my protest was in vain. Vast changes are still not taking place.

Two of us who are trying to change that situation deserve special mention, attention, and, God knows, well wishing. Chet Crocker is Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, and probably gets to sleep every night only by being grateful that he isn't his counterpart in the Russian government in charge of Polish affairs. And Scotty Thompson is riding the shuttle as a self-described "... plugged in intellectual..." from the Defense transition team. Scott, former advisor to George McGovern, was one of the founders of the Committee on the Present Danger, the organization generally credited with stalling the passage of SALT II in the waning days of the Carter administration.

Observing the economics scene pithily from New Haven, Willie Nordhaus has been writing some wonderful analyses of the Reagan policies, trying to determine whether or not they will have the effect they were intended to have. So far, if you buy food, houses, cars, stocks, bonds or even peanuts, the score is Will 46, Ron 2.

Ready to protect us no matter what are three of our lawyers: John Doherty joined the U.S. Attorney's office in Boston after eight years with the Massachusetts Essex County D.A., Dave Epstein left a big Washington, D.C. firm to set up his own in L.A., and Dave Rogers, still practicing in Columbia, MO, has been named to the Charter Commission which will attempt to overhaul the county's form of government.

Basil Cox, Paul Neshamkin and I continue to labor in the wilting vineyards of public television: Basil with Mr. Rogers, and Paul producing and editing programs (the latest two being "The Artist was a Woman", and "Against Wind and Tide: A Cuban Odyssey").

Fred Shirley reports two little Shirleys at Andover, and thanks coeducation for one of them; Ralph Kimball is director of Marketing for a commercial printing firm in Worcester, MA, and an active baseball, soccer and hockey coach; Keith Barbour has moved to Santa Barbara, but is keeping quiet about what he's doing there; Dave Harris is still in Framingham, MA, where he is a vice president and partner of Chi Systems, a health care consulting company; and finally, Eric Lunde's tome on Horace (Go West Young Person) Greeley is scheduled to be published this fall.

It's inexplicable, but the long overdue, post-deadline notes of typically mundane and cliched contents apparently occasionally draw the much-needed if highly varied comments of an indifferent class. Martin Quinn responds in answer to "your pathetic cries for news," while others write to question why "we don't get participation in reunions, class notes or much of anything else." There's even an occasional inquiry about starting a fan club.

Marty, who has recently joined, as one of its principals, the new San Francisco law firm Rogers, Joseph, O'Donnell & Quinn, writes that his wife Maria is still spending more time than she or Marty would like in a very successful San Francisco interior design business; the Quinn's daughter is now twelve-years-old; and "I don't even ask anymore how she spends her time." Marty broke away from an old line San Francisco firm, Pettit & Martin, with eleven other attorneys in January to form his new firm, which specializes in litigation and government contract law.

Karl Ziegler, who not only has not been heard from Andover-wise for the past 20 years but whose address is still listed in the school's records as his old hometown, Bethpage, New York, was recently "discovered" quietly sitting in a French seafood restaurant on the strand in Venice, California. Karl's story is/was as exotic as the setting: after a formal education at Yale and Harvard Business School, Karl joined the First National Bank of Chicago during the bank's expansionist years in the late '60s and, as one of those on the leading edge of the bank's expansion promptly relocated to London, then central and eastern Africa, then back to London, over a total of 13 years. Karl has been back in the U.S. for less than a year on his first-ever domestic banking assignment and currently lives in Marina Del Rey, California ("the biggest culture shock of all") where, among other interests, he pursues a passionately felt and east Africa-developed avocation of photography. Dressed in African safari outfit and sporting a Nikon camera with impressively long lens and equally impressive companion, Karl constituted a colorful addition to an already colorful community on a soft Sunday August evening.

John Bissell continues as a staff neurologist at Kaiser-Permanente Medical Center in Sacramento. Joan Bissell, in John's words, "continues her policy analyst career and is now Deputy Director of EDD for Governor Jerry Brown." Charley Kessler is currently director of Product Management/Merchandising for L.L. Bean in Maine, where he manages the people who select all products for the catalog and store. As some of you may recall, Bob LeRoy, possibly in amazement, claimed spotting Charley in a recent Bean catalog.

Dick Bourne, who is a very recent newlywed and the father of an eleven-year-old daughter, Rosemary, from a previous marriage, describes himself as a balding law professor at the University of Baltimore, where "they let me pontificate on civil procedure, conflicts, federal courts, litigation process, and professional responsibility. Household is busy with potted plants (over 100, mostly mine), cats (5, mostly Joan's) and tears and giggles (countless, mostly Rosy's)." Dicks describes having seen Duncan Kennedy a couple of times last fall while working together on a conference for teacher effectiveness training for law teachers. In Dick's words, Duncan "hasn't changed much — remains skinny, diletante-ish, impish, charmingly conceited, and still wears the same clothes (as a Harvard Law professor) he had as my roommate as a Harvard college student."

There is little news of the class sufficiently public to endure general publication: personal tragedies, job complications, divorces and, in rare cases, death rarely bear mention here for numerous obvious reasons. Yet, on the other hand, to quote from a recent classmate: "How interested are we in where the kids are in school, new jobs/wives, etc.? My PA classmates who have remained my close friends know where my kids are (and know my kids), etc. — and I expect the others are not interested in these minutiae." Possibly so. The small details of each of our lives may not be of much interest to the whole, but the overall pattern — of geographic diversity, individual triumphs and reverses, risk-takers vs. the great majority who played it safe, religious, racial and cultural diversity, the wellborn, the individualists — seems to be what it's all about. Joannie Fisher, Abbot '59, who doesn't think she knows anyone from our class (but who's downright curious) writes among other reasons to inquire "Was Ned Evans ever on the Phillipian staff?" Ed Quattlebaum who knows a few of us, recommends us all for consideration as Secretary of the Academy while hurriedly packing for a year-long exchange stint in Sydney, Australia. Dave Dumas would like an in-depth report from a classmate, any classmate, as to what he or she has learned undergone in the past 20 years.

Somehow, somewhere, there's humor in all this. Please respond to the post cards you'll be getting.

Greetings from the time warp. It is not quite mid-September and I am writing this column which you will read in November or December about things that happened last June, or even earlier. A happy 4th of July, Labor Day, Thanksgiving, Christmas, and anything in between, to you all!

His sixteen-year-old son, Rody, is at Tabor this year and James also has a twelve-year-old daughter living in Weston. Charlie Dolben also has had a diversified career. This is a man who graduated from Dartmouth in physics, joined the Navy in the submarine program, went to Harvard Business for his M.B.A., and ended up as an asset management specialist at Marsh and Robert L. Trivers '61: are genes telling us what to do?

Bob Trivers, foreground, and noted English evolutionary biologist John Maynard Smith at a conference teaching sociobiology in Mahalabeshwar, India

Sociobiology is a controversial new branch of science that applies evolutionary biology to the study of social traits. It holds that genes influence the social behavior of animals, including homo sapiens. Sociobiologist Bob Trivers suggests that what we may think of as altruistic or ruthless actions may be responses unconsciously triggered by genetic self-interest.

Harvard has been a hotbed for the new science — there Zoologist Edward O. Wilson laid out the principles in Sociobiology, A New Synthesis in 1975; but some Harvard biologists apply four-letter words to sociobiology and say there's not a shred of proof.

Robert L. Trivers '61, Harvard Ph.D. '72, has been called the boldest and most brilliant theorist of sociobiology today. He is at the center of the sociobiology controversy, although he has removed himself from Harvard to greener pastures at the University of California at Santa Cruz. He entered biological studies only 15 years ago, his curiosity piqued by some similarities between animal and human parental behavior. Since then he has had an explosive career, characterized by personal involvement rather than the ivory-tower brand of detachment. His early career progressed in cycles of intense intellectual activity, followed by exhaustion, recovery and publication. Santa Cruz offers Trivers a complete contrast with Harvard in size and atmosphere — "a campus of great beauty where I can get a lot of work done, splitting my time between teaching and research."

Sociobiologists hold that the genes influence traits like mother love as well as eye color. Moreover the genes' only interest is in preservation and reproduction — not necessarily of the animals they inhabit, but of the genes themselves. In sociobiologists' view, a mother bird risking her life for her young does not act out of pure altruism, but represents genetic self-interest, protecting the genes she has passed on to her young so they will survive to reproduce their genetic information.

Trivers has blazed new paths for sociobiology with his theories of reciprocal altruism — to explain altruistic acts on behalf of individuals not closely related — parental investment and sexual selection, and parent-offspring conflict. In process now is a book on deceit and self-deception. A 1977 Time cover story on sociobiology, "Why We Behave the Way We Do", focused on Trivers as a leading theorist in the field. The Sept. 8, 1980 U.S. News & World Report chose him to represent the cutting edge of sociobiology. And the March/April issue of Science '80 bore his physiognomy on its cover and inside an 11-page exhaustive article on Trivers, his theoretical contributions, his long research sojourns in Jamaica, home of his Jamaican wife, Lorna, and her extended family, and his own close identification with black people both in Jamaica and in this country. The Trivers, with their son, 5, their twin daughters, and most recent baby, now spend most of the year in Santa Cruz, where Lorna will return to school in psychology. Trivers is no pallid personality; he probably is the only white biologist who has been a member of the Black Panthers. Dr. Huey P. Newton, a Panther and fellow-Ph.D., is co-authoring the book on evolution of the traits of deceit and self-deception, and their possible effect (during the Pleistocene Era) on human brain development.

PA Biology Department Chairman Thomas Cone notes that "The principles of sociobiology explain a lot of things that have been observed, but haven't been explained any other way. When a young male lion takes over a pride of lions, he will kill all the babies fathered by the previous leader male. You can't ask the lion, but he might say, 'Why should I waste my time taking care of someone else's genes?'"

Trivers' Science Honors teacher, Edmond Hammond '40, remembers Bob was "one of the few truly brilliant students I have had, able to use his skepticism constructively." Many are offended by sociobiology's application to humans, saying its theories do not take enough account of the power of the individual or of the environment. But Trivers says, in his foreword to Richard Dawson's The Selfish Gene, "Natural selection has built us and it is natural selection we must understand if we are to comprehend our own identities."

McLennan, real estate advisors. He lives in Groton, MA with his wife and two children. More diversity comes in Leonard Singer's career. After Harvard, he went to New York City to work for a railroad. Then he opted for another sort of machine and spent four months working on John Lindsay's re-election campaign. Neither New York railroads nor John Lindsay works. Having indulged these fantasies, Len went to law school and now practices with Nutter, McClennan and Fish in Boston.

Ed Cox and Pete Grillo, somehow reunited long after their Andover days, are now practicing neuro-surgery together in Lawrence and Lowell, MA. Craig Whitney now lives in Brooklyn and is experiencing severe culture shock after his stints in Viet Nam, Bonn and Moscow. He is currently deputy foreign editor for the New York Times; however, a local newspaper in Craig's hometown of Westboro refers to him as the Time's "Deputy Foreign Minister." Could it be that, after all these years, it turns out Craig is a spy after all? Craig and his wife, Heidi, and their two children have asked to let you all know that he would enjoy contact with his classmates and that he can be reached either at the Times or on Clinton Street in Brooklyn. One of the people I truly enjoyed getting to know at the reunion was Alan Durfee, who in addition to his mathematical skills, continues to give carillon concerts from Smith College to Andover to Boston. John and Gayle Engel announced the birth of their then seven-week-old child at the reunion. John looks as youthful as ever and is practicing law in Washington, D.C. Ace Adriance continues to look as distinguished as ever with his shock of white hair, and is coming off a year as interim headmaster at the Latin School in Chicago. He reported having seen King Harris and Tony Vanderwarker last year. Tom Evslin reported that, having failed to achieve elected political office, he did the next best thing by becoming Vermont's Secretary of Transportation. He runs seven airports, four state-owned railways, seven hundred miles of interstate highway, thirty-two hundred miles of deteriorating state highways, thirteen hundred people, a budget of eight million dollars, and several failing bus lines whose federal subsidies have run out. Just imagine what Tom would be doing if he had won the election!

There are more notes, but not enough space. We still have Hoffman, Hanson, Hewlett, Murphy, Walker, Cross, Kendrick, Cabot, Floto, Hurlbut, Barnes, Carter, and many others to report on. If everyone who reads this would send one lousy postcard, there would be news to share for the next year. C'mon guys, be sports. See your name in print. Please write. If you can't write, send money.

Please mark June 11-13, 1982 on your calendar right now and plan to come to Andover for our Twentieth Reunion. Then write to your Abbot friends and ask them to do the same. Please write to me if you are willing and able to help with the planning of our reunion. As those of you who have been back know, the school does a fantastic job on reunions, but it is up to us to get everyone there.

Betsy Bruns Eaton is planning to come. I ran into her this summer when we both had children who were "graduating" from a summer program at a local college. Betsy's two boys are ten and thirteen. Betsy works with her husband in their antique business and is active in her community as chairman of the library board and as a volunteer in a program for gifted children in the local schools.

Connie Matthews Macleod moved to Rye, New York from Cincinnati in September. Bruce will be working in New York.

Think Reunion! Lynne

John Whitehead writes from Portland, OR that his children are now nine and five and "I turn and carve bowls, utensils and other objects of exotic hardwoods." Charles Martin reports that the last copies of his book, Sierra Whitewater, sold out to California boaters. He serves as a management information specialist for the Analytic Sciences Corporation, which was of little assistance in coping with the gypsy moth invasion last summer. Maybe George Sanborn could have helped Joseph McGirt practices law in Charlotte, NC and notes, briefly, that his wife, Carole, is planning a 4th birthday party for their son. John Born devoted a year to teaching at Harvard's Graduate School of Design. He has returned to his position as a consulting engineer in Cambridge, MA. A designer, renovator and repairer of new and old buildings, he made the effort to crew, joining a team that had some members who "were not even born when I made the same trip to Henley with the PA crew in 1962." The entire experience was a "rejuvenating elixir!" And, as if to reprove that time does not stand still, John and his 13-year-old daughter recently completed a tour of New England's secondary schools, not a nostalgic one for daddy, but a screening for the offspring. John Faggi was seen teaching English at Choate in Wallingford, CT.

David Bowen joined Pfizer Central Research in Sandwich, England after working at Union Carbide. He devotes his work time to spectrometry on pharmaceuticals and his real time to fixing up an old house (which in England means old . . .) in a seaside resort and farming community. Louis Lower and his wife, Adrienne, reside in Wilmette. He runs Allstate's real estate, venture capital and oil and gas investment programs. His two children have adapted to the move from Key Biscayne, especially their 9-year-old son, Brandon. He recently completed acting in a 7 month run of Evita at the Shubert Theatre in Chicago.

"If state and federal regulatory agencies properly exercise their powers, I feel our way of life in Maine will be protected," so said Dan Boxer in a lengthy spread in the Maine Times. A member of the Pierce, Atwood and Scribner law firm, Dan's career centers on representing major industrial clients, notably in the wood and pulp industries. An outdoorsman, Dan enjoys fishing with his two children. Dan Hootstein called recently, a most pleasant surprise. He supervises the Orange Julius men's clothing franchise development. Based in Atlanta, he lives with Debbie and their family dog. No children, yet . . . Dan reports the success of Joe Paresky with Crimson Travel in Cambridge and throughout Massachusetts. Joe, please write and fill in the details.

My predecessor, Colin Campbell, works for the New York Times, as a city reporter "Caroline and I mortgaged our way into a beautiful shambles of a farm in Pike County, PA and if the rattlesnakes do not get us, we plan to spend weekends there." Black bears, wild turkeys, porcupines and deer provide a continuous show (on weekdays, too, in the city?)

We were saddened to learn of the death of Andy Cahners. I went through Fessenden and Andover with Andy and many of us knew him through Harvard and into his professional life. Our sympathies go to his wife, Elsie, their two children, his family and his cousin, Jim Rabb, PA '62. It is a loss all of us share.

Happy Thanksgiving.

This was telephoning time for news for the Bulletin. I had a great time calling and chatting with those of you who live nearby. You, who don't, please answer my notes so we can know what you are doing. This catching-up by phone was a lot of fun and here's what I found out. Cynthia Kimball Merriam has two children 5½ and 3 yrs. and is expecting her "grand finale" in early October. Interestingly, she lives in a neighborhood with several other Abbotites of different classes around the corner. Cynthia said her sister Margie Kimball was at the Boston University School of Social Work working on a masters in a Social Work program.

I talked to Sandy Price Bishop in Holden, MA. She has two daughters 14 and 12 yrs. She does volunteer work with the League of Women Voters. She said they ski a lot in the winter and she plays tennis all year around.

Sharon Seeche Robinson sent in some news that she is still editor for Lowell National Historical Park's tabloid, Milling Around and she freelances as a graphic designer. Her son, Matthew, is now eight-years-old and enjoys PA weekend sports activities. I called Peggy Moore Pagurko and she has a daughter, 13, and is working for the school department in Marblehead. She also does some volunteering at a stable for handicapped children where she ran into Cynthia Davidson Rodes who was also volunteering. Peggy had news of Rosemary Eustace that she was doing interpreting work in Mexico.

As for me and my family, we are fine. I am still teaching this fall with only two classes which I hope will give me time for those projects you want to do and never have time for.

Bob Marshall
365 West End Ave.
New York, NY 10024

Los Angeles, Sept. 8 — twenty years to the week after most of the Class of '64 arrived at Phillips for the first time, a group gathered around the hot tub here in Pacific Palisades, not to plant an elm, but to see what strange plants had grown from some of the saplings we had known in those days long past, back East.

Our host was the newly transplanted Randy Elkins, who with his gracious wife Faye, opened their house to all classmates who carry an Angelene address in the school's computer bank. First to arrive was Dave Mason, the spitting image of his Pot Pourri picture, a Californian practically since graduation, with time out for a Peace Corps idyll in Nepal. Dave is working toward a Ph.D. in urban planning at UCLA, and we shared a sociological discussion of changing urban modalities resulting from the rise of women in the marketplace (not to be confused with the old-fashioned sense of marketplace), although I didn't quite understand what I was saying.

Wisely, I avoided raising the subject of Slavic linguistics with UCLA Professor Alan Timberlake, who sported a pre-punk-style moustache and long hair and looked almost Slavic for a Timberlake. With him was Sandy Chung, another linguist, who was set to commute to her professorship in San Diego, in return for Al's having motored to Los Angeles the previous five years. If I can just get off that LA Freeway . . .

Two liberal professors could not live in between, because that would put them in Orange County, where John Kidde was negotiating to buy a restaurant that very evening. John and Donna had planned to make the soiree until that afternoon, when the sellers showed up from San Francisco. John had moved from the roadside attraction business into hotels all over the West Coast, but that put him on the road too much and home too little, so he split with his partners and began to look out for a place of his own closer to his Corona del Mar address.

John reports that one trip he enjoys annually is to a Stanford football game with Don Vermeil, who is married and has three kids, one more than the Kiddes. Vermeil is the money-arranger for lucrative real estate deals in Silicon Valley and enjoys, says Kidde enviously, months of vacation — Hawaii, skiing, whatever — every year.

Mike Cathcart also phoned in his apologies, the result of an ill-timed trip, but that's the price of being a lawyer on the move. It sometimes works the opposite way, however, and our reunion was enlivened by a surprise visit from A.C. Johnston, down from the Bay Area to attend depositions on the case of the missing computers. A.C. had wrapped up work on the earlier case of the missing cattle, and modestly admitted to a growing expertise in the charming area of plaintiff's fraud.

A.C. brought with him a real blast from the past, the formerly untraceable Dick Wolf, who last we heard had left an agency in New York to make his mark in Hollywood. Wolfie had gone past his first hit, "Skateboard," to write and produce a summer of '81 sleeper called "Gas," starring Donald Sutherland. Wolfie had memorized one L.A. review: "more jokes than 'Airplane!', fewer laughs than 'Cries and Whispers'" — which didn't seem likely, as the man kept us laughing all evening. Wolfie knew he was in L.A. when the muscular surfer on the beach confided to him the diet that produced such muscle tone: fresh fruit and strawberries.

I was sorry that we didn't hear from Art Babcock, Tom Cory, Chris Teuber or Bill Carter, but less than surprised that the attempted invitation to Frank Hight was returned to sender, no such zone. Some of the addresses in the computer bank are a bit of obsolete.

If you're in the Los Angeles area and didn't get an invitation, do advise the Academy of your new address — and feel free to drop in on the Elkinses with your rain check.

Two weeks before, I had a private reunion in Chicago with Joe DiRago, a good friend I had not seen since that sunny June 5, 1964. I caught Joe between jobs, after a day at Lake Michigan with his children, considering the beard he was starting to grow, and very relaxed for a man with so many decisions to make. After acquiring considerable expertise in the mail-order catalogue business, Joe is going out on his own as a consultant in this growing field. If there is anything your business would like to know about direct-mail marketing, a call to Joe in Glenview, Illinois would be a good place to start.

Over beers and dinner I also heard about some classmates this column had lost touch with, including Jim Torbert, an Alabama farmer, and Bryce Muir, a producer of handsome, custom-made toys for children from his home in Maine.

I have still yet to get to the Pacific Northwest, which made it the more gratifying to receive a note from Dr. Ken Gass, "growing gills here in damp Northwest Washington, where my pediatric practice is thriving, as is our nine-month-old daughter Katie. Francie and I are dedicated runners and officers in the Greater Bellingham Runners Club." Where, Ken asks, is Jim Moody?

In our never-ending search for missing classmates I have assigned Sam Allis to cover the Southwest region for the Class Notes. After soaking up a last bit of New Englandiana with radiologist Doug Cowan, who allegedly tops Vermeil in annual vacation time, Sam and Mary will move to Houston to uncover disguised preppies for this column. On the side, Sam will be reporting for Time Magazine on the normal Texas stories: energy, space exploration, conservative politics and jewel-bedecked former Cowboy cheerleaders who poison their billionaire husbands.

Former stickball commissioners, beware!

Kathy Abler Harvey had a lovely summer.

She and her husband Julian happily left the heat of Chicago for a vacation in France — Paris and St. Jean Cap Ferrat. They saw some friends but mostly relaxed in St. Jean.

I ran into Bina Hayes Thompson in Boston. She lives in Cambridge and works with her husband, an architect. Anna Thal has left the Back Bay of Boston for the more artistic environs of Boston's South End. She is still involved in child care. Joanne Hyde Stevens has remarried and lives in North Andover. She and her husband Nat have a daughter, Elizabeth Hyde Stevens, born August 26, 1980 and Joanne's 7½ yr. old Kate. Kathy Stover Holian wrote to let me know she does not live in Albuquerque, as I reported last. She lives in Los Alamos, New Mexico up 7500 feet in the Jemez Mountains.

I spent a few days in August with Ellen Huntington Bryant on Martha's Vineyard. She has two active daughters, Sarah 2½ and Emily 1 year. That's about it. Please let me hear from all of you.

News is rather sparse this quarter — classmates are no doubt saving their choicest anecdotes for the gala 15th (can you believe it?) Reunion next June 11-13, 1982. By the time this appears in print, I will have contacted several of you about serving on the class reunion committee. Everyone should start thinking now about attending. Who knows, you might see such class luminaries as John Bassett, the dentist from Salem, NH, Bob Kropke, the coffee trader from Jersey City, Tim Thompson, trusts and estates lawyer from Brooklyn, Jamie Lee, assistant treasurer of Cooper Industries from Houston, Ray Bird, English Ph.D. candidate at Columbia, or Court Miner, vice president of a Denver plastics firm. Be sure to bring the wife and kids — our distinguished pediatricians, such as Steve Townend, from Devon, PA, Baxter Holland, from Wyndmoor, PA, or Bruce Berlow from San Diego, should be able to handle any medical crises that develop. Those who have been at past reunions can tell you how much fun they are. Our class is full of artists, writers, lawyers, doctors, businessmen, civil servants, teachers — a tremendous variety of very interesting people.

One of those interesting people, Wick Goodspeed, an erstwhile fellow Chicagoan, is currently in Brussels introducing a new Baxter-Travenol product to Europe. John Nettleton writes that he attended an Andover reception at the New York Yacht Club last spring and ran into Steve McCarthy and Charlie Harrison. Charlie is working and exhibiting at the Willard Gallery in Manhattan, while John is an urban planner in Jersey City "organizing an economic development/solar energy program in this, the declining and desperate urban frontier. Walt and Vicki Mintkeski (Portland, Oregon) are the proud parents of their second child, Charlie, born on April 1st. Can anyone confirm that Jay Gould actually appeared in the New York Times men's fashion section a few months back? If that's not him, we have a serious double agent problem on our hands."

Dave Bloom sent the following message: "I would like to wish Don McNemar great success as the new headmaster of good ole PA, from one of his slower students — Government 7, fall semester, 1970 at Dartmouth."

Finally, I am sad to report that Carlos de Sola died in El Salvador in November 1979 after a struggle with cancer. His widow may be written to at H. de Sola E. Hijos, San Salvador, El Salvador.

Thanks to Linda Cregg, I am able to give you some class news! Linda writes from Boston (she lives in Cambridge), where she is Associate Director of The School for Field Studies, an organization which develops and sponsors field research expeditions to remote wilderness areas and special ecosystems around the world. Through her work, Linda recently spent a month on the Galapagos Islands participating in a study of thermoregulation in the giant tortoises of the Galapagos. How neat! Darwin would be pleased, I'm sure.

Linda is chairperson of our 15th Reunion (yes, we are getting older, folks), and she asked me to remind you all to plan to attend. Those of us who attended the 10th can vouch for how much fun it was. I'm sure the 15th will be great too.

One more bit of news comes through my grapevine, eg. Nancy Porosky Harris. Nancy recently saw Margie Goldman, who was in Boston visiting from Denver and swears that Margie "looks great and hasn't changed a bit." I take it the southwest really agrees with you.

That's it for now, fellow alumnae. Please keep in touch, and I hope a bunch of us will be getting together at Andover late next spring.

Congratulations, 1981 Classmate of the Year, Preston Peter Langly Evans III for his appearance in the movie "Arthur", on various public TV showings and for making Liza Minelli look like she liked working with him when he asked her: "Don't you just hate these things?" in the movie. From then on, it was just gravy for our hero. Sure, Pete made it look easy, but what about the rest of us? You wonder whatever became of some of those buddies of yours, eh? I've been getting a lot of letters from a lot of people and some of the things I've heard surprised even me. For example, did you know that Vin Crowley was lead guitarist for the band AC/DC? That Hunt Deming was a referee in the NFL and he worked last year's AFC playoff finals between Oakland and San Diego and made a contested call on a blocked field goal in the 3rd quarter? Tim Overton was one of the F-14 pilots who shot down one of those Libyan jets last summer. Where are they now, huh? Skip Jensen is a singing barber in Queens and has franchised, Harold DeFelle was repping womens underwear in the midwest but is now out of the business for good and Michael Lempkin has lawsuits pending. Oh yes, Dennis Cambal became the editor of the Saturday Review. Are you believing all this?

Baxter "Fed" Lanius is heading up the Federal Reserve System, while crafty-before-his-time, old snake John Barclay made a ton of money in the childrens' pajama business (no surprise there, right folks?) Al Garten went on Death Row in 1976 for killing eighty Boy Scouts on a camping trip in Florida. Binky Bacon went on to become head of the International Longshoremen's Union, while Bruce Hearey simply became the City of Philadelphia.

In an incredibly bizarre twist of events, Neal Rendleman was the man to defeat Ted Kennedy for his Massachusetts Senate seat in the 1992 election, while Tim Overton shot down another Libyan jet. Bruce Hughes ran for years an executive and legislative brothel up behind the State House on Beacon Hill in Boston. Dick Spalding went on to discover a cure for tennis elbow and eventually will become a very likable talkshow host living in California. Henry Hart runs jogging therapy clinics in Maryland, while Tim Overton shot down yet another Libyan jet, this time over Bayonne, New Jersey. Chris Whipple was the mayor of North Grafton, MA for quite some time, but is now doing 50-to-life for killing both his wives (at the same time). He writes: "Hey guys . . . if I can't make the twentieth, maybe we could hold it here at Walpole?" We'll see, Chris . . .

Finally, Kit Rawson is a railroad engineer in Alaska, formerly a gold prospector; which reminds me, Chips Outerbridge became a monk! Rodger Warnecke is still surfing professionally and ghostwrites cookbooks in the off season. And on that note, I'll offer to pass over the mantle of class notes authorship to any who feels ready for the task. (I don't want to be piggy). If none shall step forward through mail or phone, I shall continue to shape our mutual lives through enriching innuendo, happenstance and poor penmanship. Send me some news! Let's see now . . . Richie Proctor runs a go-kart track in Honolulu, while Davis Everett was arrested for distribution of pornography in Hollywood, Rick Devereaux was a handicapper of 2-year-old race horses in Hialeah. And, in a letter, The Academy reports that everyone else in our class died last year. That figures . . .

Knew this would be a lively episode, with news from unexpected quarters, when one of my brothers came back from Marine Reserves bivouac in the Mojave Desert, and said he had shared a tent with Jim Longley. Jim's a lawyer up in Maine. Also up in northern N.E.: Charlie Kittredge of Montpelier. After working as a bush pilot in Alaska, then for the Governor of Vermont (Mark Snelling's dad), Charlie started his own computer firm. John Ellis is up that way as well, doing a post-doc in Chemistry at U. Vt. And visiting Vermont recently was the ami-

Did you know that these two claim to have once made a "Desolation Row Boat" which they navigated around Rabbit Pond, until one day it sank in a hurricane on the shoals off Nathan Hale?

Other notes on incredible technologies Steve Harper, now in the Boston area, is working as a department head in Systems Analysis. Dave Plummer has also joined the Massachusetts computer circuit, though he misses NC and thinks maybe you can go home again. Chip Meserole just got his Ph.D. in aeronautics from MIT and is, by now, probably working somewhere around here. Ted Cuthbertson of Boston is working for a computer firm. Another local, Dave Tibbetts, is working for the State Office for Children. Like most good Bay State Democrats, Dave's been involved with some political campaigns.

Bill Schink wrote from Chicago to say that he's going back to NYC to head Citibank's corporate training program. He will be working with the hearts and minds of recent college graduates.

Irv Heifetz must now be a resident M.D., and is in the Worcester, MA phone book. One other former day student, Al Landry, was spotted at Studio 54, back in the good old days when people still believed in disco. He's working as a stockbroker at Kidder, Peabody, after some time spent having fun in real estate. The thought (rather than the actual possession) of real estate has recently inflamed my own imagination, and I'm writing a book on "Creative Financing." This should be published some time late next year by John Wiley & Sons of NYC. Leigh Hafrey of Cambridge is doing translation work for that estimable publisher, David Godine. He's also been consulting in Africa.

This issue's award in the Exotic World Travel category is a toss-up. Should it go to Pat Mahoney, who's been handling lights and crew for the Argentine/Brazil tour of Tom Petty and The Heartbreakers? Or to John Grillo, who's doing veterinary work in Italy?

Miscellaneous reports: Larry Gelb is still working at Kaiser Permanente, and is also an Asst. Clinical Prof. of Psychiatry at U. Cal. SF. John Strauss send regards from U. Va., Charlottesville, where he's an Asst. Prof. of Economics. John's married, has a son and daughter, and recently received a dual Ph.D. in Agricultural Ec. and Ec. from U. Michigan. Jeff Kilbreth, late of the New Haven Food Coop, is now a student at Yale's School of Management. Look for Chuck McDermott's new band out on the West Coast. Or, stay at home, read Time, and check for the by-line of Alumni Council member Evan Thomas. If you prefer Newsweek, look for art critic Mark Stevens. Third-hand reports of several book projects Mark is working on. The section of articles Fred Streibigh wrote and edited for Quest on local food production were very fine. Humorist John Jacobson is writing some hilarious pieces, examples of which you can find in the airlines magazines, among other places. Alex Van Oss is keeping busy at National Public Radio in DC.

Ernest Adams '71 and William Belichick '71:

in pro football, the cards are on the table

Ernie Adams '71 and Bill Belichick '71 may not be the only Andover classmates who sit together at pro football games every fall weekend, but they are undoubtedly the only two who do their sitting in the press box, with a line to the head coach on the sidelines. For not only have Ernie and Bill been, since 1975, probably the only coaches in the National Football League with prep school degrees: for the last three years they have been coaching together on the staff of the New York Giants.

Ernie has followed his dream since he was 12. When George Sanborn asked his biology class where they would be in ten years, Ernie replied, "coaching football." Ernie studied the coaching techniques of Steve Sorota and used the spring track season under Sorota to continue his education. ("When you're on a two-hour bus ride to Deerfield to throw the discus six times, there's plenty of time to talk football.") After working as an assistant to the coach during his four seasons at Northwestern, Ernie, a native Bay Stater, sold New England Patriots Coach Chuck Fairbanks on the unprecedented notion of hiring a 22-year-old assistant with no college playing experience. The notion, and Ernie, worked: Ernie was with the Pats four years, and on the very day that another former Patriots assistant coach — Ray Perkins — was named head coach of the Giants, he asked Ernie to move with him to New York.

Ernie will admit to "very little athletic ability," but in the last of his four years at PA he played on the only undefeated Andover football team for several schoolboy generations (34-8, Ernie recalls with only a moment's hesitation, when asked the Exeter score). Next to him on the offensive line that year was center Bill Belichick, a one-year senior from Annapolis, where his father was an assistant football coach for the Navy. Bill went on to star in lacrosse as well as football at Wesleyan, but was undecided about a career when Ernie told him about the Patriots job and suggested that Bill try the same thing with the Baltimore Colts.

"The Colts had a new coach, Ted Marchibroda, and said they couldn't pay me anything, but that year turned out to be my greatest thrill in football: I rode to and from practice with the head coach every day and the Colts, my 'hometown' team, went from a 2-12 record to 10-4 and made the Playoffs." After Baltimore, Bill coached the special teams (the kickoff and punt units) at Detroit and Denver before landing a job, with Ernie's recommendation, on the New York staff. Bill has made a specialty of coaching special teams, which is a relatively neglected aspect of the game, and he also works with the Giant linebackers. "When we pull off a fake punt play," notes booster Ernie, "I give Bill credit for cooking it up."

Ernie spends 30 hours a week with the Giant quarterbacks, and beside his desk at Giants Stadium are cans of films and reams of computer printouts that will help him prepare Phil Simms to read the Green Bay defenses next Sunday. When asked if his Andover education prepared him for the modern science that pro football has become, Ernie laughs, "Except for the kindness of Bob Maynard, I wouldn't have made it through third-year math." It's people, not chess pieces, who play the game, and for Ernie, the key to coaching is to "Make sure you're putting the player in a situation where he has a chance to do what you want him to do — and make sure he knows what it is you want him to do."

Bill and Ernie are both about 5'10" and close to their Andover playing weights at 165 and 185, respectively. They jog together on occasion after practice, although Bill's six miles a day is double the length it takes to bore Ernie. Unlike Ernie, Bill is married and could envision himself someday in an environment like Andover. They both express doubts, however, about big-time college football, where recruiting is as important as coaching and education is often a sham. In the NFL, "the cards are all on the table," notes Bill, and "I can devote my energies 100% to football," adds Ernie.

For both Bill and Ernie that means 16-hour days, seven days a week, no time off from July through December. "If I didn't enjoy what I was doing," says Ernie, before heading home to study some more films, "it would be crazy to work like this." It's clear that neither Ernie Adams nor Bill Belichick is crazy.

end-long party at his wife Kate's family's place in CT. I'm still hoarse from the all-night sing-along.

All that sounds like much newsy news to me. Still, I always have the feeling that some name should be here, but isn't. Is it yours? If so, pack your tent and head for the Mojave Desert. We'll catch up with you eventually.

Class of 1970:

Before I begin, let me first thank Lynn Waller Stellings who wrote the last alumnae news column that appeared in the summer Bulletin. You did a super job, Lynn, and I know everyone got a kick out of hearing from you. Want to write another column sometime soon?

Now the news — unfortunately, there isn't much: Lexi Freeman Strickland writes that she is thoroughly enjoying her first year of motherhood. Lexi, husband Ray, and son, Sasha are currently living on a sailboat. In her spare time, Lexi is designing children's clothes and is also writing a children's book about a sea-going monkey. Tobi Solomon Halpern is currently working as the Expressive Arts Co-ordinator at Wrentham State School for the developmentally disabled. In addition, Tobi is taking a jazz dance class which she loves. Tobi and her husband are living in Woonsocket, RI.

I hate to say it — but that's all the news for now except for the news that Tim and I are living in Weston, CT and loving our respective jobs at Pepsi and Richardson-Vick.

Please write with any news you might have about yourself or others. And please — if you'd like to write one of our class columns — please write. Lynn enjoyed doing it — how about you?

Greetings from the swamps.

Response to my request for news has been poor. The only classmate heard from was Peter DeWitt, who is working in architecture and furniture design in New York City.

Please take a few minutes to write and let me know what you've been up to. We have enough space to print your offerings in some detail; especially include information about wives, children, wedding plans, or any other big events.

Lack of response will justify exercising my limited aptitude for fiction.

Dear All: A pathetically short, last letter follows. As you may know, Mary Anna Sullivan is the new Class Secretary. Her address is: 120 Commercial Street, Apt. 6-1 Boston, MA 02109. As Mary reported in the last Bulletin, we had a wonderful, if small, reunion. Laura Schultz sent a great postcard noting the following: She is now a Bower and lives in Los Altos, CA (250½ Pasa Robles). Baby news: Mimi Walker Sheriom — I am not sure of the spelling — had a baby in April. Peggy Partridge Johnson had a baby in May. Sue Dampier King (43646 Salem Way, Fremont CA) had a baby in October. Sarah Gay Stackhouse had a girl in March. The Stackhouses moved to Boston for a year during one of Charlie's residencies at Brigham Hospital. They will move back to Coopers-town in July 1982 for the last 2 years of his residency. I note on my address list that the following addresses are different from the last time: Megan Treneer Berser, 2624 E Bay St, Port Angeles, WA. Sybil Ridings Colette, PO Box 1121, Tupelo MS; Heide Kropp, 2-13 Meadowbrook West, Lebanon, NH.; Margo Stever Weed, 1528 33rd St. NW, Washington, DC.

That's all! It has been really fun and gratifying hearing from everyone. I hope that the news lines will stay open until I once again take on the job. (2025 AD) Best to everyone and don't forget that you are welcome in my home, such as it is!

It's that season again — we've been out ten years and REUNION looms above us. I know I'm not as much fun as Buzz Bissinger, but since he's promised to come I think a few of the rest of you can show up too (June 11-13). Bo Powel, Ray Petzold, and Bob Pfeiffer, this means you. Poliquin will be there, and Dan Bolduc, who will surely win the Most Prosperous award once again, with both his kids; and Jim and Aleta Crawford, from whom I recently received a xerox of their daughter Jenness Ives' footprint. If Kevin Dann comes, he will bring with him his wife Jeanette Smith. (I keep getting these xeroxes of newspaper wedding announcements. No one knows how to write any more.)

Except Matt MacIver. Matt wishes to compliment John Rieger by means of this column on John's coverage of the Last Santa Cruz Fast Food Festival for KNPR Radio's "All Things Considered." Matt continues in his search for recipe perfection: cookies and split pea melange (Oreo Soup), or household appliance and fried dough (Donuts in a Dishwasher). His lines, not mine. Apparently Matt still dreams of Leete's Meats. Matt (not Leete) is back in Nigeria selling low-cost housing.

Many marriages. Don Kilpatrick has a son. George Cooper and the former Ann Holtz do not, though they are both working for Alcoa in Tennessee. Quentin Smith and Helen Florsheim. He's a staff Fellow at the National Institute on Aging. Fred Ralston and Carolyn Dewey.

Bo Powell says he enjoys B School at Dartmouth, or at least Hanover's air. Wes Forystek is out of the Army and at Cornell Law. Bob Roulston controls the air quality of Texas, much to his legislature's dismay. Charles Watling is doing a combined JD/MBA in agribusiness in Santa Clara. Tom Raleigh is a lawyer in Orlando (he left France for Orlando?) And Phil Moore invites anyone travelling on I-80 to come look at the stars with him at the University of Iowa.

Bill Pruden will hopefully make the reunion, unless prep school life proves too much for him. In June he received his J.D. from Case Western and is currently teaching History and girl's varsity basketball at the St. Andrew's School in Middletown, DE. On a more exotic note Andy Olson is director of Special Events for Caesars Palace in Las Vegas. And Will Durfee married Devorah Goldstein of . . . of what? It's two o'clock in the morning and I've been typing all day. What am I talking about? Where am I? Whose woods these are I think I know . . . Are you talking to me? Are YOU talking to ME! Nobody really cares anyway. I could fall asleep right now and nobody would care. Zzzzzzzz . . . June 11th. That's right. I'll never get published anyway. Tad? Is that you, Tad? You win. K. Kelly was more relevant. What did I learn? Correct punctuation. The invalidity of the hand held camera. I hope Dick Green shows up. And Barry Cronin. And Flaherty. And Punch Olivier. I am not JD Salinger. Tad? Am I Tad? I think I'd better give up this job. I'm a little boy or hands and knees peering out through the mailbox grille, hoping for a letter from Mace Yampolsky. Mace is a lawyer now in California. And Lew Howes is getting an MBA.

If all goes according to plan Lynn Graham Goldberg will soon have a MBA from Columbia University, and then she and her husband plan to move to Washington, D.C. — perhaps she'll lend a tip or two to the OMB. Liza Webster is also on the verge of completing a master's degree but this one's in geology, not business. She's living in Arizona and about to get married. Last on the soon-to-be-degreed list is Sue Lilienthal who is a teaching aide somewhere outside of Dartmouth hoping for the right position to come her way.

Missy Baird (who already has one master's degree and is working on another in management) has opened a private practice in Tampa, FL, doing marriage and family counseling.

Andrea Putnam and her just-past-one-year-old son, Rusty ("redheaded, full of smiles and as quick as greased lightning") are now living in Toledo, OH. Andrea's hometown since she separated from her husband.

Ann C. Stiff is now married to Davie Heine. Both she and her husband are chemists at the National Laboratory at Oak Ridge, TN. However, she writes, neither glow in the dark nor work on nuclear projects. The Manhattan Project has long gone from the lab. Merry Weidenman, who works for the U. of Conn. Medical Center, and once sang for Fennel, has recently joined a Hartford chorus.

Marna Parke, married three and a half years ago to Eric Borgstrom, has returned East (after her California years) to live in Hamden, CT. Marna is an assistant administrator at the Yale-New Haven Hospital, and is in charge of the hospital's planned move this spring to a new $70 million building. Her husband sells esoteric audio equipment, and hails from Seattle, where at this moment Libby Pennink is selling the same said esoteric audio equipment. Abbot coincidences abound.

An apology is in order to Aleta Reynolds Crawford. Last issue I said Aleta stopped studying to have a family. In fact, she had long finished studying and was a registered nurse working in psychiatry before she stopped working to have her two children: toddler Bristol James and infant Jenness Ives. Her husband Jim (PA '72) is studying to become a MD, Ph.D. at Duke Medical School.

Hopefully, by the time you read this, my life will be less hectic. I am typing late at night following a debate for which I wrote the script. Since early this summer I have worked for a New York state senator who is vying for the position of Westchester County Executive (our equivalent to Mayor Koch) I am his press person . . . responsible for research, speechwriting and the works. Gets hectic juggling schedules, 10-month-toddler baby Anna, and husband Peter, now a budget analyst for a utilities conglomerate.

But not too hectic to think about this coming June's TENTH REUNION. Marna may head it . . . if we'll all help. The dates are June 11-13, 1982 . . . Set your mind on coming, put it on the calendar. See you there.

And write, so I can share the wealth of our experiences around.

I am not kidding you when I say that things are so busy for the Republicans down here in Washington that the quarterly request to fill in the editors of the Alumni Magazine on the where- and what-about of my classmates is the only foothold I have on time anymore.

And what an exciting time in the history of the Class of 1976 this quarter has been. Marriages galore: Nancy Rockwell, to who knows whom, Stephen Porter to Jennifer Lynn Booth, and Amy Lord, to another nobody. The former and latter, believe it or not, had the gall to schedule their nuptials on the very weekend of our fifth reunion . . . Ah! the nerve.

In the miscellaneous/lacklustre department, Fong Wang is at Yale Med School finishing undergraduate work at Harvard . . . Bettina Hester is laughing it up at Texas Christian University over a joke called the MBA program, and Mark Fraker has moved on to New York City after a wild swing around Europe and one crazy time (and you know what I mean) at Berserkely out in CA.

Ann Pawlowski decided to leave the easy life at Harvard in favor of the singular challenge of Columbia School of Physicians and Surgeons. She made it back to reunion only after making stiff bribes to one handsome cadaver in her anatomy lab. The Doctor, Duncan Donahue, has truly surprised us all. He is a marketing representative for the data processing division of IBM, and lives in non-stop-action Hartford; we're talking Connecticut . . . That Alumni Resources office must love him — he has coughed up for the old blue a couple of times, more than I can say for two of our classmates who showed such lack of class as to bounce their reunion dues checks!!!

How to sum up all of the rest of the hot news from our now illustrious mates? Gavin Doyle is a high-powered consultant with a firm in New York whose reputation is so important only the president and chairman of the board know its real name. He says it's great, though to look at him it is easy to understand his physician who claims he's not long for this world. Howard Allen flew in for our festivities in June, though only for a few minutes. Those who knew him best appreciated even those precious few moments.

Daniel Algrant, now a shooting star amongst Broadway (Cambridge, MA) avant-garde film directors, flashed in like a comet, leaving trails of cosmic dust on the women who flocked to meet him . . . Always too busy and rushed for such frivolities, Dan played it cool, just like we remember him. Life of the party grand prize, however, goes to Toonie Casey. A native of conservative Colorado Springs, who would have known that our little Toonie would have come out of her shell so marvelously. Why, it was only five years ago that she could be caught in the bowels of Evans Hall during her free time classifying and cataloguing the expansive bird collection, only recently, thanks, in large part, to Toonie, unveiled as a new permanent Exhibit outside the Alumni Office in that very same building. And there she was at the reunion, lampshade and all.

And last, but certainly not least, comes the sad news about Chris Mullen, former Class Secretary, who recently tipped his Stetson to yours truly to take over the duties. Well, as you know, Christy has been shoeing horses in New York State, after his release from prison for making book on thoroughbreds down in Texas. Well, it seems he put a rather hot shoe to one of the horses, and, well, that mare gave him a heck of a shot to the forehead. His folks say he's doing just fine, telling his favorite jokes about the guy who threw the clock out the window to see time fly, and so on. And the doctors say the rest will all come back, eventually. I say look on the bright side of things. Maybe by the time our tenth reunion comes around he will be old enough mentally to show us all how we used to act in high school. That would be good, wouldn't it?

Tall trees and lolling in front of Sam Phil Walls for hanging out on, all the way from the Bell Tower to Cochran Chapel . . . hidden routes in and out of Benner House, den of pinball and snack iniquity . . . alternate blossoms and smushed apples around Rabbit Pond behind Stevens and Stearns . . . much of the old and a lot of new awaits us on return — June 11-13, 1982 marks our REUNION. After 5 years of other trees, tall buildings or foreign lands to travel by, it's time to return and share.

The reunion is the first alumni celebration for new Headmaster Don McNemar and his wife, Britta, who come to Andover from Dartmouth. "Bravo, on a brilliant choice in Don McNemar" quoth Heather Little. Heather has studied government under McNemar's direction. She is one of several Andoverites who hasn't gone the four-year route through school and this summer she opted to drop an economics course for a part in the PLAYER'S summer production. YAY. Jon Prager has been acting at Dartmouth and is taking full advantage of the ever-flexible Dartmouth plan. Theo Pozzy took time from Dartmouth to pursue his interest in computer electronics. He is doing independent work in electronic communication. Ford Cavallari is one of the Andover Dartmouth folk who made the graduation procession this spring earning cum laude honors.

Other honor graduates include: Dave Davis, winner of Bowdoin's Fessenden Prize in Govt. for the greatest improvement in Government studies. Paul Robertz graduated Phi Beta Kappa from Oberlin and will go next year to Perkins School of Piano Tuning and Technology, Inc. in Elyria, OH. Elizabeth Siderides was awarded Harvard's Joseph Garrison Parker Prize, as a student entering the medical profession, who has an unusual breadth of interests outside the specifically pre-med courses. CONGRATULATIONS!

Another Harvard prize which for some reason bypassed an Andover selectee was for, "the senior proposing to enter law school who is considered to be the best fitted — by intellect, character and physique . . ." where are Buck Burnaman, Bill Yun and Ham Mehlman when we really need them? The latest scanner report for Bill is among the teeming crowd of new New Yorkers where he is working for Blight, Eastman, Paine and Webber. Susanna Jones is in New York teaching at Spence. Jackie Bracy is working as a medical technician after refusing my offer to work on this coast as co-manager of Taco Bell. Sally Kemp is in New York working for Morgan Stanley. Rumor has it that Chris Cole is working for them also, though he has yet to show up.

Last I saw Chris was on the Hanover plain in vain search of snow. He was staying with Billy Vitalis before the thriving guitarist headed off to Europe to study guitar in Italy and musical folk tradition in Ireland. Far-off, Far-out travels called Juan Enriquez to Europe before his return to Mexico, Peter Crowley had studied in Cairo the last 10 months. "John Nordell is in Japan causing trouble," Susan Jameson and Hallidie Grant are walking in Scotland. Meg Azzoni received a grant to study the gardens of England after which she will return for graduate study in architecture.

Did any travelers run into Krebs? The rare strain of Marcus Krebulus that is. When last heard of he was traveling in Europe getting his wallet stolen by gypsies before returning to the University of Wisconsin graduate biology program. I passed through Wisconsin on my way WEST this summer (in a '67 VW bus that died 3 times) but all I found were bugs. I still have yet to find Polly Hoppin, Wendy Sonnabend, and Steve Schwartz who've also made the trek to San Francisco. Please get in touch.

Chelsea Congdon is sailing in the North Sea before returning to a final year at Yale studying natural resource management. She is recovering from an accident that impaired movement in her foot and ankle, as updated by Hallidie Grant. Hallidie entered Dartmouth tradition as the first woman leading the graduation procession. An appropriately complimentary article in the beloved Upper Valley News cited her accom-ishments in the role of class president and her future plan to work at Banker's Trust in New York.

NYC will draw Jerome Buttrick home before he proceeds to architecture school. He writes of four years of life in Chicago as of "a scale and tempo more human than New York, and more splendid than Boston." If he keeps adding vivid and expressive notes on life at the bottom of his class agent solicitations, I shall continue to be happy and so consequently, will Andover's alumni fund. It works for Chris Cotten too; "It took the kick of Jerome's personal call . . . not to say Mr. Wonnell's letters were anything short of inspiring . . . don't spend it all in one place" was attached to his large banknote. Try that approach Sally and Jon . . . er . . . if Wonnell ever returns from Taiwan . . . or . . . where was it?

My solicitations only cost you some thought and 18¢ so follow the fine examples of Mark Krebs and Lars Waldner who keep me aware of their events and affairs. Lars conducts his state of affairs in Boulder, Colorado, he ski races in the winter and studies Languages and Aero-space Engineering in the off-season. He censored his events from the newsletter, but I appreciated them. I appreciate any news of new locations and especially thoughts, desires or demands about REUNION — and does anyone know where WWD and Tom Hartman are?

Greetings! This is your class spy, agent '78, bringing you first-hand news from around the world. Marian Helms, Deirdre O'Donoghue, Susan Barnett, Stacy Schiff, and Joel Smith, spent their junior year on the same program in Paris. My international spies report that although Ron Ryan was also in Paris, he was not to be seen. But, Sasha Chermayeff, who was attending L'Ecole des Beaux Arts, was seen at a B52's concert in Paris. After the program in Paris ended, Marian Helms travelled throughout Europe and England, and then returned in style sailing on the QEII! Meanwhile dreaming of Europe . . . Chris Shaw, a psychology major graduating from Wesleyan in December, is planning his escape to Europe next spring. He's hoping to eventually attend a Teacher's College or Graduate School in Clinical Psychology.

I received a really nice letter from Will Rodgers who is involved in a submatriculation program in Political Science at U. Penn. Consequently he'll be taking all graduate level courses his senior year, and in May will receive a BA/MA degree. So, I guess the grinding torture is worth it. Good Luck!! Will also informed me that he enrolled in a Marine Corps Officer's Program only to discover upon arrival this summer that George Vien was in his platoon! According to Will, they both battled their way through the program "along with all the thugs and good ol' boys" as George and he waited for their parents to send them their LSAT results. Who knows, they both may end up as Marine Corps lawyers someday!

Word has it Jack Hogoboom is in Wharton and is keeping the prep tradition very much alive. Jim Lombard spends a great deal of time working for the U. Penn. dining service, Jamie Tilghman still messes with Crew and Acting, Josh McCall can be seen in Smoke's on any given weeknight, and after taking a year off, Chris Mastrangelo is now busy with the University Television Station.

Lisa Tavenner wrote that she was a bridesmaid in Amy Lord's ('76) wedding in June. The wedding was quite a gala affair and lots of fun. Best wishes Amy from us 3rd floor Bancrofties! Once again, Lisa was being a professional waitress (or at least she should be by now!) at the Fisherman's Wharf restaurant in Boothbay this summer.

And, speaking about summer . . . Nick Stoneman, Maew Walsh, and I were all up at Dartmouth "taking Courses" (ie. How to perfect your tan and still get credit!!) Nick, John Starosta, Jamie Reynolds, Heather Little '77, and I all had a rendezvous in Falmouth. We had a fun and rowdy time together that probably would have lasted the entire night had the bars not closed! Actually . . . I think we were on our way to getting kicked out anyhow!

Now for the moment you've all be waiting for . . . our latest newspaper stars, this time featuring two class jocks. In June, Ann Strayer won the Women's Senior Single Sculls rowing title in San Diego, Calif. She later was selected first for the quads on the Women's National team, which competed in the World Cup Championships in Munich, W. Germany in August. Way to go Strayer! Congratulations from us all. Sean Callahan also had an active summer biking cross country. He and a friend from Tufts undertook an 85 day, 8,500 mile bike tour raising money for the Jimmy Fund, which supports children's cancer research and treatment. Each day consisted of riding 7-8 hrs. in the early morning and evening, using the hotter part of the day for fundraising and resting. Although I don't know what the final figures were, they were trying to raise $100,000. Sean and his friend were honored at Fenway Park by the Boston Red Sox September 3. It sounds like Sean had a very busy and worthwhile summer!

I hope you all had a good summer, and I look forward to hearing from more of you this fall. For those of you graduating this year, have a great Senior year!

So! Sophomore year and you've decided to become an art-history major . . . after all . . . what's 10 grand a year? Seriously though, if you're still stuck on a major, think about stenography (A.J.C. is still accepting applicants for the January semester.) Anyway, I've heard from lots of people so I should probably get going.

Mike Shorr has become a frat member at Amherst as has Kate LeMaitre who apparently is now hooked on swallowing goldfish. Also at Amherst are Tsuney Yanagihara, who spent part of the summer at a student conference in Japan, and Chris Neville who in his own words was a "prep chef" this past summer in Colorado. Jennifer Kimball joined them this fall after spending last year at school in England.

Other Andoverites abroad were Dan Jac- obson and Bob Feinberg (both of whom studied in Scotland for the summer), Charlie Barber (who was in Italy), Jan Esielonis (who attended the American College of Switzerland), Scott Strang (qui étudiait à la Sorbonne), and Arthur Blasberg (who spent the year in England). Ian Bond (Oxford) and Julian Harris (Cambridge) treated him to some super times and offer more to any who visit.

Meanwhile, the Vineyard this summer looked like Dunsters on a Saturday night with more Andover people than natives. Among the people that spent at least some time down there were Jon Dee, Chris Cross, Ken McPhail, Jason Lucero, Murrey Nelson, Ashley Gratz, Steve Kane (who incidentally is directing a production at Penn. this fall), Marianna Gracey, and Sarah Aikens. Barb DuVoisin and Nathalie Valette went down to visit and sent me a full report of goings-on around town. Barb was at Harvard Summer School working hard (?) and is rooming with Heather Richards who worked for Senator Roth in D.C. this summer. Barb managed to row at the Canadian Henley — whaaaaaat a jockette!

Other Harvard Summer School people were Kei Hanafusa and Mimi Keon who is presently enjoying her second year at U.C. in Santa Cruz.

Martha Johnson kept herself busy this summer by winning a silver medal with the Radcliffe lightweights at the women nationals, tanning herself at Nantucket, and rafting in Alaska.

Steve Ackroyd ended up in Boston for a couple of days and yes, he is selling used cars to unsuspecting preps. Dianne (note the double n) Hurley worked with me this summer at Legal Sea Foods in Boston. She managed to work 40 hours a week and still spend four days a week on the beach. Jim Harrington spent the summer in Rhode Island but made it up to Boston a few times. He loves Middlebury and was pretty psyched for hockey when I saw him. I saw Sprightly Ryan, Linda Beane, and Rachel Bayly in Boston on Bastille Day. All seemed to be celebrating more than the French Revolution. Linda divided her time this summer between running a children's library program and making egg salad sandwiches at a nearby hospital.

Heidi Steinitz worked in Cambridge this summer, so when Pancho Nahoe flew out from Arizona, we checked out the prep scene in Harvard Square together (Two St. Paulies and no Andies). Robin Aiello travelled cross-country this summer and also discovered the loneliness of Alaska, when a native tried to buy her for a wife. Luckily, her brother thought she was worth more than a walrus teeth necklace.

Sally Baldwin, at the B.U. School of Communication, loves going to a Boston-based school. She tells me that Kate Thomes likes Hamilton and hopes to be the #1 scorer on the women's hockey team again this year.

I stopped off at Yale on the way down to school and saw Rob Anderson (whose parents had been nice enough to put me up for a night), Pete Davies (who has more alligator shirts than ever), Jay McDermott, Lyde Sizer, Molly Pyle, Amy Jedlicka, Sherri Wolf, and Ming Tsai. All seemed ready for school but not quite ready for school work — Dem's de Breaks!

I'm running out of space so I suppose I should mention major moves etc. that I've heard about. Eric Janis is going to Stanford this year, Hyun Park to Columbia, and Marcos Caro to M.I.T. T. McKinley is taking time off from Haverford and Laura Hughes has decided to leave Amherst.

For everyone I've missed, I'm sorry, but space is really tight. For everyone who hasn't written, called, or visited, please stop by. My telephone number is (215) 222-0734. If you are ever in Philadelphia and in need of a drink (which means whenever you're in Philadelphia), stop in.

Hey everybody. Our first Class Notes! In on time, no less (they said it couldn't be done.) All summer long I kept bumping into PA kids, and they kept (insistently) reiterating the same demand: "get me in the notes" so this product might be something of a mad rash of names and events. However, undaunted I plunge onward.

My summer was pretty wild. After a hectic schedule of graduation parties, I spent a few weeks (successfully) completing some unfinished PA business, then I got an apartment in New York City. I headed up to Martha's Vineyard in early August to visit Cindy Donahue, who had been working on her sailing and in an antique shop in Edgartown. Also there for the Fireman's Ball weekend were Sean Rynne, Paul Slattery and Mary Cataudella, who had all been in the Andover vicinity during the summer; John Burgess, who spent the summer at home; Annie Yates and Karen Woods, who roomed with Laura Bull in Nantucket (Laura later went mountain climbing in Europe); Cristina Rubio who worked in Hardy House all summer; and Jodi McAfee who worked on an oil rig in Texas this summer (but flew up for the weekend anyway.) Already on the Vineyard were Sarah Horowitz, who went there after going to Russia with Vic Svec & Company, and Jenny Greeley, who all summer long was babysitter to Rosemary's Baby.

Indications to the contrary notwithstanding, there were actually many PA people in New York City. Andy Morton and Steve Frank shared an apartment, and Jim Cleary shuttled back and forth between New York and the Cape. Catherine Monk was in the city briefly, and we all bumped into Scotti Teschner at a Squeeze concert. Catherine is now in Washington, D.C., working for Ralph Nader and living with Georgetown students. Also at the Squeeze concert was Jennifer Marron, who split her summer between New York and Easthampton, with a brief jaunt to Portugal thrown in. Vivian Toy was in the city, working, and Lin Pei was in the city too, playing electronic games. Bill Kummel came to the city after a month on the Vineyard, and seemed to be successful in his free-lance writing endeavors. Moreover he has cured his electronic game addiction. And Baba Bilkey lived the commuter's life, working in the city and living out on Long Island.

As for the less sedentary of our class, Bill Ullman spent much time doing the grand tour of Europe. In Rome, he got together with Tony Vine who played violin with an orchestra in Saint Peter's Cathedral. Also in Europe, I am told, were Tony Bienstock and Bill Rockett, and John Avery. Tough life. Steve Dembitzer went to China for a month, and Wendy Pulling, ever in search of the novel vacation idea, spent some time hunting down bald eagle nests out west in Washington. Wendy later went up to Squam Lake, where she saw Chris and Tim Richards, Sandra Wagg and Doug Wilbourne.

Katie Leede, Stef Scheer, and Winslow Anderson, all spent their summer up in Maine. Ellie Hirschhorn blazed trails in Tennessee for awhile, then hit the Vineyard and then Greenwich. Cathi DuPuy and Angie Dulin both had "sort of dull" summers working out in their mid-western hometowns. Preparing for her agrarian year off, Laura Unobskey worked at a farm in Fresno, CA, with typical PA practicality, she taught the non-English speaking Mexican, illegal aliens how to speak French. Jackie Thaw tried to escape the heat living near the beach in Nantucket, while Cathy Coyle spent three months "searching for the perfect tan." Another sun-worshiper Kim Hillier, was a mother's helper in Rye, New York: "I drag the kids down to the beach every day and work on my tan."

Jenny Ross worked at her family's restaurant in Vermont, and David Parker and Al Howard "lived the bachelor's life in Boston." Susanna Rinehart worked in NYC before heading off to UNC in mid-August. Already down south, Bo Calhoun worked in a hospital. Abby Adams, Steph Koules, and Mary Hulbert worked at camps in Colorado, Massachusetts, and New Hampshire, respectively. Abby and Mary each said they enjoyed it, while Steph moaned that she had "died of cultural starvation." In Colorado, near Abby, was Randy Accetta, who worked in construction and trained for track. He mentioned something about a Thanksgiving reunion at Rich Kaplon's house on Long Island, but I suppose all interested would be well advised to get in touch with Rich first.

Katrinka Leschey and Laura Harrison in a similarly hearsay-esque vein, trained for a marathon in October (after Laura returned from Europe); Andy Young worked on and around his house on the Cape; Kate Silbaugh spent the summer at her family's place in Canada; and Howie Lebowitz ran the Ryley Room and turned it into a grill/pizzeria that delivered around the PA campus and came close to putting its town competitors out of business. Finally, Ellen Condren auditioned for and got a part in a play at U.C.L.A.

The other night I got together with Carolyn Foley, who waitressed on Long Island this summer, and we hooked up with Katherine Link, Simeon Herskovits, Mark Canning and his sister Sue '80. They are all already at Columbia/Barnard and are enjoying it. Mark spent the summer in New York City shooting his Freeman Grant film. Obviously next time I write I'll have a lot more news of where and how people are at college, with perhaps more room to do it in, too. Till then, please write or call, or better yet, make it to the Exeter game. One final note: C. Daniel (Danny) McLaughlin, who

I'm sure many of you remember from lower year, drowned in the Central Park Reservoir on June 23. Danny was a person of great wit and creativity, and on behalf of the Class of '81, I extend condolences to his parents.

We welcome to our distinguished group of Emeriti Bill Clift, Dalton McBee, and Fred Peterson.

At the installation of PA's thirteenth headmaster, Fred reported that he and Betsey had a most successful summer of sailing, having won regattas on Maine's lakes and placed well on New England's coastal waters. They are headed for a month's holiday in Italy. Also among the many Emeriti present, and in fine form were Ginny Powell, busy as ever with her painting and returning to her Florida home after a summer in Canada; Jim and Alma Grew, just back from a tour of Greece; Allan and Clare Gillingham who took time off from their harvesting chores to attend; and Bill Buehner who felt that the pre-installation banquet speeches were the best heard on the hill in many a moon.

To continue the Malone saga, begun in the July Bulletin, a newspaper article on historian Dumas Malone's completion of Jefferson and His Times informs us that his younger brother, Miles Sturdivant Malone taught American History at Phillips Academy until retirement in 1962: "Today Smiles Miles lives in Daytona Beach, FL — in unretirement. That is, he teaches two American History courses at Daytona Beach Community College and happily plugs Jefferson and His Times. His son, John is a novelist. Helen, unfortunately, has not been well and has been in a nursing home. We wish her well. The Malone address is: 20 Ames Lane, Daytona Beach, Florida 32018."

Ethel and I are back from a delightful summer in Montana where we celebrated our 40th wedding anniversary surrounded by sons Steve and his family, Dudley, Ben, and daughter Hannah.

Sad news: Billie Clark, Don's widow, died suddenly on July 26th. We learned with special sadness for Bart and Claire Hayes that Bridget, cellist with the Merrimack Valley Symphony, died suddenly, Oct. 16, from complications of a long illness.

Art: Riches of Addison

THIS year marks the 50th anniversary of the founding of the Addison Gallery on the campus of Phillips Academy in Andover, Mass., and to celebrate this event an exhibition of major works drawn from its permanent collection, which is entirely devoted to American art, has come to New York for the first time. Called "Masterworks of American Art From the Addison Gallery Collection," the exhibition opened this week at the Hirschl & Adler Galleries, 21 East 70th Street, where it remains on view through Oct. 31. It is an exhibition that everyone with an interest in the history of American art will want to see.

The Addison is a small museum renowned for the quality of its collection, and this superb exhibition, consisting of 75 works, gives us only a sampling of its treasures. But treasures they certainly are. If only for its two Whistlers, its two Mary Cassatts, its very fine examples of Maurice Prendergast, its two marvelous paintings by Thomas Eakins — the full-scale portrait of Prof. Henry A. Rowland and the smaller "Salutat" — and the selection of oils and watercolors by Winslow Homer, the show would be something of an event for aficionados of American painting.

The modern period is also strongly represented, with a powerful late work by Marsden Hartley, "Summer, Sea, Window, Red Curtain" (1942); a small but classic abstract painting by Jackson Pollock, "Phosphorescence" (1947), and excellent pictures by Patrick Henry Bruce, Stuart Davis, Edward Hopper, Georgia O'Keeffe and Charles Sheeler. The earlier masters represented in works by John Singleton Copley, Washington Allston, Ralph Earl, Samuel F.B. Morse and Thomas Sully. There are good examples of the American Impressionists, especially John H. Twachtman, and of paintings of the Realist school, too, especially George W. Bellows. The outstanding work of sculpture in the show is Elie Nadelman's "Seated Woman" (1917).

All of this represents a very impressive achievement for an institution that is described by its director, Christopher C. Cook, as "the only secondary school-based art museum in the United States." But like many small museums today, the Addison has its problems. It is badly in need of a proper conservation program — some of the masterworks in this exhibition are urgently in need of a good cleaning. It is badly in need of a full-time curator. Art works of the quality to be found in this collection do not, alas, look after themselves, nor does information essential to our understanding of them turn up and get published without a proper research and publication program.

The exhibition has thus been organized as part of a campaign to raise funds for an endowment that will support these and other essential museum and educational programs. Yet interestingly, there is no admission charge for the show. It is assumed, apparently, that when interested parties have a look at the high standards the Addison has set for itself in its collecting activities, the necessary support will be forthcoming. It would certainly be very shocking if this wonderful museum and its collection were not given the support they so obviously need and have so obviously earned.

Ambassador McHenry Highlights World Hunger

Seniors ring former U.N. Ambassador with questions about UN, Africa and Mideast after his Stearns Lecture.

Stability in the world is related to full bellies, Ambassador Donald McHenry told students in the Alfred E. Stearns Lecture on January 29. The former U.S. Permanent Representative to the United Nations blamed the coups d'état in Ghana and Liberia on hunger, and noted that food shortages have been an important factor in the fundamental political changes in Poland.

World hunger is a problem both of crisis needs and long-term needs, said the career diplomat, who now is University Research Professor of Diplomacy and International Affairs at Georgetown University; he said Americans' humanitarian instincts have responded well to the crises; but the U.S. Government has not given real priority to long-term solutions to world hunger, which he described as a moral imperative and a matter of self-interest.

Ambassador McHenry's thesis: if U.S. agricultural technology, the world's most advanced, can help hungry nations develop food resources enough to feed themselves instead of importing their food, they will be healthier, more stable nations. They also will have extra income to spend in world trade on U.S. agricultural technology and other marketable goods. Finally it is more in the United States' interest to teach them agricultural technology and sell them our tools and goods than to wear out our soil continuing to produce 60% of the world's food exports.

Students said afterwards that the existence of world hunger was not new to them; it was well publicized for the Thanksgiving Oxfam fast, swim, and marathon that raised more than $3000 on campus to combat world hunger. But Ambassador McHenry impressed students by his clear definition of the issues of world hunger, and his seriousness in listening to their questions and answering them. "He struck home with his statistics," said one senior; "28 people dying of starvation every minute. That's 40,320 people a day."

Ambassador McHenry's talk focusing on world hunger, was tied to Andover's year-long Global Resources Project. The spring term focus will be Global Food Issues, an interdisciplinary course for upperclassmen and a Global Food Conference in April. This summer, Andover students who win Winton Summer Volunteerships will be working in relief

Foundation Grant Funds Student Loans

Independence Foundation of Philadelphia has made a $400,000 grant to Phillips Academy to support teaching, and more recently a seven-year commitment of $700,000 to support student loans.

The first grant was a $400,000 teaching endowment for a new faculty chair to support distinguished teaching at Andover. This will be the third Independence Foundation Teaching Endowment at Andover.

A new series of Independence Foundation grants has wide significance for financial aid funding at independent secondary schools. Andover will receive $700,000 over the next seven years from the foundation as a revolving fund for student loans, based on need, to accompany school scholarship grants. In all, Independence Foundation is offering $10.5 million in loan funds to 85 selected schools over the next seven years, to help them initiate or expand such loan programs for scholarship students, to help maintain diversity in their student bodies.

This marks a new direction for Independence, the pre-eminent American foundation for support

Trustees Endorse Student Diversity

At their January meeting, the Trustees strongly endorsed the faculty's recommendations on the composition of the student body, calling attention to "the task of holding this Academy open to youth from every quarter."

The Trustees supported faculty recommendations to: increase the female-male ratio; formally endorse continuance of (MS)²; increase the number of black and Hispanic students at Andover; increase the number of students from middle and lower income non-professional families; reduce the number of post-graduate athletes; and increase the number of 12th grade "Capstone" students—academically able students who have either graduated from high school a year young or exhausted their schools' curriculum by the end of their 11th grade and who would benefit from an intellectually challenging residential year prior to college.

Headmaster Donald W. McNemar said, "The Trustees made this meeting, with its agenda of student body composition issues, and tuition and scholarships, an opportunity for every positive rededication to the purpose of this Academy—to educate youth from every quarter. They placed particular emphasis on ensuring the diversity of students who study here and on Phillips Academy as a school equally committed to the education of girls and boys."

On the faculty recommendation to achieve parity in the girl-boy ratio, the Board shifted the emphasis from precise numbers to the principle, and to evaluation of the educational experience as the number of girls increases:

"The Trustees welcome the resolution of the Faculty in which they applaud the admissions policy which over the past ten years has brought about an increase from 30/70 female-male ratio to a 40/60 ratio. We agree in principle with their recommendation

Andover-Abbot Regional Association News

Mary C. Stevens

Across the country there is a growing tide of interest among alumni, alumnae, and parents in joining forces locally to support Phillips Academy through the establishment of regional associations. Last year Washington, D.C. and San Francisco took the plunge with great success. Graeme Henderson '52 in Los Angeles, P.D. Block '54 in Chicago, and Pete Stevens '44 in Philadelphia began testing the waters soon afterward, and three more regional associations now show strong signs of life. A regional association provides a much-needed extension of the Andover community, and each existing group develops its own strong sense of identity and mission; these grow out of the local constituency's initiative and perception of the ways in which it can best serve the needs of the Academy and of students from their local area, and at the same time enjoy themselves socially.

The Andover-Abbot Association of Northern California, led by Tom Pollock '61, Brad Geier '75, and parent Bev Tuller, sees a three-part mission embracing admissions recruitment, public relations, and fund-raising. They invite Andover and Abbot alumni and parents up and down the coast to organize regional associations and join them under the umbrella of "Andover-West." Last fall Wayland Bonbright '45 organized a reception for the McNemars at the St. Francis Yacht Club. In January, Andover History Instructor Ed Quattlebaum '60 and his wife Ruth stopped on the West Coast en route to an exchange year in Australia. In San Francisco, in spite of mudslides, there was a reception at the Stephen Wirtz Gallery with cartoonist and author Bill Hamilton '58 as a special guest, after which everyone proceeded to a Chinese banquet where the Quattlebaums talked about the joys and woes of housecounseling. Tentative plans ahead include a luncheon seminar, featuring Stanford Freshman

Northern California's Tom and Helen Pollock

Jingbo Yu '81, one of Andover's first trio of students from the People's Republic of China, and a possible vacation caravan tour of Northern Arizona, to support scholarship funds.

The Andover Association of Southern California, based in Los Angeles and led by Graeme Henderson '52 and fifteen directors, has already sponsored several events. New and returning students gathered with Alumni Admissions Reps and a Kid-Person for a picnic in early September. Approximately 125 alumni, parents and friends of Andover attended the October reception at the Music Center for the McNemars, Jack Richards, Josh Miner, Becky Carr and Chris Cook. In January the Quattlebaums slid down the coast from San Francisco to LA to speak about the faculty role at Andover, at an evening gathering at the home of parents Susan and John Shumway.

Washington D.C.'s regional association considers its actual location the key to its identity and focus: its members can help maintain communications between the Academy and the nation's capital. The Andover/Exeter Washington Intern Program provides a real link between the school and its alumni. In March the Association will host its second annual party for our 1982 Interns and the new admittees. What better way to convince new admittees and new applicants that they would "rather be at Andover"? New York and New England have long enjoyed strong alumni groups, and it is hoped that parents will play an increasingly strong role in those organizations. In Boston, members look forward to the annual Andover-Exeter Night at the

D.C. Andover Alumni "Adopt" a School

Washington D.C. students at Andover with Tom Speers of Admissions, junior high school administrators Theresa Pasteur and Jim Williams, and Meredith Price.

Washington D. C.'s Andover-Abbot Association must be the first private school group to adopt a public junior high school.

The Washington regional association has committed itself to four — Jefferson Jr. High, Kelly-Miller Jr. High, Rabaut Jr. High and Backus Jr. High — through the Adopt-A-School Program. Adopt-A-School was initiated in Prometheans, a black war veterans' service group of Howard University engineering alumni interested in bettering inner city education. The Prometheans have paired all 55 of Washington's junior high schools with local companies and institutions. Their aim is to develop motivation and school attendance among the 12 to 15-year-olds, and to provide role models for a variety of careers through school visits and field trips. The program has the endorsement of the D.C. school system, which will help staff it next year.

Our Washington alumni and parents association's involvement in Adopt-A-School has a double focus: to get behind good public education in their own backyard, and to build a bridge between these four schools and the Andover Admissions office. Working closely with the junior high school administrators, Andover alumni hope to identify very able students and interest them in Andover; in other words, they hope their "adoptee" schools can become feeder schools for Andover.

Malcolm Stevenson '71 sparked the regional association's interest in Adopt-A-School, with backing from Steve Clarkson '55, founding president of the Washington alumni group. Implementation began this year, with Mac Stevenson and Thomas "Mick" Countee '56 as co-chairmen, with the backing of President Nat Semple '64, and the full board of the regional association.

Working with Associate Dean of Admissions Meredith Price and Admissions Coordinator Jean McKee, the D.C. group provided transportation for a guidance counselor and assistant principal, and two youngsters each from the Washington junior high schools, for an overnight visit to the Andover campus in December. "We wanted school administrators to meet with Andover's Admissions staff, visit classes and familiarize themselves with Andover's expectations and opportunities right away," said Stevenson. The students visited classes, spent the night in dorms, and were taken in tow by members of the Afro-Latino-American Society.

But this is only one focus of the Adopt-A-School involvement. While Kelly-Miller guidance counselor Theresa Pasteur and James Williams, Jefferson's assistant principal, were in Andover, back in Washington attorney Jim Kunen '66, author of the "Strawberry Statement", was speaking in Kelly-Miller English classes.

The next Andover visitor to be programmed into the junior highs, Vernon Barksdale '71, resident in psychiatry at Johns Hopkins, has special value as a black role model in the medical professions. Mick Countee says "My role in this, as a black PA alumnus, is to work closely with teachers and parents to identify excellent candidates for Andover admissions." Countee, who is executive director of the Maryland State Capital Parks and Planning Commission, has been active in Andover recruitment for several years. He notes that Bob Carrington '70, out in Hagerstown, Maryland where he is with IBM, has volunteered to identify and canvass black alumni in D.C., Maryland, and nearby Virginia to form a committee to assist Associate Dean of Admissions Meredith Price on his Admissions visits.

Samuel Ethridge, assistant to the executive director of the NEA (National Education Association), is co-chairman of the Prometheans, initiators of Adopt-A-School. He says he is delighted that the Washington Andover-Abbot Association has joined the program: "Andover alumni in Washington offer excellent role models of a variety of careers. A spin-off will be that through them youngsters at these four schools will become aware of new opportunities, and some may come to Andover. Don't worry if few actually come to Andover; the important thing is to give kids motivation and options." Andover Admissions Dean Josh Miner is equally delighted: "The Washington regional association has given us all a wonderful model - outreach in their own community that also builds a bridge from these schools to the Andover Admissions Office. I hope alumni in other cities can play variations on the same theme. A committee of black and Hispanic alumni in every city we visit would make the recruitment of strong minority students more successful.

Pops, organized this year by Laura Richards MacWilliams '74, and to the Alumni Fund Phonothon at Boston University in May. The spring event will be an evening of tribute to Fred Stott '36, Secretary of the Academy, who retires this year after three decades of service to Andover. The New England Association utilizes its proximity to the Andover campus for support as well as good fun. Under the presidency of Bruce Hughes '66 admissions efforts have centered on minority recruitment, and a special "Andover Day" was organized for Boston resource people last fall.

In New York at the annual Student Forum in January, Josh Miner and Jean McKee of the Admissions Office flew down with New Yorkers Mercedes Delgado '83, Holly Peterson '83, and Tom Ull-

man '83. The students spoke to hopeful Andover candidates, parents, and the New York alumni about the ways that students and faculty work together in a residential academic community like Andover. Spring will bring the annual Phonothon for the Alumni Fund, and then a festive celebration of the warmer weather (if it comes!), scheduled for April or May.

This year the arrival of our new Headmaster and the Addison Gallery Campaign have proved twin rallying points for both well-established and new Regional Associations. Last spring the new Andover-Abbot Association of Washington, D.C. was the first to welcome Don and Britta McNemar to the Alumni/ae "family." A crowd of 130 attended the gala reception and dinner organized by Jack High '54 at the Rayburn Office Building to meet the McNemars and celebrate the existence of the young organization. This fall Headmaster McNemar and his wife headed to the West Coast, where they were feted in grand style in Los Angeles, San Francisco, and also further north in Portland, where Broth Bishop '45 carried the ball, and Seattle, where Pen Miller '28, John Poinier '53 and Holt Webster held the reception and dinner for Britta and Don. October also brought their formal introduction to New York's best and brightest at the opening of the Addison Masterworks at the Hirsch & Adler Galleries, and a dinner at the Carlyle Hotel organized by Ann Rollings '75 and Don Shapiro '53. In Chicago Barbara Gatewood '68 and Warren Baker

Andover in Chicago: P.D. Block '54 and two R.A. Lumpkins, '53 and '17

'66 planned a reception at the Tavern Club in November. In Boston Bruce Hughes nailed down the Kennedy Library as the site of the New England Association.

Reunion Planning

Reunion Chairmen held a second, highly successful meeting in Andover in mid-January to plan the 1982 Reunion festivities, June 11-13. Chairmen came through the snow from California, Texas and Chicago: every single Andover-Abbot reuniting class (class years ending in 2 and 7) was represented at the meeting, chaired by Caroline Greene Donnelly '58 and Ken McDonald '50.

Reuning alumni will have a choice of Saturday seminars and workshop, directed by Andover faculty and alumni. There will also be a reception at the Addison Gallery for the McNemars, and the traditional class parties throughout the weekend.

Who will represent you?

The election of Alumni Trustees for four-year terms occurs only once every two years. It is Phillips Academy's only Alumni Association-wide election. This is the opportunity to exercise your franchise in the choice of your representative on the Board of Trustees for the next four years.

Nominees for your consideration will be Walter Alexander '53; William W. Grant '49; Richard D. Lombard '49; and Frances Young Tang (Mrs. Oscar) '57. Your Alumni Trustee Ballot, with brief biographical information for each nominee, will arrive within the next three weeks. Vote for two of the above candidates and return it to the Alumni Office immediately.

Year-End Giving Is Strong

Andover has received a number of recent capital gifts, Secretary of the Academy Frederic A. Stott '36 reports, and taken together, they demonstrate a remarkable, longterm, thoughtful concern for the central values of the Academy. Among them:

—John U. Lemmon '43 has just established, with an initial gift, the Jack Lemmon Fund for Faculty Support. This Fund, long under consideration, reflects Jack's lifelong respect for several members of the faculty, both as he knew them on campus while a student, and in the intervening years.

—the mother, now over 90, of a member of the Class of 1941, has made a substantial addition to the Fund in memory of her son, a Fund she established back in 1948.

—an alumnus who previously gave a Bicentennial Scholarship, now also has established a parent loan fund, saying, "I feel that the educationally disenfranchised people are those in the middle incomes, who fall between scholarship eligibility and tuition affordability."

—an alumnus of the '60s has made a dual gift, half to a scholarship fund, half to buy a new shell for the crew.

—the Culpeper Foundation has made a grant to the Oliver Wendell Holmes Library, in honor of Joseph W. Drake, father of Philip M. Drake '43, and law partner and very close friend of former trustee Chauncey B. Garver '04. The grant is to establish a fund for reserve and reference books for use in the Garver Room. This is a particularly welcome gift in the first year of the Holmes' new Library Director, Lynne A. Robbins, who is trying to provide up-to-date scholarly resources in an era of swiftly rising publishing prices.

—IBM has made a $10,000 grant to the support of (MS)², joining the corporations meeting the Geraldine R. Dodge Foundation challenge grant for corporate support of this summer program.

Associate Secretary of the Academy Sandra Urie Thorpe '70 is tremendously encouraged by the strong year-end showing of the Alumni Fund. By Jan. 13 the Alumni Fund had raised over $727,551 towards its $1 million goal from 4,071 donors, a participation of 22%. The participation goal is 40% this year. Thorpe's slogan: "Let's double the number of donors and the dollars will take care of themselves." There are 183 Non Sibi Associates at this writing compared to 77 at this time last year. Since more than half of these are new members, Sandy looks for a banner year for Non Sibi. Finally, she has special praise for the Class of 1981, which has 97 contributors to the Alumni Fund, more than any other class; that's over 23% participation for the fledgling alumni in their freshman college year.

The Parent Fund now stands at $92,259 from 422 donors, way ahead of last year at this time, and this money has been raised before the Parent Fund Committee has gone to work. Assignments are going out now to 150 Parent Fund committee members, so the goal of $175,000 is attainable.

Addison Campaign Makes News

With 11 months to go, the Campaign for the Addison Gallery has raised one-third of its $4.76 million goal. Excellent publicity, sparked by the Hirsch & Adler exhibition of Addison masterworks in New York last fall, helped establish publicly the Addison's importance and its cause: articles on the Addison appeared in Art News and Arts in January and in Scientific American in February. Thanks to Jody Bush '57 and Bob Feldman '54, co-chairmen of Committee for the 50th, nearly 300 volunteers are now working, says Campaign Director Kyra Montagu. Ed Elson '52 is chairman of the Major Gifts Committee, and Robert Walker '28 is Campaign Chairman.

In the next few months, gatherings are planned around the country where Addison Director Christopher C. Cook will explain what the Campaign's success will mean for the museum and for art education at Andover for the next 20 years. Chris will also be traveling this spring to California, Colorado, Atlanta and Florida. Five Addison days are being planned, starting in April, for people interested in 24-hour immersion in the museum's collection and the teaching that surrounds it. If interested in participating in the Campaign or visiting the Addison, please contact Kyra Montagu.

Cruising with Exeter?

Last year's Andover Red Sea Cruise was so popular, and well received by alumni and parents, that this summer we are offering another vacation cruise.

This time it will be an Andover-Exeter Grand Mediterranean Passage, August 16 to 30. Our friends from Exeter will join us on the yacht "Argonaut" for an exploration of the cradle of western civilization, with stops in Spain, France, Italy, Yugoslavia, and Greece.

Last year's cruise attracted older alumni, families with young children, and also single men and women. Look for your brochure in the mail shortly.

tion's party in honor of the McNemars. The Andover-Abbot Association of the Delaware Valley, led by Pete Stevens '44, kicked off the New Year - and a new organization of alumni and parents - with the McNemars, Fred Stott, and Chris Cook as their special guests. Don McNemar just flew to Pittsburgh, February 25, to meet the "Andover family" there at a dinner planned by Bill Snyder '59 and Anne Oliver Jackson '53.

The spring season promises an equally sparkling schedule of parties, as the McNemars, Fred, and Chris head to the South and Midwest. Jack Greenway '42 of Tucson, Bill Torrey '49 of Phoenix, Ed Elson '52 of Atlanta, and Peter Grant '49 of Denver are planning dinners for the alumni and parents in their areas to meet with the visitors from Andover Hill. In Florida, Sam Groves '27, Dick Starratt '54, and Bill Pabst '43 will organize a noon reception in West Palm Beach, while Donna Ogilvie '30 and John Pitts '56 rally the troops in Sarasota. Two more dinners are planned in Texas, with Gar and Molly Lupe Lasater, both '56, and Barron Kidd '54 taking the lead in Dallas/Fort Worth, and David Underwood '54, Ed Wilson '45, and Paul Kelly '58 teaming up in Houston.

The staff in Andover's Office of Academy Resources stands ready and eager to provide support to alumni and parents who would like to organize a regional association in any area of the country. Local initiative is all that is needed! For more information and a sounding board for your ideas, write or call Associate Secretary Sandy Urie Thorpe '70, or Alumni Relations Officer Mary Comfort Stevens.

Deke's Varsity: The Alumni Reps

Coach "Deke" DiClemente, retired, but now working with Admissions part time, would like to draw your attention to his varsity team of 350 Alumni Admissions Representatives. They are the expanding network of Andover and Abbot alumni serving in an adjunct admissions capacity, providing information about the Academy to individual students, and groups, conducting interviews, and reporting back to the Admissions Office. Often our Reps are the only contact some youngsters have before arriving at school in September.

"Our Reps interview 600 kids a year," Deke tells us, "and they have just as good a rate of admittees to the Academy as the professional Admissions staff. Those interviews are an important way to size up qualities in a youngster that go beyond grades. These people are doing a great job for Andover and most of them really enjoy it." A letter from Craig Nordeen '70 in Waterloo, Iowa, starts, "Here I am reporting in from my day of interviewing newscasters at the Des Moines Register and Tribune. I had a wonderful experience and I hope you'll see fit to use me again in this capacity."

What do Alumni Admissions Reps do besides interviews? They telephone and visit junior highs and other feeder schools, establish and maintain contacts with alert "Kid People", the teachers, coaches, guidance counselors, ministers, and club leaders who work with young people. Reps also assist Admissions Officers when they come recruiting and they contact and encourage the admitted students to choose Andover. Graeme Henderson '52 out in L.A. does this by giving a picnic for them.

Who makes a good Alumni Admissions Rep? Deke doesn't hesitate: "Live people who can take the initiative and seek out community kid people," says Deke; "We don't need dead wood. Write to me if you'd like to join up." He cites Peter Fromanek '62 of Memphis as a model. "We always get good candidates from Memphis, because Pete keeps in contact with 15 schools, and when there's a Parents' Night or another good chance, he's there with slides of Andover. When it comes time to interview, Ken McGraw comes over from Mississippi to help him they can make a good time of it."

"Again, people like Ned Yost '47 in Cleveland and Brot Bishop '45, who's Mr. Andover in Portland, not only have done a great job for years; they're bringing in some new blood to keep things moving. Ned has Bill Stewart '61 on the hook as Rep, and Brot has a good small group working out in Portland, with Mort Bishop III, '70 assuming leadership - That's essential."

Deke's final point: Helping the Admissions Office isn't just the Reps' job. Know your Alumni Admissions Rep! When you see a promising youngster that Andover would be right for, or if you meet a community adult that Andover should know as a Kid Person, call one of your local Reps. Give them a hand.

Valya Boosts Russian Studies...

American's lack of training in foreign languages (only 15% of secondary school students) puts us at a disadvantage in international affairs and economics, according to the President's Commission on Foreign Languages and International Studies. The Christian Science Monitor, reporting this in 1980, headlined Andover's modern language program as "Language teaching at its best." "Classroom teaching . . . was superb," wrote education editor Cynthia Parson. "It was, simultaneously, old-fashioned and modern. The very best of teaching ideas were used, as was the best of the tried and true of intensive language experience." For spring term, thanks to an Abbot Academy Association grant, a course in Mandarin Chinese will join French, German, Italian, Spanish and Russian.

Last fall, the focus was on Russian. Soviet teacher Valentina Kruglova joined the Russian Department for one term, taking on a succession of classes at every level with energy, skill and great warmth. "Valya" lived with the Krivoboks. Next year, Russian Department Chairman Georges Krivobok will spend 10 weeks teaching in the USSR. Mrs. Kruglova is the third Soviet teacher to come to Andover through a 15-year-old program of exchange sponsored by AFS International.

...the Student View

by James S. Driscoll '84 and Anne M. Fleming '83

Russian, the gem of the language department at Phillips Academy, provides constant mental challenges and is ultimately very rewarding. Presently 69 students at PA are studying Russian; a language of declensions, aspects and conjugations, utilizing a 33-character alphabet. Certain areas of Russian are not as difficult as they first may seem. In fact, some ideas are more easily expressed in Russian than in other languages.

For instance, Russian has only three verb tenses. Take the verb "to walk": you don't have to worry about "had walked," "had been walking," and certainly not "would have been being walked," because they don't exist! Russian is also a phonetic language and almost every word is spelled the way it sounds.

However, facing Russian every morning at eight o'clock is not always easy - especially learning words in Russian like "pedagogical" and "philological" that aren't even familiar in English! We learned more in those first weeks that we thought possible, and that's why Russian is rewarding.

This year we have been fortunate to have a Soviet exchange teacher, Mrs. Valentina Alexandrovna Kruglova, who teaches English in Moscow. Being instructed in Russian by a native showed us many differences between Soviet and American teaching styles. Neither method is necessarily better; the same material is learned. We know that Soviet students will see the same differences next year, when Georges Krivobok, head of the Russian department at Phillips, goes to the Soviet Union to teach in a school similar to Mrs. Kruglova's school in Moscow.

Five aging preppy rebels find their long-defunct rock band is a cultural icon, its one record worth hundreds, and the demands for a reunion irresistible

The Storm Will Rise Again

Excerpted with permission from Boston Magazine

Nostalgia by Joseph P. Kahn ('67)

I am not, by nature, much of a collector. Like combs and ball-point pens, contemporary cultural artifacts disappear from my grasp with eerie regularity. I've tried to train myself to be more careful, but it never works. The one obsession of my youth, a baseball-card collection big enough to fill a refrigerator carton, vanished forever when I left home for boarding school in 1963, and my parents subsequently sold the old homestead. Though that same collection would, as its current fair-market value, put my own son through four years of private schooling, I've long since stopped crying over the loss and begun to look upon it as a lesson in choices: Had I been more concerned at age 21 with what I'd managed to hold onto, and less concerned with what I had yet to risk, I might never have produced my son at all. These thoughts came into sharp refocus not long ago, when I got a phone call from a friend who claimed to have bumped into an old classmate of mine at the Rat, a rock club in Kenmore Square.

"He said his name was Tony Thompson," my friend reported, "and he was there with his old band, the Rising Storm."

I scratched my head. The only Tony Thompson I knew - Andover '67, Harvard '71 - was, when I had seen him, an attorney with the Justice Department, in Washington. Married. Stable. Dedicated to his promising legal career. Thinking harder, I vaguely remembered the Rising Storm, Tony's band, from our senior year at prep school; but the Storm's one record, a "vanity" pressing of limited number and even more limited appeal, had, like the group itself, drifted into the summer after graduation and gone down without a trace. To find them now resurfaced at the Rat seemed rather unlikely. As hard as the Reaganites might be on Carter-era civil litigators, I doubted many of them were launching second careers as recycled rock stars.

"I understand the Rising Storm cut an album," my friend went on. "You don't have one lying around, do you?"

"Well," I replied, "I guess I used to. But you know what happens to old records." I heard him groan. "Why the interest, anyway?" "Because," he whispered hoarsely, "those albums are selling to record collectors for 400 bucks apiece."

Lord have mercy. With trembling hands I dropped the telephone and tore through my record rack like a fevered prospector: . . . I overturned closets and ransacked the basement, emptied two steamer trunks, even found my old Andover diploma, but nowhere in my frantic digging (Four hundred dollars! More than the cost of my stereo. More than the bluebook value of my car) did the Rising Storm arise.

Numbed and defeated, I finally abandoned the hunt and called the offices of Benjamin Thompson, Cambridge architect and Tony's father. His secretary heard me out politely and said that, yes, the Rising Storm had been at the Rat - and would be playing one last reunion concert at Faneuil Hall Marketplace that afternoon. I composed myself and caught the T.

Here we must backup a bit, to get the proper sequence of events leading to the moment of resurrection. Last March, the Boston Phoenix published a piece by Howard Litwak on the fantastic sums of money being fetched by certain obscure "garage band" albums of the sixties. Litwak led off his piece with the saga of the Rising Storm. He wrote:

"Calm Before the Rising Storm is not by any stretch of the imagination a well-known album. Recorded on the Remnant label, sometime during the psychedelic era, Calm represents the entire output of the Rising Storm, a rock band comprising Phillips Andover students. . . . What makes Calm Before the Rising Storm particularly interesting is not its music (which I'm told is pretty good) but its current market value."

A copy of the piece found its way to Linda Cohan, sister of Boston attorney Robert D. Cohan, ex-Storm guitarist, and she wasted no time in calling her brother. "Sit down, Bob," she warned, "because you're not going to believe this." Cohan grabbed a chair and listened, eyes growing wider. Then he got a copy of Litwak's article for himself, ran off several copies, and mailed them, along with an emotional cover letter, to the five other band members, who, according to Andover's alumni office, were now scattered from Illinois to North Carolina.

His missive touched off a sustained round of "I-don't-believe-this" long distance phone calls and nostalgia-drenched chain letters. Tony Thompson, former lead singer, wrote back from Washington:

"I was delighted, of course, that we are now famous and potentially millionaires many times over. I floated on air for a few days, got quite angry at Mady (his wife) because she immediately starts considering me to be in the same class as Paul Simon, told everyone at work (especially the secretaries, who naturally think I'm quite terrific now) . . . and then I listened to the album again. That I'm afraid, brought me right down to earth."

Thompson's skepticism was healthy and natural. With or without the distance of more than a decade, it was hard to reconcile the humble efforts of one preppy garage band with the cries from the collectors that here was the greatest thing since the opening of Tut's tomb. . . .

But the vision kept inflating itself. There was sudden talk not only of reuniting for old time's sake but of live performances, even with a new album. Pumping up the band members at every turn were a pair of rare-record freaks from the Boston area named Erik Lindgren and Ron Fantasia, two men who fairly swooned at the notion that the Rising Storm could be lured out of retirement by the right combination of fortune and flattery.

It was also very probably doomed, for reasons both logical and psychological. Richard Weinberger, guitarist, instructor in gastroenterology at the University of Chicago Medical School, was in playing shape, having gripped frets with a bunch of fellow MDs only the year before, but at the last moment he found a mid-August rendezvous impossible. Charlie Rockwell, keyboards, ski instructor at Killington, Vermont, had certain commitments to the Army Reserves. Scheft, associate professor of English literature at North Carolina Central University, had the urge but no drums (his wife, sensing in Tom the sudden inflammation of some primal nerve, surprised him with a gift of drum lessons, just in case). And Todd Cohen, bassist, journalist in Raleigh, North Carolina, felt - well, as Thompson phrased it in a letter to the others:

"Todd feels the 'Star Trip' aspect of this whole thing has gotten out of hand. He wants to get together simply to play, without the strains of having to perform, or trying to avoid making fools of ourselves on stage, or having to make money in order to foot the bills". . . .

So they had to boot this thing around for five full months: when to come, where to meet, what to play, whether to bring families, how to pay for it all.

"Do you remember," Bob Cohan was asking me, "where the name of our group came from?"

I shook my head. We were sitting at a table at the Flower Garden Cafe in the Landmark Inn, waiting for the rest of the band to finish setting up, and enjoying a beer in the bright sunshine.

"We used to be called the Remnants," he said, "because most of us are Jewish and we all had to take the eleventh-grade bible course that featured a book called Remnants of Israel. Unfortunately, our band was so bad we had trouble getting booked for dances; when we did get booked, people were always putting on records instead." He smiled.

"Then came senior year and the infamous American-history course. We took our name directly from the course syllabus: 'The Rising Storm,' which was the name of the period immediately preceding the American Revolution. We practiced real hard and got our big break when the other school band lost a member to academic probation and had to cancel from the Abbot mixer. We featured about a 45-minute slow song, and everybody loved us."

I closed my eyes and nodded at the freshness of the memory; and then I was gone. Adrift. No longer at the Flower Garden Cafe in 1981, but at Kemper Auditorium in Andover, circa 1967. Sipping not on a cold bottle of Molson's ale but on a warm Dixie Cup full of vile fruit punch. And feeling on my palms just the faintest sheen of sweat as the girls came through the door - Abbot girls, Dana Hall girls, Pine Manor girls, each one gawki-er and more miserable-looking than the last. The Storm was on the bandstand (were those really Marimekko floor samples covering their amps?), coolly tuning up. The girls were arranging themselves in firing-squad formation, giggling wildly among themselves. And there we stood, smelling heavily of Old Spice and testosterone, waiting for the solemn ritual of sex and chivalry to begin. Asking ourselves questions like, How many fast songs could the band get through before I ditch my date? And, What exactly are the grope possibilities on a 45-minute slow song? I never did have all the answers. Neither did the Rising Storm. Nobody did. It was just, you know, an excuse for everyone to play.

I opened my eyes. Cohan was gone. Ron Fantasia, in worn blue jeans and a faded orange T-shirt, stepped to the microphone and blew on it lightly.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he said proudly, "the greatest band ever to come out of Boston - the Rising Storm!"

Tony Thompson, wearing the bottom half of a gray chalkstripe suit and a paisley necktie, nodded to his old friends, and they began to play Chuck Berry's classic "Around and Around". . . .

At first the band sounded tentative, as if the joke were suddenly over, the wild bluff called, and it was really time to play. Thompson's voice was raw and a little weak. Rockwell's organ chords disappeared into the drone of a distant jackhammer. But pretty soon they all began to warm to the task, and the crowd, a mixture of relatives and innocent bystanders, warmed with them. As the Storm rolled through its dusty repertoire of Young Rascals hits and early Stones covers, the beat got slightly bigger, the melodies somewhat sharper. Weinberg in particular showed no ill effects from his surrender to lower-intestinal-tract pathology, rifling off lead-guitar reffs unrivaled by anything heard at Andover. If, on the whole, the guys were not the Yardbirds reincarnate, well, they were decent and determined. More important, they seemed to be having an awfully good time. Hannah Thompson, aged 16 months, climbed into her father's lap for a duet on "She's My Girl." Lillian Kaplan, 81, grandmother of young Doc Weinberg, bustled among the autograph-seekers wearing a smile a mile wide and a "Rising Storm World Tour 1981" T-shirt.

Sitting there before the same band that had serenaded me a whole lifetime ago made me feel pretty damned nostalgic. When I joined Tony Thompson on Lower Cape Cod a few days later he was feeling pretty nostalgic, too.

"Why all this interest in us?" he asked rhetorically, sipping at a scotch. "My guess is that it's the juxtaposition of two totally unrelated things. One is the punk-rock phenomenon and our band's links to its roots. The other is this whole preppy craze, which personally drives me up the wall, but I'm sure it's a factor. . . .

"The idea of making another album is as appealing to us as it was 14 years ago, but we're also told that it would be successful only if we stuck to the type of songs we used to do and not try to get too 'contemporary.' But I've changed - we've all changed. I like softer music now. I'm not into rock 'n' roll much anymore."

He turned to greet his wife and daughter as they completed a late-afternoon stroll around the house.

"Part of me loves Fantasia's kind of adulation," he finished up, "and part of me can't relate to it at all. He's a very sweet, very sincere guy, but I feel like he's in a completely different world from the one I live in. I'm a lawyer now, not a rock star. Hell, I never was a rock star."

tion that the Academy's admission policy in the course of the next decade should implement our convictions that Phillips Academy should make the same commitment to the education of females as to males. We expect the Headmaster and the Faculty, in the process of implementing this policy, to evaluate the results from the education point of view and report their findings periodically to the Trustees."

"The Board took this occasion to make a clear statement of their respect for the success of coeducation here over the last decade," said Headmaster McNemar "and to direct us to assure that this Academy remains a leader in the education of girls as well as boys in the 1980s. We have a very successful Admissions operation," he noted. "We have the largest number of well-qualified applicants ever, and as a result we now have increased choices. Therefore, we must make difficult admissions decisions, guided by our goal of a diverse student body. The faculty, first in committee and then in full body, have recommended strategies to enable continued progress toward our goals of excellence and diversity."

The faculty had overwhelmingly approved the measures they recommended to the Trustees, but rejected proposals to reduce the number of students in the Junior class and to set up a faculty admissions committee. The faculty's recommendations, which originated in the faculty Committee on the Composition of the Student Body, chaired by Mathematics Instructor Frank Eccles '43, were studied by the Alumni Council last fall, and then voted by the entire faculty in recent meeting.

Tuition, scholarships up

The Trustees voted a tuition rise to $8200 for boarding student and $6250 for day students, and also voted a 28.6% scholarship budget increase for next year—more than double the 13.5% scholarship increase they voted last year at this time. They budgeted $2,078,500 for scholarship grants and $202,500 for student loans.

"Andover is committed to maintaining the quality and excellence of the academic experience," said Headmaster Donald W. McNemar. "Part of that excellence is our commitment to youth from every quarter, and this tuition rise is necessary in order to assure a democratic school. It means that we are asking those parents who can afford it to pay somewhat closer to the actual cost of a year at Andover, which is just under $11,000 per student. In this way more of our endowment income can go to financial aid."

With the tuition rise of almost 14%, 35% of Andover students will receive scholarships next year (compared to this year's 31%), including a number of Andover students who do not receive them now. Headmaster McNemar said the Trustees' tuition and scholarship policy reinforces the faculty's recommendations on the composition of the student body. "The Trustees affirmed their commitment to diversity with these budget actions."

Budget and enrollment

As a result of the Trustees' January decisions and deliberations, the school will have a balanced budget and a stable level of program next year, which means that any new programs added must be offset by adjustments in existing programs. It will be a year of restraint in program and personnel, but one which allows for salary and wage increments to meet the projected level of inflation for the coming year for faculty and staff, Headmaster McNemar reported. "The Trustees have projected an enrollment of 1225 for the next year, 957 boarding and 268 day, and a return to 1210 students the following year, 20% of them day students. The proportion of girls at the Academy next year will be 40% and the Trustees expect the number of girls to increase in succeeding years."

The midwinter campus

The campus has been white and deep and the weather near zero for most of winter term. It was a chilly contrast for David Thomas, a history instructor from the Cranbrook School in Sidney, Australia, arriving for a one-year exchange with History Instructor Ed Quattlebaum '60. Mr. Thomas settled into the housecounselorship of Elbridge Stuart House, history teaching and coaching, while Ed and Ruth Quattlebaum and their sons were landing in Australia in the blaze of late summer. At home the school community was saddened by the death of Francis McCarthy, Instructor Emeritus in English, of a heart attack on January 14.

On January 15, Nelson Foxx from St. Mark's Episcopal Church in Dorchester helped the school commemorate the life and vision of Martin Luther King, Jr., on the 50th anniversary of the slain civil rights leader's birth. Andover's student dramatists went into action early in January, inviting Hotchkiss and Tilton Academy to share a "Theatrefest" at Andover. PA contributions were Sartre's No Exit, directed by Upper Steve Pimpare, and Israel Horowitz' Rats, put on by Theater Instructor T. D. Hüllman and Upper Greg Luke. Next was Strindberg's A Dream Play, directed by Seniors Ann Bernhardt and Michael Tiemann. Meanwhile an improvisational theater group, headed by Pimpare and Senior C.C. Richards, "Absurd Notions", began its weekly meetings.

This year's Phillipian lecturer, Trustee Gerard Piel '33, president and publisher of Scientific American, stressed the importance of free exchange of scientific information, within the sometime paradoxical Constitutional concepts of the rights of the press, and the limitations that qualify it. In February, Westminster Abbey Organist Christopher Herrick played the new Cochran Chapel organ, and students who didn't leave for the long February weekend could see and hear about wolves from naturalist-veterinarian Charles Berger, who brought a live wolf with him.

(MS)² in Chicago

A good idea is worth spreading. An (MS)² Conference was held in Chicago in November, funded by the Joyce Foundation of that city, to interest Chicago institutions in replicating Andover's summer math and science program for minority students. Conference participants heard about the principles and methods of (MS)², and the need for a Chicago-based version, from Elwin Sykes, Frank Eccles, and Patricia Edmonds of Andover, from Chicago foundations that support (MS)², from local university figures, administrators from the Chicago public schools that send students to the Andover summer program, and from the students themselves. Patricia Edmonds, Andover's director of foundation and corporate giving, reports that since the conference, three institutions have indicated interest in setting up an (MS)² program in Chicago.

Learning about drug abuse

A program of drug and alcohol abuse education has begun in the school community, funded by an Abbot Academy Association grant of $12,750. It was proposed by Psychology Department Chairman Alexandra Kubler-Merrill, the Cluster Deans and Dean of Studies Phyllis Powell, and its workshops are led by the Freedom from Chemical Dependency Foundation, from Needham.

By the end of January, each cluster had held a workshop for students only, led by foundation experts (many of them recovered substance abusers) familiar with the problems of and pressures toward drug abuse in an adolescent community. The aim: to share accurate information and discuss issues freely and in confidence, so students can be better informed for the choices they have to make. Next, the Foundation staff will lead a day-long workshop for all faculty, just before spring term begins, to stimulate their awareness and to talk together about the problems of chemical dependency. The major portion of the A.A.A. grant will be used next year for a broader school program to be planned in the spring.

The 1981-82 school year is a strong one for PA athletics. Some remarkable results were tallied for the fall; 14 winter teams are heading toward the peak of their seasons now, and the spring coaches and captains are already thinking beyond the foot of snow outside.

The last days of the fall season provided excitement. The girls' soccer team turned in the most stellar record, a 15-game undefeated season. The girls also brought home the trophy for the first Andover-Exeter Invitational Tournament, earned with wins over Governor Dummer and a close 2-1 victory over Exeter.

Exeter's football team was not as generous. The Red handed PA football its first and only loss of the season. That 7-12 loss to Exeter was a disappointment, but no one can deny the achievement and great success of a 6-1-1 season record.

Andover's runners also saw a great deal of success. At the Intercholastic races, PA's boys finished second behind a speedy Northfield Mount Hermon. The girls' fine fourth place Interschols finish brought them only slightly less joy than their 31 to 24 win over Exeter. The boys' soccer team, playing a difficult schedule, had a four-game losing slump at mid-season, but rebounded with amazing energy to beat Dartmouth, 3-1. The unusual win over a good college team inspired the Blue to a satisfying victory over Exeter, 3-1. The 5-2-5 record of the girls' field hockey team represents strong performances against Middlesex, St. Paul's, and Holderness, and Exeter. The girls jumped to an early lead against the Red, but Exeter fought back to tie the season finale at 2 goals apiece.

Gymnastics, new and popular for boys

Now it's February - and winter is the best time to go through the Athletic Complex, which literally is jumping with people: the boys' and girls' gymnastics teams, fairly new and very popular at Andover, practice in clear view in the Abbot Wing, which has huge windows to the corridor. Winter sports include both boys' and girls' teams in swimming, squash, and basketball, and hockey; for the boys, there's wrestling; winter track seems much more interesting to boys than girls, but Jack Richards coaches the few girls that come out too. There's fencing at PA again, that attracts both girls and boys, and of course ballet and modern dance. All this goes on inside the Athletic Complex; outdoors, the Alpine and cross-country ski teams of George Best, Diana McNab and Pete McKee have plenty of snow for training and competition this year.

Looking ahead to spring, boys' tennis will be a real force on the New England circuit again, with the Palandjian brothers leading the roster, and girls' tennis looks to be stronger this year than last. Girls' lacrosse has eight returning letter winners and several strong players from JV as a nucleus. Last year's 10-1-0 record will be difficult to match, but with captain Sam Chivers organizing the defense, the Blue goal should be well covered.

This will be a strong building year for boys' lacrosse, says coach Paul Kalkstein, but with giant defenseman Alec Hogg and midfielder Steve Moreland heading up the 10 returning lettermen, they will make a good try for that Division I title. Andover crews lost individual talents to graduation, but Coach Pete Washburn says the boys' boats may yet end up with a faster boat this spring. Kit Washburn says that her crew will be without its elite rowers of last year, but the Andover-trained crew members of this year have the determination and ability to excel.

Upper and captain Andy Siderowf led last year's golf team to a 12-3 record. Coach Dave Graham has high hopes for the 1982 season, expecting Siderowf to challenge the long standing records of Chris Gurry '66. This year's match with St. John's Prep should be particularly exciting as PA tries to disrupt the rivals 107-game winning streak. That will be May 29 at the Andover Country Club.

After beating Exeter last year for the first time, the girls' track team has set a new, early goal: they hope to host a relay meet during the first week of competition for our area rivals. PA's eight returning letter winners should team up nicely with some talented newcomers for a strong Andover showing.

The boys' baseball nine hopes to improve last year's 7-9 record.

Coach Hale Sturges, planning his sixteenth season as Andover's coach, says his field is filling up nicely and he sees good relief for his lone returning pitcher among new players. The boys hope to repeat last year's two victories over Exeter.

Cycling will be a varsity sport this spring. Races with Northfield Mt. Hermon, Deerfield, Choate and Hotchkiss are already scheduled, and the cyclers hope to convince Exeter to get a team on the road also. Then, says Coach and History Instructor Derek Williams '65, we could reinstate a tradition of Andover-Exeter bike races that originated in the 1890s.

If you will be in the Andover area and would like to take in some Andover-Exeter athletic competition this spring, aim for Wednesday, May 26, when Andover-Exeter baseball, boys' lacrosse, boys' and girls' tennis and track all will be at Andover. Join us!

FOUNDATION (cont. from p. 1) of independent secondary education, whose grants total $26,423,500. Andover has received more than $1.5 million in scholarship grants from Independence since 1952, the latest series ending just this year.

Robert A. Maes '28, president of Independence Foundation, explains why the directors decided that the new $10.5 million series of grants should provide student loans, not scholarship grants:

"The greatest danger for independent schools, for the rest of this century at least, is loss of diversity in their student bodies, if tuitions continue to rise. The intent of our Student Loan Programs is to stretch the scholarship dollars of these academically strong schools, in effect permanently endowing part of their financial aid programs, so they can continue to offer places to able students from lower income brackets. Cash scholarship grants, once spent, are gone he noted; student loans can be recycled again and again to help new students." Maes notes that the payment experiences of schools like Andover, that have had student loan programs for years, indicates that 98% of the loans have been repaid on schedule or earlier, a better record than most banks.

Graves must be prepared for often heavy use by the one-third to one-half the student body who are involved with music at Andover, whether or not for credit. Well over 200 students take private music lessons.

The Academy Where Art Isn't Academic

The role of art at Andover is a dynamic one and the students are not urged to be passive about it. 'We try to sink the art barb deep in kids when they're young'

It's unusual for an exhibition or a book about American art not to include at least one painting from the Addison Gallery of American Art in Andover, Massachusetts. Yet this splendid collection of over 5,000 works has never published a comprehensive catalogue of its holdings. And while the Addison Internship, established in the late '40s, was a successful training ground for future museum professionals studying at Harvard's Fogg Museum, this program has been cut short due to a lack of funds. To remedy these circumstances, along with such problems as a leaking roof, and to stem the general dwindling of funds in the original endowments for the director and other actual and would-be staff, for conservation, museum programs and exhibitions and, last but not least, for acquisition, the museum kicked off a $5 million fund-raising campaign last May to mark its 50th anniversary.

What are some of the masterpieces in the Addison Gallery's collection and how did it come to own them? First, there were many among the original 100 works assembled by Thomas Cochran, class of 1890, and the committee that spent the years 1927-31 establishing the gallery. It opened on May 16, 1931, and included two Gilbert Stuart portraits, Thomas Eakins' Salutat and Elizabeth at the Piano, Winslow Homer's West Wind and three other works, and several paintings each by John Singer Sargent and Albert Pinkham Ryder. The museum now owns the Homer paintings Kissing the Moon and

The subject of Thomas Eakins' Portrait of Professor Henry A. Rowland, 1897, was a scientist and a member of the class of 1867.

Eight Bells (of which the Addison also owns an etching) and many watercolors that make it a Homer collection of "grade A quality," according to Stuart Feld, a partner and director of Hirschl & Adler and a former curator of American decorative arts at the Metropolitan Museum of Art, whose first job was as intern at the Addison Gallery. Feld also cites the depth of the gallery's holding of works by Maurice Prendergast (the collection also has rather unusual works by his brother, Charles), George Bellows, Eastman Johnson and Thomas Sully. The museum's relative weaknesses are in the Hudson River School and other landscape genres, notes Feld, because prevailing taste did not favor such works when the collection was being formed. Cook turns this omission into resource, singling out Frederic Church's Landscape—Mt. Katahdin and Albert Bierstadt's The Coming Storm precisely because they are small and thereby illustrate lesser-known aspects of the artists' work. They are hung near one another, and Cook encourages students to use them to think about scale in their own landscapes.

One is not as likely to see a student taking notes in front of a painting at the Addison Gallery as making a sketch, diagram or mental notation and then dashing back to the studio—which may be as close as the convertible second-floor space that sometimes doubles as a gallery. Whether or not this is what the museum's founders had in mind, the role of art at Andover is a dynamic one and the students are not urged to be passive about it. "We try to sink the art barb deep in kids when they're young," says Cook in a comment that probably could have been made by any of the three men who have served as the museum's director.

The first director, Charles Sawyer, was instrumental in establishing in 1933 the school's first art courses for credit: painting and drawing. "The aim," said Sawyer, "will not be to produce artists . . . but rather to show that an ability to draw may be as much a part of a complete cultural equipment as the ability to write." The classes were taught in the gallery by Bartlett Hayes, Jr. Both men were Andover alumni; the following year they managed to institute art as a required minor for upper middlers.

In 1940, Sawyer left the Addison to become director of the Worcester Art Museum. Bartlett Hayes replaced him as the director of the gallery, while retaining his connection with teaching as chairman of the art department. During the next 29 tumultuous years in the history of American art, Hayes laid the groundwork for the gallery's enduring commitment to keeping its American art of the past alive through the recognition and instructive exhibition of contemporary art. He and popular painter-teachers Maud and Patrick Morgan are remembered as being sympathetic and supportive of Abstract Expressionism from an early date. But even then "the museum did not have enough money to collect it," says Robert Feldman, director of the New York print publishing firm Parasol Press and 1954 graduate who is active on the campaign executive committee. A most welcome gift, as early as 1950, was a classic drip painting, by Jackson Pollock, Phosphorescence, 1947, given to the museum by the late art patron Peggy Guggenheim. (Feldman is personally seeing to it that the present crop of contemporary artists is well represented—at least in prints: he donates to the Addison one example of nearly everything he publishes.)

Among Feldman's classmates at Andover were artists Frank Stella and Carl Andre, filmmaker Hollis Frampton, art critic Lucy Lippard (at nearby Abbot Academy—now merged with Andover) and William Agee, director of the Museum of Fine Arts, Houston—all graduating within a year or two of one another, a 1955 alumni poll concluded. "The most remarkable development, from the standpoint of the older classes at any rate, is the rise of art." By that time, Hayes and some of the teachers had already implemented their novel approach to art education—a combination of studio-based courses and direct contact with works of art—that today lives on in visual studies, the trimester requirement for graduation or for taking advanced studio or art-history courses. It was a short time before other schools wanted to develop similar programs. Once again, Hayes and the Andover art department responded with an idea strong enough to endure to this day—in spite of a dry spell. Beginning in 1963, with funds from the Carnegie Corporation of New York and the U.S. Office of Education, the Addison Gallery began sponsoring summer workshops for high school teachers and administrators, outlining a new approach to visual arts education and its overall role in general education. That program ceased in 1968, but the present week-long, intensive Art Teachers Workshops (part of the Andover Short-Term Institute Program), inaugurated in 1977 with money from the Rockefeller Brothers Fund, are its direct descendants.

In the intervening years, Hayes, who retired from the Addison Gallery in 1969 to head the American Academy in Rome, was replaced by the present director, Christopher Cook, a conceptual artist. In 1964 Cook left the University of New Hampshire, where he had been teaching art, to become the Addison Gallery's assistant director, launching an exhibition program miles ahead of the programs in many institutions aimed at an adult audience. The 1967 "Feelies" exhibition concentrated on the sense of touch, emphasizing that art involves more of the senses than just vision. Sometimes terse, sometimes slightly madcap, the catalogues that accompanied many of Cook's shows were extensions as well as documents of the ideas presented.

Not limited to shaping imaginative exhibition policies, Cook (not an Andover grad) will proudly point out the Self-Portrait of painter and inventor Samuel F.B. Morse, class of 1805, and Eakins' portrait of Henry Rowland, an inventor of spectroscopy and member of the class of 1867. Cook is assisted by registrar Nicki Thiras in keeping a watchful eye on the nuts and bolts and paperwork of the fluid collection. Conversation generally comes back to the museum's role as originally intended—for which Cook is an ardent spokesman—that is, in the lives of 1,200 Andover students, 35 percent of whom are now female, and 30 percent on scholarships. Cook believes that when "students begin in the studio, they become intrigued, then they start looking at contemporary art, then at earlier art"—in that order. For this reason, the studio-based visual studies program is a requirement even for the two art-history courses offered at Andover, which survey art before and after the French Revolution. Practical courses in photography, film and video are very popular. From 1973 to 1978, the Addison Gallery ran a highly acclaimed program involving Andover students and faculty, in which video was used to record and also to be an integral part of the museum's art classes for people institutionalized in local mental hospitals.

Feldman recalls a visit to Andover last October to a lab class in landscape photography taught by James Sheldon, teacher and curator of the comprehensive photography collection. "The course was being taught in the museum. It was their fifth class. There were a dozen or so photos strewn about on a table—Ansel Adams, Carleton Watkins, Dorothea Lange. Sheldon was saying, 'See the way he burns it in at the side. Try it and see what happens,' and the student went off to the darkroom to try and do what a great photographer had done!"

A student would have to try very hard indeed to emerge untouched by art.

Inside the next directory: be there!

The Office of Academy Resources is planning to publish an Alumni Directory for distribution in the fall of 1982. Soon all alumni and alumnae will be receiving a biographical questionnaire, part of the information gathering process for the new Directory. Your help is needed if we are to produce a book that contains accurate and current information on the Andover and Abbot Alumni.

Information that will be included in the Directory: an alphabetical listing of names, current home (or preferred) addresses and professions, a geographical listing of alumni, and Andover and Abbot class lists. The last Alumni Directory was published in 1975. This new one will update that information and include our newest alumni from the classes of 1976 through 1982.

When you receive the biographical questionnaire please complete it and return it to the Office of Academy Resources immediately. You will be helping us in the complex task of producing an accurate and useful Alumni Directory.

A minor or a major legend?

"Not since the young Orson Welles has there been such an explosion of precocity," says Newsweek of director Peter Sellars '75, whose space-age version of Handel's opera Orlando is set at Cape Canaveral and in the Everglades, its hero a jumpsuited astronaut torn between glory and love. But Andover Teaching Fellow Bart Srebnick, who helped him teach a PA course, in fall term, found more than precocity in Peter Sellars' teaching and in his person.

by Bart Srebnick
Take a look at his calendar: February 3 - New York City and Joe Papp; February 7 - Boston and the American Repertory Theater; February 10 - Los Angeles to meet with the Andy Warhol Robot; February 15 - Minneapolis, consulting with the Guthrie Theater; back to New York City February 20; in Boston to catch his 28th performance of Orlando on February 23; out to Los Angeles again February 29; off to Europe for a rest, March 10. This is not an unusual calendar for Peter Sellars, the Prince of the theater. At the same time that he was teaching at PA this fall, Peter was working miracles directing two staged productions simultaneously in Boston: one a Japanese Kabuki performance, reminiscent of Wyatt Earp and Buffalo Bill Cody for the Theater of the Deaf; the other his modern adaptation of Handel's opera, Or- lando; at this writing in its 32nd week at the American Repertory Theater's Loeb Drama Center. According to New Yorker music critic Andrew Porter, Sellars' American premiere of Orlando is "the newest and the most exciting work encountered on the operatic stage." Momentarily Peter is engaged in constructing a computerized robot of Andy Warhol for his "No-Man Show", and reviving Gershwin's Funny Face for a Broadway production next fall starring choreographer Tommy Tune and Twiggy.

Ever since his four years at Phillips Academy, 1971-75, Peter Sellars has been bombarding the stage with outrageous and beautifully communicative theatrical performances. He has accomplished masterful interpretations of the original literary and musical texts, librettos and scores of Shakespeare, Handel, Aeschylus and Mozart. At 24 he

English 506: The Aesthetics of Synesthesia, Kinesthesia, and The Kitchen Sink

So you ask, what is Synesthesia, Kinesthesia, and the Kitchen Sink? And who, if you don't already know, is Peter Sellars? With only the medium of black ink and the English language; without color, sound, aromatic substance, clay, film, steel, strings, stage, or song:

SYNESTHESIA (raw fish)

The orange sun rippling juicy rivets of pulp and peel Screaming bitter sweet between her lips white mashing squeezing Silver sneezing pierced drops of floating golden rings splashing Blue notes through Red arrows slippery flesh disappearing in staccato bursts of purple sweet fluffy Rouged Cheeks

KINESTHESIA (Jazz)

Images Pictures of rhythmic limbs and words dance across a sea linking time simultaneously arcing bouncing jumping tumbling stop diminuendo crescendo lifting skirts flying sinking syncopation sassy sexy beating drumming running on rhythm sailing on strings sliding knock on wood . . . tap, tap, slam!

PETER SELLARS

Keep scanning and you may catch a glimpse of his countenance, at one the Invisible Man and Superman.

I have to admit when I arrived in Andover to teach English in September, my last expectation was to find myself team teaching a course with Peter Sellars entitled The Aesthetics of Synesthesia, Kinesthesia, and the Kitchen Sink. For three months I would play Sancho Panza beside Don Quixote; as he rode fifteen sharp students, like his dear Rosinante, to venture forth—upholding, defending, and in search of the highest moral standards to govern art as a model society. As the King and master planner of the course, Peter unfolded ten weeks of sheer genius; he shared with students and with me his knowledge of the stage and a glimpse of his personal vision for the theater.

We met in the debate room at Bulfinch every Monday from four in the afternoon until ten in the evening: attacking, exploring, and condensing the various masterworks of Aeschylus, Seami, Ben Jonson, Mayakovsky, Stravinsky, Eisenstein, Hitchcock, and John Cage. Included in the reading list has climbed to his present position in the world of music and theater by combining a bold vision, a sensitive eye and a miraculous ability to engage his audiences with the very core of his performances.

When he was ten years old, Peter became an apprentice with the Lovelace Puppet Theater in Pittsburgh and began to experience oral tradition as well as an appreciation for the chemistry of "commedia" and its electric force on the stage. By the time he reached Phillips Academy, he was becoming a master of miniature theater. From his first production of A Puppet Circus, Peter's projects grew more ambitious at PA, and in Denver, Colorado, where he formed his own puppet theater, playing on the legitimate stage and in the streets for four summers. As a senior at PA, Peter staged Shakespeare's The Tempest, using six-foot puppets fashioned after Picasso sculptures.

During the summers in Denver, by invitation from the Elitch Theater, Peter put on adaptations of Alice In Wonderland and The Wizard of Oz incorporating the music of John Cage, as well as Strauss and Stravinsky. These experiments convinced him as a teenager that avant-garde productions can have a catholic appeal. His touring puppet show in Denver played for shoppers, invalids, and juvenile delinquents, in parks and the streets of the toughest areas of the city. The people adored his ability to communicate, through puppets, such elevated works as Wagner's Ring Cycle and Stravinsky's Nightingale.

In his works as a puppeteer and director in Denver and at Phillips Academy Peter began to shape his vision of the theater, which he would later describe as "a social act as well as an aesthetic one." Engaging his audiences, Peter places them in a position where they have a stake in the outcome of the performance by actually participating in the production. In Coriolanus, when he was producer and director of the Harvard Summer Repertory were Laurence Sterne's Tristram Shandy and Friedlander's The Whirling Dervishes. The subject for debate ranged from Japanese Noh and Kabuki drama to avant-garde dance; covering twenty-five centuries of artistic experience; from the Orient to the Mediterranean, from the Occident to the New World. The classroom expanded as the medium required, branching out to include resources from the Addison Gallery, the music lab, the audio-visual facilities, the dance studio, The Loeb Theater, and Little Osakas (a Japanese restaurant in Cambridge).

Peter was on the line every Monday. His spontaneity; ability to snap into the appropriate mood to convey his point; knack for hopping from one subject to another with remarkable coordination; his skill at coaxing, encouraging, and demanding the best from a person—all add up to a strong, bold, uncompromising style as a director and a teacher. Garnered on the puppet stage, Peter's sense of "commedia"—shifting the focus to the area of highest energy—promoted a vital atmosphere in the classroom. Every lecture was outrageous, exciting, and exhausting. In ten weeks I never had the feeling that Peter rehearsed for a seminar. The class would prepare for a discussion of North By Northwest by reviewing Eisenstein's Film Sense, and by viewing the film repeatedly as many times as they could possibly squeeze into a week. Then Monday afternoon Peter would enter the debate room and let the students open the discussion. He would progress with flashes of insight from one student's comment on music to another's perceptive observation of the use of color or montage; always leading with apparent haphazard mien toward a cohesive construct; subtly planting ideas and allowing the students to discover their connection.

It was clear, conveyed by his emotional and sincere manner, that some things are sacred: a person's own principles; the necessity of art to transcend its creator; Wagner's passionate music in Tristan and Isolde, connecting with the nerves and sinews of the listener; the poetry in images, created by performers of Noh plays and modern dance; the grace and precision of a Japanese garden. But Peter's lectures were not without their share of humor. During our first session in a discussion of Greek tragedy he referred to Aristotle as "a nasty little man . . . the great bore of all time." Peter would often create a great mystery involving the intricate analysis of a painting, poem, or film and leave us wrestling to the point of hysteria while he sat—Guru Sellars—a mystical idealist observing our frenzied and in some cases feeble efforts to piece together his puzzle.

Peter in the classroom is pure energy, a verbal gymnast, and the number one authority on his subject—the holistic artistic experience involving all the senses—an invention that matches his imaginative and self-confident stage direction. Listening to Peter talk about a Japanese tea ceremony; the courses, the colors, the textures, the cracked, stained tea cups and flower blossoms allows one to step momentarily into a delicate time-honored tradition, that feels as harmonious and as eternal as the sun dipping into the Inland Sea.

-Bart Srebnick

Orlando's sets at the Loeb Theater were designed by PA Art Instructor Elaine Spatz-Rabinowitz.

Theater, he had Roman centurions herd surprised audience members onto the stage to join the mob scene; spontaneously they shouted for blood.

Reactions to Peter's creative thrust as a student at Andover ranged from choleric attacks to high praise and encouragement. One of his teachers said "Sellars was a glib, exasperating, and bull-headed young man only interested in boosting his own ego." But another commented that "if we can all keep out of his way, perhaps we won't trip him up." The general word on Peter's productions at Andover was that they exhibited an extraordinary degree of ingenuity, professionalism, and maturity. One of his counselors said that Peter was "capable of capturing an audience with one phrase and holding them in his command for the rest of the evening."

From his single-minded devotion to a particular segment of the dramatic arts at Phillips Academy, Peter continued to dazzle, surprise, and enrage peers, colleagues, and professors a few miles down the road at Harvard. After an intermission in his academic and theatrical career, spent in Paris observing painters, sculptures, the theater, and the opera, Peter returned and cleared the stale air as he burst upon the stage in Cambridge. As the clouds of dust parted there could be no doubt that he had engaged his audiences and made them aware of issues surrounding artistic evaluations of the theater, as well as issues confronting the society in which his productions were framed. In reaction to his unconventional approach to theater, he was "blacklisted" by every theater group at Harvard and so formed his own company, The Explosive B Cabaret. They performed Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra staged in and around the Adams House swimming pool, and King Lear with a Lincoln Continental on center stage. During his junior and senior years Peter caught the attention of Robert Brustein, the new artistic director of the American Repertory Theater, with his spectacular performances. Subsequently Peter directed Gogol's The Inspector General for Brustein in the ART's first season. This spring, his daring production of Handel's Orlando for the ART is being extended beyond its intended run at the Loeb Theater.

It is a tribute to Peter Sellars' magnanimity and his ability to mastermind three creative projects at once that this fall, having just returned from India, China and Japan as Harvard's Sheldon Traveling Scholar, while in the midst of preparing both Orlando and the Kabuki western for the Theater of the Deaf, he found the time and generosity to design and teach The Aesthetic of Synesthesia, Kinesthesia, and the Kitchen Sink. To date, his course at Andover may be the greatest show of all. Baffling students and me by his genius, Peter directed us down a peculiar path toward sensual and artistic adventure.

1975: King Sellars on the PA stage

Frederic A. Stott '36

Fred Stott will retire in June. Although the results of his 30 years of distinguished service for Phillips Academy are woven through every part of the Academy, few people are fully aware of the remarkable impact his efforts have had on this school.

Fred returned to Andover in 1951 when John Kemper asked him to join the staff as assistant to Larry Shields, who in addition to his teaching duties was serving as the liaison between the school and its alumni. Fred's first responsibility was to edit the Andover Bulletin. When he proved very effective at this, Headmaster Kemper gave him responsibility for the Alumni Fund, until then not a consequential factor in the school's finances.

It quickly became clear to Fred that in order to improve the results of the Alumni Fund, Andover needed to develop an alumni structure which would give the alumni more ongoing interest and sense of responsibility in relation to the school. The revised charter he and an Alumni Committee recommended has made the Andover Alumni Council, since 1955, an effective, stimulating, and responsible advisory body to the school. Its members have helped shape key decisions in the life of the Academy and played important roles in its support. And just as Fred had envisioned, the Alumni Fund grew to become a significant percentage of the Academy's annual budget — unrestricted flexible funds that the Trustees can count on and allocate wherever they are needed most.

By the late '50s it was clear to Headmaster John Kemper that there was a critical need to update faculty and student housing and, on the academic side, to develop adequate facilities for an expanding interest in art and in science. John Kemper concluded that the only way to finance all these was to approach all the alumni through an all-out capital fund campaign — the first in Andover's history. He turned to Fred, by now Director of Public Relations and Alumni Secretary, and asked him to lead it.

For the next four years, from 1957 through the summer of 1961, Fred was totally committed to what was known as the Andover Program, with a goal of $6,000,000 — an unheard of objective for any secondary school. For Fred this was to be a totally new experience, for which he had no preparation; but once again he accepted the responsibility and the challenge with enthusiasm. From September, 1958, when the campaign was formally announced, until June, 1961, Fred's office was in New York and he returned home only on weekends. He identified the campaign leadership, prodded them to do their jobs, developed campaign materials, and traveled from coast to coast. It was a demanding and an exhausting responsibility and a lonely one, because in the end the ultimate success of the effort was dependent upon his efforts. He was the spark that kept the fire burning. His wife Nan was totally supportive through all this, and in everything he did for Andover, whether Fred was away for two weeks at a time, or their home was cluttered with visiting alumni. Thanks largely to Fred, the campaign was a smashing success and in the end raised $6,700,000 for Andover.

The results are evident today — Evans Hall for science; the Arts Center; Kemper Auditorium; the Underwood Room; Abbot Stevens House; Alfred E. Stearns House; Stimson House; Fuess

House; the Copley Wing of the Library; the renovation of other dormitories and improvements in faculty housing.

Students and faculty at Andover in 1982 should appreciate that these facilities did not just grow out of the ground. They are there because of the efforts of Fred Stott and of many alumni he inspired to be generous and to work in the campaign effort. Afterwards Fred was elevated to the position of Director of Development and also placed in charge of the construction of the buildings financed by the Campaign. In this he worked closely with John Kemper and the Trustees, and with architects and contractors.

When Ted Sizer took office as Headmaster in 1972, he recognized the significant role Fred had played in the past, and named him Secretary of the Academy with responsibility for publications, public information, alumni relations, development and liaison with Trustees. Within a matter of months he was given responsibility for the planning and the direction of the Bicentennial Campaign.

Fred was the one who urged the Trustees to establish a goal of Elbridge Stuart House dedication, architect Pietro Belluschi speaking.

$50,000,000, which they regarded initially as an impossible dream. More conservative souls argued for $30,000,000. But Fred persisted, even though he knew that the larger figure would be far more difficult to raise.

Fred was right. Thanks to his imaginative and tireless efforts the Campaign goal was exceeded by over $2 million. As in the case of the Andover Program in its time, this was by far the largest amount ever raised by a secondary school in the United States. Those others who contributed so much to the success of the Bicentennial Campaign — Ted Sizer; Campaign Chairman Mel Chapin '36; Ann Caldwell; Sandy Thorpe and others on his staff, and hundreds of volunteers — all agree that it would never have happened without Fred. He designed the broad strategy; he called the plays, and if need be he carried the ball himself.

The successful completion of the Bicentennial Campaign was clearly the summit of Fred's career — so far. But there was more to come!

When in June, 1980, Ted Sizer announced his decision to give up his responsibility as Headmaster, the Trustees were mindful of Bishop Hobson's observation that the single most important job of the Board was to choose a Headmaster. So the Board appointed a Search Committee from among their membership and designated Fred as Secretary of the Committee to coordinate the searching.

Consistent with his past performance, Fred pressed a wide search and kept the Committee moving so that by January of a year ago, they had found in Don McNemar the pre-eminent candidate and 13th Headmaster of Phillips Academy.

Now Fred is about to retire. Those who have leaned heavily on him over the past 25 years find it hard to see how Phillips Academy can get along without him, realizing what a force he has been in developing resources so important in making Andover what it is today. Equally important are the countless intangibles — advising headmasters and counseling Trustees who have respected his wise judgment, his integrity and his deep desire that PA be the best in terms of quality and style. He always has set high standards for himself and challenged all to do likewise in terms of Andover.

How fortunate for us all that John Kemper brought Fred Stott back to Andover in 1951!

—Donald H. McLean '28

Frederick S. Allis, Jr. '31, comes to a similar conclusion, but Fritz's viewpoint is that of a faculty colleague:

"Fred Stott's nickname 'Fireball' is reported to have come from the fact that he pitched the slowest ball in the history of baseball. . . . Through his parents, who presided over Williams Hall, I was able to follow Fireball's career after Amherst, particularly his distinguished record with the Marines in World War II. When he was awarded the Navy Cross for bravery under fire at Iwo Jima, I shared pride in his achievement with his family.

When I look back over our 30 years of friendship, I see a kaleidoscope of different memories. An indelible one is of Fireball at faculty dances sporting a bright red tuxedo jacket. A recent memory is sad: the death of his wife, Nan. My clearest memories, however, are of the work we did for the school in fund drives. My part in these ventures was a relatively minor one, but it put me in a position to observe Fireball at his best. I still marvel at his boundless energy, his close attention to detail, and above all the contagious enthusiasm that he brought to all he did.

Nan and Fred Stott with Pym on the steps of Moses Stuart House

As I look back over Fireball's many accomplishments during the course of his career, I think I know the quality that made him perform so successfully. Whether it was a team, the Marines, or Phillips Academy, he was able to identify himself with the institution concerned rather than with individuals in those institutions. Thus the changing of the guard made no difference to him — his loyalty was to the institution itself.

As a result, Fireball has left a mark on Phillips Academy that can never be erased."

This ex-Marine who spent all his boyhood and most of his adult life in an all-male atmosphere at Andover, gets exceptionally high marks as an administrator from his women colleagues at Academy Resources, says Sandra Urie Thorpe '70, Associate Secretary of the Academy:

"There are several words that come to mind when I think of Fred Stott. One of the most prominent is demand. Fred has always placed high demands on himself and in turn on those who work with him. He also has allowed us all a large measure of independence, and this has always been with the understanding and expectation of excellence. There is no better way to develop the skills of a staff member than through this combination of high expectation and confidence in ability; it allows us to work independently, while knowing that Fred is there as a sounding board for new ideas, there to help solve a difficult problem, there to share the excitement of success. In every sense he has been a superb mentor to all of us."

Fred Stott's work in education reaches far beyond Andover and the secondary school world. Back in the 1950s Fred was a founder of a nation-wide publishing enterprise that began as the "Moonshooter Cooperative." Fellow-founder Corbin Gwaltney, editor of The Chronicle of Higher Education, describes this:

"Fred, the co-founder, was named publisher of the enterprise, the circulation of whose products have reached a whopping three million, and he has remained deeply involved in the affairs of the Moonshooter Cooperative, later named Editorial Projects for Education (headquartered in Washington, D.C.). Wearing his E.P.E. hat, Fred played a leading role in establishing The Chronicle of Higher Education, a weekly newspaper that has become a sort of bible for the men and women who run the country's colleges and universities; the E.P.E. 15 Minute Report, an influential newsletter for higher education's boards of trustees, and Education Week, a new weekly that is fast establishing itself as the prime news source for the key people in elementary and secondary education."

Ted Sizer shared nine years at Andover with Fred, and they took many a trip together to ask an alumnus for money to improve education at Andover:

"Loyalty to an institution is an old-fashioned concept that is at the heart of it with Fred. But he is not at all old-fashioned in the sense of wanting to live in the past; Fred wants to uphold the ideals of Andover and find new ways of expressing them. He is wonderful to go out fundraising with, because he has never wavered from the notion that people are lucky to be asked to give to Andover."

Headmaster Don McNemar, at the beginning of his career at Andover, brings a fresh perspective to Fred's Andover career:

"Please call Fred Stott at Andover" was the first contact I ever had with Phillips Academy. Fred is the man who makes apparent-

Fred and Nan shared the challenge and satisfaction of a 35-day walking trip up to Mount Everest's 18,000-foot base camp alone with three sherpas and nine porters in 1965. A shared love of outdoor life—climbing the White Mountains' 4000-footers, cross country skiing, a weekend at Cardigan, N.H., or just a quick run around the campus—provided an essential balance.

ly impossible things happen at Phillips Academy—new dormitories, a $52,000,000 campaign, faculty teaching endowments, a splendid coed Athletic Complex. As I have worked with Fred this year, developing plans for the future of the Academy, and visiting alumni and alumnae across the country, I've learned why Fred has earned such respect and affection: for his accomplishments, for his hopes for this Academy, and for his care and concern for individuals. To hundreds of alumni and alumnae, Fred Stott has become "Mr. Andover"—a man with a vision for the Academy, a commitment to realizing that vision, and a love for every aspect of this school.

The President of Andover's Board of Trustees has known Fred longer than anyone, as a youngster growing up on Phillips Street, on the edge of the campus, and as a classmate. Melville Chapin '36 remembers standing on the curbside with Fred as ten-year-olds, watching President Calvin Coolidge process up School Street to the Phillips Academy Sesquicentennial Celebration in 1928:

"Neither of us could know how much the future would hold for us together. Our closest relationship began on another holiday, July 4, 1974, when we met to start planning our work together as director and as volunteer chairman of the Andover's Bicentennial Campaign. Energetic, tireless, insistent, thoughtful and thoroughly dedicated to PA, my leader he has been. Laughs we have had, doldrums we have surmounted with his spirit. Go get 'em was the work and no flagging footsteps allowed. He supplied the imagination and leadership. The results speak for him and for the entire Andover-Abbot family. Thanks, Fred, from the bottom of our hearts. You have made us secure for the years ahead."

Fred's future plans include marriage to Susan Garth Comstock on June 20; working on a part-time basis for Andover; serving as consultant to Wheaton College for its Sesquicentennial Campaign; and residence at 4 Robandy Road, Andover.

PA's energy bill for 72-73 was $263,000. In 80-81 the bill for much less energy was $1,214,700 and without energy conservation it would have been $2,014,000. What's happening this year?

Behind the scene of classrooms, spring sports and dormitory life, Andover is quietly engaged in a million dollars worth of capital expenditures for energy conservation. Headquarters for this two-year-old campaign is the former Abbot Gymnasium, in the offices of the Academy's director of energy conservation, John Tomlinson, and its director of the physical plant, Bruce Crawford. Their talk is of energy audits, BTUs and ECMs (energy conservation measures): it is animated by a sense of having the means and freedom to tackle a difficult task and of knowing that it is going well. Many of Jack Tomlinson's energy-saving projects are still in their early stages; yet through February 1 of this year compared to last year, the Academy used 700 gallons/a day (avg.) less of the #6 oil that stokes the school's central power plant and heats most of the campus.

The freedom for an expensive energy conservation campaign derives from the Trustees' recognition that, today, soundly directed energy conservation measures yield the highest reliable return on their investment dollar — at least 33% — in terms of reduced operating expenses. The dollars come from a $500,000 conservation fund, a gift of earnings from the Beinecke Fund (est. 1977). The Trustees have since accelerated the program by adding $400,000 from this year's budget (unexpended when oil prices didn't skyrocket higher this year) and the office of energy conservation has obtained a $113,600 federal grant for energy conservation. And there's going to be more.

On its idyllically spreadout campus, Andover must heat some 150 buildings, from venerable Foxcroft Hall (1808) to the Athletic Complex's new Abbot Wing, for students, faculty families and staff — nearly 1800 energy users in all. Of these, 102 buildings are heated by the central power plant through its underground steam delivery system.

In 1972-73 this took 47,650 barrels of #6 oil and cost Andover $197,600. In spite of belt-tightening measures that in eight years cut oil usage down to 25,513 barrels, the 1980-81 oil bill was $874,000. In a scenario familiar to homeowners, the price of #6 oil had multiplied eightfold in eight years, from approximately $4 to $34 a barrel.

Jack Tomlinson, energy conservation director

(including Summer Session)

And the energy problem is not going to go away. Headmaster Donald W. McNemar has said that the major challenge of his first years at Andover would be the threat of 1980's economics to academic excellence and student diversity. Business manager George Neilson notes that the spring '82 oil glut may depress oil prices temporarily, "but energy prices will remain high. Everyone will have to learn to live with them."

But the picture at Andover has changed in the last two years. The school has moved from the "belt-tightening" approach and piecemeal conservation within the operating budget to a philosophy of system-wide improvements in the physical plant to reduce energy needs. This philosophy first became policy in fall, 1979, when the Trustees voted (1) to set up a $150,000 revolving fund for energy conservation from the endowment, free from fiscal year constraint; (2) to appoint a director of energy conservation who would give full time and focus to energy planning and (3) to limit the use of the conservation fund to projects with a simple payback period of three years or less; that is, projects that would save enough money to pay for themselves in 3 years.

Instead of hiring an energy conservation director from the outside, the Trustees appointed Jack Tomlinson, then director of Andover's physical plant. Tomlinson was already familiar with the campus system and with energy problems far beyond the scope of the operating budget to address. The school then hired Bruce Crawford, Boston University's assistant director of physical plant in charge of electrical and mechanical engineering, as the new director of Andover's physical plant; he would implement the energy conservation measures (ECMs) that Tomlinson's office would develop.

Both men were in position by April, 1980 and Tomlinson began visiting other campuses that had major energy programs underway (St. Paul's School; NYU; Penn; Mt. Holyoke and Dartmouth); he obtained information and advice from state energy conservation sources, brought professional energy consultants to campus for advice on buildings with special problems; did a lighting survey, and an infrared ground scan to locate underground heat leaks, and other studies, before drawing up 32 recommendations.

At about this point, Frederick W. Beinecke, II '62 suggested that the Trustees use $500,000 in accumulated earnings from the Beinecke Fund to establish the conservation funds rather than create a revolving fund of only $150,000 from the unrestricted endowment. The Trustees voted the change and established the $500,000 conservation fund in 1980. They still kept the three-year payback rule, so as to concentrate the fund on the most serious campus energy problems, that would yield the greatest reductions in the operating budget.

"Without that half-million, a system-wide program wouldn't have got off the ground," said Tomlinson. "The Beinecke money really meant we could go at the jugular of our energy problems," says Crawford cheerfully, and by that he meant the power plant.

One of the first things Bruce Crawford did on campus was show that he could shut the power plant down all summer and still provide the campus' electricity, steam and hot water needs during the Summer Session. (It's cheaper to buy electricity from outside when steam isn't needed to heat the buildings; but Commons needs steam whenever school is in session, and everyone needs hot water.)

Crawford discovered the old Abbot laundry boiler, set it on railroad ties on the grass near Draper and provided plenty of steam for the Abbot Kitchens

(which served meals that summer during Commons renovations). Experimenting, he also found that with some repiping, a faculty apartment's gas-fired hot water heater would heat enough hot water for its dormitory too. In the two weeks between Reunions and Summer Session, Andover's power plant employees, aided by work study students from the Greater Lawrence Vocational School, re-equipped the domestic hot water heaters over a major part of the campus, making them independent; the central power plant could shut down. Then the school equipped the Commons on the main campus with a $32,000 gas-fired boiler to make it independent, so the central power plant now can be shut down every summer, to save money and to look for problems in the system to repair. Total cost of the power plant shutdown: $48,900; net annual savings in the operating budget, taking the additional gas costs into account: $79,500. With a "simple payback period" of .6 years, this case more than qualifies for the conservation fund, and illustrates why the Trustees regard conservation a good investment.

The old Abbot boiler is now down in the Sumner Smith Maintenance Center, and will be put on a trailer for emergency use in case a building's steam power system breaks down. Crawford's moral: never throw anything away!

The energy conservation effort has meant a more intense pace of work for the physical plant staff, which is doing virtually all the installation and repair. They have supported the energy campaign with technical ideas as well as their skills, says Tomlinson. Chief Engineer William Phair and his power plant crew have had to be particularly resourceful. They recently installed a $135,000 heat exchanger (Economizer) in the stack of the power plant, requiring extensive equipment changes. The Economizer uses the very hot flue gases (formerly wasted into the atmosphere) to preheat water being delivered to the boiler. With savings estimated at $49,000 annually, it will pay for itself in less than three years.

Outside the power plant, key figures in the energy conservation effort are Franklin Buchan, assistant director of physical plant (see Profile, p. 41) and James Winn, superintendent of maintenance; Eugene St. Onge, foreman of carpenters and painters; Dan Morrison, foreman of plumbers and steamfitters; and electrician Dick McDonald.

The key faculty figure, says Tomlinson, is Associate Headmaster Peter Q. McKee, chairman of the Science Division who also chairs the faculty-student energy conservation committee. "Pete and his committee ran the successful campus-wide window-caulking campaign. And I call on Pete if I have any problem installing ECMs. He's very effective in impressing on people the need for these energy conservation measures, whether it's in big classroom buildings, dorms or faculty homes."

Tomlinson and Crawford are looking at the large building complexes on the main campus for substantial energy savings: the Athletic Complex, Evans Hall, the Library, George Washington Hall, and the Arts Center are more susceptible to energy-saving improvements than, say, Bulfinch. Built in 1817, that "classic hall" may lack a modern heating system, but it also doesn't have a complicated mechanical system for whirlpools, labs or exhaust fans — it only has blackboards, tables, and chairs. English teaching, relying on pencil-pushing, may be singularly energy-efficient. Nearby, Athletic Director Joseph Wennik '52 is enthusiastic about heat recovery from the Sumner Smith Hockey Rink. That cloud of hot air from the Rink's compressors now will be ducted into the Cage to reduce its heating bills. Tomlinson, Wennik and Crawford are working their way through a list of other Athletic Complex ECMs.

Around 1960 when Evans Hall was being planned, oil cost less than $2 a barrel, so oil cost was not a factor in its design. Daylight was, so there is lots of glass, sheltered by flat horizontal concrete projections of the roof and floor outside the building. It didn't matter that these were excellent conductors of heat to the outside until oil costs rose dramatically. In 1981, professional energy consultants measured the BTU loss and recommended lots of insulation and other ECMs. Since Christmas, PA carpenters, plasterers, and painters have given the building an invisible inside sweater to retain its heat; they have double-paned the windows, and heavily insulated the outside walls; they even insulated the concrete projection outdoors to block the heat leaks, but preserved the aesthetics. Annual savings of $19,500 are expected. Down the road, the administration sees a remote-control energy management system as necessary to maximize control of energy conservation. Thus a top priority at this point in the conservation campaign is system-wide improvements of heat controls, whether at the power plant or in buildings.

Consider 4000 radiators in 150 buildings. The PA steamfitters are in the two-year process of equipping each radiator with a pre-set thermostatically controlled, tamper-proof Braukmann valve which will shut the radiator off when the temperature in the surrounding zone rises above a certain mark. This should avoid the hot spots in a building that cause a student to throw open the windows and start heating the outdoors. One over-riding timer will regulate the temperature of the entire building with reference to both indoor and outdoor temperature sensors. At $200,000 this is the most expensive and all-encompassing of the 21 conservation projects undertaken; on completion, the system will have necessary controls and annual savings of $95,000.

The federal energy conservation grant of $113,600, which helped pay for the Commons boiler and the power plant's Economizer, will also assist in the repair or replacement of 125 malfunctioning steam traps. Heat leaks in the steam main also have been repaired. And the power plant no longer blows off unused steam from its stack to wake up Draper Cottage students. Andover can't afford unused steam anymore.

Andover is neither the only nor the first school to invest heavily in energy conservation. The trustees of St. Paul's School have provided an almost unlimited fund, Tomlinson reports, and Choate-Rosemary Hall trustees have provided a million dollars to be used over the next three years: "Most of the schools I know are investing in energy conservation these days; they have to, to cut waste. With the top-level support and dollars we've had for the past two years, we're level with any of them, and our program's still accelerating."

The most important thing Tomlinson learned from other schools? "Computerized energy management systems don't work out if the buildings they are to control are not already tuned to efficiency. Most older buildings don't have the heat monitoring and control equipment to interface with a computer. Bruce and I want our buildings on such a system, but first we want them to be ready. We're fine-tuning our buildings and our systems now."

Fine-tuning plays well at Andover. Bruce Crawford reports that Andover's total energy bill this fiscal year will be $150,000 less than last year — the first significant drop in total energy costs since the OPEC oil embargo. The entire physical plant staff can be proud of that accomplishment. There's room for improvement, say Crawford and Tomlinson: Andover's electrical bill (only a quarter of its oil bill) is still climbing up, because of added electrical usage since 1978 (building renovations, additions) and continued price rises in electricity. Significant electrical energy conservation, says Pete McKee, will have to depend upon students, faculty and staff thinking to turn switches off.

The Beinecke conservation fund and additional grants now are totally committed (and partially spent) on 18 energy projects in progress and 3 now completed. The energy conservation office has 11 measures in the planning stage, ready for funding, that meet the Trustees stringent payback requirements for energy savings.

At the May Trustees' meeting, Headmaster Don McNemar will recommend more funding for the office of energy conservation for its next round of campus plant improvements: "As an investment, energy conservation is good financial stewardship. It is good management that will help hold down tuition rises. As education, it is sound to practice good ecology as well as to teach it."

Curricular change: critical languages?

Introductory Chinese for Seniors, APL Computer Programming for Juniors, and an Advanced Math Seminar (to follow Math 65) will be offered as new courses next year, as well as a physics course in electronics offering hands-on experience, and a French journalism course. But these additions will be accomplished through trade-offs in the existing curriculum, to meet Headmaster Donald W. McNemar's guidelines for a steady level of programming next year. And the new standing Curriculum Committee, which approved the changes, proposes that each department review its course offerings and reduce the number it offers each term. The Andover Course of Study currently lists 292 year-long, one-term or two-term courses, and the actual options open are even more.

"There are both educational and economic reasons for the expansion in the number of courses to stop, and for the start of the difficult process of pulling back," says Curriculum Committee Chairman Nathaniel Smith. Slated for particular scrutiny: those courses with what Mathematics Instructor Smith calls "luxurious" enrollments of less than 10 students.

It is difficult for anyone not immersed in the process of curricular change to appreciate the complex ramifications caused by any curricular change. For example: which other course enrollments drop when a new course is introduced? In approving the two-year experimental addition of Chinese 10-20, Introductory Chinese for Seniors, the Curriculum Committee accepted Language Division Chairman Vincent Pascucci's argument that "Chinese is a critically important language that we can no longer afford to ignore," and The Abbot Academy Association will fund the part-time teacher. But Smith, writing for the Curriculum Committee, had some questions for the Language Division:

"What incentives can we provide? We don't want to teach Chinese at the expense of a fine Russian program already in place, not to mention Greek or German. Should we protect Russian in some way? Surely the college admissions people would be tickled pink to have lots of applicants with two solid years of Russian or Chinese. Should we amend the diploma requirements to accept two years of these languages? Other incentives?" The Fall Term '81 signups for languages were as follows: French - 566; Spanish - 279; German - 92; Russian - 68; Italian - 19; Greek - 29; Latin - 158.

The Curriculum committee has quite a cud of topics to chew on in coming months: (1) Language teaching and politically "critical" languages. (2) The ninth grade program and the four-year student (3) The role of computers and computing in the curriculum (4) The science curriculum.

Spring: drugs, hunger, poetry and snow

Spring term began a day early for faculty, who attended an all-day workshop in alcohol and drug abuse, led by a team from the Freedom from Chemical Dependency Foundation. This nationally known group talked with the students of each cluster in the fall, and will be leading another student program next October. Their primary objective is educational—to give people the awareness, knowledge and understanding for informed choices about drugs (including alcohol) for themselves, and for intervention and group support for others when that is necessary and feasible. They draw extensively from their own experiences as alcoholics or in drug addiction. Is drug abuse down? Apparently, but in relation to what, and what drug? Teenage alcoholism is up, nationally, and marijuana not likely to disappear soon.

Mitchel Wallerstein: keynoting Hunger Conference

Hunger Conference II, April 2 and 3, brought Mitchel Wallerstein as keynote speaker the first evening. Wallerstein, associate director of M.I.T.'s International Food and Nutrition Program, and a prime resource for PA's interdisciplinary Global Food Resources course, traced the role of food aid in U.S. foreign policy from the '50s to the present, its success and failures. He spoke strongly for the continuance of U.S. food aid, but with safeguards to see that it reaches the people it is intended for and helps recipient countries develop nutritional self-reliance. On Saturday, Headmaster McNemar and outside speakers led workshops on the El Salvador refugee problem, malnutrition, local hunger relief projects and the role of international organizations in alleviating world hunger.

On that same weekend, the poet Quincy Troupe, author of Snake Back Solos, held over 130 students in rapt attention in Cooley House—the second in the English Department's series poetry readings. In the afternoon, Troupe, who won the National Book Award for poetry in 1980, talked with English Department students and faculty about what it is to be a poet in the 1980s and also to move, as he did, from being a basketball star to a poet. Other poetry readings scheduled for this spring will feature Gwendolyn Brooks and Cleopatra Mathis.

By this time, crocuses were in bloom, but one week into April, a howling blizzard dumped a foot of snow on the campus for a white Easter.

STI's shift to summer

Andover will continue its program of Short Term Institutes, but almost all will become six-week summer programs, Headmaster Don McNemar announced at the first faculty meeting of spring term. Like (MS)2 and the Chamber Music Program (essentially a summer institute already), the Short Term Institutes will operate under the umbrella of the Summer Session. Each institute will offer the special dynamics of a teacher and students concentrating together full time on one field of study; but institute participants will also share the social and cultural activities planned for regular Summer Session students, whose courses are intensive, but not necessarily all in the same field.

Two institutes are scheduled for this summer: Intensive Studio Art for high school students seriously interested in art, and the Chamber Music Program for high school instrumentalists. A few openings still are available in each program, with admission by portfolio and audition respectively, according to Admissions Coordinator Jean McKee. Interested families should contact her right away.

Initiated by Ted Sizer in 1973 and funded since then by foundations, the Short Term Institutes through this spring have brought a diverse group of high school students to the campus for studies not available in their home schools — astronomy, advanced science courses, mathematics, ethics, and immersion language courses, to name a few. A questionnaire which William Saltonstall '52 initiated indicated that many young people now feel that their STI experience was an important turning point for them; yet the necessity of leaving the home school, during the school year for the STI's has always posed a problem. McNemar hopes that the Summer Session will prove a natural home to the Short Term Institutes so that Andover can continue to offer high school students across the country a unique chance to immerse themselves in "their" subject, supplementing their home high school programs.

Winners

Philomathean, the PA debating society, is enjoying a revival of interest and talent. Andover won both the novice category and the best overall team trophy in the Milton-Dana Hall Extemporaneous Debate near the end of winter term, under the co-presidency of uppers Win Clevenger (son of Ray '55) and Tamar Gendler.

Lower Timothy Wright of Andover and upper Evan Goldberg of Lexington, MA led the PA Math Team by placing on the Honor Roll in the national 33rd Annual High School Mathematical Examination. They are in the top 250 of 400,000 top math students taking the exam, with scores of 101 and 100 respectively. Other top scorers, who helped put Andover within the top 50 of 6,500 competing schools were upper Joshua Feigon of

Math whizzes Tim Wright and Evan Goldberg

Victorious Philo

Cambridge, MA; lower Andy Myers (son of Robert P. '59) of Rochester, MN; senior Harold Kim of Logan, UT; lower Larry Powelson (son of John P. '37) of Boulder, CO; and Zhi-Qiang Cai, Yi-chen Zhang, and Yan-Ming Chang, all of Harbin, People's Republic of China.

PA German students also scored well on an national examination, and top honors went to upper Dan Heiter of Andover; lower Tom Herzog of Woburn, MA; upper Greg Luke of Boulder, CO; and lower Bonnie Tai of Newton, MA.

WPAA-FM, Andover's student radio station, has won approval from the Federal Communications Commission for an increase from 10 to 25 watts in its transmitting capacity. This action allows the Academy's radio station to be exempt from a new Federal requirement calling for all stations to broadcast at a minimum of 100 watts. Faculty Advisor Paul Kalkstein '61 notes that operating at 100 watts would mean interfering with nearby stations on the same frequency. There also was some Trustee concern about the wisdom of allowing the station, uncensored and beamed primarily for campus consumption, to be broadcast over too wide an area. A new transmitter will be needed for the increase to 25 watts. The Trustees have allocated funds for this on the condition that WPPA establish a consulting board consisting of faculty members and residents of the town of Andover.

Student Gov reorg?

On the brink of elections for the 1982-83 school president, a major election issue has appeared — possible reorganization of student involvement in school governance. School President Hadley Soutter '82 considers the present student governance system unworkable and hopes that student presidential candidates will present alternative in their platforms. The major flaw in the present system, says Soutter, is overlap in the roles and purviews of the two bodies to which students elect representatives — the Cluster Presidents and the Committee on Residential Life. Soutter and the CRL propose, in rough outline, a Student Council combining the functions of the cluster presidents and CRL, with more representations of underclassmen. The result, says Soutter, would be "A Student Council with a broader and deeper vision of the community's concerns, encouraging student involvement in issues of greater importance and impact than simple Blue Book revisions." A student council! The pendulum swinging back? Don't say so before seeing what emerges.

Gymnast Torrance York

By J. Burke Doar '82 (brother of Robert, '79), Thomas Strong '82 (son of Roger L. '44)

Winter term was a busy one in the world of Andover Athletics as eight different sports were represented. In addition to several teams which posted fine records, there were numerous individuals who competed on a national level. On the girls' side, the swimming team went 9-0-1, the tie coming in the squad's last meet against Exeter; the gymnastic team, led by superstar Torrance York, lost only once, and later avenged that loss. Boys' track had its lone setback from Harvard late in the season. Squash and Alpine skiing also had very successful years.

With senior Ruth Flanagan as captain, girls' gymnastics lost only to Walnut Hill and only by 1.2 points. Andover got revenge by knocking off Walnut Hill at the Dana Hall invitational. Without a doubt, lower Torrance York was the star of the squad. In virtually every meet, she placed first in every event she entered. With another very impressive upper, Laurie Shearing, York and company improved each meet, scoring as high as 118. Boys' gymnastics was hurt by the pre-season injury to co-captain Matt Gilligan but nonetheless had a successful campaign. With key performers like upper Vinnie Walker, co-captain Bill Shepardson, and lower Jim Driscoll, the team managed to achieve a team record of 101.8 points when they beat out Marblehead.

Girls' swimming won all except the tie with Exeter in the last meet, for a 9-0-1 record—the best record of any girls swim team at Andover, according to coach Diane Souvaine. Key meets included Loomis-Chaffee, when the Blue repaid Loomis for a tough loss in last year's interschols, and Northfield Mt. Hermon, when nearly every swimmer lowered her time. Team captain Patty Doykos (daughter of John D. III '55), gave good performances in the 200 freestyle and the 100 backstroke. In addition four-year team member Maria Elias was outstanding in both freestyle and breaststroke while lower Leslie Boileau starred in the butterfly. Although the boys' swimming team had a 2-8 mark, the team was not without superb individuals. Captain Scott Malcolm, (son of Miller D. '50) shattered his own school record for the 100 yd breaststroke and set a pool mark in the meet against NMH. He also established the New England Prep School record while competing in the Eastern Interscholastic Swim Meet. His time of :59.68 was the first sub-minute performance by a New England Prep swimmer.

Both girls' and boys' hockey teams fared well in the Sumner Smith Rink. Coached by John Chivers, the girls' squad had a 12-2 record, finishing the year with a convincing win over Exeter. The most exciting game, however, was against Groton. Andover won 5-4 in overtime, thus breaking Groton's hope for an undefeated year in their final game. Seniors Meg Hall and Sam Chivers were the offensive mainstays, with Margaret Bravar minding the PA net. The boys' season culminated in a come-from-behind 6-4 victory over Exeter, to even the team's mark at 10-10-1. After a big win over Yale in New Haven, the team lost some one-goal decisions in February. Four-year senior and center Randy Wood distinguished himself as an offensive weapon, netting 55 points. Captain Steve Moreland, Wing Ralph Hartman, and goalie Rick DeSimone were key performers.

Hurt by the loss of captain Amy Starensier to an ankle injury, the girls' basketball team went into a prolonged tailspin. After her injury, following the team's opening triumph, the squad managed to beat Governor Dummer and Exeter to close out a 5-7 campaign. In addition to Starensier, senior guard Kathy Kinsella, with her great speed, ripped open a couple of close games and forwards Laura Carr (daughter of John W. '42) and Anne Ballantine pulled down tough rebounds. Boys' basketball suffered through a rough 2-14 season, which coach Tom Hodgson labelled "character building." Wins came against Bowdoin ("satisfying and well-played"—Hodgson) and Suffield Academy. Co-captains Rufus Jones, an upper, and senior Paul Wagner provided excellent leadership while Frank Ciota, Thom Brand, guards Tim Cobb, Bob Butera and Burke Doar contributed the intensity necessary for tough defense and smart offense.

The boys' squash team had a victorious 11-3 season, including two smashing wins over Exeter, and two triumphs against the Crimson Freshmen. Captain Doug Benedict and senior Ming Tsai alternated at the #1 position throughout the year, with John McCarthy, captain-elect Tom Ullman, senior Steve Fern, and rookies Dirk Murphy (son of John F. '58) and Scott Gwozdz rounding out the squad. Coach Tom Cone called this year's team "an enthusiastic, close-knit group that worked hard." The girls' squash team coached by Alexander Warren had a mediocre season. The majority of last year's team had graduated and only captain Faith Hawkins remained. Bolstered by newcomers such as Trina Sorenson and seasoned players like Sarah Anderson and Jean Keamy, the team upset Middlesex Academy 5-2 for a key triumph. In the Interschols, Sorenson won the consolation bracket of her category. On the slopes, both Nordic and Alpine skiers had a field day. On the Nordic side, the girls' team finished first in the Interschols while the jumping team was 7th. Mary Ogden, Thayer Tolles,

Kevin Wattles nears a pin

(daughter of Carolyn Kimball '58) and Hilary French were the backbone of the team; the first two were selected to take part in the Junior Olympics at Lake Placid. Seniors Bob Best, and Kirk Fernald, and upper Jeb Doggett (son of William K. '52) comprised the boys' squad; Best was named first alternate to the Eastern Junior Olympic team. In the Interschols, the boys' finished fourth. The Alpine team, according to Coach Diane McNab was probably the strongest in Andover history. The team, also coached by Bart Srebnick, was noted for its tremendous depth. Captain Paul Hochman was unbeaten in prep meets and won the Giant Slalom Lakes Regional Championships. He also placed first in the Eastern Circuits Slalom Championships and was third in the overall championships. Katie McBride, (daughter of John P. '56) from Aspen won the 16 and Under Championships at Waterville Valley. Together, these two skiers led the team to a third place finish in the Interschols. Skiers to look for next year are Steve Hochman and Chris Dayton.

The boys' track record of 11-1 was the best mark of any winter track team in coach Jack Richards' memory. A 55-40 victory over Exeter avenged last year's loss; the only loss was to a traditionally strong Harvard squad. Says Richards, "This was a team I hadn't expected to come on so strongly; in fact, in December, I was apprehensive about our season." The MVP was Femi Obi, captain of spring track. He broke the school indoor record in the high jump with a mark of 6'3"; he was also the number one runner in the dash, and one of the top hurdlers, while also being a member of the relay team. He finished as high point man on the team. Co-captain Steve Wemple was a stellar middle distance performer; against Harvard he ran the second fastest 1000-yd. race in Andover history. In its lone meet this year, the girls' track team won against three other schools, capturing seven out of ten first place finishes.

Of this year's 4-7-2 wrestling team, coach Nick Kip remarks, "our least experienced squad within memory also improved the most." The young squad (2 juniors and 3 lower letter winners) will only lose co-captain Jeff Hunt (15-2) and unlimited weight PG sensations Brian Wiley and Kevin Wattles. On March 7, Brian Wiley won the All-New England Independent School Tournament at MIT in the unlimited weight class, pinning all three opponents for the most-falls-least-time award while Kevin Wattles traveled to Lehigh University in Bethlehem PA in pursuit of the National Prep School Title in the 189 lb class. After losing to the eventual champion from the Academy of the New Church (Philadelphia PA) in the quarterfinals, Wattles powered his way through the wrestlebacks to third place, matching the best ever by an Andover wrestler.

DEATHS

Francis B. McCarthy Instructor Emeritus in English, died in Andover, MA on January 14, 1982. He had a most admirable and desirable combination of qualities as a man, coach, and a teacher: he was blunt and kind. For me, this was always more impressive, in our profession, than making large speeches in faculty meeting or sounding off heavily around school on matters of high policy.

I do not remember that Francis ever made sarcastic cracks about his colleagues or students, and yet he could be accurate and perceptive. I knew an immensely quick and talented boy who slipped through PA with a minimum expenditure of energies. Several years after Harvard, he and I were talking about respect for teachers.

"Francis McCarthy", said Steve, "I had in English. I liked to write and I wrote well. But I always got B- or C...maybe a B now and then. I asked him once why I never got an A: "Because you don't work very hard...You're just dabbling." Steve looked at me: "Will you tell him sometime I said that?" I did, and Francis chuckled: "I thought so...he knew I was right."

On a more serious occasion, Francis showed me his perceptiveness about teaching, even though he disagreed. A group of English teachers once called a protest meeting against being required to teach The Iliad in English 4. Their essential arguments were that they had no scholarly training in Greek literature, their students were bored by the book, and they just didn't like it.

It was an irritable meeting, but the protest succeeded and the Department voted to end the requirement. As I walked out with Francis, he said, quite calmly, shifting his corn-cob pipe, "That was too bad, for it is a great book. But you cannot force teachers to teach books they do not understand and do not appreciate. They'll just fail at it."

I also liked Francis as a tennis mentor. We played often before he lost his mobility, and he had that greatest of all talents as a coach: knowing why someone is playing badly. I play very erratically, and one day asked him what the trouble was. "Hart, you've got the laziest feet of anyone I know." Though he said it with a twinkle, he was right.

Hart Leavitt.

Everett Sherrill '04 celebrated his 97th birthday November 7, living with his daughter and son-in-law in Allentown, PA. Two of his eleven grandchildren, David Sherrill and Sam Skinner are Andover graduates. He also has 17 great-grandchildren, the oldest of whom was graduated this past year from Lehigh. A. M. Haskell '06, who celebrated his 94th birthday in October, writes that his great-granddaughter, Quincey Tompkins, is in her second year at Andover. Russell Gomez '09 writes from Belvedere, CA that his son Michael '73, who was graduated Phi Beta Kappa from Stanford in '78, is Arizona Governor Bruce Babbitt's Special Adviser of Mexican and Border Affairs. Russell, who celebrated his 90th birthday in August, concludes, "My wife Grace plays tennis seven days a week and we both keep busy 12 months a year in our garden."

Charles "Mike" Hendrie '15 is still in good health and busy with church and civic duties, with Cornell University activities as president of the Cornell Class of 1919. Both he and William "Bice" Sloan write of their regret that Lloyd Thomas 1915's loyal Class Agent for many years is not feeling "up to par." Bice, himself under heavy medical and nursing expense, writes "Please give Lloyd my best regards and wishes for his recovery. He is a wonderful friend, of whom I am exceedingly fond."

News of the Class of 1917, which does not have a Class Secretary! Benjamin Morse reports thirteen grandchildren, nine of them now married, and five great grandsons. Wallace Barker and his wife are "still chugging along," and they enjoyed having "our two eggheads, professor Michael and Newswoman of Europe Barbara home for Christmas." Newell Smith isn't playing tennis anymore, but enjoys golf, which he took up 10 years ago. Widowed since 1979, his greatest interest is his old Fairfield, CT

I am very pleased to report that I have discovered one more reader of these notes. I have received a very gracious letter from Mark Carnevale of the Class of '65 who says he also reads the 1910 notes and adds some encouraging words on what the Class Secretaries and Class Agents do because they love Andover and admire its high standards of excellence. So that makes three readers of these notes—the anonymous lady in Concord, the editor of the Bulletin and my new friend, Mark Carnevale.

It is said that old classes never die, they simply fade away. Before 1910 goes down into "the tongueless silence of the dreamless dust" (I don't know where that quote comes from but it has always seemed to me to be a perfect description of oblivion), I would like to record some of the accomplishments of the class. In the year 2010 some researcher might wonder what the Andover Class of 1910 was like.

We have contributed three members to the Board of Trustees. Henry Hobson who was president for a number of years. He became the Episcopal Bishop of Southern Ohio. Phinney Baxter also served on the Board. After teaching history at Williams and winning a Pulitzer Prize, he became president of Williams and served for many years. Lindsay Bradford also served on the Board. After graduating from Yale in 1914 he went into banking in New York and within ten years he became New York's youngest bank president. Bill Nute devoted his entire life to being a medical missionary in Turkey. He set up a clinic in a small mountain village and became the dearly loved doctor for the entire community.

John Watzek expressed his love of Andover by endowing a new dormitory. He modestly refused to have it named for him and wanted to have it called after Nathan Hale, one of his heroes who exhibited the virtue of unselfish patriotism. Jimmy Gifford became a professor of law at Columbia and became an expert on arbitration which he maintained was the only fair solution to labor unrest. He lectured on it several times at Andover. Carl Donworth became Chief Justice of the State of Washington Supreme Court. Your secretary's only claim to fame was that he roomed with him for three years at Yale. Hugh Brady, born in Alaska where his father was Alaska's first governor, became a lumber expert in Seattle and established his own international lumber company. Mel Price was with Harold Ross on the Stars and Stripes during the first World War and later when Ross started the New Yorker, Mel became advertising manager. Boz Hawley also was with Ross on the Stars and Stripes and later became a United Press correspondent in Rome. At a Yale 1914 reunion he was asked what he did in Rome and he said he spent his time rushing from the Quirinal to the urinal.

Scott Paradise, after graduating from Yale in 1914, returned to Andover and for many years was one of the most loved teachers. His widow, Alma, still lives in Andover and is an honorary member of 1910. Alex Jackson, another greatly admired member of 1910, went on to Harvard. His two sons also went to Andover and Harvard and the Harvard Law School. I think one granddaughter went to Yale.

This is just a short sample of what 1910 members have done in "After Life." I have had to rely on my memory as my old eyes have given out. I would have liked, as the last historian of the class, to write a complete history of the class and all of its members but I could not do the necessary research. Enough of past glories. Getting down to the present, we have a letter from Mrs. Edward Hale of Doylestown, PA reporting that her husband is in the hospital. He had just completed a definitive history of the American Merchant Marine which his publisher has called "monumentally valuable." Hugh Brady reports that he attended a luncheon last October given by Pendleton Miller in Seattle in honor of Donald McNemar, the recently appointed Headmaster and his young wife. He says that they are a charming and impressive young couple.

I have recently learned from the alumni Office that another of our few survivors died January 9, 1981, over a year ago—Horace D. Strong of Fairfield, CT. We have not heard from Horace for many years but a year ago last October, he telephoned to say that he was mailing me a check for $1,000 which he wanted me to consider as coming from all the surviving members of the class. I have not been able to obtain from his family any information as to what he had been doing since graduation. His picture appears in the 1910 edition of the yearbook published when the class graduated. He was born January 7, 1891 and was listed as coming from Bridgeport, CT.

I keep in touch with my three children and their families. I have 11 grandchildren and six great-grandchildren. On September 5, I attended the wedding of a granddaughter, Abigail Wilson, at the chapel of Princeton University, where my son teaches and his wife has a position."

Jack Raymond writes Oct. 28 "with a class as decimated by deaths and infirmities as one of our age is bound to be, it is not easy to get news for the Bulletin. I wish I could write something of general interest, but my wife and I don't do any traveling or entertaining now, but rather we lead a very quiet life at home. If winter comes—and how it did come—the only thing that's not far behind is Internal Revenue. With the hope that all of you remaining classmates have survived the slings and arrows of outrageous cold weather we are glad to hear from several. Sidney Perley of Anna Maria, FL added a note to his Alumni Fund contribution that he retired in 1945 after 28 years in the Army. He became an investment banker and was connected with H.P. Hood Co. in Boston. Corydon Purdy who lives in Franklin, NC reports that he lost his wife four years ago and now lives alone. His only son has retired from the Navy and lives in Pensacola. We are glad to have had a good phone call from Tommy St. Hill. He and Jean are doing very well at present after their respective angina attacks and bad back of a year ago. Leo McMahon reports a very good Christmas and we trust that goes for all of you.

The last issue of the Bulletin mentioned the death of Edwin Henn on Jan. 9, 1981, due to a ruptured esophagus. He had an interesting life. At Andover he was business manager of the Phillipian and was on the cross country team. At Yale he majored in civil engineering. He joined the Connecticut National Guard and his outfit was sent to the Mexican border in pursuit of Pancho Villa. In 1917 he transferred to the U. S. Army Field Artillery, an assignment that lasted until October 1951. He had overseas duty in Europe in WWI and after the armistice was in charge of the prison in Brest.

At the start of WWII he was instrumental in laying out and training the first rocket group, which he hoped to take to North Africa. However, he was disappointed; he was kept in the U. S. for further training. He was later sent to the Pacific area, island hopping until the end of the war. He entered Korea with the first wave and remained in the occupation as governor of the largest province of South Korea. He became Chief of Staff of the 7th Infantry Division of Seoul. Upon his return to the States his last assignment was Commander at Camp Kilmer, NJ where the post was increased tremendously as a staging area for the Korean war. After 35 years of active service he received a touching review of troops as he retired, a full Colonel.

Ed was quite a scholar. After Yale he received an M.A. from Columbia and a Ph.D. at Georgetown, obtaining these degrees while serving full time in the Army. Prior to WWII he was the only regular Army officer who had attained a Ph.D. One surprising quality of a man who had never worked with his hands was his later ability to make clocks and furniture from reproductions on display in the Ford Museum in Dearborn. He delighted in the patient hand-rubbing of his mahogany and cherry pieces. He made many carriage clocks, two grandfather clocks and the furniture that fills his home includes Queen Anne chests, secretaries, chairs, candle and drop leaf tables, footstools and side tables. The last two years of his life were hampered by a badly mended broken hip, the result of a fall caused by a powerful dog, but he persisted, working though a little more slowly.

We are indebted to Ed's daughter, Jeffrey, who supplied practically all of the above information on the life of an unusual character blessed with a long and happy life. In June, 1980 he and Dede celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary in St. Thomas, V.I., the home of their daughter Constance.

Alexander H. Twombly, Jr. died March 21, 1981 in Yarmouth, ME. He was one of a long line of Twomblys to attend Andover and Yale. During WWI he became a Navy Ensign and served on the U.S.S. Orizaba. After the war he located in Summit, NJ where he owned a plumbing, heating and sheet metal contracting business. In WWII he headed the local Civil Defense. In 1947 he returned to Yarmouth where he owned and operated the Yarmouth Boat Yard until he retired in 1969. Alex was a good friend to everyone and is remembered with affection. He is survived by his wife, Beatrice Kinlock Twombly, a sister, a son Alexander III, PA 45, a daughter, Ruth Underwood, and a stepson, Eben B. Thomas. Mrs. Twombly's address is R. R. 1, Box 81, Prince's Point, Yarmouth, ME 04096.

Henry Millet Blank died Sept. 14, 1981 after a long illness. He was a graduate of M.I.T. in the class of 1918. In WWI he was a captain in the Coast Artillery. After the war he was associated with the firm founded by his father, Henry Blank & Co., manufacturers of fine jewelry. He left the company about 1956 and joined the United Way in Newark. Active until 1971 he had to retired due to age limitation; however, he continued as a volunteer until about 3 years ago when his health demanded that he quit. Henry is survived by his wife, Bobby, a son, Henry Jr. PA '49, two brothers, Philip, PA '16 and Ralph PA '24. Henry was a loyal classmate and we will miss him. He and Bobby always attended our reunions and it was a pleasure to renew old friendships. Bobby's address is 31 Canterbury Lane, Short Hills, NJ 07078.

December 5, 1981 there passed another of our fine classmates when Edward Barrows Greene died in Fairhope, AL, following an extended illness. Ed was born in Andover in 1895 and his matriculation at PA was a natural development. He was a member of the orchestra, glee club and choir and it is interesting to note that he sang in the choir of St. James Episcopal Church in Fairhope until his last illness.

Ed received a B.A. at Amherst but in 1917 he left college to join the Ambulance Corps. He attended Officers Training Camp, became a 2nd Lieutenant and served overseas with the 80th Division. In the Argonne he was wounded, shell fragments causing the loss of his left eye and facial cancer. His devoted wife Katharine reports seeing Neb, as he was called, through 40 hospitalizations since 1944.

After the war he attained a Ph.D. at Columbia and became an instructor of Industrial Psychology at the University of Michigan until WWII when he worked in the personnel office of the War Manpower Commission in Washington and Michigan. Later he was connected with Chrysler Corp. in Detroit until 13 years ago when he retired to Fairhope.

He had considerable artistic ability and produced many paintings and drawings. He was very active in church work and he wrote a weekly column in the Eastern Shore Courier entitled Neb Greene's Hymn Commentary. In a piece written last November on Matthew 6:10 he said: "Heaven is the supreme joy of being a good neighbor, of giving and receiving personal love and the internal peace of mind based on the conviction that what you believe is a good approximation of the truth."

Neb is survived by his wife, Dr. Katharine B. Greene, three daughters, two sons and 14 grandchildren. Katharine's address is 360 Satsuma St. Fairhope, AL 36532.

Time is running out. Don't forget the Alumni Fund.

Cheers and best wishes to good Ab Chase who has taken on the job of Class Agent with great ability and enthusiasm (you have already heard from him). Let us back him to the hilt and keep 1918 right up there in the top ten of our generation.

Robert Holbrook died last October 21st at Lawrence and Memorial Hospitals near Lyme, CT where he lived. He was president and chairman of the board of the Compton Advertising Co. of N.Y.C., retiring in 1961, after 45 years of service. He served as a Lt. Col. in the Army during WWII. He was a member of the Lyme Congregational Church and a charter member of the Old Lyme Beach Club. My last letter from Bob was dated Dec. 1976. He reported having been through two major operations in the past 6 years and at the time of writing, aching feet had forced him to give up golf. His widow may be reached at R.F.D. No. 2, Lyme, CT 06371.

Last November the American Patent Law Association honored Yard Chittick in recognition of 50 years of interest in and service to the fields of patents, trademarks and copyrights. Salaams to Yard for a good job well done. George McIlwain reports: "I am still retaining my good health. I often think of the many happy times at PA. I used to sit up and smoke happily in the top floor of Mrs. Farlow's house which of course I rented." Under the caption MODERN LIBRARY GIANT, 80 TODAY, STILL ACTIVE, the New York Times printed a picture of Donald Klopper as he is today looking very distinguished and a column and a half resume of his career as a publisher-partner with Bennett Cerf and Robert Haas of the Modern Library. Today as chairman-emeritus of Random House which publishes the Modern Library, Don walks almost every day from his Park Ave. apartment to his office in the Random House building where his advice is eagerly sought on every aspect of the publishing business. All hail to Don.

George V. Smith and his lovely wife, Olive, have been in medicine for over 50 years: he mostly as Chief of Surgery, Free Hospital for Women and she, Director of the Fearing Research Laboratory, Boston. They retired in August, 1980 and of course they have both been busier than ever. George has written what I believe must be the most unique and unusual book ever written for the medical profession: My Professional Life With Women. I quote from the introduction: "The purpose of this report is to describe the author's care of 14,575 private patients over a span of 50 years. The Parkway Division of The Boston Hospital for Women (nee The Free Hospital for Women) was his "locus operandi". Attention will first be given to procedures in the office. It will next be directed to the management of his patients in the hospital. In conclusion the results of his treatment of 754 women with malignant disease will be tabulated and discussed. It is, of course, highly technical, but I believe every gynecologist in the land will read and study each page. The George and Olive Smith Foundation has raised over a million dollars to establish a professorship of endocrinological research. George now basks in the sun as William H. Baker Professor of Gynecology, Emeritus, Harvard University and Honorary Consultant, Brigham and Woman's Hospital, Boston, Massachusetts. Bravo to George and Olive.

Brod and Ruth Haskell report themselves in good form. They spent last summer in Fairfield, CT, Ruth's family stomping ground and just this past winter they flew to Cairo for a boat trip up the Nile. Last October Virginia and I flew to London for two glorious weeks. We did the theaters, museums, concert halls and pubs; we traveled the underground, buses, taxis (those wonderful London taxis) and we walked our legs off. The new complex of theaters, concert halls, restaurants and bars, just across Waterloo Bridge is magnificent. We were there frequently.

As I write this, word has been received of the death of Robert A. Brown on December 24th. No further information is available. Just a year ago for the spring issue of the Bulletin I wrote: "Bob Brown is in good health and goes to his office every day." He was a great and wonderful guy. Very sad.

I HOPE THE I.R.S WAS KIND TO YOU.
HAVE A WONDERFUL SPRING!!

Rowlie Bannister writes: "My hospital stays and operations in 1979 restored me to health. Tests show no residual malignancy. I am grateful." So are we. Charles H. (Pete) Jones enjoys his retirement by spending January through April in Hope Town in the Bahamas, which he says "keeps us warmer, uses less oil heat." From May through December he finds many things to do at West Falmouth on Cape Cod. The Henry Penfields had a tragic loss last autumn when their older daughter, Ann, and her husband, were killed in an airplane crash in Albuquerque, NM, en route from Michigan to Nevada. Our heartfelt sympathy to all the family. On a happier note, Henry tells us that our new Headmaster, Don McNemar, was associated with his nephew Don (son of the late Graham Penfield PA '17) at Dartmouth.

Jim Serven continued to live in Tucson and says there are not many contemporaries there, but enjoys the associations he has had with them over the years. Leo Poor writes that he and Mary Margaret moved last June to an "adult community of condominiums" about 10 miles south of New Brunswick, and their present address is 547 A Sheldon Way, Rossmoor, Jamesburg, NJ 08831. He is now fully retired, but "as a director of our 'Mutual' have little time on my hands." A Christmas card from Joe and Geri Chatman tells that "life has gotten 'ultrabusy' as I approach 82 at the turn of the year and try to keep pace with all that goes on around us here; but maybe I can make it to another reunion at Andover, sandwiched in between reunions at Williamstown." Another valued Christmas card from Charlie Thompson's widow, Ruth. She and Charlie were always most congenial reuners over the years.

A most interesting letter from Elmer Babin tells us: "While I am a lawyer and a real estate investor, from 1930 to 1951 I devoted a considerable part of my life to bridge. In 1940 I became president of the American Contract Bridge League and am its oldest surviving president. I've won numerous bridge titles, including a national one. In 1951 I gave all this up in order to enable my wife and I to travel extensively. As a result we are now both Gold Card holders of the Century Club, meaning that we have visited as tourists more than 200 countries and island groups. I have recently published through Vantage Press a book covering these travels called Experiences in Worldwide Travel. I celebrated my 80th birthday with my wife on our third cruise to Antarctica, this time starting from New Zealand, and are still planning many trips for the future. My wife, Ruth, to whom I have been married for 56 years, shares my enthusiasm for travel."

George and Izzie Sawyer celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary with a trip to the Canadian Rockies, Victoria and Toronto, with a visit to their son, Geoff, and his wife, Susan, in Edmonton.

Andover lost a loyal friend in the death of Ted Cummings last October. Ted went on to Yale and then pursued a career in the jewelry manufacturing business, General

Chain Co. of North Attleboro, MA of which he was the owner and CEO. He leaves two daughters, Patricia C. Lord of New York City and Marcia C. Gans of Winchester, VA, and a sister, Adela Gowen of Attleboro. Ed Wilson, whom we will remember as an outstanding football player, died last November. He was a 1923 Harvard graduate and became a nationally known tax authority, serving his hometown of Belmont, MA, and the state of Massachusetts with honor and respect. He is survived by his wife, who is Town Clerk of Belmont, his son, Edward C. Jr., PA '45, of Houston, TX, and his brother, our classmate, Phil, who lives in Exeter, NH. We have just learned of the passing last May of another distinguished classmate, Hayden ("Chub") Smith. At Yale, he was Chairman of the Yale Daily News, Phi Beta Kappa and No. 1 in his class at Law School. His career was equally brilliant as a partner in Winthrop, Stone, Putnam and Roberts of New York City. Also during World War II he was legal officer to the Chief of Staff ETO and later Deputy Chief of Staff, Office of Military Government. His wife lives at 216 West Farm Drive, Greenwich, CT and there are three children, Nancy Lovejoy of Wilbraham, MA, Peter of Greenwich and William of Washington, CT. Temp Brown writes: "John Alexander, for 49 years head of the Alexander Lumber Co. of Aurora, IL died on October 12, 1981. John left an enviable record as a business man, a civic leader, a staunch supporter of the Republican party and, last but not least, a generous supporter of Andover. In addition to his long-time support of the Alumni Fund, he contributed to Andover one brother, four sons, one nephew and one grandson, undoubtedly a record as far as our class is concerned." John was with us at school for four years, so we all will remember him. His sons are Walter '53, John '55, Thomas '58 and Duncan '64.

The only news I have for 1919 this time from others is the death last fall of Gertrude Stark Abbot, just a month or so before her news report in the fall Bulletin, and also of Margaret Clark Howe. I expect to be corresponding with each of you, later.

A good deal of water has gone over the dam since the last Bulletin but very little of it has carried any news of classmates. Your scribe has been busy escaping from heading up in Connecticut the drive for funds for the Addison Gallery in celebration of its 50th year and have succeeded in persuading Henry (Inky) Brightwell '31 to take on the task.

Those in the class who have not been back to Andover since 1930 can have no idea of what the Gallery has meant to the school in enlarging its area of instruction in all forms of art. It truly sets Andover apart from any other secondary school.

The fall season has brought back the monthly luncheon meetings of the Yale Class of '24 where such stalwarts as January, Carmichael, and Greene foregather in New Haven. The indefatigable Ed Greene remains very active in the pursuit of good works. His congregation has broken away from its Methodist Church and he is in the forefront of a drive to build a new one. And yet he still has time to find a representative from Yale '24 on the Yale alumni association. He reports his daughter Carol Donnelly, a graduate of Abbot, serves on the Andover Alumni Council and reports Andover is tops. Derrick January regularly attends our monthly Yale luncheon but Al Carmichael and Paul Daniels are absent in Florida until April. I am not sure that I recorded the fact that Bradford H. Burnham has published a book entitled God in our Time. After graduating from Harvard, he received a B.D. degree from Union Theological Seminary. Len Parkhurst is still practicing medicine specializing in allergies. He has two children, one graduating last year, the other now a junior, both at Florida State. His wife runs his office, and keeps him in good health. He is surely blessed.

I have to report the death of Hurst W. Conant. Mrs. Conant resides at 137 Seabreeze Ave., Delray Beach, FL 33444 and Otto V. Whitlock whose widow resides at Witherbee Court, Pelham, NY 10803.

Helen Walker Parsons writes that she continues volunteer work for the Russian Research Center at Harvard University. Last summer, while in New Hampshire, she drove to Toronto for the meeting of the American Sociological Association.

From Corvallis, OR came an interesting note from Martha S. Mumford. Last summer she took a senior citizen bus tour to Spearfish, So. Dakota to see the Passion Play. In the course of the trip, though in a wheelchair, she also visited Mt. Rushmore, Yellowstone National Park and the Tetons. She was happy to add that, after knee surgery, she is now able to walk again without crutches.

Anne Hussey has a new address: 3995 Washington St., Apt. 3F, Aliquippa, PA 15001, twenty-five miles northwest of Pittsburgh. She writes in reminiscence: "Remember what a nuisance those 600 boys on the Hill used to be, causing all kinds of strict regulations at Abbot! I hated having a teacher monitor my telephone calls to my family. All because the call might be coming from a boy at Andover Academy." Anne is very proud indeed of her two great-grandsons, the grandchildren of her adopted daughter.

Charlotte Vose Clark, in a note dated October 1, 1981, writes that, despite many misfortunes, "I walk with a cane, drive my own car and love life." Her note was the embodiment of courage and goodwill.

If you had heard via ESP or other that I was on my last legs in the ICU of Harold Hudner's St. Anne's Hospital in Fall River it's a gross exaggeration except the legs (which had nothing to do with it, tho they are still a handicap). The thing is that this hospital is Harold's "baby" and he's a director and I think a former chairman or president of whatever runs it. Anyway it's the best run hospital I ever was in or heard of, and the nurses handpicked for T.L.C. plus beauty. Eight days or so in this PARADISE wired like a Xmas tree to monitors of various sorts with flashing lights and I came out feeling like a TIGER and also minus an ulcer that I suspect came from worry and tension about our 60th Reunion.

A nice note from Charlie Morris telling about a delightful day with Kay and Don Loker as their guests at lunch and the USC-UCLA game. Out west (Calif.), he says, where the weather can be counted on, tables and bars were set outside for a fabulous buffet on the campus of USC; and afterwards at the half-time they were offered cold drinks at their seats. "Not the way I remember it at Andover-Exeter game in 1920" says Charlie. An amusing comment he added: "son, Don, a PA alumnus, returned from chasing a girl in Northern Sweden, 'frost bitten but not discouraged'!" To get a scoop on Charlie's past history (he's a great guy and many have asked where he'd been all this intervening time), I referred to Red Black's files and the questionnaire of some 35 years ago which Red, bless him, sent to me long ago: I gathered that Charlie was in the hotel business at that time and had also written a play which was produced way out there in the Golden West. I just received a letter saying he's retired now but did more writing and hotel biz in four areas including Palm Springs. Also a very humorous account of how he won the war in the South Pacific single-handed armed with a screw driver and pliers. That brings to mind: is it time for another questionnaire to bring things up-to-date? All in favor please write me "yes" and any that have access to a WATS line could kill 2 birds with one stone. If no answer at all it would imply that you don't give a hoot about classmates and so news about them can go to hell (and I'd lose this job!). Sort of like the sign on local trash collection truck: "Satisfaction guaranteed or your garbage back."

A clipping from the Vineyard Gazette relates to Geo Dyer's long dedication to Martha's Vineyard and through the years there at Seven Gates Farm. It is a slide show donated by Geo's widow, Charlotte. The gift is to the Island's schools, and slides, projector and synchronized tape recorder are available on loan to any responsible group. The outstanding quality of the slides in their sequence makes the gift a special one worthy of special occasions.

Bob McClure writes (from 120 Wendell Terrace, Syracuse, NY 13203) that he had a serious operation six years ago on his jaw and tho it was a success he is confined to home and doesn't get out very much. Jud Smith had his 50th anniversary last October. His wife, Marion, broke her hip a year or so ago but is OK now (lucky girl! KC). Abe Clark, the sturdy ole shark, says he is fairly well for his age and pacemaker and in the summer still plays golf once a week. He and his wife, Helen, go south for the month of March and do nothing special. He says he's not a "looker-upper" so doesn't see much of any old classmates. Sam Clarke manages to get in a little sailing (on "the lakes"?) and also his (their) interest in antique English porcelain continues. He hears from Ted Booth that he, Ted, is still racing sail boats actively and successfully. An amusing card from Ben Butler says in part that he leads an utterly pleasant but useless life of summers in an old 1830 Cape Cod cottage, autumns in an ancient West Country cottage in England, and winters on ocean in south Florida. Could anyone ask for more? By contrast, Bill Holway, down in Maine, is holed-up for the winter with zero temp and snow storms, but with a cellar full of wood and a stove to augment elec. heat. And as a bonus he caught 25 lbs. of salt water smelt last night (1/13) on river at Dresden, ME. (I am writing this 1/29/82). Denny Bush is galivanting around Westfield, NJ and reported on Beckie Koehler, Herm's widow, and she in turn phoned us a few nights ago about her 3 weeks visit at son Edmund's in Vermont over Christmas. We hope to lure Beckie here this summer but she is going to Alaska with a group in June or July. Janice and I have "stopped off" at "Koehler Lake" during trips the last 2 winters and also kept up with Herm's other sons, Kip (HJK,Jr.) and Ben, PA '60.

I'm sorry to report the death of Pete Cameron on May 16, 1981 in Miami where he administered a private school. His daughter is Dean of Rabbit Pond Cluster at PA, and wife of John Richards II, Dean of Faculty. Basil Walker, whom we reported on in the last issue, passed away on September 22, 1981 in Great Barrington, MA. He was born in 1902 in Stellenbosch, S. Africa, the son of a professor at what is now S. U. Basil went to school in S. Rhodesia which set his goal as the Rhodesian service. After PA he attended Oberlin three years but transferred to Univ. Edinburgh (M.A. '26). He was in the Rhodesian Civil Service (Native Dept.) at many different stations from 1926 to 1958 and after retirement came to the U. S. with his family, teaching school at Littleton, NH '58-'62, then as librarian at Darrow School, New Lebanon, NY '62-'68 having gotten a degree in Library Science from SUNY Albany in 1962. His final address has been Great Barrington where his two children still reside; his wife has recently been in a nursing home. This account is received with thanks from Basil's brother Roland, who attended PA only 1922-23.

Another death is reported: Frederick T. Wintersteen of Schuylkill Haven, PA on 12/12/79. I have no records of this classmate.

As these class notes are being written in mid-January, 15 classmates have indicated that they will attend our 60th Reunion, June 11-13. Another 7 classmates hope to attend the class dinner on June 12. This will be our first joint reunion with Abbot alumnae and all signs point to a fine reunion with an interesting and exciting program.

From his home in Fergus Falls, MN, Cy Wright reports that he and his wife have acquired an apartment in Hendersonville, NC where they will spend the winter months. Cy continues to sail, golf and hunt a bit. Willie Wilmot has reached the ripe old age of 80 and has become a great grandfather. He lives alone in Seattle. Although he has not seen the Andover campus since 1922, Frank Wattles still considers himself to be the champion golfer of the North Andover Country Club having defeated Claude Fuess there in the spring of 1922.

John Morrill has about 100% recovered from a very serious auto accident last year. He was at Andover for commencement last June and hopes to attend our class dinner at the the Andover Inn this June. Ben Cutler is still very active with his orchestra. Has played at Princeton and at West Point this past year as well as at his son's 20th Yale reunion last October. Ben also entertained at the 55th reunion of the class of 1926 at Yale in June. Frank Lackey's grandson, Davis, is a senior at Andover and hopes very much to be at Yale in the fall. Hoddy Cole and Don Walker braved the frigid weather to attend the meeting of reunion chairmen at Andover on January 16th.

A new book by Donald E. Carr, entitled The Sky is Still Falling was published in February. This is Don's eighth book since retiring as a research executive. His Breath of Life and Death of the Sweet Waters are considered classics in the field of environment.

Thank you all for the many cards I received from my requests for news, also the personal messages tucked in too. Please send me your news any time of year and I'll send it on to the Bulletin. Mary Mallory Pattison sends brief but exciting news for she is our most recent bride, having married David Moore Hanlon of Farmington, CT on July 18, '81. They will spend the winter in Honolulu but Mary expects to be back for our 60th Reunion. Best wishes and happiness to you both! Susana Welborn Osborn writes delightedly of the marriage of her grandson, D. Randolph Osborn, Jr. to Laurie Downs in Tulsa, OK. The whole tribe made the trip to a beautiful wedding. It was Susie's first visit in that area and she admired it so much. She is counting on seeing a lot of you in June.

Geneva Burr Sanders lives not far from my town and Gwen Bloomfield Tillson lives between us, so we three get together for lunch and a visit at each others home now and then. They both claim to be living quietly but Jimmy is still doing volunteer work at the Deaconess Hospital in Boston. Gwen and her husband now have five grandchildren, one in New Zealand. There are three great-grandts, two in the Philippines and one in Texas! Surely are spread around. Dot Flagg Smith now is living year-round at her beach house in Kennebunkport, ME. A lovely area for an artist. She specializes in watercolors, and her biography is included in a book by the Wilson Publishing Co. entitled Artist of Renown. Dot studied with Eliot O'Hara. Sounds like success and happiness to me! She has six grandchildren and four step-grandts, so she has other than artistic interests.

Like many of us Alex Wilkins Talmadge doesn't go far afield these days but her daughter and family were due for a visit at the time she wrote, much to her delight. Her regular attendance at church and visits to her various doctors are possible through good neighbors. Alex has arthritis in her back but has recovered pretty well from a heart attack last August. Her three grandchildren are 17, 15 and 8 years old. Betty Brewster Thompson is deep in volunteer work as usual, which she terms perhaps her "dearest love". Apparently it is with the Hospital Auxiliary News, but she doesn't say what hospital. Her home is 85 miles from Baltimore and she evidently prefers it to the city. Says she is "always glad to see old friends to regale them with oysters or crabs according to the season"! I would love to be on the receiving end of that hospitality!

Anne Whinery speaks warmly of the retirement community where she lives and evidently keeps very busy, for she feels one should not retire just to be lazy. There are many activities and volunteer work that she did not dream of in her "productive" years. Anne is well and contented, sees Bubbles Hutchinson Matthews who is "wonderful and unchanged," several times a year. They are considering coming to Reunion—sounds great to me! Helen Knight Wilkin-son and her husband are spending several weeks in Florida, but she has been in on Reunion plans since Oct. Her long-time interest in garden clubs in Andover and Sarasota keep her active year-round. Last May her son, Chadborne Graves, PA '56, was remarried. Helen and Wilkie have four grandchildren, one is a student at Katherine Gibbs School in Boston. Helen says she is looking forward to seeing many of us at her home in June. Remember how much we have enjoyed her hospitality in previous reunions?

Ruth Dewey York had a fine two-week visit from her son from Reno, NV in Sept. She is living alone but enjoys her neighbors and other retired persons in Marblehead. At present Ruth doesn't see any chance of coming to Reunion but sends her best to all of you. Olive Howard Vance. Where to begin?! The local Council on Aging has been my main activity since '71 but am no longer chairman. I sing with a Senior Chorus, enjoy several Arts and Crafts, read a lot, etc. With our big family spread between Albany, NY and Portland, ME I drive a lot visiting them. Incidentally my four children gave me a wonderful 80th birthday celebration last October with 40 of the family present. No wonder I am a contented old lady. Hope you all reach my age as pleasantly and easily as I have! Marian Saunders Cheesborough writes that her grandchildren are no longer children. They grow up overnight, but our interest increases as they mature and I find much to keep me busy and happy with the results! I feel great and will be in touch with you if there is any chance of visiting my sister who lives in Andover. Travel isn't easy with poor eyesight. It is great to hear from Sandy and we will hope to see her in June. Keep busy—

Our 60th Reunion news will be coming to you before long and I urge you each to try to come. I have up-to-date addresses and some phone numbers if needed. So—get in touch with special old friends and meet us in Andover June 11-13th. Love to you!! Olivia

In response to a plea for news, Johnny Fitchen made the innovative, unique suggestion that our Class Notes contain news that reports more about the "life of the mind, perhaps attitudes and feelings" of our classmates. Such intercommunication would be fascinating IF members of the class would take the time to express themselves in that vein. In practice it is difficult to get our pals of yesteryear to offer even the prosaic current events in their lives. Furthermore, practical, understandable reasons limit the space in the Bulletin allotted to each class. Nevertheless, if letters come to me agreeing with Johnny, I will explore the possibilities. The indefatigable, though retired, Professor Emeritus Johnny has had his article The Problem of Ventilation through the Ages published recently.

Brainard Graves is recovering from hip surgery performed last November. He formally retired from the real estate business in January 1981. Al Buttrick was getting around with a "walker" after a stay of two weeks in a hospital as a result of a fall last October. Presumably he is fully ambulatory now. Still active in several civic affairs, Howard Moody reports nothing new, health fair, wife wonderful. By now Phil Simonds must be released from his hospital confinement in mid-November. Don Harris has suffered further trouble with his lungs, no doubt due to the foul weather in his area. Very politically aware, Don urges the reading of Bill Buckley's article The Portland Declaration. (See National Review of Oct. 2, 1981). Yale men of the class of 1927 are lucky to have dynamic Eric Haight to chair their 55th reunion in late May this year.

Herb Jones took mercy on your scribe and replied to my begging for news but only refers to himself as "a newsless young alumnus of 59 years ago," hoping to do better in the next 59 years. That's only to age 136, assuming Herb was 18 in the glorious June of 1923. If he makes our 115th reunion, that will be newsworthy. Don McCord was glad to hear that your wacky class secretary is moving to Tucson. (I must be wacky. This is the fifth move in less than four and a half years. Each move had a logical motive, and each reason evaporated, so my logic must have been faulty). Ed Wolfe's wife, Doris, reports that Ed has been in 3 hospitals since last August. Since his retirement on disability in 1962, he has enjoyed fishing and duck hunting. Call him if you get to Spokane. A note from Otto Alcaide at Christmas time stated that his wife, Hilda, was no longer able to tolerate chemotherapy and gave it up. Those who have watched helplessly as life ebbs from a loved one can fully understand the agony of such a situation.

The Class of 1923 has lost three more of its esteemed members. Edward Hammett, 3rd, died on March 31, 1981. He is survived by his wife, Elizabeth, his son, Edward IV, a grandson, Edward V. a daughter, Elizabeth, and three other grandchildren. The death of Percival Dove, Jr. occurred on July 19, 1981. He is survived by his wife. Cheever H. Ely died on July 19, 1979. We have no other information about him. To all relatives and friends of our late classmates PA'23 extends deepest sympathy.

Libby says that she has 8 more to find the "right one"—and added that they are all busy, well and happy. Natalie Page Neville was planning another trip with her sister, Edith Bennett, Abbot '21. This time they were going to Italy to celebrate "both our successful cataract operations", and add "It's such a joy to see again." I should say so, and we are glad for them.

Word has been received in the office that Ellie Noyes Roedel died in 1981. No further word has been received.

A note from M. C. Swartwood Sinclair says that she had surgery in August, but bounced right back. I visited M. C. in her lovely home in Sedalia several years ago and what a glorious place to visit. M. C. is such fun, and a very fine hostess.

It would be redundant to write more about the Investiture of Donald McNemar as it was covered so well in the Nov. Bulletin. We were happy to be present and were impressed by the tremendous enthusiasm of the student body for Ted Sizer and their new Headmaster as evidenced by the spontaneity of the applause for each. We wish the Sizers well in their future work. Ted is engaged in a program of research into the problems confronting, and the future of, America's high schools, public and private.

Many classmates had their 50th anniversary in 1981. Evidently the golden anniversary of the Jack Ottaways was one to remember. Eighty-six friends and relatives were on hand. They enclosed a snapshot of the bride and groom which showed 50 years had treated them very well. The Ed Thompsons' children put on a black tie affair at their home in Lake San Marcos which was so successful they want to repeat it each year. The Dick Chaces also had their 50th in Salem, OR at their daughter's. Dick takes no credit for the 50 years being so easy. "It rained consistently for the whole time so we couldn't do any sightseeing." Morry Skinner please keep this from the Chamber of Commerce.

And Bill and Lucy Keator also had a surprise party at their 50th put on by the children. Cocktails included a "kitchen shower" for their new apartment in Vero Beach. Lucy

Maud Morgan: more light coming through

"You have a choice. You can let your life pull inward, and diminish, or you can push harder, reach further, and find out more and more. You can even change your body after you are 70 and develop new muscles and new potential," said Maud Morgan on the Dick Cavett show this February. She was reflecting an attitude toward living that energized her at 78 to travel around Africa and produce a one-woman show for a major New York gallery on short notice.

An appetite for experience and adventure — good or bad — and a wonderful generosity toward people animates Morgan's life and art. In the unfortunate American tradition, painter Morgan, like O'Keefe, Nevelson and Alice Neel, is becoming a celebrity only now that she is nearly 80. Dick Cavett interviewed her; Woody Allen gave her a screen test; and hundreds of people visited her exhibition at Betty Parson's Gallery in New York — all in a single week in February, while a biographical film about her, Light Coming Through played in Manhattan and in Boston.

Maud and Pat Morgan came to Andover in 1940. Maud remembers how inexperienced they both were then. Pat soon became an extraordinary art teacher and lecturer. At first Maud, who was painting and exhibiting with a New York gallery, merely offered criticism for some of Pat's students. But when Abbot teacher and artist Mary Hatch went off to join the Red Cross during the war, she asked Maud to take over. Maud claims she was terrified at the prospect of teaching girls. That soon changed, however, and she formed strong friendships in the process.

The Morgan's Andover household from 1940-57 was a vital, memorable and exciting one for students and for the Morgans themselves. In an effort to establish some control and privacy, they decided to be "at home" to anyone, on Saturday nights. They were quickly invaded by the "amazing and brilliant students who were at Andover in those days," Maud recalls, "—people like Hollis Frampton, William Sloan Coffin, Carl Andre and Frank Stella, who became lifelong friends." After wonderful evenings of music, games, intimacy and intense conversation, their student and young faculty friends would return on Sunday to thank the Morgans for Saturday; thus the privacy they had envisioned evaporated.

But that is the past. Currently Maud Morgan feels she is working at her best, and critics have responded warmly to her mulberry paper collages. Morgan has a joint show with potter Audrey Bensley of Andover, May 1-June 12 at The Gallery on the Green in Lexington, where her biographical film also will be shown. Next fall, Morgan will have exhibitions at the American Center in Paris, the Modern Art Galerie in Vienna, and perhaps a show in Washington, D.C.

Maud Morgan's circle of friends is immense. At her 1977 retrospective at the Addison Gallery, literally thousands attended the opening. "She is an inspiration," says Art Instructor Audrey "Naut" Bensley. "It is Maud's capacity to change and to adapt that is so incredible." In Africa last spring, Morgan and 20 other travelers were stranded in the small African town of Gao for a week at equatorial temperatures without fuel to travel on. Most of the party went nearly insane trying to escape or find relief. Maud, however, found the situation fascinating; "I soon realized I could do nothing," she says; "so I settled in to get to know the few people who seemed worth knowing, and to learn what I could." This receptivity, the result of both strong discipline and spirit, fuels both her life and her art.

asks, "How about that for a couple of septuagenarians? Then dinner at Chambord—Wow! We are in the midst of a howling Northeaster writes Red and Fonty Sanborn. They were sorry to miss the installation at Andover but they too were celebrating their 50th in the Gaspé where they had their honeymoon. While at home in Maine Fonty wrote while Red was stacking firewood for next year. "He was proud," she said, "to be able to land the trees on the exact spot he planned."

Ralph Blank expects to retire fully this February but wants to keep busy. He and Grace were off to England again to see their daughter and family. "It is nice over there at Christmas," writes Ralph, but, according to their card from York, it was cold and snowing. Art Schulte may visit friends in Tucson this winter and he asked how far it was to Green Valley. We hope they give us a call. Said their riverboat trip in France was "truly delightful," much more than the "Ole Miss" trip because of the scenery and the food they had in France. Speaking of France, Bill Jones spent the day with Sabe Carr, Yale '28 and Tim Brown, PA '26 the day after Sabe won the Olympic pole vault in 1928. Bill adds "no museums" that time. Another letter from Sabe came during the holidays and brother Gordon Brown says that '82 is the year for Browns and Larsens to get together. The Dike Howes wondered when we left Conroe, TX whether we made Green Valley in two days (that we did) even with two stops to see the Art Taits and the Johnny Locketts in El Paso. It was great to see them and the Taits may pay us a visit this winter.

Jim and Grace Kern had their whole family except for their daughter, for Christmas in Miami. Jim is trying to follow a diet I recommended which he claims "is almost too tough." I agree! Jim says he's still a Yankee fan and was watching the playoff as he wrote. Jim pitched for Andover's ball team as well as Dud Smith who sent greetings. Still another member of the team, Dick Vaughan, reports wife, Adele is doing well after her stay in the hospital. All her sons will be home for Christmas. One has been travelling two years with the Waverly Consortium: S. America, Spain, Canada, Mexico, and all over the U. S. The capt. of the team, George Mumby, will be visiting his two daughters in the East. After San Diego weather, he made sure he dug out all his warm clothes. Mary Mumby, Ken's widow, had Thanksgiving dinner for Gige and the Dick Chaces. I must not forget the catcher of the ball team, Van Johnstone. Van's letter and Nancy's card came during the holidays.

George Stevenson was in Lake Forest, IL visiting his sister whose husband is Yale '28's Bruce Thorne. Lake Forest "is not too far from where I was born sometime during the late stone age" writes George. Charlie and Kitty Sawyer will drive to Austin, TX in mid-Feb. to finish his study on the architecture of the German communities in TX. "We are both well and grateful for it." Art Spear didn't realize he was so uncommunicative when he sent his first letter in 16 years. The letter, however, made up for that long period of silence. Art says he retired from the Book Co. in 1961 when it was taken over by Harcourt Brace. He was with that publisher for 33 years with time out for the Navy. He built a cabin in Friendship, ME and he and Stella spend half the year with flower and vegetable gardens, poultry and sailing, and enjoying visits from his three children and nine grandchildren besides editing books. No wonder I didn't hear from Art all these years.

Keith Smith also built a cabin for his Dad in 1963 in Dutch John, UT and has retired there. His address is "Flaming Gorge Acres 84023." "Please plan to stop off here," he wrote on his Christmas card which was a picture of Keith and his two sisters. Prentiss Glazier was not surprised to hear Keith had retired to Utah as he considered him a true Utarian. Prentiss thinks Bunny and he are related to the Bonney family in Maine as his grandmother was a Bonney. He had a phone call from Bill Wadhams to have lunch together and he has tried to reach Grant Flynn and Lee. Prentiss Glazier, Jr. runs a rare coin business. Dike Howe—please note as Dike is the ultimate collector. Joe and Ruth Smith gave each other a "Super Christmas present" in the form of a Caribbean Cruise to Samana, San Juan, and St. Thomas. They were in Hanover to see Dartmouth crush Princeton and for a mini-reunion of '28. Their oldest grandchild is at the U. of Edinburgh this year. They returned to a deep freeze Florida but this week (their card said) it was '80s. "Crazy Man, Crazy."

Bob and Sissy Wood preceded us in Green Valley this year and had our refrigerator well stacked with food when we arrived. They are good neighbors!! They were off to Mazatlan, Mexico in Jan. and to California. Bob was back in time to join the '24ers watching the Super Bowl game. Gardie Brown and Betty were in Cameroon, W. Africa in Jan. and will be in Santa Barbara again in Feb. and March. Bud Mordock reports he and Nancy have taken on the chairman of his 55th reunion at Cornell. I'm sure they'll do a great job and may have some ideas for our 60th at Andover. Dike Bliss likes reading our class notes "because so many of the guys mentioned lived in Adams Hall with me." Grant Flynn, Ernesto Samper, Jack Basham, Bill Blunt, Bill Dickerman, and he wants to be remembered to them. Ernesto Samper is the only one deceased.

Bill and Min Dickerman took off for their annual trip to Europe: England, Italy, Switzerland, Germany and France. They say they are both well and busy. Bill Viles and Elsie were to be in Tucson in Nov., too early for the Larsen's unfortunately. We still remember driving around Augusta, ME in their Rolls Royce. We were hoping Phil and Jean LeCompte's Christmas card would say "see you in Arizona" but no luck. Dr. LeCompe has been researching diabetes among the Pima Indians. Roy Milliken tries to ignore birthdays. Roy and Herta are trying to simplify their lives and your secretary's (I never know where to send mail to them) by unloading real estate. Their Boca Raton apartment has been sold and their Knoxville house is on the market and they are moving to a condominium there. How about your place in Hope Town, Bahamas?

Laura Williamson, able Scribe of Abbot '24, will be in San Mateo the end of Jan. visiting "her sailing son," who also will drive her to Las Vegas at his mid-terms. "Come join us." Eddy Jackson and Louise were with my sister-in-law, Margot, for Christmas on John's Island, FL. First they were in St. Petersburg which Ed calls the "fracture capital of the U. S." and sure enough Louise fell and received a fracture there. They will spend two months in Guatemala.

New England Mini Reunion May 12, 1982 at 12 at Pillar House just off Route 128 in Newton Lower Falls. Thanks to Bunny Larsen for making reservations for us in the River Room. The Bob Williamsons, Elwyn Perrys and John Holdens along with Sybil Talman, Ruth Eveleth, Ruth Sadler, Kay Hart and I want to attend again.

Elsie Phillips Marshall writes from Southwest Harbor, ME that she has "nothing to report, except that she is thankful to be alive and able to do some hospital volunteering." She sends thanks for "keeping in touch with us all." Lila Clevenger Burke has moved into an apartment at 100 Lincoln Blvd. Abington, MA. She "loves the arrangement for it's a few blocks from my daughter's home and I can see my son too who lives in Norwell. But I'll go back home to the Cape in July and part of August." (AND a '24 classmate wants to drive you to the Mini Reunion on May 12th). Ethel Thompson English writes from Pebble Beach, CA that she and her husband will be back in Quaker Hill, NY. "They live in Jack's house one half of the summer and in hers the other half. Everyone thinks we are 'Wacky' but we, the children and grandchildren like the arrangement." She says she is "too lazy to organize a NY area mini, but she does go into N.Y.C." Please someone organize a little one, so we can catch up on Tommy.

Margaret Boyd Ramey writes she has been "ill for 2 long years with back trouble because of two fractured vertebrae. She sends Hello to anyone who would be interested"—and sends thanks for the "dear thought of me." Polly Bullard Holden says she and John joined friends for a 9 day-105 mile walking tour in Switzerland and Austria Sept. 20-29. She came home feeling years younger and bringing some snapshots to renew her exhilaration! She goes on to say that "Alumni Council was deeply satisfying, working on Committees for 'Student Affairs and Admissions' and in a small group on 'Curriculum and Quality of Education', but best of all was getting acquainted with our new Headmaster who truly inspires confidence."

Caroline Hall Wason died on 9/19/81. Ruth and Elwyn Perry attended her memorial service in Plymouth on a glorious autumn day. Ruth says "she and Carol were born and lived on the same street in Plymouth and even went to the same schools—the 1st two in Plymouth and the last at Abbot! Carol played the wedding march at the Perry's wedding. Ruth added that Carol had been in poor health for a long time, so her passing was really a blessing." Your class scribe sent condolences to Mr. Wason from our class. Frances Williams MacCorkle died on 4/8/80, the Secretary at the Academy just leaving. I wrote Mr. MacCorkle asking if a friend would like to write a short memorial for her. I added that I sat next to her in one of my classes and that I felt certain her notes helped my marks go up a bit.

If you would rather not be quoted on some of our Class Notes, please say so when you send your news to me. Now I am off on an Indonesian Passage with the AAUW, for whom I volunteered around the clock at their Centennial celebration last June here in Boston at Hines Auditorium. And of course, I'll see my son coming and going in San Mateo and my granddaughter in Sonoma College where she is doing her Junior year in the U. S. Cheerio!

Greetings from cold, wintry Guilford, CT—2 degrees above zero at this writing. A time to don the long johns and keep the home fires burning! Word from my most faithful correspondent, Al Keedy, who again, lucky man, is spending the winter in the West Indies, this year at St. Eustatius, a little Dutch island about the size of Andover. Al makes it sound idyllic—offering sun, sand and surf; no cold, no snow. He's ministering until spring a parish on the island, although he retired as minister of his Walpole, MA church some years ago.

Winslow Ames observes that the closer we get to 1984, the less he likes it, referring to the alarming book of that title. He attended a Columbia crew reunion last September, rowed with a lot of old guys, none of whom was the worst for it. Windy enjoys life from his comfortable home in Saunderstown, RI and still keeps his interest alive in art and historical preservation. Pres Breed was honored on his retirement as a Director, Zayre Corp. for 25 years of valued service, first as a banker, later as a director & financial adviser. At a retirement luncheon, for the directors, officers and wives, Zayre announced that it had endowed the N. Preston Breed Book Fund in the Harvard University Library. Congratulations to Pres on this fitting recognition.

Drummond, '95, his Uncle Howard '98, his sisters Gertrude & Lucy, Abbot '28 & '31, respectively, his son Gerard '55 & grandson Edmund, Class of 1984. This spans close to a century that a member of the Drummond family attended PA. Dutch Brodhead, when sending his annual giving contribution, complimented Charlie and Thayer Poore for their bounteous hospitality at our 55th, which he remembers with great pleasure.

Last fall my Princeton class '29, held a mini-reunion at the West Point—Princeton game at West Point. We met at a classmate's home in Harrison and among those present were Joe and Kay Hague, who were their usual genial selves, looking as handsome as ever. They very much enjoy life in Princeton. A novel New Year's greeting from the Arnts. It pictured them, looking happy as larks, in front of the gleaming Taj Mahal. They celebrated Xmas with a big family reunion at their ranch on Orcas Island, WA.

Our class suffered some grievous losses in '81—E. Caldwell Lindsay, Jr., died 3/28; Fuller M. Rothschild 7/1 and Edward V. Silver, Jr. on 8/26. Lin Lindsay spent one year with us and went on to Yale. "Rothie" was in banking, a sr. vp of United Calif. Bank in L.A. and later was a financial consultant. In '79 he was appointed chairman of Lawrence Financial, Inc., a subsidiary of INA Corp. It conducted a collateral management program for banks. Doc Silver was manager of the N.Y. Office of Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. until 1954 & retired in 1970 as sr. vp of Atlantic Mutual Ins. Co. of N.Y. After retiring he resided in Heritage Village, Southbury, CT where he was active in the H. V. Ambulance Association. The Class extends its heartfelt condolences to the bereaved families of these classmates.

Sorry to report the sudden death of "Charlie" Cuddeback who followed his brother "Corny" (1925 at Andover). Charlie was with us but one year and made All-Club basketball foretelling his captaincy of the Williams College basketball team. He made the Honor Roll fall term and was always up on his marks at college as well. Charlie was always an enthusiastic graduate and with his wife, Martha, graced many a reunion. At Williams he was elected to Gargoyle and served as class treasurer for many years.

Returning to Port Jervis, NY his hometown from Harvard Law, he joined the law firm of Cuddeback, Cuddeback & Onofry of which he later became a partner. Very civic-minded, Charlie served as president of the Port Jervis Rotary and was a member of the Masonic Lodge as well as the Elks. He served as president of the Port Jervis Bar Association, was a member of the American Bar Association, a president of the Orange County Bar, Port Jervis School Board, director of First National Bank and on the Advisory Committee of the Bank of New York. His church was the Deerpark Reformed Church. Our sympathy to Martha and the other members of his family.

On the bright side of things, we hear from John McClellan who tries hard to keep his garden growing in Andover despite the woodchucks, and "on hot days I let the weeds grow as usual." He did get away to a "rugged, wild" Maine island with brother Hugh '25 last summer for sailing, clamming, fishing and lobstering (3). He had kind words to say about the 55th Reunion; thanks, John.

A letter from Jack Weldon arrived with the sad news that his artist wife, Jean, died December 7th after a long hard fight. Jack had heard that I too am bereft and had sweet memories of my Madeline at our 50th. To continue: "I will continue to spend time as advisor to two businesses in Indianapolis and fun at Martha's Vineyard. Our children, grandchildren and my sister have given me great support for which I am most grateful." We are very sorry at the news of Jean, Jack, but grateful for keeping us posted.

The October 19, 1981 New York Times devoted a lead two-column spread and a picture of Dr. Walsh McDermott in reporting his death two days before. The announcement came from the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation which Walsh served as special adviser and he was responsible for developing several grant programs to provide medical services on a regional basis. Though at PA only one year, he was an avid Andover supporter. Possibly the best obit is to quote from the National Academy of Sciences Newsletter of the Institute of Medicine of November, 1981: "Walsh McDermott Dies, Meeting Pays Tribute

"Walsh McDermott, a principal architect of the Institute of Medicine and chairman of its predecessor Board on Medicine, died October 17 of a heart attack at his vacation home in Pawling, NY. A special program of tribute was conducted in the period customarily reserved for the main address at the Institute's annual meeting October 28.

"Dr. McDermott, who was 71 years old, was associated with Cornell Medical Center for most of a professional life spent in teaching and research on infectious diseases, including tuberculosis, with which he had been stricken as a medical resident. He shared an Albert Lasker Award in 1955 for work in the development of isoniazid for the treatment of TB. With Paul Besson, he was co-editor through five editions of the Cecil & Loeb Textbook on Medicine."

Our heartfelt best wishes go to his widow Marian.

PHILLIPS

Our 55th Reunion will be held at Andover June 11-13. Marc Mason attended a preliminary planning meeting in October and your Secretary was at Andover on January 16 for a meeting and briefing of Reunion Chairmen. We have organized a Reunion Committee. The first meeting was held on Saturday, January 30 with Don Alexander, Ben Fisher, Marc Mason and Jack Keogh in attendance. We plan to expand the Committee in the hope that all classmates will be contacted. Please note the Reunion dates and plan to be with us.

The following is a welcome note from Rush Field. "I apologize for being so uncommunicative the last few years; but time passes so quickly. Have been retired for the last 6 or 7 years after spending all my business life in the investment business. It was great fun, many pleasant associations, & rewarding until computers, modernization, and severe competition came along. I keep almost too busy taking care of my own affairs, a couple of houses, a fair bit of money-raising for good causes, plenty of tennis & gardening and a couple of trips to foreign lands almost every year for at least the last 20 or 25 years. Fortunately, Bar and I have been blessed with good health and our children have successful and rewarding lives. Two children, five grandchildren, and dogs now down from four to one. Will see you at 55th Reunion, deo volenti."

Hubert Graves tells us "I have been enjoying retired life for several years after being associated with Indian Head Mills in New York City. My wife, Miriam, and I reside in Wakefield, RI where I play a great deal of golf (not too well but have fun). We are close to the Atlantic Ocean which we enjoy. In the winter we stay in Delray Beach, FL at the Seagate Beach Club. Have managed to garner twelve wonderful grandchildren. My hope is that one or more may have the opportunity to attend Andover."

EX-CHAIRMAN OF GLOBE HAPPY ABOUT PAPERS is the headline of the following AP release under dateline Boston. "William Davis Taylor, who retired Jan. 1 as chairman of the parent company of the Boston Globe, says he is optimistic about the future of newspapers. 'In today's world there's a plethora of ways to get information,' Taylor said in an interview published in today's Globe. 'But a good newspaper — accurate, fair, complete and with the interests of all segments of its audience, poor as well as rich, as its chief objectives—will always have a place in the home. After all, there's no real substitute for the printed word. Only a newspaper can do the complete job, whereas the airwaves can't. We've never been without the printed word. If we ever are we'd all be in bad shape,' said Taylor, 73, who also had served as publisher of the Globe. Taylor is continuing as a director of Affiliated Publications, Inc. and as a consultant to the Globe, founded by his grandfather and now headed by his oldest son, William O. Taylor, who succeeded him as publisher in 1977."

The problem of raising fruit in Florida in the rigorous winter of 1982 is well illustrated in this note from Ed Frost. "When I sent in my Alumni Fund check last month I mentioned I am still raising grapefruit in Vero Beach, FL and invited friends passing thru to stop for samples. A 20 degree January 11th night voided the offer for this year. Will consider trading a citrus grove for an apartment house. However, glad to be here 7 months and 5 months in MA where my wife and I have two sons with wives and six grandchildren. Another son (PA '56), wife and grandson in Round Hills, VA. Hope to see you all in June."

Coly Hardy, Chairman of the Palm Beach delegation to the White House Conference on Aging, says that he hopes to complete a new book—Financing Retirement—to be published by Reunion (??? as publishers work slowly).

To the multitude of '28sters who made their Earthly Debuts in the Year of Our Lord 19 and 10, attention is called herewith to the fact that 1982, like 1910, is the Year of the Dog in the Oriental Zodiac, which would seem to make it our Year to Howl. It is also alleged that we Old Dogs have qualities often ascribed to Man's Best Friend. This intelligence may or may not be gratifying, depending on one's feelings toward Genus Canis, and with due recognition of the not inconsiderable differences, in structure and temperament, between a Labrador Retriever and Chihuahua. Be that as it may, Happy Year of the Dog to you.

In keeping with earlier assurances, we open with Egg Lewis's report of Calif. desert agricultural activities, including corn planting in "geometric rows splayed like the flag of Nippon", encounter sessions with "new and heinous breed of rabbits, chewing young leaves into lace curtains," and one sunny afternoon's observation of "a firemen's hose in the driveway, but lo', it moved, or oozed, tho stretched out straight, in direction of some poor desert squirrel in his creosote bush. This was a BIG one, 4 mortal, fat feet of quintessential rattler. Rang then the age-old alarm in one's head as he leapt 6 feet out of wheelchair, was off on a lope with long handled shovel at the ready, and chopped Man's immemorial enemy into confetti." Following rattler-free summer on comfortable, ancestral RI tree farm, Egg and Mary have once again returned to their "Spartan, nay Neanderthal, accommodations on the desert. by contrast one heightens the flavor of the other and enlivens each year." (Nancy and I share these sentiments in our annual transition from Tarheel tepee to primitive, Down East, coveside domicile, where electricity, hot running water and Ma Bell are unexperienced luxuries. Classmate and mates who have weathered visitation thereto have never been quite the same after dunking in the waters of Robinhood Cove—From across The Briny in his St. Andrews "mini-flat", Hertie Barres, about to claim grandchild No. 16, sent Al Rowland a clipping from the Smith College Bulletin, depicting President Emeritus Thomas C. Mendenhall, surrounded by a bevy of eager Smithy oarspeople, sprinkling champagne on the Smith crew's "new Fiberglass sectional eight shell, equipped with an electronic megaphone...and named in Mr. Mendenhall's honor as a tribute to his loyal and long-standing support of crew at Smith." Unhappily, "The Mendenhall" finished third, behind the M.I.T. and Conn. College women's crews at the New England Crew Regatta on Worcester's Lake Quinsigamond. There was apparently no reason to connect third place performance with sprinkling of The Bubbly. In addition to his Corresponding Secy. duties for Yale '32, Tom was active in 50th reunion preparations in the compilation of a detailed questionnaire, and Bill Frank serves as co-chairman of this springtime exercise in Old Blue Antiquity recognition. Bill and Ruth plan Apriilian move from Armonk "Dilly Dally" farm to condo in nearby Somers, NY—Al Mulliken, in his 8th year as Ft. Myers resident, finds FL living much more to his liking than tangling with the hypothermian hazards of the Frozen North, is active in local and county golf affairs, still tries to get to New Hampshire in the summertime, visits 4 offspring scattered from Scarsdale to Calif., whence Bill Farley, still loyally immersed in the furtherance of PA's interests, reports that son Mike continues labors as No. 1 Advance Man for VP Bush, travelling hither and yon, at home and abroad, in this no doubt fascinating capacity. In postscript confession Papa Bill bares all: "Golf handicap a poor 25."—Rog Murray, like Classmate Farley, utilizes the space provided on Alum-Fund envelope for jottings re: self (and why don't you?), tells of summer visit to Bristol, England, prior to sailing to the Outer Hebrides to follow the footsteps of Johnson and Boswell to the place where Thos. Chatterton (1752-70) lived, evoking memories of Claude Moore Fuess's urging to write and speak on T.C. for the Potter Prize Speaking Contest. Finis indeed Origine Pendet.—Yuletide photo of Frank Schroeder and Ginny, perched precariously on cellar hole brink, presages, to poetic accompaniment, summertime move to new Sewickley domicile (440 Woodland Road)—And in very first '81 season Yule card Hort Smith and Dell, from Way Down Yonder In, add to their own "greetings" from assorted luminaries of Le Jazz Hot, including "Satchmo", Fats Waller, and the Boswell Sisters, and "Witnessed" by "L. Welk."—Still wintering in Delray Beach to escape the chill factor clutches of E. Lansing, MI, Em Bates voices hopes and plans of personal appearance at Eli 50th.—On visit to daughter Ruthie and family in Seattle last summer, Don McLean spotted a Seattle Times review of the latest production of "the prolific Wallace writing family", entitled The Intimate Sex Lives of Famous People. The People up for scrutiny range from Albert Einstein and Marie Curie to our Class Father Figure, Calvin Coolidge, whose accompanying photograph would warm the heart of any fellow-alumnus of Amherst College, PA '28ster, or Native Vermonter. The reviewer's favorite item from this no doubt succulent boudoir compendium is entitled "The Coolidge Effect", an expression used by sexologists to describe, among animals, "the phenomenon of male re-arousal by a new female", as coined in a 1976 research paper by psychologist G. Bermant. As Bermant told it (according to the Wallaces): "One day the President and Mrs. Coolidge were visiting a government farm. Soon after their arrival, they were taken off on separate tours. When Mrs. Coolidge passed the chicken pens, she paused to ask the man in charge if the rooster copulates more than once each day. 'Dozens of times', was the reply. 'Please tell that to the President,' Mrs. Coolidge requested. When the President passed the pens and was told about the rooster, he asked, 'Same hen every time?' 'Oh no, Mr. President, a different one each time.' The President nodded slowly, then said, 'Tell that to Mrs. Coolidge.'" On this informative, barnyard management note we leave you, with yet another fervent request for news, opinions, reminiscences, you-name-it, most especially from CLUOOS (Classmates-long-unheard-from-or-of). I'm well aware that many names reappear frequently in this column. In one way or another their owners KEEP IN TOUCH. Your news and thoughts, whatever they may be—of troubles as well as successes—are important to your classmates as Father Time's scythe continues to thin our ranks. R.S.V.P. before the next postal rate hike—and very best wishes to you for a fine summer. J.R.A.

Greetings to the dear old girls. Do hope you have survived this cold winter with its snow and endless storms. By the time you receive these notes spring and summer—ever welcome—will have arrived.

From Portsmouth, NH in September Fran Gould Parker—"Not much news—not growing old too gracefully! Have two daughters—one married and living in Florida. One not married does secretarial work in New York. One son doing very well in the moving business. Last our son (youngest child) at 21 years of age.—I'm enjoying life having learned to say no except when I really want to join or do for some committee—Isn't that uneventful enough?!"

On September 2 Florence Fitzhugh Phelps—"I am writing from our camp on Lake Champlain in Vermont where we spend about 5 months. Great to be retired! Oldest son, Jim, is Circulation Mgr. for Reader's Digest; Bob is a vice president of a bank in Maryland; Ann and her family have just left for South Africa where her husband will teach at Witwatersrand Univ. in Johannesburg. He is on his sabbatical from Colorado State Univ. We hope to visit them in the spring. We have 7 granddaughters and 2 grandsons. The oldest granddaughter was married in August and is teaching Special Education in Brunswick, GA. I'd love to see any Abbot "girls" who may be near Alburg, VT or Weston, CT." Gay d'Elseaux in May—"Our class news is certainly dull—even non-existent! But I can understand—my life is certainly nothing to get excited about or write about! Frank doesn't want to be involved in anything any more—but I keep going. Symphony—swimming—lots of bridge and some volunteer hospital work. My children and grandchildren (6) are my pride and joy—so I guess we did something right! My next goal is to be a great-grandmother!—none married yet. I am grateful for good health, still!"

Liz Curley, Class Notes Editor, sent a letter too long for Class Notes, but I shall be glad to send a copy if requested, from Susan Ripley Ward, who 15 years ago, at age 57, was introduced to reality and changed her attitude about living. "This summer I completed a book on the kinds of experiences I have had in which I discovered my True Self." She wishes all young people could do this and not wait until age 57. Reminds me of the Dartmouth student who said to our Episcopal Student Chaplain, "Do you know how it feels to find yourself?" Father Gary asked, "How?" To which the student replied, "Just gee whiz—" with emphasis.

Wonder if Kay Fox Smiley has published her History of Switzerland or her second "Who-done-it?" Do let us know.

Hope you have all accepted the realities of life which can be both good and bad. Very best wishes to the '28sters. Laddie.

The trouble with having a secretary living in Maine is that very little news trickles Down East. It's just like oil, gas, beef; by the time it gets to Maine, it has been syphoned off, gone stale, been picked over, or walked all the way from Texas. I'm not an inquiring reporter. Give me the news and I will clean it up and get it printed, otherwise do without.

Jack Craft is still living in Columbia, SC having retired as museum director. He lives in a woodland by his own lake. Ben Gault attended the 55th Yale Alumni Reunion as a guest of his older brother, George Gault, Yale '26, who suggested to his parents that younger brother Ben be sent to Andover. That rings a bell. Art and your secretary were sent to Andover at the recommendation of our older brother, William O. Rogers, who graduated from Yale 1917 himself, when he entered Yale, he knew no other undergraduate. Bill Dinsmore has moved to 48 Goetze St., Bayhead, NJ and is still working as a public relations consultant to New York and Stamford Corporate clients.

months a year in Naples, FL. During the summers, he is active as a labor arbitrator. He has four terrific grandsons but is looking for at least one granddaughter (I don't blame him!) A meeting in New York to stir up pockets for our 50th Reunion at Yale, produced a number of Andover '29 classmates, including your sec. Quigg Newton, Phil Allen and John McGauley. President Bart Giamatti enthralled the audience as usual. I suspect the latter went to Andover for the same reason as many others; his father had come from a local high school and was pretty lonely at Yale. I had a nice note from a daughter, Baba, of our late classmate Clem Williamson. Baba reports that Clem has two grandchildren at Andover, Christopher Smith '82 and Daisy Smith '83.

Dodo Wilson is still active in Battery Chargers but has slowed down his pace and has recharged his own battery by travelling down the West Coast of Baja, CA to Acapulco, Costa Rica through the Panama Canal into the Caribbean to San Juan.

It is my sad duty to report the death of George N. Copley, Jr. on May 3, 1981. I remember George well and wish I had more to report. He was such a fine guy.

Dear Abbot '29ers—

I hope all of you who are in the "comfort zone" are enjoying a happy, healthy winter. We, up here in the deep snow-freeze are a little bit envious.

I haven't heard much news of you but I hope this does not mean you have forgotten to respond to Barbara Folk Howe's excellent letter reminding you of the Annual Class Fund. She is wearing a halo for taking over for Polly Francis Loesch. You will all be interested in this note I received from Polly's husband, Rev. Dr. Russell T. Loesch—To the Sharing Classmates of Polly Francis Loesch: May I take this way of thanking you for your generous and thoughtful contributions to a fund to be in Polly's memory. In talking it over with Sandy Thorpe, I decided that Polly's books on Drama and Puppetry should be given to the Andover Library where they will be set on a shelf in her memory. Her puppets and marionettes are going to the Drama department of the school to be used in the puppetry course. The fund to which you have so graciously contributed is to be used to purchase further books on Drama and Puppetry. Also, a book or more, will be purchased each year to be given to the student who has shown an outstanding contribution to the School Theater program.

The above seems to be fitting in that so much of her life and her sharing was based on the ideas and influence she gained from her association with Abbot and you, her classmates. So I join with you in honoring her memory and her ongoing influence on young people now in the school program.

Thank you each and every one of you and may you come into the year 1982 with the assurance that there is still much to experience in this life and the next. With sincere thanks, Russell T. Loesch.

My second New Year Greeting to one and all. A newsy note from H. Ripley saying she still divides her life between NH and Wash. D. C. She attended the inauguration of the new headmaster and everyone seemed pleased with Don McNemar. I quote "My great-niece has just entered Andover as a senior living in Abbey House and already feels as if it were her school. Nice to have the girls as enthusiastic as the boys." While in NH during the summer she vegetable gardens and hauls it back to D. C. for winter eating. Yours truly misses those just picked fresh vegetable and fruit markets we had in Indiana. No such thing here.

Beth Perry Lewis sent me several items of interest. A new grandson, Darren Nevin MacCracken, was born on St. Patrick's Day 1981 and took his first steps at their family Thanksgiving Day gathering—needless to say much applause accorded. Beth and her husband once again participated, along with 26,000 other folks in the National Square Dance Convention in Seattle last June. In August, she had combined surgery for glaucoma and a cataract on one eye. Now, with a contact lens, things are not only brighter, but she read a lot of A Singular School, Abbot Academy, 1828-1973, loaned to her by Grace Hadley McMillan. She says it brought back a lot of memories. Also Beth had been to see Mary Carpenter Dake and reports she, too, is having some eye problems—mighty sorry to hear that!

Kay Foster Haviland returned my card saying she had no news but—she sees Posey Castle Olivetti half of the year and Elenita Cowee Chickering some and that their winter this year is really rough.

Another no news card from Doris Sturdevant Bacon. Poor dear she was ill last year and hospitalized last December. Now home recuperating and I hope that will be a good one.

Herb Case writes from Olivet, MI (near Battle Creek) that after graduation from Northwestern he worked successfully for the General Electric X-Ray Division, Northrup Aviation and North American Rockwell, from which company he retired in 1965. Since that time, Herb has been living first on a farm in Marshall, MI and now on another farm in Olivet. He was forced to retire completely in 1974 when he had successful bypass surgery.

Russ Roth is still practicing urology in Erie, PA and continues to be active in the American Medical Association of which he is a past president. As chairman and chief executive officer of Twin Disc, Incorporated of Racine, WI, John Batten continues to guide the world's leading independent manufacturer of industrial power transmission devices. He maintains his commercial pilots license and flies a jet. Among John's avocations is hunting sheep and other high altitude game. He reports he is in good shape after recent surgery for a torn rotator cuff.

From Glencoe, IL north of Chicago, Charlie Coburn writes after a visit with their Arizona family and grandchildren—"Retired from publishing business four years ago only to find the pace utterly boring. Five or six days a week on the golf course is a drudge. So, for the past three years, I have been absorbed in consulting work which keeps me busy and sane, I like to think, helps delay the inevitable transition from incipient to chronic senility. Our three daughters and five grandchildren are spread from New Hampshire to Chicago to Arizona requiring long hikes to keep tabs on expanding minds and sturdy, growing bodies. August of '82 will mark three score and ten, the passing grade for the Biblical physical. Because Anne and I are blessed with a minimum of geriatric symptoms, we like to think of ourselves as biodegrading gracefully."

John Hegeman reports from Hilton Head, SC that classmates Norm King and Tom Lawrence have been visitors. The latter had the arrogance to borrow a set of battered golf clubs and shoot a 75 wearing rubber-soled street shoes.

It's a bad policy to start off a new job with an apology but I must explain why you didn't see any class notes in the fall Bulletin. Since "horses were changed in the middle of the stream", information regarding the Bulletin deadline was delayed. Also in September we had a month's tour of Canada and returned home too late to meet the deadline.

Thanks for the responses of those who answered the cards sent out by the Alumni office. I didn't get nearly enough and I am making an urgent appeal that more of you write me before the next issue. I know that you feel that your news is not important but it really is to all of us. As the years go by we all get more nostalgic about our former classmates!

Wish that all of you could have been at our 50th Reunion. It was such fun! We appreciated especially the hospitality of Abby Castle Kemper and the Phillip's Class of '31. Metta Bettels Smith writes that last April she flew to San Francisco to spend a week in Walnut Creek with her Abbot roommate Min Hyde de Mille and her husband for their annual get-together. Min's son Bob is Mett's godchild and was the first baby from the class of '32. Last fall Metta visited her daughter, Samantha (whose husband is with Pan Am in Rio,) and her only grandchild. Her other daughter Serena is a flight attendant with Pan Am. They are all air minded! Faith Chipman Park writes that they had a marvelous family reunion at her sister's in Colorado last August which all her children, son-in-law and 9-year-old granddaughter, Amanda, attended. Amanda returned with Faith and Ed for a 3 week visit. They had a beautiful time but Faith admitted she didn't realize how tired she was until she was gone. Sound familiar? We're sorry to hear that Billie Keith Langill had major surgery in September. Trust that you are "up and at 'em" now, Billie. Gertrud van Peurseum Bell and her husband flew to San Diego to be with their 3 children and 3 grandchildren for Christmas.

Mary Smead Homlar and Mary Bacon rented a car after reunion for a trip to Deerfield, on to New Hampshire and the coast and back to Marblehead where they had lunch with Skip Allen Carroll. The former had a busy summer with lots of family company plus a stay in the Wisconsin woods. Ginny Lillard Collins had four '31ers to lunch in November; Abby Castle Kemper, Jane Sullivan, Emily Bullock, and Skip Allen Carroll. Any news from that mini-reunion?

We are very saddened by the news of deaths of 2 of our classmates. Mary Bacon died of cancer August 27, 1981. Florence Norton died December 5, 1981. I have no details of the latter. Since Mary Bacon was our Class Secretary for many years and Mary Smead Homlar was a close friend who kept in close touch with her, I asked her to write a tribute to Mary which follows: "Reunion was great! Best since our 25th!" So Mary Bacon wrote after our 45th. A regular attendant at reunions, Mary was a Class Secretary and hostess to many classmates visiting New York City. She was just great about keeping us all in touch.

All who enjoyed our 50th Reunion were stunned by Mary's death in August for she concealed her illness and pain in her determination to see us all together again. Once more, Reunion was great! Mary had looked forward to meeting her new little grandniece over Labor Day weekend, but she died on August 27th in the home of her brother in Bethlehem, PA. Services were held in the Old Dutch Church in Tarrytown...The new baby girl was christened prior to the memorial service. Mary would have been delighted with that arrangement."

Too late to print last time, but a lifesaver to me now is news from five classmates. Just when I should have been writing everyone for juicy items for the spring Bulletin, Bill had to go to the hospital (20 miles away) and no desk work got done. He is fine, though couldn't drive anywhere for two weeks which was exasperating.

Helen Allen Anderson wrote just before she and Harry were to leave for a leisurely drive through "that heavenly country." She also said, "Why is life in our golden years so HECTIC???" — we live only 25 miles apart, but have not seen each other for a couple of years. Now she and Harry are in Florida for the winter, escaping the three feet plus of snow we have had in these parts and as I write it's not even February.

Kay Brigham Callanen and Gardner

50th Reunion

spent July and August on Cape Cod, with side trips to Andover and Maine. She hopes to be at Reunion this year. Harriet Wright Hight and Donald also had two weeks in Scotland (at the end of last summer). Saw the Tattoo in Edinburgh, many castles, the Queen, Prince Charles and Lady Diana and the famous battleground of Culloden. While in North Sandwich, NH this summer she almost met Katie Hepburn — a friend on Squam Lake had had tea with her during the filming of On Golden Pond.

Va Wolfe said she regrets not being able to be at Reunion—she has to use an orthopedic cane and getting around is difficult. She has lunch from time to time with Marcia Rudd Keil ('31).

Along with Helen Anderson and Atossa Welles, Ruth Tyler Smith had her 45th at Smith and plans to be in Andover this year, where she showed the old campus to three of her granddaughters last June. She and Ev, who is now semi-retired, have been doing even more traveling than before, in addition to spending five weeks in Maine last summer.

We'll all be hearing more about Reunion soon—see you there!

Would you believe your Kindly Old Editor arranging several notes from PA '33? Maybe it was the—we hoped—sinister threat in our last column, and our Humphrey Bogart trench coat. Whatever, we brush away the happy tears and, sniffing gratefully, tell all:

A huge treat just before Christmas—first word from Harry Sears since we met in Pearl Harbor in 1942. Harry retired from Union Bank in Grand Rapids three years ago, and continues to live in G.R., where he and Eleanor have two children and four grandchildren close by. They winter in Delray Beach, with a bit of traveling thrown in now and then. Sounds as if he is keeping in shape, with a routine of hunting, sailing, fishing and tennis, although he seems to have given up throwing the hammer. Harry is one of the many people we hope we'll be seeing in June 1983.

Our South Carolina Squire, Paul Offill, writes, "One down, one to go!" Grandson Fil graduated from PA in June and is now in his freshman year at Kenyon College. The Offill family will again assemble on the Hill in June 1982 to see grandson Nicolas graduate. Then—bless him—Paul notes that he will be back once more in June 1983. He has decided against finding temporary quarters in the vicinity of Andover for the next few years, however, because "we are more sold on the South Carolina coast than ever!"

From Joe Tardiff: "After a 12-year effort ... I finally climbed the 64th and last 4,000-ft. peak in New England. So now I'm a member of the 4,000-foot Club." (Should think you'd need at least that many feet!) Not to rest on any laurels, Joe says he is still "picking away" at the Appalachian Trail, having covered 1740 miles from Mt. Katahdin, ME to the North Carolina line. "Only 350 miles to go, he says. We are going to go and lie down somewhere. But Joe, one more Hill to climb, in June 1983!"

Herb Scoville's book, MX, Prescription for Disaster, has been published by MIT Press. He has been traveling around the country speaking of the imminent dangers of nuclear war, with great public support for his efforts. A note from Dan Badger tells of a coming visit to Paris to visit Dan Jr., PA '64 and daughter Diane. Dan Jr. is serving with International Energy Commission Headquarters and Diane is in Paris as part of her junior year in France from Brown University.

Couple of notes without news: a friendly wave of the paw from Bill Cummings, in Janesville, WI; Bob Bush, in Dallas (Texas that is); Paul Kann in Los Altos, CA; and Bob Ferguson, the last of whom we had the pleasure of seeing at our 45th Yale Reunion last fall. Bob is pursuing the law (glad to say he is on the right end of the pursuit!), living in Canton Center, CT "20 miles northwest of Hartford." Also sighted at the same reunion: George Bartholemew, Rynn Berry, Bill Boyd, Art Bromfield, Bob Ingersoll, Bob Keeney, Lloyd Makepeace, John Reigeluth, and Murray Sanders, all healthy-and-happy looking. And that brings our story to the point where our author straps on his trusty six-shooters, mounts his Ercycle and rides off into the sunset. But don't forget to write!

We regret that again we must close with the report of the death of a classmate. Walter C. Bartlett, Jr., died 30 June 1981. We extend the sympathy of our class to h widow, who resides at 2800 S. Ocean Boulevard, Boca Raton, FL 33432.

Just talked with Olive French Sherman over the telephone. We are "almost" neighbors now that Interstate 75 has been completed to Naples, FL. She too has almost no room to add a thing to her daily calendar. She keeps an eye on her 98-year-old mother who is in a nearby nursing home. Olive writes religious poetry and magazine articles which express her feelings about issues. She has a married grandchild who is living in Fairbanks, Alaska—probably a future trip for Olive? After Christmas this year she had a wonderful week's Caribbean Cruise with a "handsome 46-year-old son"—her oldest. Olive's major activity over the past five years was as Secretary of the Board of the Moorings Park retirement project in Naples which now has 168 units. This is the completion of Phase I, and there are more to come. Olive had had a major part in the planning and completion of this project.

A mention of Ann Cole Gannett's card is long overdue. Her 15 grandchildren must now be 20 to 2 years—10 girls and 5 boys (There may even be more by now). "All different but equally delightful." Her best trip was to Crete to join her youngest son to renew her "archeological fervor." Ann, thank you for taking time out of your demanding political life in the Massachusetts Legislature to tell us a bit about your personal life. We're proud of you, and wish more women of your caliber were in positions of leadership.

A trip to Egypt and Israel was a high point in the Arnolds' 1981 year in May: a 3-day cruise on the Nile River, the Pyramids, a ride on a camel for Dick, Masada, wading in the Dead Sea, a boat ride on the Sea of Galilee, and a stroll through Old Jerusalem, the Dome of the Rock—beautiful inside and outside, overnight and meals in a Kibbutz—experiences never to be forgotten. How much more meaningful are passages in the Bible. Then we spent 18 days in June with my sister, Helen Tower Stritmatter, in Kirkland, WA. Her youngest son graduated from the Evergreen State College.

How very much we would like to hear from other members of the Class—particularly from those who have never written. Writing a letter is a good snowbound or rainy day occupation.

Word came from the Alumnae Office only recently that Una Rogers Whitney passed away on September 16, 1980. Una sang in Fidelio and the Choir, and belonged to the Odeon Society while she was at Abbot. Our Class extends sympathy to her family.

This is the season for us to enjoy retirement, or on the way to retire; and to enjoy grandchildren, or at any rate to babysit with them. Anyone who is not both retired and re-treaded with grandchildren cannot rightfully be considered with it. Many of us are, but some of our class mavericks spurn — or at least go without one or both. We've decided to have a grandchildren sweepstakes. Entries closed on June 22 (graduation), 1999. At the moment the apparent front runners are Buzz Knowlton with 10, Lawson Chamberlin with 6, and Bob Adamson with at least 2. Howie Johnson counts 9, but he has to share with his second wife, Rosemarie; and besides he is penalized 5 because he won't retire — still getting rich selling real estate. Bill Johns has just retired after 43 years in the engineering department of DuPont and is planning to descend once again upon the PA campus. Bob Adamson is both directing the College at Sixty Program at Fordham's Mid-Manhattan campus at Lincoln Center and his wife, Kay, is a professor there and they are both students in the same college — in a course that took them in January to Egypt and Israel. That's what I call ACTION. Trev Cushman and Joss still live at Laguna Beach, CA, but have gotten into some unusual migration patterns: each summer to Nova Scotia and P.E.I., each fall to the Cornell game with Chamberlin and (this year) Peterson. Trev also threatens to arrive in Boston in late May, where in my so-far frantic "retirement", I hope to trap him on Beacon Hill. Myself, with Betsy as crew, I'm doing what I always wanted to do: racing a Day Sailer every weekend from May to October, sculling on the weekdays, and squashing and tennisng from October to May. Too bad Shep didn't realize what a natural athlete I (potentially) was—but no grandchildren.

On deadline for the Class Notes and no news when a surprise phone call came from Sandy Kinsman Dexter who was visiting her brother-in-law at John's Island, just up the road from me in Vero Beach. She is recovering from a hip operation but her crutch didn't keep her from climbing the stairs to my apartment where we spent a nice afternoon looking at the river and getting caught up on the years since Abbot and Smith. She and her husband are looking forward to next summer and life back on their boat. He is recovering from cardiac problems, aggravated by serum jaundice and she planned her surgery to be well by summer.

I hope that others who come through Florida will call me, too. As for the rest of you, let me know what you are up to.

Listed as "lost" are Elizabeth Foss Strachan, Jane Herrick Sloman, Evelyn Kleven Ansin, Marguerite Galloway, Jane Tracy MacGruer, Priscilla Hoadley Chesley, Frances Heffernan Moore. If anyone has news of them notify the Alumni Office, Andover.

"Buck" Dyess, who has been in semi-retirement from the law firm of Foreman & Dyess in Houston, has been appointed Associate Justice, First Court of Appeals of Harris County, (Houston). Our class applauds you, "Buck".

Al Adams, "Buck"'s Yale roommate, has recently lost his wife, Lucy. Our sincere condolences, Al. Yalies in our class will remember that Lucy was the daughter of Elliot Dunlap Smith, the Master of Saybrook College. Bob Wanamaker writes that he is about to retire from General Electric after 35 years of service. He reports that he and his "wife, Alyce, are living in a year-round, chalet-type cottage on the shores of Onota Lake, in Pittsfield, MA. Any 35ers are welcome to visit us when passing through the area." Why don't we take him up?

I've had this inquiry from Brooks Baker. "On the Yale Football squad which took on and erased Dartmouth on Oct. 31st, there was one PA alumnus compared to how many in 1935-40?" I haven't the Yale football programs of that era to give Brooks an answer to his question. I can tell him, however, that PA had 4 lettermen on the Yale '36 team, 6 lettermen on the '37 team, and 3 lettermen on the '38 team. Yes, Brooks, there has been quite a change.

Your Secretary has recently given you several updates on Pete Soutter. You will recall that he lost his wife in Sept. 1980. He has been courting Mrs. Helen M. Ettenger. They were married in late November and honeymooned at St. Thomas. He says "I'm very delighted and hope and pray for a great life together." His new address will be 2 Marsh Island Road, Hilton Head, SC 29928. Stew Leonard, who has done such noble work for us on the Alumni Fund, has written "Outside of reunions I haven't seen 10 Andover classmates since I graduated from college. So news that way is scarce. Phyllis goes to Lexington, MA in January to give birth to her second grandchild. I don't feel badly at being blanked in that department since neither of my children is married. A nasty tennis elbow has destroyed my golf game. Just when I was taking aim at a 10 handicap, now 13." A short note from Ernest "Al" Johnson says, "This is my year to start a planned retirement from Amherst College—35 years of teaching French and Spanish. Frank Wallace is back in Amherst visiting."

My predecessor in the Secretary's job was Fred Griffin. All will recall what a fine job he did for us. Now he has been given the "Man of the Year Award" by the Manchester, NH, Chamber of Commerce. Well deserved and congrats, Fred. We haven't heard from "Gig" Gardner in recent years. I was able to extract this note from him. "Since moving to Florida four years ago, I have found very little Andover interest. My only contact has been with Pete Davis, having played golf twice with a mutual friend, once in Providence and once here. He plays very good golf, much better than I. When my business, Pioneer Pet Supply Co., became a victim of the economic disaster of the mid-seventies, we moved to Sanibel. We bought a home and loved it ever since. Have five children and four grandchildren. My third son Jeffrey graduated from Andover and went on to Lawrence College in Wisconsin. Golfing, fishing, gardening and some travel keep us young and healthy. Would welcome a call from any of my old buddies if they are in this area. Gardner's current address is 985 Oyster Court, Sanibel, FL 33957. There's another nice invitation, classmates."

At luncheon in the Jadwin Gym in Princeton before the Yale-Princeton game this fall, I was able to see some of our classmates. Ted Toohey and Doane Twombly were there as was Newell Brown, who was about to move to Colorado with his lady. Also it was good to see Wes Pullen again after many years. As a senior officer of Time, Inc. he retired some years ago and is living in Old Lyme, CT. Another social affair I attended enabled me to see Sally and Bill Littlefield. The occasion was the marriage of their son Bill in Cambridge, MA. Another in attendance was Hunter Walton. I asked him what his class actually was at PA. He said a checkered career would permit him to claim '34 or '35 or '36. He desires to be known as a '35er. He's not in our class Pot Pourri, but he shows up on my computer sheets as a '35er. I haven't been able to get much information on Erv Baldwin since he retired from the Legal Department of United Technologies here in Hartford. Word of mouth tells me that he has a large ranch operation in Hawaii specializing in Macadamia nuts and Guava. He's said to be very successful. Let's hear from you, Erv. Barney Hurlbutt occasionally drops us a line from Hawaii. Why not you? If you haven't noticed it, classmates, our Charlie Meyer has been elected Treasurer of the PA Trustees. So you can make out your checks to him in the future. Bud Cross and his wife, Pat, have retired to the north shore of Cape Cod—actually East Dennis. They spend a lot of their time trying to keep the cold north winds out of their house. They have borrowed a motor home and have been in the D.C. and Virginia areas, where their son, Tim, works for the Justice Department.

We have also learned that Bob and M'Apple Reigeluth have returned from an African safari which they claim is the best trip they ever took—in a jeep!! "Smitty" Curtis, who has been commuting from Falmouth to The First National Bank of Boston for many years, is said to be looking forward to quitting the rat race this spring. The Norm Crosses and the Littlefields had a great time in Bermuda in October. It was organized and directed by Bill and Sally. They rented "Take It Easy", a house just down the hill from the Mid-Ocean Club, smack on Tucker's Town Bay. They had ten days of good weather and golf. Littlefield is now reputedly richer; Cross poorer. Cross reports that Pete Carey has also had a Bermuda junket. Long time no hear, "Python". Do drop us a line. In the August 1981 issue I reported that the Crosses went to the Far East and "baby-sat". This Christmas Norm and Sal flew out to Sidney, Australia. His oldest daughter and her family moved there, after producing her fourth child, their sixth grandchild. The Crosses spent a lot of time with them. Then they toured the East and South coasts, including Tasmania.

Here's a bit of news from Ann Cutler Brecheen—"Celebrated 65th (!) birthday with lawyer-child Leigh and marketing-manager Laurie at the Arizona Inn in Tucson. Thinking seriously about trying a move to California after I retire to be closer to the kids, who live together in their L.A. house. Not sure the library can function without me or I without it, but the time is approaching. Meanwhile, I grunt and groan thrice weekly in exercise class and hope this pain is really keeping me "fit". Ann sent me her Christmas letter which I wish space would allow me duplicating. It was very full of joy over the girls' accomplishments and her husband Joel's success on the 70's tennis tournament circuit.

Halloween weekend found the group of Eleanor Johnson DuToit, Barbara Chamberlain MacCready, and Frannie McTernan and Pres Coan together again, this time in Norwalk at Perine's. A party that Saturday night at Ted (PA '35) and Emmy Toohey's in Greenwich was the highlight of the weekend. We enjoyed Sunday brunch at "Tavern on the Green" in Central Park, NYC.

In early December our nephew Philip took over as Commander of Squadron 24 at the Navy Air Base in Jacksonville, FL. A weekend trip to attend the Change of Command ceremony was fun once there, but, oh, the inconveniences of travel these days! It turned out to be quite a Perine family reunion.

Wes and I look forward to getting acquainted with the area around Martinsville, VA as daughter Debbie and family will be moving there April 1. Her husband Jake has already started his new assignment at the Du Pont plant there. This move came just when Debbie was launching a new career as a consultant for "Color Me Beautiful." She has found that women respond enthusiastically to this new approach of choosing a wardrobe.

Hope this column will have news of you in it next time! Please send it to me.

The Editor of the Andover Bulletin has written to all class secretaries with an interesting challenge. The interest lies in a statement "the job....of class secretaries is to keep a class united together and united with PA." The challenge is expressed in a concern that "alumni can be alienated from the school if we project a picture in our columns only of the man in J. Press suit." (Throughout the 20th century, J. Press has had to bear the sins of its customers all the way to the bank. I can't even afford to wear my old suits.)

Getting back to the Editor, Helen Eccles, she is right to push for news from people who have gone into non-traditional jobs. I would also add from people living west of the Hudson. As you may have guessed hard news is weak. I write this on a bleak, zero degree day east of the Hudson in my Rosenberg sweater, Yale Coop corduroy trousers with half my apartment heating system frozen. But I do have a traditional job as many of us now have. I am retired.

News of a non-traditional nature comes from Dick Jordan. He has supervised the publication of a book, Uncle Sid of Yale. Sid Lovett was the beloved chaplain of Yale for many years. One of his prayers included in the book was given at the Andover Bicentennial. Chet Nourse, in a most traditional manner, reports he has retired to Florida and is loving every minute of it in Dunedin-near Clearwater. Loring Reed moves ahead in the grandchild race with No. 5, Louiza Reece. In Loring's October letter announcing our 50th reunion gift in recognition of outstanding service to Andover by Mel Chapin and Fred Stott, my zip was incorrect. It is 06511. This probably explains why I have not heard from so many of you. I recently uncovered some PA '36 memorabilia: (1) a picture of the unbeaten, untied and unscored-on 1935 soccer team—Fred Stott was the goalie, other class starters were Shell Washburn, "Schoolboy" Roe, Ted Day, Howie Mendel, Jack Chakrabandhu and importantly, yours truly, the manager. I made up the schedule, (2) a list of father and sons in PA in the year 1935—the first name was E. A. Willets—1881 from Sewickley—Mike Jennings and I had lunch with him when he was seeing his lower middler son. If Mr. Willets had ever met anyone from the class of 1781, the whole history of Andover was "covered" by one man, (3) a poem in the Mirror by Peter Stericker which opened "Algy met a bear; the bear met Algy; the bear was bulgy; the bulge was Algy." (Specially recommended for grandfathers.)

This year's Yale hockey program has all time individual goalie records: best year save percent and third best career average belong to the late great Harry Holt.

The last Bulletin had a most fitting tribute to Nan Stott when it said "her hospitality welcomed thousands...of alumni and their return to campus." Fred, your classmates everywhere have so many memories of the special warmth Nan always had for us. She will be greatly missed.

It has been said that death is never timely and the publication schedule of the Bulletin makes some reports archaic in addition to being personally regretful. So be it. Ellis Knowles died almost a year before you read this. His wife resides on Purchase Street in Rye, NY 10580. Ellis' friendships, many of which started at Andover, are testimonials to remembrances of contagious good humor and fellowship.

Seen in their J. Press clothes at the Yale-Harvard football game were: Roy Bolton, Mel Chapin, Bill Hart and many others in sheep and wolves clothing.

My goal is a class "united together and united with PA." Will you join me?

45th Reunion

Discussing our imminent 45th Reunion in the November Andover Bulletin, I listed those from PA '37 who had recently attended their Yale 40th—in response to popular demand, I now report that Princeton's 40th last year drew the following members of PA '37: Andrews, Broderick, Burdett, Hartman, Jacobs, Quinby, Robie, Rounds, Tenney and Van Court. Bill Quinby also advised that having retired from Union Carbide in April 1981, he was finding the unaccustomed "free time" to be "agreeably full of projects with no end in sight." He did not make it clear whether the concluding phrase referred to him or to his projects! He did look healthy enough to last forever when I saw him last week! I stand ready to accord Harvard '41 "equal time" upon request.

A number of notes have come applauding Jack Ware on the job he doing for the Andover Alumni Fund, wishing him a speedy recovery from his back problems, or reporting him to be the grandfather of new baby, Jared Benjamin Ware (thanks to son Peter, PA '62, and wife Diane). With applause, I concur, as it is a tough and important job! As for the back, having seen him last week, I can report that he is wearing a little box that looks similar to one of those paging devices doctors wear in hospitals—but this is very different. It's called a LENS and is designed to keep the discomfort under control by the timely delivery of medication. I am pleased to report that it seemed to be doing its job! Joe Machell says he is feeling fine and walking well again after recovering early last year from an operation on his left leg "to correct some old WW II wounds."

Bill Bowne seems to be very busy with Masonic matters: during 1981 was High Priest of his Royal Arch Chapter and is now Illustrious Master of his Council of Cryptic Masons, as well as, Secretary/Treasurer of his Council of Allied Masonic degrees. In addition has been doing some film work and hopes to get to our 45th! I hope he does too!

Lee Fischer is reported to have had a coronary late last year, but as of the turn of the year was hoping to be back to work soon.

Soon after the class news deadline for the November Bulletin, we received bad news about two classmates. Stanley P. James died in May 1980 of cancer. His wife's address is Va. Episcopal School Rd., Lynchburg, VA 24503. John W. Somes died on August 11, 1981, after a long battle with MS. His wife's address is 21 Brimmer St., Brewer, ME 04412. Also we have received word that Richard Osborn, Jr., died on December 16, 1981. He was planning to retire at the end of the year and hoped to attend our 45th. The address of his brother Charles S. Osborn, is 305 E. 40th St., New York, NY 10016. The deep sympathy and best wishes of the Class of 1937 are with the families of these three members of the Class.

Reunion time is here again! Mark the dates June 11-13th on your calendar because this year it's our 45th! Great plans are underway for activities with our Phillips colleagues and we will have our own special Abbot reunion too! Nancy Burns McArdle has invited the class to her home on Central St. in Andover for a special party. In addition, Mary Emily Pettengill Smith-Petersen, our Reunion Chairman, writes from Naples, FL, that she is going to show movies of our class taken by her father during our halcyon days at Abbot!!

Bar Randolph Bowman is hoping to come to reunion all the way from Texas, with her sister Gloria Randolph Glenney, A.A.'41. Bar is still working for the Texas Employment Commission and will probably continue for another year. At present, she has four "grands" with a fifth on the way! Cynthia Holbrook Sumner and husband, Warren, drove North from Florida last August to visit son, Steve, and his wife in their new home near Cleveland. Cyn and Warren expect to fly up to Ohio again at Christmas-time for another visit with them. This time, son, Charles and family will travel from California to join them all over the holidays.

Marge Williams Crothers is going to try for reunion this year if it doesn't conflict with the family's annual trek to Wolfe Island, one of the "Thousand Islands", where Marge has a summer place. Husband, Bill, is semi-retired and works three days a week. Skeeter Ransom Tucker also hopes to make the June reunion if Art's 45th at Dartmouth doesn't fall on the same weekend. Kay Forbush Bass writes from Hilton Head that her granddaughter, Catherine, was accepted at Phillips Andover, Hotchkiss and Exeter, but, alas, has chosen to attend the latter school. Kay hopes to come to reunion if it doesn't interfere with George's 45th at Bow-doin. Betty Inman Kirkpatrick reports that she had a great month in England last spring where she welcomed the arrival of another granddaughter — making eight grandchildren in all. She spent the summer in Nova Scotia renovating Kirk's family home and planting a large vegetable garden. She hopes to spend the winter in Florida playing golf. Received a telephone call from Lillian Seiler Willins just before she and Tom left on their annual trip to Ormond Beach, FL from Maine. Greetings also came from Pri Wonson Hahn. Our class was honored last September when Louise Stevenson Andersen, was chosen to introduce Britta McNemar, the new Headmaster's wife, at the Investiture Dinner held for Donald McNemar in the gym at Phillips Academy. Stevie really did a super job and everyone present was very impressed with her expertise as a public speaker.

Reunion should be fun and I am looking forward to seeing all of you there on the weekend of June 11-13, 1982.

If these notes are a mishmash it is due to the following circumstance: Barbara and I bought a house on a pond in West Hartford (see address above); took four months selling our old house but then did it on a "shotgun" basis, so I'm in a state of disarray due to a quick move. This is almost summer property and with a downstairs bedroom I can sit in a rocking chair and snooze away the years...

From the Alumni Office: John Nute visited the Vineys on a trip to the British Isles. The Nutes moved to a solar house that he designed and had built complete with sauna and whirlpool. (He and I ought to have long futures.) Burt Johnson plans to retire from the USN in the summer after 32 years' duty as a medical officer. He looks forward to the end of constant moving: Diego Garcia/Korea/Lebanon/Iceland/Hawaii. His son Corydon is a Marine Sergeant. Parker Blanchard had added Security Associates, Inc. to his Business Management Consulting Services, the titles of which I hope are self-explanatory. Tom Taplin finished a three-year term on the Alumni Council and works on the Addison Gallery campaign in Colorado. His youngest of four boys is now a senior at Princeton. He has seen Wilhelm and Rising. I had a nice card from Pat Flournoy who has bought a small house in Denver. He has seen Tom whom he describes as living like a king. A most enthusiastic card with a picture of The Garden of the Gods and Pikes Peak...Jack Stevenson reports a two-day golf trip with Fred Kent, Tim Ireland, and Bruce Wilson (Exeter '38). At this point he and Pat appear to have had their second grandchild. I have a newspaper release on Parker Banzhaf who has been appointed by President Reagan to the Selection Committee for White House Fellowships. This allows 15 to 20 young leaders to spend a year in Washington as special assistants to cabinet officers and the like, with hopes of going on to government fields. Parker is president of a realty firm in Sarasota and has a whole series of past offices which I think have been reported on previously.

Larry Viney's Christmas letter is, unfortunately, too long to report in detail. He has taken early retirement and acts as a consultant in book production and publishing. The Vineys are lucky in having all their children within an hour's drive; Vanessa a speech therapist in London; Paul in the art auctioneering business in Cambridge, and Mark in a property development company in Little Gaddesden. Larry is president of the Rugbeian Society (Rugby School) and is the equivalent of an alumni trustee. He reports seeing Messrs. Ireland and Nute.

The last two notes have to deal with the death on October 13, 1981, of Church Davis, one of our more loyal alumni, and although I did not see much of Church I always thought of him as a good friend. I sent a letter on behalf of the class to his widow Jean. He had been in poor health for some time. The obituary reveals a life as involved in his community as he had been at Andover. I had previously reported the death of Tom O'Brien, and by writing a letter got some information on him from his lawyer in Pittsburgh. The lawyer reported having met Tom in 1967, the latter then being involved as director in a half-way house and active in the Penal Committee of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul with which this lawyer, Mr. Carney, was involved. Mr. Carney knew little of the real facts of Tom's life, but did learn that he had been decorated by the British and Americans in WWII, and received a medal from Pope Paul VI for his Penal Committee work. Mr. Carney comes up with the lovely encomium "I have seldom if ever met an individual who so consistently tried his very best to live more for other people than himself and to exemplify by his life the biblical injunction that we love one another."

I haven't time to spoof anyone in this set of notes...

As this is being written the snow lies about six inches deep—the wind chill makes it seem even colder—now is the time for all good people to go to Florida! And a number of us seem to be doing just that —

A note from Marion Lawson Archer who is still holding down the post of Chef on the Paddlewheel Queen in Ft. Lauderdale although Fred is now retired, tells of a trip they had in October to England and Germany where their son, Rob, is stationed with the U.S. Army. They had a chance to visit with a new granddaughter, Megan, whom they saw for the first time. Maddie Proctor Woodward sent her card the day before she was off to Spain and Portugal

(imagine finding time to write a card at that point!). She and Don are living in Newburyport and Don is keeping busy despite retirement with both church and community affairs—Don has just finished a 1 year stint as interim minister at Christ Church in Andover so she has had several occasions to recapture the old days.

Jean Tilton Melby reports from Stuart, FL where she and Stan are enjoying the retired life. They live on their trawler and travel up the Intracoastal Waterway each spring to summer in Marion, MA. They can be reached at the Circle Bay Yacht Club in Stuart. Connie Thurber Prudden writes that she is still running a semi-retirement business—selling lobster bands and banding tools. All four children are married and she has nine grandchildren and as of last fall another was on the way. From May to October she spends weekends on their Grand Banks trawler on Buzzard's Bay. (Maybe a trawler club should be started!) Ginny Thayer Boothby has retired from her position with the College of Marin Co. and says that for the first time in fourteen years she is going to do nothing—says she has no serious plans for the future and just wants to "watch TV and eat bons-bons for awhile anyhow." Hope all was well with her during those terrible storms in that part of the country early this month. She also mentioned that she has one charming grandson who keeps his Grandma jumping.

Midge Coll Fields planned to spend the Christmas holidays in California with her son and family. Midge, Jean Cross Maier and yours truly spent a lovely few days together last spring here in Maryland—we are planning to get together this June up at my house on the Vineyard—(We are planning a "fat farm"—hope to lose weight by reinforcing each other's will power!) Carol Whittemore Fowler has moved back to Springfield, VT after Warren's retirement and is working sporadically on a book. Doll Hudson Biedenharn writes from Monroe, LA, that she and her husband were about to embark on a glamorous trip to the South Pacific, Tahiti to be specific—they both like to snorkel and this is a perfect place for this sport. Their oldest grandson is a freshman at SMU and oldest granddaughter hopes to go to Duke next year.

I have changed the scope of my business and am working out of a home office in a most informal way—mostly doing out-of-print searches. This leaves me free to go to the Vineyard for the summer months and am planning a trip to Florida in February—hope to pick up some news for the next newsletter.

Thanks to you who sent news and please do drop me a note—don't wait for a card—just write!! Best wishes to all of you until next time —

How did you mark the passage of the big 60?

Celebrate? Cry? Pray? Dick Whittington ran the mile in 6 minutes, 51 seconds. Can anyone out there top that?

Received a joyous Christmas letter from Frank and Georgene Campion. Frank writes of himself: "After three years of mysterious larynx problems, doctors finally found an early cancer in my throat, leading to the removal of about a third of my vocal cords. The prognosis is good, my voice whispery but capable of growing stronger with time. I am still with AMA, but now assigned the interesting job of writing a history of U.S. health policy and the AMA's role in it, 1945-80." The future sounds bright indeed. A listing of Campion children finds Kate, an excellent student and swimmer, and Geoff, a crafty left-handed pitcher and golfer, students in New Trier High School. Son Tig is an artist in Boston, where his work appeared in a show last summer of nine outstanding Boston artists sponsored by the Institute of Contemporary Art, and daughter Barry pursues her painting career in Los Angeles, where one of her paintings was recently featured in the Architectural Digest.

A plea for news sent out to ten classmates picked at random brought a rich harvest—indeed, so rich that I may, because of space limitations, have to hold some items over to the next issue of the Bulletin. Entries appear in the order of their receipt. Joe Anderson writes that he and his wife departed New Canaan in 1974 for Hamilton College in New York. Joe had been a vice president in the Dictaphone Corporation; he is now Vice President for Communications and Development at the College. He knows his subject well, being both an alumnus and a former trustee. He just successfully completed a 16 million dollar campaign. If you missed it and want to participate, don't despair—he is now gearing up for another one. He concludes: "Daughter Missy recently gave us our first grandchild. Son Rick is now with Time magazine in LA." He counts his four years at PA as among the "most memorable and best" of his life.

John Blake, since 1961, chief of the History of Medicine Division of the National Library of Medicine, has authored two books, edited five more and written numerous learned articles. We would all agree with the description of John and Jean's children as "very satisfactory progeny". In chronological order: Catherine, a Harvard Law grad, is an assistant U. S. attorney in Baltimore, married to a MD and mother of one child; John has nearly completed his work for a Ph.D. in Ecology at the University of Illinois; Ann teaches English at the International School of Tanzanyika in Dar-Es-Salaam after three years at Robert College in Turkey; and James, Yale Law 1981, is with a law firm in San Francisco.

Dick Besse is not worried about his sixtieth birthday. He explains that he is 61—"I repeated second grade and never caught back up." Whatever, he lives young, indulging in such new excitements as cross country skiing and windsurfing. Furthermore,

Franklin Buchan:

revisiting Pearl Harbor

Franklin Buchan, above, assistant director of Andover's Office of Physical Plant (O.P.P.), looks over a Pearl Harbor scrapbook with pictures of his battleship West Virginia, sunk during the attack 40 years ago. He and his wife, Charlotte, took their Phillips Academy vacations in December to fly to Hawaii for the 40th anniversary of Pearl Harbor Day, which evoked these memories that appeared in the Andover Townsman:

He was, he remembers, "pretty punchy" when the attack began. He had been on duty for almost 24 hours, part of a four-man crew running a motor launch back and forth from the battleship West Virginia to shore. Just one more trip, and he would be off duty for a day.

Five minutes later the Japanese bombed Pearl Harbor.

Navy Coxswain Franklin Buchan and his motor launch crew began picking up survivors, making their way among the eight battleships lined up on "Battleship Row" as shells splashed into the waters around them. "We weren't afraid, not at the time," Buchan says. "We were too busy. After it was over we were scared." None of the launch crew was killed or wounded, but "I woke up the next morning with a beautiful shiner, a black eye — and I never knew how I got it."

Nothing that has happened in Frank Buchan's life since Dec. 7, 1941, can quite compare to that day, he says. . . . When the call to fire and rescue stations sounded, the motor launch crew started back toward their ship. But before they reached it, the call to abandon ship was sounded — and they saw the battleship Arizona explode, the Oklahoma start to roll over, and the men jumping overboard everywhere. The motor launch crew was not sure what to do, Buchan says. . . . "The scene was chaos. So we thought we'd be of more use picking men out of the water than going back to the ship." The attack continued for several minutes as Buchan's launch picked up battleship crewmen, ferrying 25 or 30 at a time to a landing, or to a medical tent on another landing. The harbor was crowded with launches from all of the ships, rescuing men as crews abandoned one ship after another.

Shells were falling all around them — one landed close enough to get the launch crew "well splashed" — and near the ships they were showered with debris, but all Buchan and his mates could think of was the time, he says wryly.

Every two minutes, one of us would ask, 'What time is it?' We knew we would be expected to write a report and explain our actions, why we were not at our regular battle stations," he explains. "We were trying to keep everything in order, so we'd remember where we were and what we were doing every minute." In the end it didn't matter; no report was ever written. The West Virginia ended up "sitting nicely on the bottom" of the harbor, with a hole in its side "that this building would fit into four times," Buchan says, referring to the former Abbot Academy gymnasium, where Phillips' physical plant offices are now located.

His two closest Navy buddies were killed during the attack. . . .

Buchan notes that he was in the war from the moment the United States was drawn into it until the day it ended: "I was there when it started," he says of Pearl Harbor, "and I was in Tokyo for the surrender." In the years between, he was definitely in it, earning seven battle stars for action he saw in the Pacific.

The Buchans are a tradition at Andover. Charlotte Buchan, who keeps track of the alumni's changes of address and work, and names of their spouses and children for the Office of Academy Resources, has been working at the Academy longer than Franklin. Franklin Buchan has been second in command of the Academy's buildings and grounds since 1960, after a stint in the Andover Fire Department following the war. He was hired when no one else could fill the shoes of Bill Buchan, his father. Franklin has more than filled those shoes. Today a smaller work force than 22 years ago takes care of a larger campus, and many more buildings including the "new" Rabbit Pond dorms and everything built since 1960. According to OPP Director Bruce Crawford, Buchan is the problem solver who keeps all the departments of OPP glued together. "If you asked me five words we'd use to describe Franklin," ventures secretary/receptionist Edythe Lyle, who ought to know, "I'd say integrity, sincerity, thoroughness, unflinching manner and a sense of humour."

he reports that those activities are a part of his business and that business in 1981 was great. He gives the credit to his wife Janet, who not only sees to the solvency of the business but also is involved in any number of other good works. He concludes: "Our four children, all in their twenties and in New England, are into history Ph.D. at Yale, forestry, ski industry and computers, respectively and chronologically, but not one into marriage!"

While Annie and I were enjoying a glorious weekend with Tim and Jackie Ireland at their place in Thomasville, GA, I happened on George Oliva, whom I hadn't seen in many years. He looked just as trim and fit as in his Andover days. George reported that the members of his family are well and that his two radio stations, one in Thomasville and the other in Cleveland, are prospering.

I received two items of very sad news just as this column was going into the mails. Our dear friend and distinguished classmate, Hal Chase, died suddenly in January of a heart attack. Hal was a marine officer in World War II, Korea and Viet Nam and by 1974 was a major general and assistant director of the Marine Corps Reserve. A respected professor of political science at the University of Minnesota and author of a number of books and articles in the field of constitutional and public law, he served in Washington as assistant secretary of defense from September 1977 to December 1980. At the time of his death, Hal was in California, having just begun a term as visiting professor at the University of California in San Diego. He is survived by his wife, Bernice, and two sons, Bryce and Eric. The family address is 124 Bedford St. SE, Minneapolis, MN 55414.

A second dear friend and one of the most respected civic leaders in Concord, NH, Bob Pelgren was shot to death on January 22 by two masked gunmen who broke into the Pelgren apartment on St. Thomas, U.S. Virgin Islands. Until his retirement in 1980, Bob was the manager of the Paine Webber office in Concord. He was a Dartmouth graduate, had served as a lieutenant in the Navy during World War II, was a past president of the Rotary Club and the Bow Brook Club, and was active in the work of the Concord Library, Canoe Club and the South Congregational Church. Bob and his wife, Anne, have spent portions of every winter since 1969 on St. Thomas. He is survived by his wife, two daughters, Margaret McLoy and Anne Drinon, and two grandchildren. The family address is 19 Ridge Road, Concord, NH 03301.

A few months ago, an obituary in the New York Times caught my eye. Robert Fair de Graf, publisher and originator of Pocket Books, was Frank Carr's uncle. Some time in upper-middle year, he sent Frank a shipment to try out at PA. I well remember helping Frank 'flog' them at Beanery after dinner. When one of my family asked the then price, I quickly replied: "One dollar". Then it suddenly hit me that they sold for a quarter! Have you bought a paperback lately? "O tempora! O mores!"

We had the pleasure of entertaining Pete and Jane Jennison in early January. Pete, now a retired publisher, still keeps his hand in, and is embarked on a history of his hometown of Woodstock. In late November, we attended the Game at New Haven. Among those "tenting on the old tent ground": Dave Gile, Charlie Larkin, Jack Kubie, Bill Arnold and Bill Wallace—last named back in New Haven after a long spell extracting oil on the Trucial Coast. Bill reports Ted Taussig, who married his sister Elizabeth, is alive and well in Florida. I'm sure many more were there but unfortunately I didn't spot them among the 60,000 in the Yale Bowl.

Two family weddings took us Stateside earlier in the year. In August, son Stephen married Nancy Zeller of Plainfield, NJ in nearby Westfield (a town last visited with Al Goulard, in 1940). Son Patrick was wed to Amanda Groves in New York City in September. We were glad that Dave Gile, Jack Kubie and Gil Twombly were able to be with us. Ran into Butts Macomber at the Yale Club looking as fit as ever and most busy with Metropolitan Museum affairs.

Christmas cards show that Walt Curley and Pres Bush are now members of the class of '40s grand-dad section. Speaking of Pres, it is now official that his hat is in the ring of Connecticut politics. I know we will all be in his corner in his quest for the Senate. Art Petersen advises that he and Ronnie continue their good works with The Compassionate Friends, a self-help organization for bereaved parents, with Art as Executive Director and Ronnie as National Coordinator. Paul Carter has returned to Camden, ME after three years in Texas. I'll bet that right about now he'd rather be in the Sun Belt. Norm Bemis reports that he's enjoying his early retirement except for the angina. In no way does he miss the tumult of the retail trade.

After many a year, it was good to hear from Randy Pratt: "My wife, Flo, has succeeded in getting me interested in my 'roots'. We have made a lot of trips, and learned a lot of American History in the process, as well as met many relatives, both near and far that I didn't know existed. I commend the process to all of us who are or about to be seeing our big 6!" Your scribe set out on a similar project some years ago, only to be advised by the ninety-year old patriarch of the family to "leave them to hell in the Churchyard." Good luck, Randy! Who knows "what mute inglorious Milton here may lie!" Mike Pease to treasurer Malc Donahue: "That wasn't my name you saw on the roster of the Edgartown Golf Club. It was my father's. He's still playing at the age of 98 (Yale '05). Nonetheless, I'd love a game. I have recently taken up the game again after a lapse of 20 years. My number at the Vineyard is 645-2260." There you have an invitation golfers, to labour in the Vineyard against Peases "pere et fils" when you are in that area. I know that all of you would like me to extend our best wishes and support to Don McNemar as he assumes the mantle of Headmaster. Phillips Academy has been fortunate in its leadership and at this time a young and able hand at the helm augers well for the future. As Randy Pratt has said, as we near our "big 6"—Remember that while the forties are the maturity of adolescence, the sixties are the immaturity of old age! Happy Immaturity!

Deadlines are deadly at any time, but especially following the holidays! At this point there is not a great deal of news to relate.

We do have some new grandchildren on the scene. Jo Hartwell Boddington is raving about their new grandson, Henry Hall Westcott Boddington, born March 15, 1981. Mimi Calder Dunn and husband, Jim, passed the babysitter test with their grandson, James Ashley III, in October when they traveled from Garden City, Kansas to Naperville, IL to give the parents a holiday. Unfortunately I was attending a family wedding in Syracuse at the time so missed seeing them. However, a year ago when Mimi was assisting her daughter, Barbara, after James' birth, we did sneak out to lunch together and had a chance to catch up.

Julie Nelson Williams has had a rotten time with her back, poor thing! She was hospitalized for ten days last fall, in traction, followed by weeks of confinement and discomfort. However, by Christmas time she was looking forward to getting up and out for a family reunion. Hope all is well by the time this goes to print, Julie! Frannie Troub Roberts was back in Andover last October for an Alumni Council meeting. Said she tried to contact Miss Sweeney who was not to be found.

Addie Waterhouse MacKay's daughter, Ann, received her Ph.D. last June and is now teaching at Tufts University. Addie and Phil are very pleased and proud and rightfully so. She, too, has joined the grandmother idiot club with the arrival Nov. 11th of Davidson MacKay, born to son, Dave and his wife, Susan. Our two bachelor sons, Bob, from Orlando and Roger, from San Francisco blew in for a surprise reunion in

Nov. What a treat that was!

I look forward to hearing from you after the long, cold days of winter have afforded some time for reading, writing and reminiscing. Please do send your news!

Until next time—my love and good wishes to all. Dorie.

Thanks to our first Reunion mailing and some welcome Christmas cards and notes we have more mail than in recent years. In fact, space limitations require that I hold some news back for our next Bulletin.

A recent release brought news of the appointment of Stuart Butler as president of the Dillingham Company's consolidated mainland construction operations. Stu had joined the company's Simpson division in 1965. While he has been living in Pasadena we note that the newly formed company will be headquartered in San Francisco. After leaving Andover, Stuart graduated from the California Institute of Technology and worked in his hometown of St. Louis before going west. Another note from the coast came from Bob McCarter who is riding out the doldrums in the mortgage banking and real estate business in Los Angeles. All his three children are married and living away from home. Bob and Martha hope to make it back for number 40. He wrote me that Walt Kingsley is alive and well and living in the area with offices at 9777 Wilshire Blvd. in Beverly Hills. When last seen Walt was hosting a party to help Congressman Pete McCloskey in his Senate race against Governor Brown.

Jim Carrington summed up 40 years since Andover in a one-page letter—a masterful job. "After graduation: Fordham, Cornell, Notre Dame (V-6), Naval Academy '48, married Kay Connell from New Jersey. 19 years commissioned service in Navy Supply Corps, retired in '67 with an M.B.A. and 5 children." "Ph.D. Business 1970, faculties of Georgetown, American and George Washington Universities 1967-77 specializing in small business management. Currently, Board Chairman Seasonair, Inc. (Silver Springs, MD) and owner of several small enterprises. Active in squash, tennis and the Republican Party." Jim hopes to make it back for the 40th. He lives at 7506 Ramblewood Court in Annandale, VA. Another prospective Reunion returnee Phil Stewart writes "Semi-retired here in Stuart, FL after nearly 20 years in Texas as a banker and 15 years in Chicago in investment banking. Haven't been to PA since dedication of Science Bldg. (Stewart Bio Wing.) Received a welcome and long Christmas note from Bill and Nancy Bentley from Las Vegas where Bill practices medicine and serves on several agencies including one that reviews standards for hospitals caring for patients covered by federal monies, the Nevada State Board of Health and the Environmental Commission. Nancy manages a group practice of three surgeons and five girls. The letter indicates a large bevy of grown kids with a married daughter in public health nursing in Las Vegas—married to a geologist, a son in internal medicine residency in Los Angeles and two other sons and a daughter all out of college and all in the west.

Nate Cartmell wrote from his new home at 1294 Beech St. in Manchester, NH. Last year his son married a girl he met in law school and both are practicing law in Washington. Daughter Sara was recently admitted to the Yale Medical School while daughter Rachel is at N.Y.U., while another daughter, Leah, continues acting classes and work in New York. Nate is vice president of a local hospital specializing in fund raising and community affairs while Ruth works for New Hampshire Insurance. They will return for number 40. And so will Vern Midgeley and bride still enjoying the good life in the suburbs of Washington. Plagiarized from the Yale Alumni News is the word that Ned Twombly has relocated in Stonington, CT as president of EBT, a manufacturers rep firm in the industrial field. The move puts the Twomblys nearer to their summer home in Martha's Vineyard and within three hours of his former home in Montclair. Ned will return in June. A letter from Frank Parkhurst who is in the insurance business in Wilkes Barre. His oldest son is a vice president of Marsh & McLennan in New York, a second son graduates Lafayette in June and the youngest will get out of Princeton in 1983. Then there are three daughters and two granddaughters. Frank will return in June. Vice President George Bush makes family news as well as political news and again its all good. In June, his youngest son Marvin married Margaret Molster in Richmond, VA. Both are graduates of the University of Virginia. Also during the summer his oldest son, George Jr., was the father of twins. All four of George's sons are married and the vice president now has four grandchildren.

And to everyone else who wrote notes on Reunion cards—thank you—will get more news in the next Bulletin. Stay well—there were no "obits" this time around and that is good news. Let's make number 40 a weekend to remember.

ABBOT

With the 40th Reunion approaching on June 11-13, 1982, many members of the Class of 1942 have news to report. Marilyn Menschik Westaway and her husband, Bob, had another grandchild last August—a girl.

Now they have three, 2 girls and 1 boy, and they are all located in Charlottesville for the grandparents to spoil. Marilyn hopes to see lots of her classmates at the Reunion in June. Elsie Williams Kelly writes that her life, though not exciting, is very happy and healthy. Her family added a new grandson last year and a new daughter-in-law. She and her husband love living in the Wilmington area and would like to hear from classmates who are passing through. Patricia Daniels Hanson and her family have finally moved into their new home and she reports that country living is great. Her daughter, Dawn, was married in August and is now living in Yellow Springs, OH. Husband, Ray, is semi-retired and works three days a week in Seattle, consulting for Kalama Chemical Inc. Her granddaughter, Ali, 4, is a delight. Patricia is still working off and on on her genealogy.

Barbara Sanders Dodman reports that she and her husband have built a lovely new home on Cape Cod. They have a son in Boston, a son in New Jersey and a daughter in San Diego...and no grandchildren as yet. Mary Bertucio Arnold is hoping to return for the 40th Reunion and urges classmates to attend, too. Janet Dwight Nickerson reports that Falmouth, Cape Cod has been her home for 32 years. One married son lives on the Cape, but her other three children are scattered further away, from Oregon to Long Island. She has one grandchild so far and is expecting two this summer. Janet and her husband have traveled extensively. Their two weeks in the People's Republic of China has been their most exciting travel experience to date.

The annual Thanksgiving newsletter (date-line Blacksburg, VA) from Jim Moore and wife Lenna contains a photo of Jim receiving a special citation from the American Institute of Industrial Engineers for "significant accomplishments in the area of facilities planning and design." Also enclosed was an impressive brochure describing PLANAPAK, a software package for facilities planning and design which Moore Productivity Associates has introduced in cooperation with General Electric.

Your peripatetic secretary continues to pursue piscatorial prizes and share his experiences with readers of Outdoor Life, Field and Stream, Sports Afield, Salt Water Sportsman, etc. Locales during '81 included Africa and Ireland. A recent writing award will underwrite a May bash in the Florida Keys. Then Ireland again. John Bonn reports via Christmas card from La Jolla, CA that all is well.

I am sorry to report the death of John Wheelock in an automobile accident on July 13. John lived in Potomac, VA and had retired in 1980 after 30 years as Foreign Service officer with the State Department. He is survived by his wife Anne and three sons.

Joan Holdsworth Maxwell writes that her husband retired from Jet Propulsion Lab last June and they moved out of "smogsville" to be near the ocean. Her eldest son, Jay, is a doctor. Neal lives in Pasadena, Bonnie in Glendale, Chris manages a travel agency and Beth is a freshman at UC, San Diego. Joan is not working at the moment, but hopes to be soon. She would love to see any Abbot alumnae in the San Diego area.

In a memo from the Editor of the Bulletin, Class Secretaries have been urged to "convey news of troubles as well as successes and sometimes it's hard to convince classmates who are marching to a different drummer that their news is important to their classmates." Maybe some of you are holding back on news because you can't claim a new law degree or a dozen grandchildren. The bonds that formed at Abbot are strong and we all do care. Please respond to our postals.

Edith Walker Filliettaz now has five grandchildren (and no law degree). Ruth Goodall Pitstick and husband Virgil plan a year of travel covering the world—starting in Miami and ending in Acton. Their list of 40 cities to be visited in between include London, Loughborough, Ticknall, Tulare, Saskatoon and Sanford. Betty Reid Buzby has weathered a divorce and is continuing to live in New London where she frequently sees Pat Damon Niswander and Hilary Paterson Cleveland '45. Her youngest is now a freshman at Syracuse. A telephone call to Priscilla Stevens Rutherford finally produced news. "One granddaughter and five grandsons" was the headline. She and her physician husband have lived in New Canaan for many years and she is one of twelve members of the Town Council (one of four Dems). Priscilla sounded busy and happy as did Cynthia Holmes Spurr who was also reached by phone. Her husband Gregory is an officer with the Bank of New York and their eldest son is following in father's footsteps with the training program at Manufacturers' Hanover Trust Company in New York. No. 2 son was starting his career on Feb. 1 in real estate after graduating from University of Vermont. Their eldest daughter is a graduate of Skidmore and a nurse in Manhattan. No. 2 daughter is a student at Hartwick and was returning that day from a month's credit-course in bird watching in the Bahamas.

Your Secretary spent last Monday night with Ricky Hinrichsen Stambaugh in Weston, MA. Despite national trends, she is having a successful year in real estate. Her Christmas cards included a note from Shirley Woodams Hoesterey, busy travel agent and new grandmother. The biggest news in Etna is the amount of snow or my 15-year-old son's shoe size—13!

I am writing this at the end of January in the midst of one of the worst winters we've had in Connecticut in years. I shouldn't complain because we hide-bound New Englanders are getting what we bargained for, whereas many of you in usually milder climes have been blindsided badly. I'm ahead of deadline for once because Genie and I are fleeing to St. Marten for a respite.

I'm afraid that bad news is plentiful for this issue. Jim Kohler passed away on September 25th after a brief illness. Toshiko wrote that they had visited PA in October, 1980 and that it was a very sentimental experience because of his abiding affection for the old school. She also enclosed a note to me that he had started but not finished: "Chas.—So nobody talks to you. That's not nice. So I'll talk a little. Just got back from a vacation in Greece (with two of my kids—I always take two for education—and my beautiful wife, Toshiko) to find a note that grandchild No. 10 was born in Germany (that's three there). I think that keeps me well ahead of the pack even though I'm against the population explosion. Retirement in St. Pete is delightful. Three splashes in the pool a day and a canoe paddle up and down the canals..." God Bless you, Jim. Toshiko's address is 4280 13th Lane SE, St. Petersburg, FL 33703.

I was shocked to receive word just before Christmas that Perry Griffith died on December 4th. I called Gerd and she told me that Perry suffered a cerebral hemorrhage during his sleep on November 28 and never regained consciousness. He leaves Gerd, son C. Perry, Jr., and daughter, Wendy. Their address is 499 Forest Blvd., Indianapolis, IN 46240.

Our deepest sympathy goes to both families.

Larry Barss made the news in the Hartford Courant's year-end business review. As chief economist for the New England Council, he was quoted as anticipating that... "the N.E. Region's prospects for a sustained, long term recovery remain more promising than the rest of the nation." I'm all for that, Larry.

Jack Lee also was a lime-lighter recently on TV. I'm not sure that Jack was 100% pleased with all the attention, though. He was being interviewed as the head of the United Technologies division which produces the fuel cells which were being blamed for the delayed launching of the space shuttle. You'd recognize Jack from appearance and voice right away, but he's developed into a pretty smooth article on the spot on TV. I think he could even handle Poynter quite well!! I'm not sure about Porky.

Another regular on TV is Jim Lebenthal, but Jim has to pay for his stuff. He's the spokesman for the family firm, Lebenthal & Co., a well-known N.Y.C. municipal bond firm. Like Jack, he looks much the same after 36 years, and he's a good "communicator."

The New York Times of October 21st had an article on and a picture of Seth Baker. The occasion was his acceptance of the presidency of Reeves Communications Corp. and his resignation as president of ABC Publications division of ABC Broadcasting. The biographical sketch was impressive. Seth had merged a highly successful west coast publishing firm he headed into ABC some years ago.

Lee Bergstrom dropped in to see me a couple of weeks ago and we caught up on old friends. Genie and I weren't able to join the mini-reunion at the Yale-Harvard GAME because of a wave of family houseguests. Bergy reports that a bunch of the regulars including Bert Page, Lou and Joan Kutscher, and Dick and Lulu Welch (I underline the guy to aggravate the ERA types) got together and a good time was had by all. Bergy is a bachelor again and has moved to Southport, CT which is where Lou and Joan live.

Well, that's about all from here now, except for the usual plug for John Blake and the Alumni Fund which will be in high gear as you read this. Hope you'll make a special effort this year as we've lost a number of great classmates who've provided strong support in the past. This winter John Blake was honored by receiving the Silver Anniversary Award from St. Coletta's Day School. "John Blake was our unanimous choice," said the chairman of the board of the school for the handicapped. "He has given us his unlimited support. Without his leadership, we would not be serving 150 handicapped children today." Tom Raleigh writes, "I remain rather busy—have as of 10/1/81 become a member of Price Waterhouse Management Committee, and continue as a partner in charge of Boston office and a member of Policy Board. Also now have responsibility for update New York (Syracuse, Rochester, Buffalo) and the New England offices! Son Tom III (PA '72) graduated from Vanderbilt Law School in May 1979, passed Florida Bar and is practicing in Orlando, FL. Daughter, Nancy, was married on 10/10/81 to John Von Siclan (Princeton '78). Nancy was Princeton '79.

Marvin Minsky '45:

does artificial intelligence scare you?

"Scientists Prove: Man is NOT Part of the Universe!" read the message scrawled on the bulletin board at MIT's Artificial Intelligence Laboratory one day last winter. No explanation of which scientists or what sort of proof was appended, but anyone familiar with the work of A.I. Lab Director Marvin Minsky, '45, would probably bet the family silver that if someone had to test such a theorem, Minsky would be the man: for such is the extraordinary range of his intellectual interests — robotics, linguistics, cognitive development, paradox, music theory — that nothing remotely human (or inhuman, for that matter) seems to fall outside his universe.

Minsky, the Donner Professor of Science at MIT, had a year of polishing at PA after four years at the Bronx High School of Science and before moving on to undergraduate work at Harvard (physics, biology, psychology) and graduate studies at Princeton (mathematics). Along the way he became fascinated with artificial intelligence, a term coined during the late fifties to describe the ability of certain machines to perform "intelligent" functions. It was an embryonic field when he entered it (in 1951, at Harvard, he designed and built an electronic learning machine whose gears were controlled by the surplus gyropilot of a B-24 bomber); today it has evolved to the point where computers reprogram themselves to expand their own capabilities exponentially, a development that causes some human observers to worry that the whole thing may soon get out of hand, as it did with HAL the malevolent, manipulative computer in Stanley Kubrick's "2001: A Space Odyssey." Minsky, who worked as a technical advisor on the film (he designed some of the robot arms) is undaunted.

"HAL is a good example of a program that wasn't sane, that didn't have all the bugs worked out," he says. "You wouldn't put something like that in charge of the planet, but then you wouldn't want to put limits on artificial intelligence, either, for it is evolving just as human intelligence is, and we need its resources. Basic research is neutral: It's presidents deciding they need neutron bombs who are the problem."

Another of Minsky's current passions is robotics. "Industrial robots are too dumb," he insists. "They are not easily programmed to perform commonsense thinking, such as picking up something they've dropped without being told to. Also, the world seems to be stuck in imitating the same design over and over. So we're trying to build softer robotic arms, ones that work more like humans' do."

Minsky's own arms have been known to lead him to the piano in the middle of a conversation about Euclidean geometry or to work side by side with those of his son Henry, with whom he built a computer a couple of years ago (they tried to market their product but failed; Minsky admits he is no businessman). Colleagues and students may not always fathom his style of working, but they respect it.

"I don't think the faculty knew that I refused to give tests, only papers," he laughs, "until that item appeared in a New Yorker profile of me. But they usually let me have my own way. As for the students, there are about a hundred of them connected with the A.I. Lab, but I only supervise the ones who don't need supervision."

Minsky also concedes that his best apprentices are the ones who have rounded themselves educationally.

"Students who have only studied computers don't have the psychological bent to do this kind of work," he says. "The best are the ones who've thought about a whole lot of things. I encourage the others to go off and read philosophy and poetry. That's not exactly the attitude I carried during my year at Andover, but who knows how things would have worked out if I'd gone some other way? Everything that happens to each of us is terribly important, and none of us knows just how or why. If I remember anything about Andover, it is the luminous brilliance of Dudley Fitts and the cheerful courage of Richard Pieters, who, when faced with one of my math problems he couldn't handle, would call all over the country to find me an answer. That was a real eye-opener: learning what a great big world existed out there and how I could tap into it."

His more immediate world includes his wife, Gloria Rudisch, a Boston pediatrician, and their three children, all of whom are in college and all of whom are to one degree or another involved in their father's work, and vice-versa. That suits Minsky fine, for he believes in dealing with the immediate and the familiar.

"I'm working on theories of the psychological function of music right now," says he, "because music's all around us but nobody studies it. That's what Freud and Piaget did: Take things that everybody takes for granted and make them explicable." Including, presumably, the question of whether man is or is not a part of the universe, proof of which is yet to come.

breeze. However, we have enticed the old "Brookline Connection", with Martin Begien, to have a go at it, and I am certain he will discharge his fiduciary functions with skill and dispatch. Congratulations to both and the best of luck.

Bret Doyle, Fred's youngest son, is a lower. Please report all, if any, sons and daughters (grandchildren?) attending or planning to attend. Picked up Andy Thomas '79, Fred Thomas' oldest hitching up the Hill at Hamilton in Jan. snows. Just prior to the Christmas holidays Sheila and I spent a beautiful Sunday in New York with Cy Heard. We started at the Yale Club with a champagne brunch and ended at Rock Center at an International Tuba Concert. Cy is back East on a permanent basis, can be reached at the Yale Club and is taking tuba lessons.

A very nice and informative letter from Bill Currier (a reunion dividend) told of another reunion of the Curriers, Pomeroy's, and Walkers in Sept. of '81 prior to piping the Pomeroy's off to Ireland. 35 years ago the three classmates did a 11,000 mile swing of the U.S. of A. right after graduation. Don Walker is GM of Baird Atomic; Saun is owner of a screw machine business in New Britain, and the Curriers are recent retirees planning a 5-month odyssey of American next summer and fall.

Down on One Bankers Street Plaza, the bells tolled, the Hawkers cried, and the citizens cheered, when it was announced that John D. "the Ripper" Lynch was elected EVP and Chief Investment Officer of J. & W. Seligman & Co., as well as a vp of the Tri-Continental Corporation, the Fund Managers. When Jack isn't wallowing in Wall, he may be found in any one of the many large bunkers of the Sharon Country Club. Jack is a past president of the AA of NY (That's the Andover Alumni Association). Dear Class, It's whale jumping time in Maui and they are lively and numerous today! It's fun to cast a glance at the frolic while reporting to you.

Some news: Dorothy King Garner writes she has retired after teaching piano for twenty-five years in California where she loves it. Dottie has sixty-five fish in a pond, does volunteer work at the local hospital and had a first grandchild in 1981. Ann Hill

Gates lives in Nashville and has been happily married for thirty-two years. Janet Malott Elliot lives in Owensboro, KY. She has a son in Kansas City, a married son in Rochester, NY, a married daughter and grandbaby in Lexington, KY. The Elliot's youngest is a son, twenty-two. In 1981 they had a great visit with Nan Barrett Hibbard and husband in La Jolla and then the Hibbards visited in Owensboro in the fall.

Barbara Graf Robinson's daughter is a resident in obstetrics at Los Angeles County Hospital. My youngest, Leif, attends the U. of Cincinnati and I am planning to have lunch with Barbara. A nice note from Fran Gorham Patton saying she was sorry to miss Reunion last year. Fran lives in Sarasota. Mary Burton Blakney reports she and her husband are grandparents and, "What a wondrous thing to see one's child with his own child!" The Blakneys have two sons in the service, Army and Navy, and one son in a bank in Boston. Sarah Allen Waugh, and Sam, now have three out of five married and are busy with their travel business. Sally and Sam travelled to South Africa and Zimbabwe last year. In January I enjoyed so much having dinner with Mary Howe Brumback and husband, Charlie, Ellen's twin brother. Mary and Charlie moved from Orlando to Chicago last June after Charlie became president of The Chicago Tribune earlier last year. After dinner we attended a program at which Bob Malott, Janet Malott Elliot's brother was the speaker. It was good to see Mary and Charlie who have two sons and a married daughter in Florida and a daughter at Dennison. Now, I'm looking forward to seeing Ellen visit us from Orlando when Chicago weather is kinder.

Back to the humpbacks. They are jumping their hearts out! Love to each one of you. Luty

P.S. One of the nicest times of 1981 was seeing Flo Fryling Willis, Patty Bowne Rickenbacker, Mickey Troub Friedman and Nan Helleg Warren at Reunion and a lovely letter from Miss Hearsey.

Here's a note from Tim Smith: "Little change—serving U.S. Sen. Stafford of Vermont as Professional Staff Member on Labor and Human Resources Committee. Good place to watch as Ship of State changes course. Elder daughter, Mandy, freshman at Connecticut; son, Gregory, and younger daughter, Polly, in D.C. private schools." Warren Brown plans to enter his recently acquired War Baby, formerly Ted Turner's Tecacious, in the Southern Ocean Racing Circuit, one of the premier and most highly competitive yacht racing events going. Good sailing Warren.

Sam Barnes writes: "Am retiring from naval reserve as a Commander, USNR-R, effective 1 Feb. 1982; joined in junior year at Yale during Korean War. I see Pete Ogden every summer (he's President of Union Chapel in Oak Bluffs, Martha's Vineyard and I'm chairman of Prudential Committee). Saw Tom Wyman briefly last July outside the chapel and just before a service in which Rev. Janet Morean of Amherst (Tom's college) was the guest minister." Speaking of Tom, as most of you know, for about two years now, he has been President of CBS, Inc. According to the Manchester Union Leader: "He gave the winter commencement address at the University of New Hampshire on the subject 'The Role of Private Enterprise in Public Education'". Tom's son, Michael, was among the graduating seniors. Tom is also a member of the Presidential Task Force on Private Sector Initiative, a member of the United Negro College Fund, the Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts, the National Executive Service Corps and, of course, a Trustee of Phillips Academy. This from the Yale Alumni Magazine: "A sizable number of our busy classmates take time out to serve Yale on the local level, as well as in the AYA. Many of them also work hard for other local causes. One of them is Iron Mike Suisman, father of five, grandfather, skier, boss of Suisman and Blumenthal, Inc. (metals), and active leader in Hartford civic affairs. He never toots his own horn. "Last June, he got a nice bit of overdue recognition: the Nathan Hale Award from the Yale Club and Scholarship Foundation of Hartford. On hand was Mike's father, Edward A. Suisman, '25, who received the award in 1963."

Bayard and Bea Waring are no longer innkeepers, having sold the Spinning Wheel in Redding, CT and are living by the ocean in Rockport, MA. Bea continues to be active in the Miss American Pageant and Bayard is in the school business, the Waring School in Beverly, MA otherwise known as Ecole Bilingue de Beverly. I spent an evening in Philadelphia at a reception for Don and Brita McNemar, the new Headmaster and First Lady of Andover, two bright and charming people. This was sponsored by the newly formed Andover/Abbot Association of the Delaware Valley. Ted and Louise Carter and Jack and Lee MacWilliams also attended the enjoyable affair along with about eighty-five from other classes. Those of you in the Philadelphia area who didn't make this inaugural affair should take advantage of future offerings. I received, as I'm sure you did also, a letter from Win Allegaert and Steve Goodhue urging our contribution toward a 35th Reunion gift. I hope you respond for the school is certainly worthy and needs our continued help.

Ted Wight's father, Ira W. Wight, '20, made a $5,000 gift in Ted's memory to the Class of '47 Alumni Fund in commemoration of our 35th Reunion. Many of us in '47 fondly recall association with Ted and all of us, I'm sure, appreciate Mr. Wright's thoughtfulness.

Our 35th Reunion will be June 11th through 13th. This will be a fun weekend. Do plan to attend. I'm sure you'll be glad you did.

Christmas always brings news about classmates, but not enough. I was so pleased to hear from Beverly DeCesare Nassar, but no news. Come on, Bev! Let's hear about the family.

Lois Derby Taylor sent a note along with her card. They are still living in three places, her mother's, a Boston condo and their house at the Cape. Her son, Scott, graduated from Harvard Business School and is now working at Johnson and Johnson in Philadelphia. Her daughter, Sandra, graduated from Boston University and is working alongside her Dad in the Student Health Department of the same university. She said they might make it to the 35th Reunion.

Mackie Hall Kernan's card said she might make Reunion, too. Her son, Doug, graduated from Union College and went to work for Lockheed in Sunnyvale, CA and has moved to San Jose. Her son, Les, is joining a law firm in Rochester next summer after his two-year clerkship with the appellate division is over. Her daughter, Connie, is still copywriting for one of their local radio stations. Her daughter, Martha, is a junior in high school. She talked to Mary Emery Barnhill and Buntly Goddard Dickey, but no news about either. Come on Mary and Buntly! We haven't heard from you in years.

I am sorry to have to report the death of one of our classmates, Ann Clemens Brenner, on December 14, 1980. I want to extend to her husband, Ted, the sympathy of the Class of 1947. Her husband may be reached by writing to Ted Brenner, Rte. 3, Fond Du Lac, Wisconsin 54935.

Dick White who is executive vice president of Batten, Barton, Durstine and Osborn in New York City was elected chairman of the firm's Executive Committee last fall. Dick has been with BBD & O since 1955 when he started as an assistant account executive. He subsequently progressed to become head of an account group and then a vice president. In 1963 he was appointed as a management supervisor and elected to the Board of Directors in 1966. He became a senior vice president in 1970 and in 1974 became a member of the agency's Executive Committee of which he is now Chairman. He became an executive vice president in 1966 and is also a director of BBD & O, International. In addition to being a current PA parent, Dick is active in the Yale Alumni Association and many charitable ventures in the New Canaan area. He is also a director of the Madison Square Boys Club in New York City.

Art Contas writes that his business activities still focus on the Boston consulting group and that his community involvements concern principally the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Dick Lindsay's veterinary practice now involves his son, daughter-in-law and son-in-law as associate veterinarians. By the time this is published he will by all expectations be a proud first-time grandfather. Ted Esty is moving toward being a quality circle consultant currently with Hughes Aircraft company but lately consulting to other companies through various workshops. This, he says, is the latest rage in management consulting and he apparently is enjoying the excitement.

Terry Buchanan vacations in virtually every western and European ski resort one can think of for the winter, and last summer toured in Great Britain with a good deal of focus on Shakespeare country and visits the Buchanan clan country near Loch Lomond. He has a son about to enter college on West Coast. Phil and Ann Buckner visited the Buchanans in Glendale early last summer. Bill Engstrom's oldest child is now a Lower at PA and is already an inch taller than Bill. Dan Tucker is doing management consulting in Boston. His latest college graduate and computer-minded daughter appears headed for the business world in one way or another. Bob Diefenbach, Ken Ganem and Mike Hurwitz all joined forces to help celebrate Art Contas' fiftieth birthday last April. Paul McHugh continues to be very active as Professor and Chairman of his department at Johns Hopkins Medical School and Hospital. Dick Conway, M.D. works at least 1,000 hours a week repairing other people's bones in his very extensive orthopedic practice in Salem, MA and works very hard trying to damage his own skeleton in his various equestrian adventures. Dick is an excellent horseman and fortunately has a very understanding and compatible relationship with his mounts.

Hugh Stone writes that the small company for which he worked for 30 years was sold to an exciting new company in 1981. His new responsibilities include Worldwide Operations, which he enjoyed with traveling until a heart attack hit him during an Atlantic crossing. He is now trying to wind down, enjoy his new Martha's Vineyard retreat, and make up for lost time with his wife and eight(!) children.

My last batch of postcards failed to elicit any response from my seemingly bashful classmates. How are we going to know if you don't tell? Share a little—if not the present, how about a little remember when? Remember when we knew it was Friday night because M. K. Lackey wore her green "fish night" dress? Maybe it was because she hoped to change into something swisher for calling hours.

Last November the MacArthur Foundation of Chicago gave Brown University history professor David Edwin Pingree one of its 19 new prize awards. Over the next five years David will receive $236,000 from this news program, whose purpose is "to search for geniuses" and to give them freedom to do their own work without financial worries or other obligations. It is impossible to apply for one of these grants; the MacArthur Foundation, one of the nation's richest, awards them on the basis of nominations from a highly secret search committee. Dave is a classicist, whose training began at PA with Dr. Chase. He won prizes at Andover, too, including the Joseph Cook prize for Homeric translation. He is now a member of Brown's History of Mathematics Department, where he and his colleagues search out, translate and edit ancient scientific manuscripts in Sanskrit, Greek, Latin and Arabic, in an effort to understand how scientific knowledge spread from one ancient culture to another. In the next five years, as a MacArthur Prize Fellow, David will travel in India and Europe, searching for more manuscripts, and press on with his bibliography of the exact sciences in Sanskrit, four volumes of which have already been published.

A headline in the business section of the Washington Post last November reported that "Howard Brennan Johnson Is Leaving Chain With His Name on January 1." Although stepping down as board chairman, president and chief executive, Howard will continue through 1985 as a consultant to the Imperial Group, the company that took over Howard Johnson Co. in June 1980. Howie's father, Howard Deering Johnson, founded the chain, and its 28 flavors, in Quincy, MA in 1925.

Although Howie is leaving the innkeeping business, John E. H. Sherry continues his academic work in that field. Cornell University Press has just published his revised edition of Sherry on The Laws of Innkeepers, and his latest article, The UNIDROIT Draft Convention on the Hotelkeeper's Contract, appeared last year in the Cornell International Law Journal. An associate professor at Cornell's School of Hotel Administration, Jack is now writing a new book on legal aspects of tourism and travel abroad.

From 4442 Kahala Avenue in Honolulu I had Christmas greetings from Dr. and Mrs. Pattison Esmiol. The card's photograph shows Pat and Marion and their two young daughters, Lisa and Kristi, all guarded by the noble dog Flax.

I also have an update on our peripatetic class jazz pianist, Haydn "Eddie" Higgins, who was last heard from in 1980 on his way to Japan for a summer tour performing with jazz musicians there. Now repatriated, Haydn agreed to give concerts at several Massachusetts high schools last September before his annual migration from the Cape to Florida. Concerned that contemporary youth lack an appreciation of jazz, Haydn observed, "If you don't hear it, you can't be aware of it."

Last October at the annual Andover Alumni Council meeting I ran into Chris White (d.b.a. Dr. R.C.A. Weatherley-White), who was visiting his son Matthew, now a senior at PA. Then in January at a reunions committee meeting I saw Frank Lombardi at the Andover Inn with his two PA offspring, Francis, Jr., '83 and Sarah, '82; Frank had come in from Syracuse to organize a birthday dinner for Sarah. At the committee meeting itself I discovered from Bayard Waring, '47, that his brother Philip B. Waring is founder and headmaster of the The Waring School at Prides Crossing, MA. Phil, after a Harvard B.A., a Columbia M.A., and a stint in medical school, taught for five years at St. John's College in Annapolis, MD. After some time teaching in public high schools he organized his own school. "Still dominant in my mind," Phil writes in his school catalogue, "...is the St. John's experience. Math, language, science...and the great works of art, literature, music and philosophy, are the core of their academic curriculum, and of ours."

In the line of duty recently, I had a call from a retired Air Force colonel, now a professor of English at Colorado State University, inquiring about some documents on the Vietnam War. A day or so later it occurred to me that the caller—one John Clark Pratt—and I have known each other for over 30 years. In any event, John is now writing a book, tentatively titled Vietnam Perspectives, for Viking Press, who published his novel Laotian Fragments in 1974. John served in Vietnam and taught at the Air Force Academy before retiring in 1975 to become chairman of the English Department at Colorado State. He has taken sabbatical leave this semester to finish the new book, which will be organized as a collage, using extracts from official documents, newspaper articles, poems, plays, letters, cartoons, etc. to "portray the war and the reaction to it."

Finally, I think all of you will have heard from our new Class Agent, Palmer Y. Epler, and I hope that you will respond generously to his Alumni Fund appeal. But as Pim takes over we should all give three cheers for the splendid job Ed Miller has done; his direction of the 25th Reunion Class Gift campaign was especially masterful and memorable. As Secretary I am grateful to Ed for his dedicated service, and to Pim for taking on this important class appointment.

Parents' weekend at PA, visiting lower (not, as previously reported, upper) daughter, Emily, produced encounters with: Martha and Norm Allenby (visiting son, Bob '83); Jeanne and Chuck Townsend (sons Bob '84 and Bill '83—twins, but one was in a hurry) and Ann and Gordon Douglas (Kitty '84). Gordon, who is in infectious diseases, has moved from Rochester to the faculty at Cornell Med School in NYC. Chuck is with IBM in Woodstock, NY. I had had a long note from Norm earlier, reporting that he relieves the drudgery of civil litigation with backpacking, jogging, tennis, surfing, sailing, skiing and the San Diego Chargers. He reports seeing Hubbard Lynch occasionally at PA activities. Skimming the student face-book, I also spotted Dan Miller's son. Among the more enlightening things that Emily Sr. and I learned during the weekend was that the school intramural soccer competition is played for the honor of displaying during the ensuing year a used piece of plumbing apparatus known as the Thomas J. Regan Bowl. Tom and Gerri were on a recruiting trip, so that we were unable to verify this fascinating bit of trivia.

Bob Burton is now professor of Electrical Engineering and Computer Science at the U. of Colorado. Harry Berkowitz reports on a recent trip to China. Tony Quainton was on the CBS morning news show several weeks ago during some crisis being interviewed about international terrorism. A card from Tony indicated that if Newsweek was to be believed he would be off to Nicaragua in the new year as Ambassador in case you missed the last issue of the Bulletin. A card from Bill Duffy, announces a new law partnership, Greenman, Grossman & Duffy, in Boston. A note from Nat Reed indicates that Frank Yatsu has volunteered to participate in the Class Council and to come back for the 35th.

A card from Blair Behringer, who retired from the Air Force after 26 years, and is in private orthopedic practice in Tuscaloosa, AL. Married with six children, four girls, two boys, ages 16...ten months? Bob Brelsford, after four years at Texas and two in the Army, arrived in California in 1957 and has been there most of the time since. He worked for Standard of California advertising for twenty years, retiring after the second gas crunch practically halted the need for petroleum product ads. Since then he has been trading real estate (he currently has three buildings in San Francisco and one in Texas), spending part of the year in Texas and part in southern California and the rest in San Francisco, which he calls home.

Ev Anderson writes that he has been Professor of Urology at Duke since 1972. Divorced, he has two daughters, Kristin 15 and Reid 11. Since I last saw him (on a lacrosse field in 1954) he finished Duke undergrad and med school, interned at Yale, did his residency at Duke and held fellowships at the University of Washington and Harvard. He also did PA admissions interviewing in Durham for a number of years.

David West called me during a layover at Charlotte International Airport a few weeks ago. He was on his way from woodstoves and winter weather in the mountains around Blacksburg, VA, where he is a professor of biology at VPI, to the rain forests of southern Brazil, where he was to do six weeks of field work in butterfly genetics.

Correspondent Lasley, Jerry K. was prevented from manning his WATS line to gather news for this issue by polyp surgery that left him speechless for the first time in his life. He gets first crack at filling up this space next issue.

At the fall meeting of Class Secretaries and Agents some concern was expressed that, although PA seeks and nurtures diversity, a casual reader of the Bulletin sees mostly a chronicle of the advancement from rung to rung of J. Press-clad lawyers, investment bankers and corporate CEO's who went from PA to Yale to Harvard Law or Business to Boston or New York, and not enough of those who march to a different drummer. Somehow, looking back over this report, terrorism, a ten-month-old child, butterfly genetics, Lasley speechless, and the Thomas J. Regan Bowl do not strike me as being particularly stereotypical. Nevertheless, to address the Alumni Council's concerns I am instituting the Silent Fifties Button-Down Award, to be bestowed in each subsequent column on the classmate reporting the least traditional activity, occupation or accomplishment.

Jill Dickson Dillon wrote a nice letter saying her two daughters are in Junior High and both are tennis and basketball players. Her eight-year-old son, John, was sick the day she wrote me, and she said he was busy with their new Atari 800 Computer. Her husband, John, is senior VP of the American Management Association so commutes to New York City. She is taking data processing courses at a local college besides doing work for Wellesley College Admissions, and the Bergen County Juvenile Judges.

A note from Susan Kimball Wheelock says she is working full time at Harvard Law School helping to run the Program of Instruction for Lawyers, essentially a two-week-seminar continuing legal education for practicing lawyers from all over the U. S. and world. Susan sings with the Boston Chorus Pro Musica; plays a great deal of mixed doubles tennis. Helen, 20, is a junior at Middlebury College, Jamie, 16, is a sophomore at Cambridge School in Weston. All thriving...

Doane Randall Cusco says she remarried three years ago to Jose Manuel Cusco, a Cuban who left Cuba in 1959. He has a language school—teaches 6 languages. Youngest child is 18, and the oldest is 25 with a 2-year-old grandson. Doane says she sees Maria Crane Starcher quite frequently. Since Doane loves winter weather she wishes she could spend 2 weeks a year at a nice resort in central NY. Think she still lives in Longwood, FL. Her postcard was from Orlando. In Anne Bissell Gate's letter she brought us up-to-date. Guess I last saw her at our 20th at Abbot. At that time she was living in Marblehead. Since then they have made a series of changes. Now she said here we are in the beautiful Pacific Northwest, with earthquakes and volcanoes and all the West Coast events that seem suddenly to have moved East. Just before January 1981 her husband was working with Honeywell in Phoenix where they owned a home, and enjoyed the weather. Last winter, Ted, her husband, was offered a nifty opportunity for a fascinating change in Honeywell's Seattle Marketing Operations. He is now the West Coast Financial Mgr.—Anne is now Assistant Director of Personnel at Grange Insurance in Seattle. She said it is a perfect job for me—allowing me an opportunity to be sociable and creative, and challenging me to continue learning. Her responsibilities cover placement, training, and writing (newsletter, handbook, etc). Their children are working. Ginny and Nancy share an apartment in San Francisco. Currently Ginny is a tax accountant at DiGiorgia. She is studying at Villanova nights still determined to earn a law degree. Nancy has just been promoted to credit manager of Patrick & Company Stationers. Both girls were home for Christmas. Son, Allan, just returned from a hitch as a jet mechanic with the Air Force in Bitburg, Germany. He's also in San Francisco, but rather at loose ends doing temporary work and job hunting. They seem to be having fun. Margaret is the only one at home. She is a restaurant hostess, aspiring model and college student.

I'd love to hear from anybody. Have had some nice letters from Lynn Furst Carlson, a Xmas note from Lois Lovejoy Johnson and a long letter awhile ago from Kris Krishnamara Nivatvatvongs in Thailand. She sent some pictures of herself and her handsome sons and lovely home. She is so beautiful! Nancy Bentley Ridings is now a grandmother! Nan had a son Oct. 2nd down in Beaufort, SC. Dave and I were pleased to have our daughters, 3 son-in-laws with us for Thanksgiving weekend this year, along with our grandson, Daniel. It was wonderful to all be together.

I was stunned to hear from the Alumnae office of the death of Sandra Smith Short on October 2, 1981 at Mass. General Hospital in Boston after a seven-year-battle with cancer. She is survived by her husband, Leonard, and four children. Memorial services were held at the New Ipswich, NH Congregational Church. The Class extends its sympathy to her husband and family.

Please drop me a line to keep us up-to-date.

The urgent, quinquennial instinct to migrate to PA's Hill on June 11-13 should be arousing each of us to northeastern (albeit middle-aged) flight, and I hope you and your families are anticipating appropriately the blossoming delight of springtime reunion (as I draft this column in the snowy somnolence of winter).

Any note from David Mattern ("Itchy") Jones is worth quoting in its entirety—but this one especially so: "Eibuh—(and if you will recall, you got that name from me, as did 'Gouch' Gordon and 'Pavo' Scragg)—Most of that which I have to report is unprintable: incarceration in Poland; food poisoning in Russia; escort through Checkpoint "Charlie" into East Berlin at gun point; a month in mainland China. Invite me to teach one of your classics. My experiences in War and Peace are priceless."

Itchy's recollection of his name-creating PA role is appropriate to the news that Don "Gouch" Gordon is now Bradford College's Vice President for College Relations. Discontinuing his educational consultant's work to be VP last fall, Don is responsible for the related activities of Bradford's admissions, development, public relations, and alumni offices.

In a brilliant, imaginative counter to his self-confessed procrastination, Tom Jensen has found a trend-setting, redemptive solution for his silence by sending your scribe copies of the last six years of Jensen family Christmas newsletters! Tom and spouse Cinda have two daughters, Melinda (16) and Holly Ruth (15). Highlights of Jensen adventures include Tom's co-authorship of Land Search and Rescue, the basic Civil Air Patrol Manual, coupled with Tom's work as a criminalist in Bethlehem, PA; Cinda's administrative work for a 140-child day care center, coupled with choral singing and fund-raising for Mt. Holyoke; and recent family excursions to the Southwest and the Carolinas, coupled with a root-finding trip to Minnesota. (Having tested your secretary's editorial skills to the breaking-point, Tom assures us that henceforth, news will come only one year at a time!)

According to U.S. Medicine, Dr. Frederick J. Seil is stressing basic research in his new job as Director of the Office of Regeneration Research Programs for the Veterans Administration. In an interview at his Portland, OR office, Fred outlined the mission of the program as "the study of the mechanisms involved in repair and regrowth of injured nerves, in reorganization of a damaged central nervous system, and in attempts at regeneration of non-nervous tissue, such as muscles and limbs."

A victim of your scribe's atrocious filing system is St. Louis teacher and writer Bob Goodspeed whose new book came out a year ago! Published by Exposition Press, Inc., Smithtown, NY, From Greek to Graffiti—English Words That Survive and Thrive is Bob's scholarly and engaging study of English word derivations from and amalgamations with other languages. Bob's publisher describes the book as appropriate for teachers, students, and those "just plain curious" about the growth of the English language.

To say that we indeed must meet in June would be but the softest of sells ... Eibuh.

CHRISTMAS CARDS. 1981.

I'm looking at the kind of family you'd expect to see in an advertisement for a Bermuda vacation: beautiful, healthy, smiling—returning to the island for their 42nd time! I can't believe I know them. Or that these incredible people have sent me a Christmas card. But they have—first class from Fairfield County with love from Neal and Barbie McCorvie. How can Neal be the president of Glendenning Associates and still look so young? What a picture! The same from the Bixby's, George and Margot—a family portrait. Six young, hardy people. Lots of hair. No stomachs. But, which one is George? Am I the only person who is growing older? Surely George Bixby isn't.

Speaking of not growing older, Dan Hannon is not growing older. I asked him his secret. "Grain," he told me. As far as I'm concerned Dan Hannon just doesn't know how to grow old. A renewal card fell out of the New Yorker around Christmas time and distracted me into reading a profile about a big time movie agent. The story mentioned a future film that was written by our class professor turned detective, Tink Thompson. Don Shapiro sent a card for the Second Annual Vector Real Estate Holiday Festival. I got there in time to see Randy Motland, one of this country's major suppliers of audio visual equipment for education. Randy seems to be running a number of companies in the field. We would have had more time to talk if I hadn't felt compelled to line up for a third helping of pasta. The ballot card for the 25th Reunion Class Marshall at Harvard arrived just before Christmas. It included only four names, but one of them was that of our classmate, Peter Chermayeff. It's a great honor, not unlike some of the others he's received for his contributions to architecture and graphics. If he doesn't get at least one vote I'll know it was fixed.

Reaching up for a "take-one" card promising me untold riches, I caught sight of Peter Capra also riding home on the Madison Avenue bus. He assured me that my Christmas Club investment plan was still safe at his bank and also told me that his wife, Cathy, was (I think) president of the PTA at Hunter, one of New York's finest schools. Lawyer Pete Roe's card mentioned that Joe Shaw was giving the Charles Alexander Robinson Lecture in classics at Brown University some time after Christmas. Joe is a professor at the University of Toronto in the department of Fine Arts and Archaeology. Alice Joseph, the photographer, has sent a Christmas scene. It is a fireplace with stockings. But wait! Isn't that Bill Joseph hanging from the mantle? By God, she's used silhouettes of the whole Joseph family to make up the picture. They're in the stockings; even the andirons. It's a miracle. No wonder her children's books sell like hot cakes.

Return cards with contributions for the Michael Segal Memorial Fund started coming in just after Christmas. I hope you'll be sending them all year.

Pretty soon A.A.'53 is going to be questioned as to the existence of its members—I know you are out there accomplishing SOMETHING. Merely existing would be news from many of you! One 20¢ stamp and a few minutes with a pen has never killed anyone.

From across the sea comes news of "Zoo"—Ann Zuill Williams. She has just moved, into what she terms "our dollhouse." Zoo's father, 89, was due from Bermuda for the holidays as Zoo had lost her mother in the fall and did not want her father alone for Christmas. What a time to be in England—the central heat must have been working overtime! For travelers, Zoo's news address is: Willowdene, Shere Road, West Clandon, Surrey, England.

Ellen Smith went to Montana again last summer for a vacation of horseback riding with cousins and friends—"loved it." Smitty is still teaching in Wellesley, MA although she has recently changed schools. She is spending a good deal of time in CT and fixing up the second floor of her house.

Bets Hitzrot Evans called out of the blue—Ohio Bell was richer at the end! Her oldest daughter is taking a year off from Skidmore to go to school in Colorado. Number two daughter stayed in the mid-west, Wisconsin?, for college, and two girls are still at home. Bets is still involved teaching nature course in the elementary schools in Cincinnati.

Commentary: Those of us who returned to Abbot in 1973 for our 20th Reunion can remember vividly, I am sure, sitting in Davis Hall listening to the two headmasters of Abbot and Andover reason with us for our votes in favor of a merger of the two schools. What would become of the Abbot we knew? I couldn't raise my hand to vote—either way. With the subsequent merger, the majority of Abbot's endowment was added to that of Andover. The exception was one million dollars which was set aside to carry on "Abbot's strong historic interest in higher education."

The Abbot Academy Association was formed in 1973 to oversee the awarding of grants from this fund. Individual faculty projects and improvements in various aspects of the curriculum have been funded each year. Of particular note this fall was the awarding of a grant for $12,750 to "increase student awareness about drug and alcohol abuse." Timely and important. So Abbot is still alive in this unique way; there may be no other school which has a fund of this kind. When it comes to Alumnae giving, this is one way of supporting an Abbot endeavor.

For many, this winter is too long and too cold and too snowy. For the Phalens it means more skiing! The three girls were with us in Vermont for Christmas as was my sister Carol Gaines Roberson '57 and ten-year-old Peter. Even managed to see Jody Bradley Bush '57 briefly one afternoon with her boys. Jackie is a senior at U. Me. in Farmington, engaged, and hoping to go to Simmons Grad. School for her M.A. in Library Science. Ellen is a freshman at Syracuse in their Business School, and Sandy is a junior in high school and on the ski team. HAPPY 1982! SEND NEWS!

At the Fall Alumni Council meeting, I had the good fortune to encounter Hayes Clement, who is a newly-elected member of the Council, and Barron Kidd, a member of longer standing. Barron's also chairman of the Alumni Council Finance Committee. And an unexpected guest showed up on Saturday: Jack High and his charming wife, Martha. Seems they'd left Virginia on a whim, and decided to drive to Andover, which Martha had never seen, and which Jack remembered as a drive of short duration. Eleven hours later, red-eyed and rarin' to sleep, Brer High hove onto the campus. All four of us watched Andover blow an eight-point lead and allow Lawrenceville to tie the game in the final four seconds, 18-18. Maybe it was fitting; it's the last game the two schools will play. When I asked Hayes Clement what was new, he told me he had a son who is a sophomore at Duke, and a daughter in high school. When I pressed him for more, he said, "You must really be hard up for news." I am, I am. So send some.

The public relations department of Chemical Bank in New York City informs me that Duncan C. Smith has been named a senior vice president of the bank. Duncan's deputy general counsel in the Office of the Secretary and General Counsel of the bank. He's also a commuter, spending nights and weekends in Greenwich, CT with wife Carol and their three moppets, Gregory, Gordon and Andrew.

In other financial news, Dave Underwood has been named vice chairman of Underwood Neuhaus & Co. Dave also has been elected a governor of the National Association of Securities Dealers. Dan Woodhead sent a most heartfelt letter a few months ago, saying that he'd had a very positive and lifesaving experience with Alcoholics Anonymous, and offered to give counsel and advice to anyone else who might feel the need of personal support with a drinking problem. Dan's letter helped open my eyes to one of the real functions of this column: to share news and experiences that both inform and enlighten mutual friends. Most times, in columns like these, the news is all positive: moves up the organizational ladder, personal triumphs in avocational or social endeavors, doings and growth of our families. But there are times in all our lives when help and support is needed and welcomed, and I suggest that, if the need arises in your own life, consider offering your support or sharing your difficulty. It is truly amazing to learn what help exists out there, needing only to be asked for.

Mike Harvey, who reminds me of a leaner, tougher, younger Charlton Heston, is now commanding an Aviation Brigade in the 9th Infantry Division at Ft. Lewis, Washington. Last time I saw Mike was a couple of years ago, when he was attending the War College at Newport, RI. He says this new unit is the first one in the U. S. Army, and, so far, the only one. Right now, they're testing the concept, although Mike didn't say exactly what the concept was... Jud Sage retired from the Marine Corps last June, and is pursuing a career as a freelance writer in Washington. Peter Denker has left the financial services firm of Scudder, Stevens & Clark in May 1981 to open Denker & Goodwin, Inc., a firm that manages institutional and individual dollars. He says that D & G is off to an excellent start, although his note came in slightly before interest rates and uncertainty began ping-ponging across the nation's economic table. Peter says he saw John Phillips for lunch not long after he opened his firm.

And a closing note from our former class agent, Ted Probert: "Congrats to Dave MacKenzie for a great job as our class agent!" I'll second that. Anyone who can get $ out of those of us with kids at Andover deserves a hearty hand, and Dave's done it. May I urge all of you who have not yet given to help Dave out and contribute what you can. Andover has some truly exciting and ambitious plans for the years ahead, in terms of composition of the student body, new curriculum development, and student aid programs.

On a personal note, I've opened my own public relations firm in New York City. It carries the imaginative name of McKamy & Partners, Inc., and has the singular distinction of being across the street from Kaufmann Advertising, a firm whose proprietor writes the column just above this one.

I have missed a couple of columns recently, for which I apologize. I'll write if you will...

This column in the issue of November, 1957, began: I might have guessed that last issue's accumulation of news was too good to be true or too true to be good. Anyway...I am happy to announce the first member of the next generation. This past August, Art Kelly became a father...the new addition is not a PA legacy, but this is not for reasons of scholarship; Linda Kelly will probably have as much executive ability as her old daddy.

Foregoing observations on the deterioration of my prose style over 25 years and my inability to foresee a PA student with a name like Linda, I take great pleasure in announcing the first member of the next generation. (I hope you're all taking this better than I am.) On October 20, Justin Robert Nauman was born in Elgin, IL to Robert and Darlene Nauman. We all remember Grampaw...Larry Nauman who has taken grandparenthood in stride. This news was in a Christmas correspondence tucked between Larry and Roberta's trip to Monte Carlo and a planned junket to Rome.

John Daly has moved from the National Commodities Division to head the Money Management Division of E. F. Hutton. And we're still listening. Bob Schaedel reports a busy year with his architectural and real estate pursuits followed by a family cruise along the Maine coast and two weeks in Europe.

Finally an explanation of why it's been so long without news from Tom Vander Ven. He's with the English Department at Indiana University in South Bend and reports that his fifth play, Barcelona, Indiana!, is to be produced. Most playwrights feel the fewer actors who even know they are playwrights, the better. Avoids a lot of hassle, you know. But Tom should be assured that I am above that sort of thing.

Had a pleasant dinner with Jon Weisbuch during a recent trip of his to southern California. So pleasant that we lost track of time and if there had been professionals telling his plane when to take off, Jon would have spent the night at LAX and might be a hare krishna today. Whit Whittlesey has moved to Salt Lake City where he does contract engineering in the process instrumentation field. (Linda Kelly, please call me collect and tell me what that means.) Whit has also established a genealogical research service and would be pleased to be of help to any classmates in search of their roots.

Speaking of the close bonds of classmaturity, look, Tom, I'm told I look Spanish, in a Middle Eastern way, that is. You judge by the pictures I'm sending with the resume. I sometimes work for scale in certain projects, and remember that time in Mr. Peterson's class when you asked me to ...Y.

I received a most welcome letter from my old roommate, Peggy Archer Materne, during the summer, describing her life in Solesmes in northern France. Peggy's husband, Luc, is an engineer, and they have four children: Chantel (15), Olivier (13), Raoul (7), and Emmanuel (4). Peggy, who received her M. A. in French from the Middlebury College Abroad Program and "Licence en anglais" from the University in Lille, teaches English in a secondary school in Solesmes.

Barbara Hurd Toschi also wrote to say she and Gene were getting ready to go off on a long fishing trip to Wyoming and Montana.

Judy found me in England walking at least twenty miles a day studying Victorian architecture with the Victorian Society Summer School. It was a fascinating experience, although wearing on shoe leather. If you are in Washington at the Smithsonian, do visit their shop and look for Mardie Roth Brown's wonderful notepaper and card designs. Hello Everyone: Jim Blackmon who is planning to come back to the Reunion said he will badger Sam Suitt into coming as well... Bill Dial writes from Los Angeles that he is coming back to the Big 25th this June 11-13 with wife, Lynn, and their two daughters,

Kirsten and Karina. Bill has been practicing law for lo these many years, and has just recently opened a new office for his firm in Orange County...Steve Larrabee dropped a line to say that after teaching for 16 years at Milton Academy, he has become the business manager at the Pomfret School, where Grabo Keator is the headmaster. Steve says his new job is fascinating, and I know that Grabo will give you a day or two off in your new capacity. Steve, to return to PA for our Reunion...Speaking of new careers, Scott Brooks tells us that he just opened his own business on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange—and to go with that he got married to the former Miss Laura Eiman last November 28th. Good luck on both counts, Scott...Dick Munich has also made a move! Dick has left Yale Medical School to become an Associate Professor of Clinical Psychology at Cornell Medical School. Dick, I look forward to seeing you this June...Speaking of practicing medicine, Tom Packard is a pediatrician in North Conway, NH, where he has been living since August 1980...Finally, Bill Bayfield writes from Dallas that he is planning to return for the Reunion with his family which includes two daughters. Bill is still with IBM now in the Marketing Training Department and really likes Sunbelt living. Bill, you might try to team up with Bill Babcock and Rube Perin who also live in Dallas to get some discount fares to Boston. I look forward to seeing all of you this June 11-13. Of the 61 members of Abbot's Class of 1957, I thought I'd count, for the record, who talks to us all. This is prompted by a note from Anne Gramkow Deane who complains that she never hears from some old friends and she misses them—namely Lucy Beebe, Dian Dane, Ceci Curry, plus a few unmentionables. Anne has been reminiscing with her yearbook while her children laugh hysterically over "the way we looked." Here's the score: 27 of us report regularly, 20 never at all, and 14 once in a blue moon. The 20 silent ones undoubtedly have their reasons, and just think of the mystery they are creating amongst us inquisitive and chatty classmates. The "NEVERS", who may surface at the Reunion this June are: Sue Rairdon Allen, Mary Wellman Bates, Louisa Lehmann Birch, Lydia Cornwall Bishop, Nancy Cooper Cameron, Cecily Dickson Campbell-Smith (no excuse that she lives in London), Deborah Tillson Capra, Judy Botnick Carmody, Libby Horan Edgerly, Martha Buckley Fahnoe, Ellen Edmonds Fleenor, Marcia Colby Frame, Janet McLean Hunt, Sally Lawrence Kauder, Nancy Davison Miller, Bunny Pearce, Cecily Kemper Shea, Sandra Wiles Tenaglia, Glee Woolredge Wieland, Joan Plowden Younce.

Here is news from those who wrote back: Carol Gaines Roberson is still in Indianapolis, was back in Connecticut during Christmas for her mother's wedding, and planned to ski in Vermont with son, Peter, and her sister Julie's family. Lynne McLaughlin Moughty is looking forward to our Abbot 25th. She found her Wellesley 20th to be an interesting and very supportive experience due to the exchange of life stories by her classmates. She is now working four mornings a week in a pediatrician's office, as well as keeping up with her flower delivering job.

An item from Paula Slifer Zandstra that I fear missed the issue last spring. Son, Michael, was planning to start majoring in engineering at the Univ. of Wisconsin. Tim must now be in 11th grade and Julie in 8th. Paula enjoys her part-time secretarial work at St. Christopher's Episcopal Church in Roseville.

Last summer Penny Holbrook Reid and I got together for a night at her family's place in Maine. Megan and Cindy, who are at Exeter and Andover, were having a good time sailing, buying records and playing the violin which sounded lovely floating across the field. Penny says she is furiously job hunting so she'll have something glamorous to talk about at the Reunion. Ellen Parker reports that The Book of Health, by the American Health Foundation (732pp.), was published in October and she, as Associate Editor, coordinated the material from fifty authors and consultants. She still lives on my favorite street in New York, Central Park West. Wiggs Carter Staniar's son, Scott, is a freshman at Yale and I'm perturbed she has not turned up on my doorstep. She is saving her eyelashes so we can have a pie contest as in the days of Caesar's Gaelic campaigns. I have none left to spare, Wiggs. Barbara Bradley Caswell lives in Darien and, since my son, Ethan, plays Yale hockey at the Darien rink occasionally, I am threatening to invite her to the concession stand for a hot chocolate. She is trying to relax this year after putting in time as chairman of the Council of Darien School Parents (PTA's). Lulu Sulzbacher Cutler lives a stone's throw away in Madison and we are planning to have lunch in New Haven. She is still district manager of Connecticut for Doncaster clothes. Son, Alec's high school football team was playing for the Connecticut Title and I don't know who won.

Nancy Ruhlin Skala wrote that she had a wonderful Christmas with her own family, then travelled to Maine to be with her parents. From Hope Hamilton Pettigrew, her history magazine Cobblestone is thriving, with almost 35,000 circulation in less than two years. Daughter Caroline is 17 and a junior at Suffield Academy (CT). Ann, 15, will probably go to boarding school next fall. Bob is vp of sales for Yankee magazine. Penny Post is ecstatic about her life that began three years ago in Bolinas, CA. "Clean air, beautiful ocean vistas, and a genuine old-fashioned community." She is doing freelance manuscript editing and continuing her research in environmental health. She has talked to Sue Rairdon and is hoping to go hiking with her in Pt. Reyes National Seashore.

Karen Jones got married to Michael Anderson in April '81. She has moved from Denver to Northfield, IL to join him. Mike is director of Medical Communications for G. D. Searle and Co. She has gained two sons, Matt, 12, and Clint, 15, who are into electric guitar and drums. Karen sounds very happy and will keep her hand in at her nursing career, is an advanced competitive tennis player, and keeps active in the church.

I am running out of space so will save my news until I see you all in June. A run through your yearbook will certainly dredge up funny memories. How can you resist seeing how mature and fascinating we've all become? If you need anyone's address write either me or the Alumni Office. 'Till then.

All the best, Dinah.

He saw Frank Hammond, who is back in Cambridge after several years finishing up degrees at Univ. of Arizona. Frank is a very talented cellist.

Chris Kirtz is recently married, on the EPA payroll, and assigned to American U. Institute for Human Development for a year. There he is using his Neura-Linguistic Programming Skills (an incredibly powerful new communication and change technology) and polishing new ones. He will then return to government to motivate, train and develop its executives for higher performance and job satisfaction.

Jon Higgins, wife Rhea and sons, Luke (9) and Niko (6) will be on a 7-month concert tour/research trip to India from Nov. '81 to June '82. He will be on a Senior Research Fellowship from the American Institute of Indian Studies, and plans to give concerts of South Indian vocal music throughout India. This is made possible by a sabbatical leave from his job at Wesleyan U. as Director of the Center for the Arts and Professor of Music. He has been in touch with Grant Brownrigg who is Director of the American Council for the Arts. After leaving GE after 17 years and joining Chrome Crankshaft, Andy Fichthorn has moved to Joy, IL and a 40-acre mini-farm. I received a big article about Bill Hamilton in the Winnetka, IL Talk. Bill, as most of you probably know, has become quite famous for his comic strip The Now Society. They used to run in the LA Times but I guess they couldn't understand the Eastern establishment. Anyway, now Bill is writing plays and was in Winnetka for the opening of his play Plymouth Rock Isn't Pink. The last two words of the title were added by David Merrick when it opened on Broadway. This is Bill's second play and his first novel is now out titled The Love of Rich Women. Good luck, Bill!!!

Yours truly is now in the third seat of a DC-10 shuttling back and forth between Mexico City and Anchorage and wondering how long it is going to be before the gov't destroys the airline industry completely and then nationalizes it like the railroads.

Many thanks to those of you who have written to the school and me—you make my task easier and I am grateful.

From Lenora Colby Salaway comes news of "A new life in 1981!" She is divorced with two children in college and one in high school. While looking for a part-time job, Nora is a volunteer at a local museum as a tour guide. She is "doing lots of watercolors." In North Andover, Jack and Claudia Sandberg Wyllie "have been enjoying a rewarding and interesting experience as host parents for the school year to an AFS student from Rjukan, Norway. He, Harold Eliassen, is a senior at North Andover High School, where our daughter, Allison, is a junior and our son, Glenn, is a freshman." Sally Leavitt Blackburn and family are "still enjoying Southern Virginia, going into our 4th year. Our daughter, Lyn, is a sophomore at Purdue University. Our son, Mike, is a high school senior, interested in Auto Mechanics." Sally hopes to see all of you at our 25th Reunion next year.

From out west in Washington comes news of Ingrid Stahlbrand Kassler. She writes that "the Pacific Northwest has had its worst winter in years. Great fun skiing and sledding, but the locals don't know how to handle snow. I am working part time for husband, Tom, who sells boats. Our business takes us up and down the west coast but we spend most of our time in the San Juan islands. Karl, 13, loves sports, especially basketball. He went to the Sonics summer camp with Jackie Locke Neaville's son, Hank. Jackie and I celebrated our 40th birthdays together. We shared all tidbits of news from old classmates. I am looking forward to returning for our Reunion in 1983." Sally Lawrence Hopkins' daughter, Karen, is at Carleton College this year.

In Flemington, NJ Parry Ellice Adam still has her consignment shop. Husband, Sandy's, "Kiddler Peabody office is growing steadily in spite of the economic outlook." Daughter, "Aubrey is in the 9th grade at the Morristown-Beard school—commutes the 30 miles with father each day, and loves it. Gladden will hopefully join her there next year. Only two different schedules are a real challenge for us!" And, again, from the South comes news of Carolyn Phillips Brown. Her son, John, is a high school senior and "looking at colleges—in the South, unfortunately, rather than his mother's New England). He's been completely immersed in sports at Norfolk Academy, having been captain of the football team—and named again to the Virginia Prep League All Star Team—and now, for the second time, captain of the wrestling team." Katy, 15, "had a wonderful month-long back packing trip out west last summer with a group called 'Wilderness Ventures.' She thinks she might brace Alaska this summer. Brrrrr!" Carolyn continues to teach high school English and especially enjoys a slow remedial group which keeps her busy.

Moving during subzero weather, recently kept Sandra Castle Hull and family busy. "We are known as the 'Crazy Hulls' but it does give our news neighbors something to talk about!" Susie Tidd Augenthaler writes, "What a year—we visited 19 colleges this year. My son, Tom, will go to any one that takes him. I talked to Liz Artz Beim at Christmas. I call her every Christmas. She's fine. We should all start thinking about our 25th."

I know you all will be saddened, as I am, to learn of the deaths of two classmates: Sarah (Tij) Severance Wells on 10/30/81 after a 2-month illness and Bridget Hayes after a long illness on 10/16/81 as was reported in the November Bulletin. Our sympathy to their families.

To hell with politics, pithy comments on the current state of the nation and the world, and such trivia as the latest nuclear power plant incident, or even our collective joy at filling in our 1040s this year compared to last. Let us not dwell on these mere transient aspects of our health and happiness, let us concentrate on the truly needy, sorry, the truly important aspects of our journey: I speak, of course, of our fortieth birthdays, sorry, thirty-ninth birthdays. As I write, most of us have already celebrated our second thirty-ninths, and some of us, including your humble scribe, are rapidly approaching our third thirty-ninth. In order that these events not be celebrated in either vain or solitude, now hear this! You are all hereby instructed to communicate to me in some fashion—pen, pencil, crayon, video or audio tape, floppy disc or canvas are acceptable—the details of your fortieth birthday. These descriptions, properly edited to protect the innocent (read close friends and family) will form one of the backbones of our upcoming 1984 25th Reunion. As of this writing, I have but three such events to report on: Jerry Secundy's wife Donna put on a bash in Pasadena that made the Rose Bowl Committee take notice: after the non-stop drink, eats, entertainment, and other such joys, all done in black tie splendor, one can only ask why was Donna so happy Jerry turned 40? Bill Bell celebrated his by 1) getting a celebratory phone call from Pepper Stuessy, a runner and tax consultant (or should I say tax consultant and then runner) in Boulder, CO, 2) being named Executive Director of the New England Grain and Feed Council, the region's oldest agricultural trade association (!), and 3) "...a number of satisfactions..." which he will elaborate on in his report on the 25th. (The third report is from me: I spent mine raising money for public television...ah well, we all have our crosses to bear.)

Watching Joe Montana at work over the first few weeks of January reminded me of Mike Bassett, from whom Joe could have learned a thing or two, who reports that, on a trip to the Far East, he spent an evening with Tom Stirling and Cuyler and Abby Shaw in Honolulu this fall. Mike has been with Shearson/American Express for a couple of years dealing with investors in, believe it or not, Japan and Holland. Even the State Department doesn't usually move people quite so far apart, though Chris Costanzo is certainly far away, as the first Secretary of the U.S. Embassy in Yaounde, Cameroon, a post he, Margaret and Catherine (10) are enjoying very much. Artie Rogers, back from Kuwait and the United Kingdom for 12 years, is looking after Morgan Guarantee's banking business in the Eastern U.S. John Donovan, an MD torn between California and New England, (but still in the West), reports that Ed Shapiro is a flourishing shrink (or is it a shrinking flourish?) in Boston. Ed reports that not only is he flourishing (he graduated from the Boston Psychoanalytic Institute—now how's that for a 40th birthday present!), but more important, he and Anne (Assistant Prof. of Musicology at Harvard) gave a concert (Anne played, Ed sang) of Scottish Parlor Music at Harvard and Wellesley last year.

Duffy Hughes is still delivering babies in Eugene, OR (though fewer than a few years ago), and enjoying it tremendously; Bill Greenwood, a couple of hundred miles to the north in Seattle, is living in a house designed by his wife Sammy, and is running the Institutional and Corporate Finance Departments of one of the largest investment firms in the Northwest.

Finally, Geoff Martin is working for Consumer Reports, and Bill Frickhoeff is the Director of Corporate Development for Kiwaunee Scientific Equipment in Statesville, NC.

Remember to send me the tales of your fortieth, and to prepare for June, 1984.

It's wonderful clean country living, and I expect to be here another year or so." Located northwest of Sacramento, Wilbur Hot Springs boasts a kerosene lit hotel, naturally hot mineral waters, and a sanctuary from the tempo of life in the 1980s.

Certainly not least, Ed Quattlebaum passed through both northern and southern California at yearend on his way to Sydney, Australia, where he, Ruth, Gus and Hugh will reside for a year on a teaching exchange program with Andover. Alumni dinners featuring the Quattlebaums as guest speakers took place in both San Francisco and Los Angeles. Thom Chirug and Marty Quinn, among many others, appeared at the dinner in San Francisco. Peter Manning, a professor of English at USC and author of a book on Byron, greeted Quats at the reception in L.A.

While the east coast is a frozen wasteland and as the west coast sinks slowly into the sea, I contemplate the Rocky Mountains on a February day. They are covered with snow and reflect a clear blue sky. Whoever said that Denver was a land of ice and snow would be chagrined to watch the tennis players out today.

More news of the class: Ron Floto looked absolutely great last spring, and this fall was elected vice president for Strategic Planning of the Jewel Companies, a supermarket and drugstore chain. Wells Walker is back in New York, having retired from an excellent effort with the Rocky Mountain Magazine. Peter Mott is in finance in New York. Dave Kellogg remains with Citibank, while Dennis Cross, our new Class Agent, dabbles in finance as well. Ned Cabot has moved back to Boston, leaving behind, just south of Denver, Jim Sprague, who is tending the ranch and raising quarter horses.

Frank MacMurray is in great shape and may well be the best tennis player in the class, although he might get some competition from Bill Stewart who, besides hitting the golf ball, keeps up with his racquet games in Cleveland, where he recently won a T-shirt in an open squash tournament. Bill thinks he's still good enough to beat Jack Stroud (if you are reading, Jack, feel free to respond). Jim Durston has been true to his word, and is writing faithfully. Jim is in New York and has joined Warner Communications. If everyone wrote like Jim does, I'd never have to beg again. David Kirk remains in Boston, and boasts about his two-year-old. Dave Murphy is still a mainstay of the Andover community and he, together with Ann, made last June's reunion something special by their selfless contribution of time and effort. Also at the reunion last June were Eric Hansen, who is with IBM, Dan Mahoney, Jim and Juliane Rubin along with some new classmates from Abbot, headed by Loring Low Stevens.

Congratulations to Skip Hewlett, who was married last fall. The next column will include notes and letters from Mike Cohen, Jim Barnes, Landon Carter, Andy Cohen, Steve Hurlbut, Mal King, John Zeisel, Jack Heikkinen, and several others who have written, along with those of you who, I hope, will write after seeing this column. Please remember, everybody who writes is deeply appreciated and, will be reported here. I notice that nobody has sent money. What gives?

The January doldrums must bring out the best in some of you, because I have received lots of news! From Washington, D.C. Karyl Lynn Kopelman Zietz writes that she is still a producer/reporter for German and Austrian television. Among her assignments, she has interviewed Woody Allen for a culture program, covered the space adventures of Voyager and Columbia, and reported on the International Year of the Disabled and nuclear power waste. Sherry Craig Lowe writes that she and her husband and two sons are living in Glastonbury, CT. Her husband is working at Hartford Hospital as a cardio-thoracic vascular surgeon. She is tending the fires at home and is planning to do lots of downhill and cross country skiing this winter.

Persis McClennan has moved from Washington, D.C. to Waltham, MA, where she now works as a staff attorney for the U. S. Army Corps of Engineers. Linda Lynch Smoak reports that she is competing in recreational ice skating competition and has won four gold and one silver medal so far. Linda's son John won third place at the National Championship of Optimist Dingies at Southern Yacht Club in New Orleans. And her husband Bill received a special letter of congratulations from U.S.Y.B.U. for an outstanding junior sailing program at Coral Reef Yacht Club. A family of champions! Andrea Lynch Cole and her family were in Andover for Thanksgiving. Andrea is working with her husband as his book-keeper.

News comes from Sandy Nicholson Booth that she and her family have moved from the smog of Los Angeles to the snows of Spring Valley, NY. Her husband David teaches math at the Green Meadow Waldorf School. Spotty Stringfellow Lyons writes from Dover, NH that business for her and her husband Bill has been "perkling along," with a steady stream of referral accounts coming in each month. "Hard work usually has its rewards," she says. "Hard work nevertheless is undeniably hard work. To use a cliché, though, you reap what you sow." Well said.

Now that I am back in the Boston area, it's easier to ferret out news from those from our class who stuck around. After a twenty (!) year lapse, I played tennis again with Beth Hyde whose game is better than ever. Beth is studying computer technology at Lowell University. Marney Harriman Ives now has a 1 year-old-daughter named Katy. After teaching elementary school for 15 years, Marney sounds as though she is enjoying being a full-time mother. Ann Tevepaugh Mitchell is busy at home as well, does lots of car-pooling, plays the recorder with a group, studies Emerson with a church group, and made babies' stroller suits for Quincy Market last fall. Caroline "Muffet" Marshall is teaching creative thinking/writing, and is in her second year as poet-in-residence at the Children's Hospital in Washington D.C. She has published a volume of poetry and is working on a novel. Sybil Smith Smith and I have been getting together a lot. Sybil works at Wentworth Institute of Technology in Boston as director of their international program and as Affirmative Action Officer. She is also the head of the Abbot Fund and the mother of two wonderful children.

I am reacquainting myself with Boston and except for the horrendous traffic am liking it a lot. Having completed a program at Boston University in Public Communications, I am now doing some free-lance work for a PR agency in Boston, and hoping to land something more permanent in a health related field. For recreation I play tennis and do cross country skiing. My sons Andrew and David have discovered downhill skiing and spend their money before they make it on lift tickets. Life seems full and busy, often quite complex in the middle years. "Oh, where are the simple joys of maidenhood?" Actually they weren't that simple back then either, now that I think of it.

MORE NEWS PLEASE!! Send me your joys... or your woes, be they simple or complicated.

20th Reunion

umn, but I suspect this June 11-13 will rectify the situation. By now you will have received reminders that come June we will have spent twenty post-graduation years and that a suitable and traditional observance of that fact will take place at Andover the second weekend of June. The preliminary plans indicate that between the school's program and the promise of unusually good attendance we should have a super Twentieth Reunion. Plan to be there!

Last fall the secretaries of the reuning classes met at PA to get the ball rolling, and that gathering coincided with a meeting of the Alumni Council. Both Tone Grant, who was planning a move from Nashville to Chicago, and Mo Zukerman, who was recently promoted to managing director at Morgan Stanley in New York, were in attendance; and we had a nice opportunity to visit. Then in January I had a chance to catch up on Jack Fabiano's activities after a follow-up reunion planning meeting as he kindly drove me to Logan Airport in snowy weather. Both Jack and Jay Westcott, his law partner at Hale and Dorr in Boston, are not only playing key roles in our reunion preparations but have also assumed substantial administrative duties at their firm. Hear that Peter and Diane Ware have a new son, Jared Benjamin, born in early December. Dr. Bill Chickering has forsaken the state of Texas to pursue an advanced public health degree at Johns Hopkins in Baltimore.

Don't forget to make plans to be at Andover June 11-13 for a great get-together!

I hope that you are all planning to come to our Reunion which will be held in Andover June 11-13. It will be a wonderful opportunity to catch up with everyone. Until then, we have quite a bit of news, much of it gathered at the December phonothon.

For all of you who have asked the whereabouts of Susie Niebling Hendrie, she is living in Alabama where her husband is teaching at the University and writing. The Hendries spent last year in Mexico, an experience which sounded idyllic. Susie is writing a history of a town in northern Alabama, giving art therapy in a mental hospital and painting. Our class novelist Sally Allen Mandel's second book Quinn will be published by Delacorte this spring. Sally had a daughter, Sarah, in June. Her son, Ben, is seven. Kitty Grant Galatsis wrote to say that she is living in Lexington, MA and has Sarah von der Heyde Richards ('60) and Cynthia Kimball Merriam ('63) as neighbors. Kitty has been active in the Lexington chapter of the American Field Service. The big event in Kitty and Tony's lives was the arrival of their son, Alexander Charles Grant Galatsis "named after a former well known Macedonian" born in March 1981.

Abby von der Heyde Summersgill is using her Rutgers J. D. degree as a lawyer at New England Mutual Life Insurance Company in Boston. The Summersgills and their two sons ages 15 and 11 live in Wellesley. Nancy Hill Lyons is presently on a leave of absence from her teaching position. She is working full time at her own children's clothing and accessories business, an endeavor which she had been pursuing part time for three years. Nancy designs much of the merchandise herself. The Lyons's daughter Elizabeth is four. Also living in the Boston area is Brenda Bradley Dellostritto. Brenda and her husband are in the restaurant business. Their daughter, Susie, is thirteen. Brenda would like to hear from Becky Bartlett Fischer. Linda Swanberg Musser and her family are in the process of building a house on Fisher's Island. Her children Philip and Leila are nine and five respectively. She had a visit from Connie Matthews Macleod and reports that Connie looks marvelous—just the same. Sue Boynton Koerber and family are still living on their farm in New Hampshire. The Koerbbers have three children—two daughters, thirteen and fourteen, and a son, who is ten. In addition to actively farming their land, Sue is the director of a pre-school.

Mary Louise Currier Gagnon and her husband Roger and sons, Dickinson and Jamison, and daughter, Mary Louise, are still living in Newburyport and spending the summers at their house in New Hampshire. Mary Louise sees Carol Laaff Nuttall who also lives in Newburyport. Taffy Corson is working as a landscape architect. Her son and daughter are eleven and thirteen.

As I reflect on these columns, it always surprises me that they move more toward the center of each issue of the Bulletin. Time passes in mysterious ways. Pretty soon, PA '63 will be found at the staple as the centerfold...

Paul Doherty serves as Vice-Consul for the Department of State in Tijuana, Mexico. This continues a long trend of foreign experiences, ranging from Greece, and Iran to Ethiopia. His mail provides both news for my column and stamps for my children. William Rapson practices law in Denver, where he and his wife, Karen, recently became parents of their first child, David, "...a regular, daily joy to both of us." They see quite a lot of John Meck, who heads the legal department of Worldwide Energy Corp. of Denver. John Foster is using a Study Fellowship from the American Council of Learned Societies to conduct a research project on modern intellectual history and to write a book on Vladimir Nabokov. This past fall, he reunited with Dave Rockwood, now of Rhode Island, for a lovely sailing excursion on Narragansett Bay.

Van Hawn and his wife, Liz, now reside in Minnesota with their two children, one of whom has a wicked slap shot, a potential asset to PA hockey with the appropriate scholarship award. Van reports a reunion with John Meck in Denver and a luncheon at his "club." He seems to be prospering in the oil and gas business." Therefore, given two pieces of data, one could reach the conclusion that Worldwide Energy is in the oil and gas business. John, how about a confirmation? Al Chaplin and his wife, Diane, have added a third son to the family tree during the fall of 1981. He is "happily pursuing the private practice of Radiology in St. Louis." An Andover press release detailed the return visit of Paul Monette last November to read his poetry. Prior to moving to California, Paul taught at Milton Academy and PAs Summer Session. Using the Addison Gallery for a poetry reading session sounds like an excellent way to return to the home of our literary roots.

From poems to books... Tracy Kidder has received much critical acclaim for his latest book, The Soul Of A New Machine. During the past holiday season, it was on the Times Best Seller list, earning Tracy a special insightful column in the Book Review Section's "Behind The Best Sellers." Rather than quote the reviews, I will convey my own impressions: it was obviously a labor of love, insightful with a clear style of writing. I learned from, and was challenged by, the book. Read it. His next effort will focus on the problems between developers and conservationists in the West, a project partially funded by the Ford Foundation. James Watt/EPA/ and strip miners—should make an interesting tale. Peter Schulz celebrated his tenth anniversary during December. His daughter Amy attends Horace Mann, while he directs the Correspondent Banking and Syndication Group for CREDIT SUISSE. The Schulz clan returned to his wife's native Sri Lanka for the fourth time, a trip and a country he notes are of rare beauty and excitement.

Rhidian Morgan runs a family business involving timber and cattle. The challenges posed by the "full blast recession in the Northwest" stretch his entrepreneurial skills. In addition, he notes that Barry Seaman has written a book about Chrysler's financial crisis. Any details, Barry? Mea culpa...as can happen, your secretary can exhibit human nature and make a mistake. Dan Hootstein is director of Franchise Development for Orange Julius, the premier international fast food company in shopping malls; it is not a men's clothing chain as erroneously reported here. But, if given the opportunity, we can all still order his product, even if we can't wear it. Dan's address is 125 Gunlock Trace; Roswell, GA 30076—he'd like to hear from ya'll.

I have readjusted to academic life after my twelve month stint with the Federal government; find the policy issues very helpful in classes, et cetera. Have braved the Cleveland winters, which, according to the news, were easier than those of Florida, Atlanta and other southern areas. So, if you're considering a move to the U.S. North Coast, consider Cleveland and the Great Lakes. ...til next time...

A note to Weezie Kase Tackett brought a news-filled letter in response. She has lived in about all sections of the country and is now in Lexington, KY, married with three children, ages 2, 4, and 6 years. Weezie and her husband bought and restored old homes in California for a few years which sounds interesting and now have a Gold, Silver, Coin and Jewelry store. I had a nice chat with Carol Humstone Cosel. She is doing some landscape architect work in NYC and is fine and into a little sailing.

From the west coast, I had news from Eileen Schock Laspa and Susan Archer Vollmer. A nice note from Sue came just after the last Bulletin deadline. After 8 years in Houston, she moved to San Diego in October 1980 and remarried in January 1981. Congratulations Sue! The wedding sounded California style on a boat out of Newport Beach, CA. The ceremony was performed on Newport Bay off John Wayne's home. Ann Harris Ferguson was her attendant, and she lives only a few miles from Sue. Sue loves Southern California she says and works as a personnel manager for NCR Corporation. Eileen Schock Laspa wrote that they had made the move to the country from San Francisco last year and their family, girls 5 and 8-years-old love it. Maybe this is good news to some of us who might wish to or decide to move to the country. Eileen is semi-retired she says and doing volunteer work.

I have really enjoyed writing some personal lines on the news producing postcards and calling and chatting with those of you who live nearby and some old friends that live not so nearby. It's been fun! Bye for now. Have a happy spring and summer. Jackie.

The '64 social event of the winter season came on December 19, in Chapel Hill, NC, when Randy Rhoden wed Anne Steward. Officiating at the ceremony, up from Destin, FL, was Sandy Greene, while Bruce Wylie, from Seattle, and Tom Seligson, from New York, were also in attendance. For Randy, the wedding was a return to the site of his undergraduate years, while his wife is a professional Tar Heel, granddaughter of a former UNC Chancellor and now employed by the state in Washington, D. C., where the couple set up home after a honeymoon at The Homestead. Randy, a vague Erik Estrada lookalike to begin with, underlines the comparison by chasing drug runners in southern Florida as a Justice Department Enforcement lawyer.

Father Greene has earned his title four times over although only wife Gigi accompanied him on the mission to Dean Smith-country. He not only speaks the part, but looks like a friar, according to one report. Why it should seem noteworthy that somebody should seem to be what he actually is is an interesting comment on the fact that the names in this column generally evoke images of 17-year-old preppies.

Speaking of seeming, Bruce Wylie continues as head of the Seattle Mime Troupe, which travels and performs throughout the West. Post-wedding, Bruce traveled this way and looked up Chase Manhattan banker John McCullough for dinner on New York's East Side.

Less on the seeming and more on the observing end is writer Tom Seligson, who has a novel called Doubles coming out this September and another, Kid, scheduled for publication, also by Dell, in 1983. Doubles is about an actor, producer, publisher and lawyer who play tennis together; being a lawyer who plays tennis, I plan to read it very closely for libel. Meanwhile, Tom has won a Writers Guild Award for Kid, which will lead to his writing a screenplay based on the book.

It was good to hear from John Gage, although his message gave no clue to his whereabouts and was a somber one: "...the mistaken belief of the Reagan administration that it has a mandate for nuclear war make it extraordinarily unlikely that the class of '64 will exit this mortal coil with a whimper."

We also received annual updaters from other classmates. Dewey Fulton is into his third year as news editor/hockey defenseman in the Providence suburbs: "latest and greatest rage is high-speed windsurfing." Bruce Edwards is now Associate Professor of Math at the University of Florida: "Santa Banta did a good job!" Doug Everett is Chief of Aerospace Medicine at Luke AFB, outside of Phoenix, and still flies: "will be in a Pacific Ocean ferrying mission when we deliver the Japanese Self Defense Force their first F-15s." Tim Booth, married to Deirdre with year-and-a-half-old daughter Meaghan, visited PA recently on a business trip: "Sure made me feel old, and envious of those halcyon days of sarcasm and stickball."

The good news from Los Angeles is that Randy Elkins was made a partner in the Lawler Felix & Hall law firm, while up in Boston Doug Mansfield has become a member of Chaplin, Casner & Edwards. Back in New York, Chris Mayer was similarly anointed by the prestigious downtown firm of Davis Polk & Warderwell. As a sop to those who think there's too much law, not enough art in these pages, we attended the New York opening of an impressive exhibit of Addison Gallery paintings and ran into private investor Steve Dabney and Tim Fry, who has since moved his corporate legal skills from Columbia Pictures to Warner Home Video.

In the balloting for cutest kids of '64, the winners, based on photographs received this Christmas, are Jun-ichi and Yoko Kondo of Osaka, Japan. Their father Kiyoshi has left his post as associate professor of organic chemistry at Osaka U. to join Oogi Chemical Co. Ltd., a firm begun by his father 25 years ago that produces paints and treatment agents for industrial fiber goods. Kiyoshi would like to start trading with America, and if there is anyone out there in that line of business — maybe Paul Gallagher or Richard Allen? — you can contact him directly or, for a modest finder's fee, through me.

Kiyoshi and Michiko are expecting their third child in February, which puts them one month and one child ahead of Jeff and Ellen Huvelle, who are both still lawyering in our nation's capital.

As I write these notes, three-month-old Serin Swenson Marshall is daintily sucking on her pacifier next to me with the hum of the electric typewriter convincing her that all is right with the world. Her world, although she doesn't pay much attention to it yet, consists mainly of a house we moved into a week after she was born, in the New York suburb of Bronxville, where Bob Wei and I grew up back in the Fifties.

It would be simplistic to attribute the change in my world to my daughter, whose imminence prompted us to buy a house — and car and kerosene heater and commuter ticket — for that change has been creeping up for some time, and 35 has a numerical mid-life ring of its own. But for most of those first 35 years, everything seemed just a little more possible, life consisted more of keeping all options open. There are still plenty of adventures to come, I am sure, but now I sense that my green-ringed ball has struck the stake at one end of the croquet lawn and I am facing in the other direction.

Dr. Susan Almy '64: committed to Third World nutrition

Beneath a blue Brazilian sky, Dr. Susan Almy converses in Portuguese with farmers or with her graduate students over the effects of a dry spell on crops. Anthropologist Almy represents the Rockefeller Foundation at the Federal University of Bahia, Brazil, in its effort to help the University to develop in agriculture, humanities, and the science and to service the surrounding urban and rural areas. Dr. Almy's extension work in the field represents her own sense of mission about nutrition in the Third World.

As a field associate at the Faculties of Economics and Social Sciences in Cruz das Almas, Susan teaches a master's program with other Foundation experts from Canada, Argentina and Mexico. The Outreach Program in the Faculty of Agriculture involves her directly with farmers twice a week. Almy belongs to a cell of American Anthropological Association members with an interdisciplinary approach to agricultural problems: they believe that through understanding the values of a culture, they can win the acceptance of agricultural and nutritional improvements.

Susan Almy experienced her baptism by fire as an anthropological investigator in the summer of 1969 in Guatemala, amidst an imposing landscape of volcanic cones. A Stanford graduate student after four years at Swarthmore, she already was committed to the study of anthropology. She and another student were sent to a Mayan village at the heart of a deep volcanic crater, Lake Atitlan. The arrival of the strangers filled the Indians of the Mayan village with hostility and superstitious dread. Almy recalls that it took gentle persuasion, mostly in the native dialect, and most of their two months before the Indian villagers began to trust her.

She next conducted doctoral research in Africa, in the Meru region on the slopes of Mt. Kenya, learning the Swahili dialect of the Kimeru. She used her strengths in mathematics (Abbot classmates used to call her a mathematical genius) and the aid of a computer to survey the relationship between social organizations and capital innovations in nearly a score of communities, each separate in social structure and agricultural pursuits. Her analysis later showed that most innovations in these communities are introduced by the people from the middle of the social pyramid—not from the top as most social scientists believed. Therefore, Almy concluded, efforts to bring about change are better directed to these innovative "middle" people than to the people in power.

She also saw how irrelevant the local school curriculum was to the needs of the Kimeru living alongside Mt. Kenya. "The students were oriented to get to the University," said Susan, "and were not trained for anything else." Before she left, she tried to gather enough resources to build a small library of books on agriculture for the region. That effort did not succeed, but she did begin and continues to finance the education of local schoolgirls.

With her Stanford doctorate in hand, Dr. Almy headed in 1974 for another imposing landscape — of towering steel and concrete. She spent four years at Rockefeller Foundation headquarters in New York and traveling out to check Foundation-supported projects in various countries. In 1978 she settled in Brazil to combine teaching at the University of Bahia and extension work with farmers.

Brazil presents many challenges. Unlike Kenya, where literacy is encouraged, Susan Almy says farmers in Brazil generally are illiterate. "Of every four children who enter the primary school (grades 1-3) only one moves to second grade where reading begins, and only a few of these go into the city for further education. Poor people have no representation at all, and Brazilian farmers lack formal organizations like the Grange societies of the United States."

As an anthropologist, she is interested in how social organizations work and how people can change them. Specifically, Susan Almy hopes to interest people at the University of Bahia — at the middle of the social pyramid in Brazil — in their local surroundings. "We are eager to help the University develop its own programs and experts who will work with their own people, but we're also helping the farmers who need help now."

She has been travelling extensively to Manila, Hong Kong, Spain, England, Canada and more. Janice Caffray Hajjar has a children's toy business. She and Michael live in Andover with their two daughters from Bogota, Melissa, 5, and Lauren, 3. Susan Almy is an anthropologist with the Rockefeller Foundation teaching agronomy in rural Brazil and continuing her work in Cultural Anthropology. Joan Harney spent two weeks in August hiking in Yosemite and the High Sierras as a break from her job as manager of Public Relations in Capital Markets Division of Morgan Stanley.

Polly Danos Nayak is doing juggling, single parent to daughters, Tara and Sushila, a Ph.D. thesis (MIT) and job hunting. She loves Yarmouth, but is looking forward to moving to a more cosmopolitan area. Gwyneth Walker was in Tampa for the premiere of her Opera Buffet, a comic opera about food. A concert of her works (ed. note: smorgasbord?) will be presented in April in Hartford. Mary Sturgeon Wright's husband, Tilden P. III, is a partner in the law firm of Davis, Cox and Wright. They make their home in Fayetteville, AR with children Jeff, 13, and Robyn, 9. Susan Localio writes from her new home in Burlington, VT where she is working in the School Services Dept. of the Shelburne Museum. She also spends weekends helping sweep chimneys.

Leicia Mahla Marlow still lives in NYC but commutes to Danbury, CT where she works for Union Carbide in the computer area. She's in the book for those of you nearby (or visiting). Cathy Wells Hantzis spent 4 months of 1981 at UC Berkeley finishing her Ph.D. in Philosophy. She still lives in Boston where she is Ass't. Attorney General and Director, Division of Public Charities for the Commonwealth of Mass. Corliss Hewitt Friedrich says she's a struggling advertising director of a 5 publication newspaper group in San Antonio. Her husband is an "over the hill" ex-disc jockey, now a well-paid general manager. She's also a Wellesley Alumnae Admissions Rep.!

Pat Morrill has taken on a new job in the investments department at the Prudential where she's responsible for a billion dollars of fixed income investments and for evaluating new investment opportunities. Amy Johnson is now an assistant professor in Comparative Literature at Queen's College, CUNY. She completed her Ph.D. in that subject at Harvard in June 1980. She was a member of the Society of Fellows in the Humanities of Columbia in General Education (78-80) and in English and Comparative Literature (80-81). Kit Jones Prager's Christmas letter was full of news of landscaping, meetings and travel. Husband, Allan, was off to Peru and Australia while Kit was busy as a board member of a homeowner's group, a community recreation group and the local AAUW as well as a school library volunteer. Alice, 5, and Mark, 2, were busy learning to swim and keeping Kit busy. She and Allan did get a trip to Australia and New Zealand.

Please keep the news coming. Anyone coming this way can find me in the book.

I blew it. There just can't be any excuse. You all may have noticed a dearth of news from your favorite class in the last Bulletin—well, I missed the deadline for which I apologize. That's the bad news—the good news is that I now have a relative mountain of notes to report.

Tom Witherspoon reports that he is getting too old (?) but having fun as father to Thomas III (who will have a brother or sister this spring), husband to Elaine and a partner in the law firm of Gross, Hyde & Williams in Hartford, CT. The legal profession couldn't hold Scott Rogge, so he is now the "grandpa" in the first year medical school classes at Albany (NY) Medical College. Ben Jerman after ten years with PCA International and one-year stint at Cal Berkeley, has started his own business as a builder and developer in Charlotte, NC.

Where have you been Franz Schneider? As it turns out, he is now in San Francisco as president of California Power and Light Corp., building power stations (and hoping, I'm sure that no earthquakes occur) and doing a little sailing. Herb Ogden recently won a write-in election and is now on the Milford (CT) Municipal Budget Committee. Herb recently visited with classmate Jim Lansing, wife Debbie and daughter Sarah (who was one-year-old on March 29). Herb also reports that Larry Davidson, after working for a computer firm in Boston, has been preparing to open an independent school in the area this fall. Bill Bissett is a partner in the Los Angeles law firm of Hughes, Hubbard & Reed in Los Angeles. His wife, Donna, is also a lawyer.

John Jameson writes that to celebrate the conclusion of this pathology residency, he married Patti Squires of Albuquerque and moved to Taos, NM where they live in a "quaint adobe house". John supervises several small laboratories in Joplin, MO managed by Advanced Health Systems. Maureen and Vaho Rebassoo are the proud parents of a son, born last June. Greg Richards is the godfather. Vaho is working at Bell Labs in New Jersey. Jim Grew continues to make his mark in the world of waterskiing, having coached in Sweden and France last summer, running a water ski training camp in Florida in the winter, managing several top U. S. skiers and writing articles for water ski magazines here and abroad. In his spare time, Jim is learning Swedish. Randy Evans, while awaiting the arrival of child number 2, is anxiously looking for Ted McLean to visit in Baltimore and give some "Quick Stick" lacrosse tips to Randy's son Paul. John Whisnant is living in Cambridge, working for Bain & Co., a management consulting firm. John recently saw Skip Comstock at the Boston Racquet Club working up a sweat.

Jim Brenner has moved to Rocks Springs, WY, where he is a carpenter working with a custom home builder in that energy boom area. Jim previously had his own contracting firm in MN and reports that it is a welcome relief to be working for someone else for a change. Another worker of wood is Alba Briggs, recently moved to Marion, MA to pursue a boat building career. Progress is reported to be "slow but positive." Mark Melamed and I keep trying to play some squash here in New York, however our mutual respect for each other's "almost C-level" ability has somehow kept us from meeting.

Pat O'Hern reports that Bob Gang is now with a law firm in Providence, RI, Jim Kilbreth is with Wilmer, Cutler & Pickering in Washington, D.C. and that Ralph Swanson is with Berliner, Cohen & Biagini in San Jose, CA. Dave Herrelko is now stationed in Maryland working for the Air Staff in the Pentagon and with wife Janet wondering at the joy and marvels of watching their three daughters grow up.

I know you have probably gone deep into your pocket this month for Uncle Sam, but if you have not yet contributed to the Alumni Fund, please try to dig a little deeper. All contributions help.

On the top of the news, two birth announcements: From Oregon, weighing 7 lb. 12 oz. is Holly Marie, born November 27 to Karen Swenson. This is Karen's third child, a little sister for her two boys and an extra farm hand for Karen and her husband Jay Shue. And, appropriately, on Labor Day Anne McDermott gave birth to Jane Alexandra Higgins. This is the first child for Anne and her husband, Andy Higgins. The Higgins with baby "Alex" live in Newton, MA.

I received a Christmas card from Katherine Staples, a full-time instructor of English at Austin Community College. She is teaching a variety of courses specializing in professional writing and communication. She is also doing research on American Literature, specifically detective fiction and women's literature. Her husband, Tim O'Leary, is involved in building and investment, which sounds like a good job to have in Texas. Katherine likes Austin, likes her job but misses northern New England. I also received a Christmas card with a handsome family photo from Wendy Treneer Feltman. Decked out in red and green posing in the warm Atlanta climate were Wendy, her son Toby and husband John. When I last spoke to Wendy, at our 15th Reunion, she was a librarian at the Westminster School in Atlanta.

Kathy Abler Harvey is as ever involved in the Chicago community. She is treasurer and chairman of the Finance Committee of the Women's Board of Northwestern Memorial Hospital, chairman of the opening night of the Lyric Opera Ball, doing everything for the Lincoln Park Zoo and I assume saving some time for playing with her husband Julian. I read about Olivia Motch in W Magazine. As Roy Lichtenstein's manager, she was visiting Fort Worth for a Lichtenstein show. If W can be believed, Olivia was quite enthralled with the Fort Worth museum district, to say nothing of their local urban cowboy honky tonks. A nice change from New York and Long Island.

My husband, Luke, and I visited Ellen Huntington Bryant, and her husband and two daughters in Wilmington, DE. All is well with them in spite of being tired of this very cold winter on the East Coast. Let me know what you are doing. ANSWER THOSE CARDS! Until next time ...

In case any classmates have been ice-fishing in Antarctica for the last 6 months or are engaged in another activity which would similarly isolate them from all modern forms of communication, the big news in the Class of '67 is the renaissance of the Rising Storm. We always knew that our classmates' band was the most significant development in modern music since the invention of the electric guitar, but finally, after 15 years, the world is discovering it as well. Articles detailing the new discovery of our preppy rockers have been appearing all over the civilized world. The most notable, of course, was an epic of popular journalism penned by our own Joey Kahn and appearing in the January 1982 Boston Magazine. Joey's article answers all the important questions about the current lives of these former Remnants and tries to explain, as far as is rationally possible, the current rebirth of the popularity of the group. Certainly, our PA musicians appear to be a representative cross-section of Andover 15 years later: Tony Thompson, an attorney with the Justice Department in Washington, D. C.; Rich Weinberg, an instructor in Gastroenterology at the University of Chicago Pritzker School of Medicine; Charlie Rockwell, a ski instructor in Killington, VT; Tom Scheft, Associate Professor of English Literature at North Carolina Central University; Todd Cohen, a journalist in North Carolina; Bob Cohan, a lawyer with the firm of George Michaels & Associates in Boston. Who could foresee that the disc cut 15 years ago for friends and families would now be selling for $300.00 to $500.00 a shot? Who would have guessed that our own mixer musicians would be reuniting for gala concerts at the Rat and Faneuil Hall Marketplace in Boston?

All other news pales in comparison to the tale of these momentous events. Nevertheless, mention should be made of Charlie Dyer "alive and well and living in West Hartford, CT", married and husband and father of two sons. Two sons also seem like a good number to Walt Mintkeski and his wife, Vicki. Walt is a civil engineer in Oregon, but his primary avocation is "bringing about the reality of one earth, one spirit, and one humanity through Creative Initiative Foundation, a non-profit educational foundation, and the Sierra Club." Tom Schiavoni is somewhat behind these two classmates, having only one child, a delightful daughter. Tom is keeping himself busy at a new law practice, having just joined the firm of Fox & Santella.

After the rerising of the Storm, the most important news to members of the Class of '67 should be the forthcoming Reunion June 11th, 12th and 13th, 1982. You all should be making plans to attend what will undoubtedly be an unforgettable event.

The winter in Boston, like that in most of the rest of the country, has been nothing to brag about. Mostly it's been cold and snowy, with long periods of grey sky. It's the kind of weather that may suit people in the country, but it tends to create in us city folk a sense of grimness and claustrophobia.

Occasionally, though, this is relieved. Something just a bit out of the ordinary happens, and it suddenly reminds you that being alive can mean more than worrying about jobs or love affairs, or passing time in the company of your private monotony. A New Year's visit from Alex Van Oss of D.C. altered some of that for me. Along with some local friends, we saw in '82 standing at the edge of Boston Harbor and watching fireworks. Alex is still at National Public Radio, and one of his more interesting recent interviews was with William Burroughs, the author of Naked Lunch. A book Alex left me on Burroughs was, in a certain way, inspiring. Talk about breaking through the monotony.

New Years in New York seems to have been equally collegial. News on the former French House Collective comes via Bill Schink, who, contrary to earlier reports, works for Bankers Trust, not Citibank. Here's Bill's report from the town so tough you have to say it twice: "Jeff Claus was in NYC at Christmastime to see his father-in-law's jazz band play at Michael's Pub (residents of regional backwaters may not know that Woody Allen often plays at Michaels on Monday nights). Jeff is working on his Ph.D. at Cornell in Anthropology, and keeping up with his music — playing in a folk-type group. We were joined by Chris Hardy, in town for the holidays, and Steve Madsen (who lives here). Chris is still in Montana, working for the Forest Service, and has some federal grant scam going. Also playing electric fiddle with some equally eclectic folks. Steve is an associate at Cravath, Swaine & Moore (law firm)." Bill goes on to mention Mark Snelling and Charlie Kitteredge, saying that they are "proud fathers." He makes some obscure reference to "quiet nights in Vermont."

Other news from the Andover universe. Jim Shannon was stopped by Soviet police when trying to leave Moscow. Jim was there on a congressional trip to learn more about refuseniks. His story was in the news, and may even have been reported by newsmen Charles Bennett. I turned on the TV the other night and saw Charles anchoring the evening news program on WGBH, the local public TV station.

News from another of our government employees, H. C. Peterson, who is now a Captain, USMC. H. C. was at Camp Pendleton in CA, and loving it, when the Big Uncle shipped him off to Okinawa for a year. "Not yet married ... Doing some travelling here and there. Apologies to the many I owe letters, but I've forgotten how to write." From other parts of the globe: Jeremy Bluhm was in Africa last fall doing some research for A Beginner's Guide to Ending Hunger, an organ-working on the problem that kills 15-20 million of us each year. In addition to his full-time job for the City of Boston, Jeremy is leading weekend courses on the hunger problem and what can be done about it. One of the people he's working with is another PA grad, Grant Donovan, the younger brother of our own Charlie "Toons" Donovan, now a New Orleans lawyer. Did you know the name "Toons" has stuck (Bluhm claims to have created it) and that everyone in his family still refers to Charlie this way?

I hate to end on a somber note, but I will anyway. No, it's not a death, not yet anyway. Check out the several issues of the New Yorker beginning Feb. 1 for Jonathan Schell's three-part series on nuclear arms and warfare. So far, only the first article has appeared, but this alone is overwhelming. Schell's piece is solid reporting, and let's hope it's read by anyone who dares to speak of "winning" a nuclear war, or of fighting "limited" nuclear battles. The greyest, coldest, worst day of your life would be a paradise compared to what's described in Schell's report.

Please forgive my erratic notes. I received a letter from Wendy Ewald's father saying that Wendy is off to Columbia, South America to work with the children in the mountains and rural areas. (I hope another book comes of it!) This trip is a result of Wendy's earning a Fulbright Scholarship! Gali Hagel was married in December 1980 to Michael Mearls who is at law school with her at Vanderbilt in Nashville. This year she is editor-in-chief of the Vanderbilt Journal of Transnational Law. Jennifer Van Anda Smith had a baby, Alisanne, on March 27, 1981. Carol Loebel Kinzler had a baby girl also, Katherine Diane, born October 6th. (I hope that's 1981 but don't take my word for it!) Beth Samel Fried writes that Ethan will be 15 months old and she's back at work part time. Ethan goes with her! (No telling how old he is now.) Linda Lacouture called me after Christmas and she's still loving Denver. Susan Gurganus Drackett had her first baby, Christopher William, on June 18, 1981. She and her husband are building a passive solar home on their farm in Indiana. We have put solar on ours, Susan! Thanks for all your news. Sandra.

What! The notes were due last week instead of this week? I was ready to pull an all-nighter tomorrow and now the column has to be banged out in my office without the benefit of assorted drugs. So please excuse the thematic flaws.

Today's Wall St. Journal had a Heard on the Street article on the 1982 outlook for the airline industry. It was authored by John Curley, so I called to compliment him on his excellent write-up and insightful summary of, in particular, TWA's dynamic and innovative pricing policies. John is doing fine, having moved to Chicago with his wife Cindy soon after their wedding in May of 1980. John covers transportation for the Journal. Meanwhile Melissa and Norm Selby held a welcoming party in their West Side coop last month for Leca and Chip Boynton. Chip has returned from Brazil to work for the family insurance business in Boston. And the Boyntons returned with a new family member — Charles Irving IV. His first words when he was slapped into the world reportedly were "Center! Center!" and his first cuss word was "Puck!"

Norm Selby has maintained his rapid pace at McKinsey Consulting and is still a recruiting legend back at the Harvard B-School. Fred McClendon is reputedly a member of the crack micro-surgery team at Bellevue Hospital. Jeff Marshall is a member of the NY Bar (Harvard J.D.) and active in entertainment law. He lives in Brooklyn, as does Larry Miller. Harry Steinway is a second-year student at Columbia B-School. And Bill Roth has made the switch, joining one of those prestigious three-comma corporate law firms. And Mark Swanson paid a visit to the city last summer, holding court at the St. Moritz in a smoke-filled room. Mark is an attorney, assistant D.A., and burgeoning Democratic party official back in Red Oak, Iowa. Mark Kelly was there, fresh from another successful private placement. Mark shared a house in East Hampton last summer with Don Celotto, Owen Hearty, and Kevin Doyle. Don is now a partner with his New Haven law firm, and Owen trades federal funds on Wall St. Kevin is editorial director for Men's Wear Magazine and upon returning from a recent trip to Milan he had an unfortunate incident with U.S. Customs involving a pair of brown leather pants. Bill Brenzier is an associate with Dillon, Read.

In a tremendous ceremony held in Emporia, Kansas, Frank Herron was married last mid-July to Kathy Johnson of Minnesota. It was estimated that close to a thousand people turned out for the rites. Frank has been serving as Director of Admissions for the Way College, where everyone's major is christianity. Nancy and Bill Hudson had a baby boy last year. They live in Ross, CA which is one of those Marin county communities. Joe Zager is assistant administrator at the Grand Strand General Hospital in Myrtle Beach, SC. Robert Carington is still with IBM in Hagerstown, MD. He urges visitors to the D. C. area to give a call. George Rutherford writes that he is a Baltimore lawyer, but hasn't seen Carington in 8 years. Another resident of Maryland (Severna Park) is Tom Bonnett, and I'd like to hear something about Tom. Craig Nordeen lives in Waterloo, Iowa and works for John Deere. He has been helping Andover by interviewing prospective applicants in the Des Moines area. (This is a thoroughly enjoyable experience and I recommend it to everyone, especially those classmates living in areas where Andover doesn't normally recruit. If interested, contact Deke DiClemente at Andover).

Now for the squash angle. During a city league match up at Columbia Presbyterian Hospital, I met up with Peter Cahill, now a medical student at Columbia. Peter played semi-pro hockey for several years with a farm team for the Philadelphia Flyers, but is now an excellent squash player. And I'm sure we all recognize long ago that he'd be a superlative brain surgeon. A letter arrived from John O'Neill, all the way from Portland, OR where John is a stockbroker with Dean, Whitter. I had always wondered what became of Mr. O'Neill so this letter was a real pleasure. He sometimes sees Mort Bishop, our other representative from the Pacific northwest. But to get back to the point, John has been playing a lot of squash, the perfect game for rainy weather. Bob McNitt lives in Brighton and attends B.U. for a computer science degree. He's still an active climber. Dick Kendall is an assistant U.S. Attorney in Los Angeles. (Another squash aficionado.) Ken Colburn is an associate at First Boston, where I think he worked on the Chrysler package. Ken wrote some time ago that he saw Frank Crowley, who is still with Macy's in San Francisco, and that he vacations with Wendy and Jim Cahill in Boothbay Harbor, ME. Rick White is at the Tuck School of Management. And Don Weinberg has finally entered the study of law at the Catholic University in D. C. Esther and David Short live near Northampton, MA. He is president of the Amherst Woodworking and Supply Co. Stephen Blum is now a manager in the Merger and Acquisitions Dept. at Peat, Marwick. His wife Nancy is also a CPA. Steve is one of the few people in business these days who agree that the current merger frenzy is not well thought-out, nor necessarily in the economy's best interests. Geri and Andy Wexler love the North Country near south Burlington, VT. Andy's a resident in surgery at the Medical Center Hospital of Vermont.

Peter McCallum was recently sent by his company to a 3-month executive training course at Harvard B-School. But more importantly, he also visited with Nick Leone in Hollywood, FL. Nick runs a Medical Personnel Company. He and his girlfriend Candy took Peter to places like Delray Beach and Nick's father, ex-Cleveland Brown, was non-stop entertainment. Thanks for bearing with me during this past troubled year. Upcoming features include transcripts of the Cahill-Richards tapes (courtesy CaBall Productions) which were only recently ordered released by the Massachusetts Supreme Court from the Andover archives. Also, we will have the first nominees to the Dor Weinberg Alumni Fund Honor Roll — men who have given for a minimum of ten straight years...

Hello Class of 1970!

Greetings from the snowed in backwoods of Southern Connecticut! At 0 degrees and about two feet of snow — it's really delightful outside. Well, there's not a lot of news to report but here goes: Maura Markley Pollak sent her Christmas greetings and reported that she and Michael and Zak have moved to Tulsa, OK and are now living in their first house. Maura has had an article accepted for publication in Mother's Manual magazine. The article is entitled Are You Finished In The Kitchen, Dear?—ten tasks for two-year-olds in the kitchen. Maura adds, "If they like that, wait until I hit them with ten tasks for two-year-olds in the bathroom, garage, backyard, etc." Lynn Waller Stellingsma writes that she and her family are now "in" (their) new nest" and says that it's wonderful to be settled. Lynn's children are now four and six. Lynn is keeping busy in Rock Hill—she's a Brownie Scout leader and is participating on the board of the Parent Teachers Association. Christina Steele I'm sure reached all of you with her request for alumnae giving. In case she didn't get to add a personal note to each of you—here's the scoop on Chris. Chris has become the "guru" on word games, having recently been promoted to Product Manager on Parker Brothers Word and Card games. Boggle is one of Chris's numerous games. In her spare time, when Chris isn't playing games she's skiing, having joined a ski house in Vermont with a number of friends. Chris added that she had been to England this past fall and that she had visited Priss Sandford (now married). Prissi is well and is living in a lovely home near Windsor Castle.

I hate to say it but that's it. Hope the spring has arrived by the time you read this—that means that I will have been able to finally get out from under the snow drifts. Hope to hear from you all soon. Our next guest writer will be an alumnae from the West Coast—but I'll wait for you to read it in the next article. Ahh—nothing like a little suspense to ensure readership — and participation?

Doonesbury cartoons notwithstanding, Andover grads are a diverse group, with years there our only common thread. It is my strong feeling that this column should serve as a conduit for ideas and experiences, instead of just a social record or career report card.

A one paragraph statement does little justice to your old friends about life on the "outside" after ten years! Many of you are intensely involved in your careers: where lies the fascination? What's important to you, a decade after the blossom of youthful idealism? I ask these questions to suggest that you speak, not only of what you are doing, but what you are thinking. There is no need to be sketchy: and details, as well as the thrust of your life, would add to ties between us, and with the school. Having recently acted dramatically on my own convictions, I hope to hear from those who have "taken the path less traveled by."

Onward and upward. Bill Enwright's wife Carissa wrote on their Christmas card that she has stopped working to devote all her time to their new child. Bill is working in real estate development, but is in search of additional challenges and responsibilities and may make a shift.

I saw Gil Caffray and Walter "Bongo Boots" Haydock at the Princeton-Harvard football game last fall. (Shows how timely my info is: this being written in Jan.) They both work in the securities biz in New York City, and it apparently agrees with them.

Received a newspaper article with picture of Steve Lindsay. He and his wife Lise Becu, both sculptors, and their daughter, live in St. George, ME. He has been active in many exhibitions in Maine and New York, his work described as "representational, ranging from portraits to gargoyles." He works on a commission basis, and shows at the Gallery Shop in Camden, ME, and Harbor Gallery, Cold Spring Harbor, Long Island.

Got a Christmas card from Sam Walker and his wife, June. He is pilot and executive officer of an aviation group at Hunter Field in Savannah, GA. He writes that Stan Livingston is finishing up med school in the mid-west. Speak to us, Stan.

Dr. Paul Sternberg is a resident in ophthalmology at Wilmer Eye Institute at Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore. He will sub-specialize in vitreous and retinal surgery. He ran into Doug Buxton at the American Academy of Ophthalmology in Atlanta. An anonymous report states that Doug is doing original research on the vision enhancing effects of constant watching of "Charlie's Angels."

Bob Weschler writes that he spent the last year teaching English in Tokyo. After a visit to the states, he returns for another year.

If in writing you would like your current address published in the class notes, please include it in any correspondence, and so indicate.

I hope to hear soon from many of you otherwise incognito for so long. Peter Eden, Mike Jones, Buzz Olson, and Fred Waterman, where are you going, and where have you been?

It is gratifying to see a slow increase in correspondence from class members. Take time out from your next yogurt break to send a few morsels of news, from which I feed the insatiable maw of the Bulletin. Non Sibi...

Hello everyone! This is the official changing of the guard. Sandy Rollins is probably sitting at home tonight pining for her old post as Class Secretary as I race against the deadline to keep you all informed. Mary McCabe, who as usual did some independent newsgathering, has fortunately lived to tell the tale of her crash landing in Boston Harbor aboard the ill-fated World Airways (?waterways) DC-10. Search and rescue, and her descent of the bell-tower, apparently prepared her for her swim (in sheepskin coat and all) in the dark and icy water.

Mary tells me that Selma Hershfield has a wonderful new job in law as an estate planner. Nancy Cohen is living in NYC, in a giant loft, working for an organization that somehow combines real estate and the public sector. Nancy and Manhattan were made for each other, and she's enjoying the city all the more for her two-year exile in Albuquerque.

Debbie Huntington has become a homeowner—she is renovating an old house in Park Slope, Brooklyn, and loves having a neighborhood of her own. Caitlin Owen Bunker gets the award for newsiest postcard—she attended Dori Streett's marriage to David Mention on Oct. 10 in Searsport, ME. Abby Johnson, Abbie Owen Read and ('73) Cait were bridesmaids/matrons, as was Dory's sister, Beatriz McConnie Strohmeier and family and Sandy Rollins also helped celebrate. Dori and David are now living in Barrington, NH while David attends UNH. Cait is still on Matinicus, in Maine, "with my lobsterfisherman husband, Vance, our new house, and my little farm..."

Sarah Gay Stackhouse writes that she and Charlie are now living in Boston, where Charlie is doing his third year of residency. They'll be moving back to Dori Streett's ville (Cooperstown, NY) for his final 2 years in July. They're the happy parents of Sarah Gay Stackhouse (Jr.?) known as Sally, born March 18, 1981. Also living in Boston is Carol Kennedy McCarthy. She and David had a baby girl in June—Maeva Linora—and Carol continues work as a part-time graphic designer with a composition house. Brownie Richards Tully is now a vice-president at Grey Advertising in NYC. She writes: "I've joined the ranks of commuter. We are living in a gardener's cottage out on Long Island and enjoying the weekends but fighting the crowds in and out of the city during the week..." Nancy Phillips Peoples invites "All our classmates to our humble abode...I live close to Orlando and Disney!!" Her address: 420 Wilderness Drive, Longwood, FL 32750.

Abby Johnson is living in Carson City, NV, and is working for a citizen action organization. Peggy Partridge Johnson and husband, Rich, had a son, Nathaniel Read, born 6/4/81. Rich works in mine land reclamation, and they're living in Ft. Collins, CO. Franческа Moulton Miller (we all knew her as Candy!) writes from Menlo Park, CA—she has a 3-year-old girl and a year old boy (there's certainly been a recent population explosion for Class of '71 offspring!) and has become obsessed with ice-skating. She teaches cardio-pulmonary resuscitation in the community, and is about to break into the graphic arts field.

That's about it for the facts. Joel and I have just moved to Belmont; I'm about half way through my residency in Psychiatry at McLean Hospital and Joel is closer to finishing his residency in general medicine. We now have lots of space, and visitors are more than welcome. Keep the cards and letters coming—let's hear about some of the longer-lost members of our class. Mary Anna

Call me Persichetti.

In the spring of this year (June 11-13) some of us will voyage to the Hill to reunite. I'm writing this on the last day of January; finally we've had a thaw. Hopefully you will be reading this in April, already having received your Reunion Reservation cards. Fill them out! Return for a weekend to the innocence of Youth! Ah, Wilderness!

I'm also supposed to hit you guys up for money today. Consider yourselves hit. Even I give, for chrissake. As a class we had some good showings seven or eight years ago, but Bill Pruden tells me that lately we've been falling off. I talked to Bill back in December—he's found that he really enjoys teaching. He's put in ten solid years as Class Agent, for which he deserves the appreciation of the entire class. Come the Reunion he plans to retire to a condo in Palm Springs. We will of course present him with a gold watch and a one-way bus ticket. Meanwhile I'm interviewing for his successor. Elections, as usual, to be held at the Reunion.

I received a nice letter from Tom Brown. He's left Boston, where he was working for a restaurant chain, and moved to Sewickley, PA with his wife and large, deer-chasing labrador. Now he works in Pittsburgh as the assistant to the Chairman of Ketchum International, in advertising and PR. He also wants to be remembered to Spurgeon. Tad—remember? I know you read this column, Tad, so don't play shy. "Shaps" Shapiro, in his last year at med school headed toward pediatrics, wants to know where Jon Himmelfarb, George Church, Jim Martin, Brian Chagnot, and Mike Costin are. For Chagnot and Costin I refer Shaps to the class notes of 8/80—Ferrisburgh, VT. George was in Cambridge as of three years ago. The others ... ? Frank Cregg is in Cambridge right now, living it up across the street from the Law School, which he is not attending. Bo Powel, whom I hope to see in June, is still in Bus. School at Dartmouth but will be returning to Boston in the spring to make aircraft engines for GE. I was also glad to hear from Enno Becker, after hearing about him for so long from Haney (73) and Jimmy Armstrong. Enno writes that their computer consulting firm is three-years-old and doing well.

What do I do with a picture of Tom Fletcher from the Berkshire Eagle? Pin it on my wall. Tom has been promoted to manager of industrial engineering for the Soo Line Railroad in Minneapolis. Charles Hirschler is with Durham and Marcus consultants in NYC. Jack Zamboni and wife are also in the Apple. Nancy paints and Jack is studying for the Episcopal Ministry at General Theological Seminary. And Andy Piper in Chicago hasn't heard from anyone in four years. Really. Dave Hsieh is also in Chicago; an assistant prof. of Business Economics at Chicago U. There have been a few marriages lately. Lew Howes married a wonderful woman whom he met in college. She's from Venezuela. Lew's working for Bank of America. Steve MacFarlane married Ann Bigelow. I hope she's persuaded him to stop throwing his radio out the window when the Canadiens lose a hockey game. And, according to Don Ward, Rick McKallagat is living in Worcester, MA selling mattresses to Southerners, and has two daughters. Their ages I don't know. Write, Rick, write.

On a final sad note, Bob Twitchell passed away three years ago in an automobile accident. I only found this out recently, and wish to offer the belated condolences of myself and Bob's classmates to his friends and family.

No longer teaching Special Ed in Illinois, Sally Jo Gilbert is divorced and also living in Seattle, where Lucy Gorham lives too. Rumor has it Lucy may become a Bostonian in pursuit of a graduate degree in urban planning and environmental design.

A slim Margaret Couch, looking ravishing in her wedding gown, married Francis La Certe in September. The recep-

Margaret attended the University of Barcelona, Spain, and Merrimack College and was last known teaching English as a second language in Lawrence, MA. Her husband is also in the education field, with an undergraduate degree from Colgate and a graduate degree from Salem State College.

Karen Awad Tyler is a kidney research assistant at the Yale-New Haven Hospital (where Marna Parke Borgstrom also works). Karen and her husband, Kelvin, live in Niantic. He's in the lumber business and they're in the process of building their own home on the shores of the Connecticut River. Debby Roth is married and has moved to Albany from New York City. I've been told Alice Sweeney and her husband have a house in Arlington, VA. Alice works as a maternal child care nurse in a clinic serving handicapped infants and their adolescent mothers. Her Amherst-graduated husband is employed at the Pentagon. Kathy Snowden is working HARD as a second-year law student at Northeastern, living in Milton, MA and says she heard Joanne Mosca's name touted about on WEEI—last known Joanne was news director for WCGY and WCCM so it would seem she's moved on to greener pastures.

Linda Calvin has taken a leave of absence from her job with the Dept. of Agriculture and is at the Univ. of California at Berkeley getting a Ph.D. in agricultural economics. Libby Spader has settled in New York City and has become part of the Madison Avenue crowd as an account executive at the advertising firm of BBD&O. These days Joy Beane also hails from the Big Apple. Following graduation from Barnard, with a degree in American Studies, Joy spent two years as a paralegal at the law firm of Sullivan and Cromwell, and she is now completing her third year at Fordham Law School. Joy, her six-toed cat and old jalopy were wondering where Julia Gibert was? But I could not answer, her address missing from the omniscient Alumni Office list. Where are you Mme. Gibert? And where are your rabbits? Abby Shane remains an antitrust specialist in Washington, D.C., where she has been for the past few years. Andrea Putman and young son, Rusty, are doing well in Ohio and wonder if anyone would like to purchase an 80-odd acre farm in Wisconsin that she is considering selling. Contact her at 2652 Falmouth, Toledo, Ohio 43615 or call 419, 535-3088.

Beth Urdang has a young tot (nearly two years old) named Nicole. Aleta Reynolds Crawford leads the class bambino list as far as I know with one boy and one girl. Husband Jim is in his last year at Duke Medical School. Lindy Munro is a geologist with Leighton and Asso., Irvine, CA, as well as in the process of securing a master of science degree from one of the Cal. State universities. She lives in Long Beach. New York publishing house attorney Linda Rawson did me the favor of soliciting most of the information in this column during the Annual Alumni telephone solicitation. Linda was ranked 14th in the city's women's B league summer squash season. She also played for the Harvard Club Women's B Team.

Baby Anna Cooper has passed the one year mark and is walking tall, cutting lots of teeth. Barefoot and knee-high, she's wandering about getting into EVERYTHING while these notes are being composed. I'm still steeped in politics, working at present on a Congressional campaign in charge of research and communications.

Questions for the wind. Has Lynn Graham Goldberg moved to Washington, D.C.? Did Annelisa Addante become a podiatrist? Did Liza Webster get married? What happened to Prilla Higano Rohrer? Or to Nancy MacKinnon...is there life after Brown? Is Kate Lilly still riding horses? What sort of buildings is Liz Padjen designing as an architect? Is Brett Cook an artist or a poet or a businesswoman? Is Liz Hall a veterinarian? Did Gustavia Evans return to her native Louisiana or was she bitten by the Yankee bug while at Abbot? Is Helen Cox writing? What is Sandy Reynolds doing in Palm Beach?

Come to our TENTH REUNION June 11-13 and find out the answers to these questions. See your buddies. And more, see how ten years has affected a place and a people that once lived there.

I'm very sorry about the delay in getting these class notes compiled but the past year has been extremely hectic. In fact everyone that I've heard from is busy and involved in various projects, so I would like to thank all those who spent the time (and postage...ugh!) to write. Here's what the Ladies of '73 are up to: I heard from my co-secretary Noreen Markley via Xmas card. She has moved to Michigan and is working for the same company as she did in Cincinnati. She's enjoying her new environs...address 24315 Hoover Ct., Farmington Hills, MI 48018.

Abigail Owen taught art at PA Summer Session and married Bart Read on Sept. 5, 1981 in Andover. Congratulations! Wend King is back in the U.S.A. after spending years in Nepal with the Peace Corps. Wendy is working on an M.A. in international affairs. Sally Smith-Petersen spent summer '81 as the technical director of the Hackmatack Playhouse in Berwick, ME. Prior to this, Sal was at the Dallas Theater Center doing graduate work. Ellen Hoitsm Shelberg is still happily teaching 2nd grad in Baltimore. She reports that Mardi Hucson Waggoner is also a teacher—first grad in Seattle and is pregnant! Actually I'm far behind in my news that she's probably already had the "little bundle!" Boy or girl Mardi? Let us know!!

Mary Clements Michelfelder definitely gave birth to a little girl, Carol Lynn, on September 24, 1980. Deb Schuller Edmunds also had a baby, a boy, Matthew, October 1, 1980. She's working on her M.A. in social rehabilitation counseling in addition to her new motherly duties. Kim Whittemore Anderson has no tiny tots yet, but she does have two gorgeous Labrador Retrievers. She is an account executive with Michigan Bell Telephone. I've heard from both of '73s "Tomlinsons"—Kristine Tomlinson has lived on a veal farm in Barre, MA for over a year. She's presently buying books for the American Antiquarian Society...(a research library) and working on some ideas for a comic strip. Meanwhile, Kate Tomlinson is working as a research assistant at the Congressional Research Service and enjoying life in D. C. (Hey Kate, when you go to NJ to see your folks, come into N.Y.C. so we can have lunch!!) Also in swingin' Washington, D. C. is Josie Martin who is one of George Bush's assistants!! Leave it to our Josie to keep her political feet wet!!

Carolyn Naifeh is working as a foreign student adviser at Vanderbilt University in Nashville. The Spader clan has certainly been busy...Anne is teaching at the Pike School in Andover...Nursery, Kindergarten and Art for first and second graders. Loves it! Sister Libby ('72) is marrying Kaveh Naficy and living in N.Y.C. She works for B.B.D.&O advertising. Jimmy Spader (PA dropout...horrors!) played Brooke Shield's brother in the film Endless Love. (Sounds like a real tough job!!! Bravo!!) Charlotte Mason has a new address and a new project...Ph.D. in business!! She's at Stanford U. and can be reached at: 783 Roble Ave. No. 1, Menlo Park, CA 94025. She and her sister Martha took a two week trip driving across the country. Thanks for the postcard from Colorado, Char!!

Meanwhile back in N.Y.C....Anne Allen has been working at Soskin/Thompson Associates as a copywriter/account executive. Her address is: 410 E. 74th St. No. 1-G, New York, NY 10022. I bumped into Anne at the very glamorous A&P in my neighborhood last summer. She looks super!! Christina Landry has back in N.Y.C. and working for Morgan Stanley. I ran into Chris Clemson ('75) who is going to the Yale School of Drama. Also pursuing various theatrical careers in the big Apple are Dana Delaney, Kathy Barry ('74) and George Oliva ('73). Break a leg kids!!

I'm about to celebrate my fourth anniversary on Search For Tomorrow. The past year has been unusually exciting due to some really terrific location shootings...I went to Jamaica in Dec. '80 for two weeks of filming and in the fall of '81, six of the our cast went to Hong Kong for a 3-week shoot. If my acting career bombs, I'd love to be a travel/agent!!! By the time this newsletter goes to press our show will have moved from CBS to NBC so...stay tuned!

Please let me remind you once again to keep in touch with Noreen and me. Take a break from filing tax returns, writing Docuporates or completing the "All American Novel" and drop us a line—All news is good News!!! Frightening but true is the fact that just about one year from now will be our 10th reunion...I hope that A.A.'73 will have a big turnout...(and hopefully not too many gray hairs!)

One final note...Susan Urie Donahue is in charge of getting donations from our class for Andover and she's sent us all letters. Don't rip them up!! Show the school that you care!! Any amount from $1.00 to five million is welcome and tax deductible! Susan just had her first wedding anniversary and was recently promoted to the director of sales of the Boston Meridien. She's quite busy but very happy.

Well...that's all folks!! Have a happy spring and write soon.

These notes are by George Ireland:

It has been awhile since the last edition of the Class Notes and even longer since we walked off Andover Hill. You would not believe some of the changes that have overcome various members of the class. Would you believe, for example, that former hel-raisers are now happily married, driving wagons, and living in the 'burbs? Former nerds are hanging out in places like Peru? Former freaks are now wearing the grey pinstripes of corporate America? And, believe it or not, there are actually sons and daughters of the Class of 1974? In this recreation of the Class Notes, some of these amazing tales will have to be told. But I warn you, the names will not be changed to protect the guilty.

But first, our former Class Secretary, Steve Miller, abdicated his position by not writing anything. I am doing this on a one-time basis. (Ed note: the new Class Secretary for '74 will be Peter McCubbin, whose address appears above.)

Some people have headed off for distant lands in search of fortune, love, or the perfect martini. Diane Aigler, was last seen in Zurich with a tall, dark stranger. Robin Jackson has disappeared into the wilds of East Africa. Jack Crawford left his job as a bond trader with Morgan Guaranty to disappear in England. Shauna Doyle, after riding the rails of the Orient Express and the Trans-Siberian Railroad, is teaching English and American History in Peking. Howard Carter was last seen in Nepal in pursuit of the infamous yeti. Duke Burnham is working for Georgia-Pacific in Indonesia as a forester. Meanwhile, Peter McCubbin is trading bonds in the Venezuela money market. Kattie Keesling Newland and husband, Ross, are working for the State Department in Bolivia. Scott and Dru Coates are returning in April from Liberia where Scott was an architect.

Moving to the corporate sector, a number of our classmates are stumbling up the ladder of fame and fortune. I leave it to your judgement which ones are rising to their level of incompetence. Tom Boyle is working for Chemical Bank in Chicago and is occasionally seen with a dark-haired beauty. Walter Granruth and John Ham are bankers at Irving Trust in New York. Betsy Gootrad is, or at least was, doing middle market lending for Manny Hanny. Rick Kimball is at the Bank of New York as was Val Corning (Val got married last summer and moved to Minneapolis). Eduardo Gonzalez is a stockbroker in Puerto Rico, while Randy Koch is married and working for Merrill Lynch in Oakland. Howard Sklar is helping build a nuclear power plant near Detroit. Paul Barnett is a chemical engineer for the Michigan-Wisconsin Pipeline Co. in Houston. David Wray married Deidre Shanahan in December '81; Dave is working for Tucker Anthony in Boston. Terri Samel, now Terri Miller, is working for Pitney Bowes in Connecticut.

David Corey is an advertising flake for Doyle, Dane, Burnbach in New York. Caitlin Cofer is a midwife in Washington; she recently helped give birth to an $80 billion child called "Baby Bell". Caitlin reports that mother and child are doing well. Our class is also getting its share of the "glitter" world. Betsy Evans was last seen at Regines, dancing with Truman Capote. Nina Rutenburg is working at Christies in New York. Wendy Matthews, Dana Delaney, and Kathy Barry are all either working or aspiring to be actresses in New York. Stu Shofner, however, has forgone his acting career and is going to Med School in Tennessee (Stu, go back to acting). Mason Wilkinson is still running a studio in Los Angeles. Becky Putman, however, is disputably the biggest party-giver in the city of Boston. Hope Woodhouse, supposedly at Harvard Business School, keeps being seen on the fashionable and trendy Upper East Side with the Silver Fox. Sara Nelson is working for Self magazine and dictating what all of us narcissistic people should and should not be doing.

And, of course, we still have some scholars in the class. Bruce Bacon, having taught at PA and Smith, is studying drama at Yale. Richard Morse is also at Yale, but studying Slavic Linguistics. Peter "Slim" Currie is at Stanford and prepping for his return to Wall Street. Mike Bostwick is a med student at U-Hawaii. Dave Cauty and Caleb Freeman are both studying law at South Carolina. The University of Virginia has its fair share: Tony Hobson (Law), Ann Hoover (Business), and several others. John Day is studying for a Ph.D. in History at Chicago.

The space for this column is running short. Look in your Alumni Fund letter for additional notes as to what various folks are doing these days. And, if you have a chance, jot a note about what you are doing.

And as we ring in another new year, the sixth since our triumphant walk up those several steps to the awesome west front of Samuel Phillips Hall, I must perforce admit that I have heard nary a word from my once zealous reunion-mates. Our exuberance and successes of last summer have worn thin by now, with only the valiant few left in regular contact with the office of Academy Resources. Though we may be thus impoverished insofar as financial wherewithal is concerned, I know we are far richer emotionally and intellectually—so get that professional/academic/alma mater interface into gear!

Washington has been the picture of excitement of late. So far, I have been forced to refuse offers for Stockman's, Allen's, and Casey's jobs because of a personal commitment to my current employer. And, like Mike Deaver, who can afford to live on $60,000/annum anyway? Not I surely. I suppose service of the public will be my due for the next year or two, before I cash in and jump over to the private sector. I have always dreamed of having 'consultant' etched in gold leaf on my office door right under my name.

Pamela Jean Eaton is working for a conservative think tank called the Center for Strategic and International Studies. In between tete-a-tetes with Kissinger, Schlesinger, and Zbig the B, she researches for a team striving to make the third world energy-independent. We have been known to date on occasion.

Once again, marriage is the subject which predominates my zeroxed material from old PA. Anita Thomas has engaged Stephen Rokicki of Andover, and will make the tie that binds in May. They will then trot swiftly down to Williamsburg, VA, to open a shop selling predominantly preppy handbooks, stationery, and 'save a prep, eat an alligator' buttons and bumper strips. Good Luck!! Jill Hartwell will marry fellow Princeton Theological Seminarian Tim Geoffrin on June 5. They will finish their tour at Princeton, and have accepted the position of co-chaplain at an unnamed coeducational preparatory school. Pam Eaton will be in the wedding. She will be wearing a long pink dress with ruffles. John Sweeney graduated from R.P.I. in 1980, in engineering. After hopping from computer firm to computer firm like a hot potato, John settled down to marry Elizabeth Ann Tourison just a week before our now-infamous reunion last summer. Their address: 140 Barton Road, Stow, MA 01775. Get those cards off!!! Computer World has Sweeney as so hot an engineer they may not be located there long. Reported to have witnessed the hitching: Howard Phipps, Ken Bradley, Steve Winthrop, and Tim Draper.

Tiny Coan will finally complete his course of study at Columbia this winter. He reports having witnessed a costumed Al Ellis propose to be a ficus tree at a Halloween Party in the Big Apple. Word also wends northward to Tiny from Millard Tydings, whose reputation precedes him (if you can imagine preceding Mil) from Johns Hopkins down here in Maryland. Tiny further informs us that Andy McKinley can be seen on display at a living art gallery in White Harlem, and that Mike Gotsegen often catches the exhibit. Dan Chadwick is not a student and living in Cambridge. Dan Algrant is a filmmaker and living in Cambridge. Peter Schaff has decided to take business school on the side, preferring full time with the Continental Bank during the day. Hats off.

Perry Peck is a veritable Reuters news service this quarter. She happens to be swinging up in beautiful downtown Ann Arbor, MI, in an M.B.A. program. Julie O'Donnell appears to have graduated from Stanford, and will be sowing her oats at University of Iowa Law School. Darn her!! She got the last place in the class just ahead of me!!! The lovely Karen Genis graduated from Middlebury, that perfect little spot up in the mountains of Vermont, and moved on to international Development and disinformation activities in New York City. Perry at long last breath reports that Peggy Dolgenos is interested in the Far East, and for whatever reasons, has opted for study in Taiwan.

Lisa Spiegel has been working on her tan. She moved to Phoenix after a successful tanning season in the Caribbean last May, and is restaurant manager at Spaghetti Company, a large operation with plenty of challenges—hard to imagine after a season on her back in sun. She fancies herself a former eastern snowbird, sold out to the riches of that paradigm of business success—the sunbelt. Tighten it up, I say!! Dennis Driscoll graduated Boston College in the spring of 1981, spent a leisurely summer on the Cape, and reported for work with the family firm this fall. He hears tell of a whirlwind tour of Europe being made by Dennis Murphy, who has apparently found happiness with a six-foot female Dane. In turn, it seems that Bobby Fowkes is the newest Boss down in Southy, with plans to open a recording studio in the very near future. Look for a release under his name. I understand his Irish ballads are deeply moving.

Finally, we have received further word from former class secretary Chris Mullen. Like a good rider, Christy got up from his nasty fall you read about in the most recent issue and got right back up on his horse. This time, though, it takes the form of the school of animal husbandry at Cornell University. Contributions can be sent to: Make Mullen a Millionaire Mating Mules, Cornell University, Ithaca, NY 14853. As always, I look forward to hearing from any and most of you. Write on...

Last Minute News: Liz Smith is now married... Jim Turino reports that she was beautiful.

Greetings from Winter Park, CO!! (Hard to keep up with me, eh?!) This winter I'm teaching skiing to all types of disabled people. I'm thoroughly enjoying myself and the skiing is great. I just qualified for the Handicap Nationals which will take place at Winter Park from March 29–April 3, so if anyone is in the area, stop by.

I'm pleased to see that numerous classmates cured their four year arthritis enough to get a quick note or letter off to me. Sue Bailey spent the past spring in London studying at the London School of Economics. She presently is finishing up her undergraduate at Middlebury. Bruce Stanley is alive and well having survived an adventuresome year 1980-81 travelling all over Europe and the U.S. taking on various jobs along the way and really getting to know the natives. He is now back at Yale leaning towards a degree in International Relations. Steve Auerbach had a fascinating summer studying the health care system in the Peoples Republic of China. In addition to a seminar and lecture series held at the University of Michigan, he toured China for 3 weeks visiting all kinds of health care facilities in both rural and urban areas. This fall Steve applied to medical schools and did an independent research project at Memorial-Sloan Kettering Cancer Center (a report which is in the process of submission for publication to Nature!) Besides his interest in medicine, Steve is kept busy at Union with theater, writing for the newspaper, and serving for the third year as a student representative to the Academic Affairs Council. Colin Baxter (another name from the past) took a year off after Andover to work in the Arctic for a small bush airline. He then headed west to attend Stanford. He presently is at the Sorbonne in Paris studying Philosophy. Gary Levine spent 6 months in France studying and working for a french insurance broker in Paris. He reports he had an "awesome" time. Cassandra (Sandy) Harvey is doing well and would like to hear from old PA friends. Her address is 712 Cedar Hill Drive, Allentown, PA 18103.

Getting back to academic life, it sounds like senior year is keeping everyone busy. Kennon Miller was elected captain of the varsity squash and lacrosse teams at Williams. He is presently finishing up a major in chemistry and doing research in blood coagulation. Another chem major, Bruce Thompson is working for a research group at Wesleyan in organometallic chemistry. Josh Trueheart also in the science field is applying to graduate school hoping to do research in molecular biology. He'll be finishing up at Stanford in March and then travel around Europe. Pamela Carter wrote from Bryn Mawr saying she is planning to attend graduate school in geology next year. Word has it Doug Amster and Jim Phelps are living it up at Trinity, and preparing for the infamous Senior Spring! Lee Arthurs keeps busy at Harvard as the production manager for the Harvard Crimson. Chris Bonbright finally wrote from Stanford. Besides taking courses from the Business School, he is teaching an undergraduate course in real estate. Chris anticipates working in real estate for a couple of years before coming back East to law school.

As for life after college, Ann Newhall is enjoying her job as an account administrator at a public relations agency in Providence. Meg Carley and I will be bridesmaids in Ann's wedding in June. Steven Young has launched himself a career as a church organist. Not only has he played at numerous churches, but Steven also teaches piano and organ, accompanies the choir and oratorio society at Barrington College, and is assistant director of the handbell choir.

Lastly—with difficulty and sadness, I regret to inform you of the tragic death of John Brayton in a hunting accident. In Tomittinghausen's words "John was known to all of us as the starting goalie on the hockey team and a member of the football squad. Those of us who were fortunate to know him better, remember him not only for his athletic achievements, but his dedication to studies, and his warmth and modesty." Our sympathy is extended to the Brayton family.

Happy Spring to you all!!!

I have heard this from so many sources that I guess that it must be true: Bill Hare is married. Congratulations Bill and ? Everyone would like to know more ... And belated Congrats to Sean '78 and Colin Callahan; last summer Sean and a friend completed an 85-day, 8,500 mile bike trip across the country to raise money for the Jimmy Fund. Colin was along manning the support van which followed the bikes. Great job both of you! David Crane took this all off and was working and living in Boston. Roger Kass was at either Berkeley or U. of London for the fall. John Spokes says that school in California is great with lots of sun and concerts. He is working as a radio station operator, playing in the school band, and directing and acting for the theatre department. Tim Schwarz spent the fall at JSC; he said that it was great, but that he was eager to return to Wesleyan. And I believe that Mark Mulvaney was also there in sunny California. Last summer Fred Hughson hiked the Appalachian Trail with his brother. Zehr Gut, Fred!

Don Thompson has a new motorcycle, and invites anyone passing through Charlottesville to visit. Judy Wurtzel is majoring in literature at Yale and spends most of her time working as publisher of the Yale Quarterly, an undergraduate literary magazine. Kerry Herman is now at Smith. She is very happy, rowing again, studying lots, and majoring in Art History (not necessarily in that order). Paul Whittall is in Boulder. Nina Kimberly spent part of her summer in Aspen with Rainey Crowley. And while on the East Coast Nina saw Mason Day and Glynn O'Donnell. Carroll Bogert may be in the Far East.

The Head of the Charles is still a great reunion time. (Rowing lives on). Tia Doggett, Tad Flynn, Ginny Seldon, Hugh Silbaugh, Drew Guff, Jim Pawlowski, Jorge Pedraza, John Andrews, Jeremy Pirtle, Sara Cox, 40 Conklin (who is still at BU but also into car racing), John Francis, Chris Coughlan, myself, and many others from PA and everywhere else were all seen there. Doug Segal is now at NYU. Kyra Maes and Hyla Flaks are both at Trinity. Kate Stevens is at Oberlin and Margot Kimball at U. of Oregon. After an extensive tour of Europe last summer Geoff Proctor is back into the Middlebury ski season. John Vail is now at U. of Chicago and very free. He's seen Wynne Morris and Kei Hanafusa '80. Peter LeCompte asks, "What happened to the Gears?"

Dan Zanes and Tom Lloyd were together at Oberlin where they had a band "The Jogging Wankers" — what relation to the "The Hyper Elves"? This year they are out of school and playing music. Beth Dirusso is president of her sorority at Cornell. Mary Pynchon loves Williams. I talked to Josh Kaufman once this fall; he is studying lots, into Psych, and maybe pre-med. Susan Jenkins is very involved in Wesleyan students and Alumni Relations and with the Alumni Council. She was in a student movie and is playing hockey along with Alison Zaeder. Dave Daskal is acting lots at Yale. Sophie Pirie is alive and well in Cambridge. Write. It's been real. Awesome. GVD.

Francis McCarthy died on January 14. (See page 18). Our deepest sympathy goes to Catherine in this great loss. Her new address is: Andover Commons Apartments, 301 Railroad St. Andover, MA 01810.

Bill Buehner is back in harness for a month or so as he takes over a couple of Latin classes for Bob Lane who is recovering from recent surgery. When Skip (Helen) Eccles ran into Bill on the PA campus the other day, she said: "Hi, Bill, what are you up to?" Bill's reply: "Page 153!"

Mary Ann Clift reports that she and Bill have been so busy restoring their house in Washington Court House, Ohio, that they haven't had time to contemplate the pleasures of retirement, but they will soon, since the work is well on its way. Son B. I., a builder, and his architect wife, Julie, have their own design and construction firm in Massachusetts. They are planning a world tour during the current year. Brother Dan, having given up teaching the Classics, is now a vice-president with North American Refractories in Cleveland, an enterprise teaming with engineers that needed "someone who could read and write!"

Karl and Ruth Roehrig are also busily engaged in refurbishing their 1784 house in Francestown, NH, and are now down to their snow-covered "emergency" wood pile, thanks to the frigid winter. Ruth is busy with church work and as a volunteer in the local hospital. She and Karl are avid gardeners in season and raise all their own vegetables, to say nothing of a vast variety of flowers. Daughter Kathy is about to undergo the orals for the doctorate in Egyptian Archeology at the University of California, Berkeley. She'll be off for more research in Egypt this summer. Brother Matt is a 5th grade teacher in the Belchertown, MA school system and is a member of a very active singing group that entertains at functions in the area.

Jim and Alma Grew are back from a yuletide jaunt to Paris where they celebrated Noel and Jim's 75th birthday. Soon they'll be heading for Florida to visit young Jim and his water-skiing school. They look forward to having Ned and his wife with them in June, when Ned comes east from California for his 20th reunion at PA. Ned is probably the most travelled member of his class, having been on several U.S. and Soviet expeditions to the Antarctic Continent. Harp and Patty Follansbee spent six weeks during the past summer with Shorty and Julie at Chataqua. Shorty, during his 61st consecutive summer there and before a gathering of some 3000 people, was honored with the Annual Award of Recognition for Service to Chataqua and its program of lectures, concerts, and operas. We warmly congratulate him.

If travel arrangements work out, Emory Basford will be heading for New England later this year to visit his many friends. Recent get-togethers with Clare and Allan Gillingham, Juliet Kellogg, and Alston Chase have been most pleasant for Ethel and me. It's a pleasure to report that they are all in fine form.

The Eccles enjoyed seeing Bill and Lee Brown in February, while visiting mutual friends in Maine, and report that Bill is running a new, very independent secondary school. He has a remarkable faculty/student ratio (7/8), faculty salary scale ($0-$0), and name: The Ad Hoc School. Bill suggests an alternative spelling might be The Odd Hawk. Lee is running a small community art gallery. They are obviously having a great time.

Ancient History Department: Seen at last fall's Andover-Exeter game were George and Fonty Sanborn, fit as ever. Somehow missed in the crowd by Charlie Smith and yours truly were Floyd and Sarah Humphries.

Drop me a line about yourself, your family, and colleagues you have seen recently. I'd love to hear from you. Address: Stephen Whitney, 113 Wakefield St., Rochester, NH 03867.

(Ed. note: we have learned, since Steve's writing, of the recent deaths of Willet L. Eccles, in California; of Helen, wife of Miles Malone, 20 Ames Lane, Daytona Beach, FL 32018; and most recently of Walter Geirasch. Mary Geirasch's address is 970 Lighthouse Ave., Pacific Grove, CA 93950.

Secretary of the Academy

On May 1, Joseph C. Mesics '53 was named the new Secretary of the Academy. Effective July 1, he will succeed Frederic A. Stott '36, who will retire in June, but continue to work for the Academy on a part-time basis in the year ahead.

Mesics is a partner in the law firm of Henry, Beaver, Wolf & Mesics in his native Lebanon, Pennsylvania. A graduate of Yale and of Dickinson Law School, he has been a practicing lawyer for the past 16 years and is the Public Defender for Lebanon County.

Active on Andover's behalf since graduation, Mesics is a Class Agent, was a member of the Bicentennial Campaign Committee member, and has served on Class Reunion committees. Classmates will remember him as a football and lacrosse player in Andover, advertising manager of The Phillipian, and a member of Student Congress. He and his wife Sandi, who has been an active participant with him at Andover affairs, will move to Moses Stuart House during the summer.

I am delighted that Joe Mesics will be joining us this summer. His dedication to the Academy, his wide circle of friends and his broad professional skills which have marked his legal career all augur well for our Academy. I am deeply grateful for the work of the alumni who served on the Advisory Committee on the Search for Phillips Academy's new Secretary of the Academy: William Rosenau '47, Chairman, Bruce A. Hughes '68, R.L. Ireland, III '38, Raymond A. Lamontagne '53, David S. Paresky '56, Elizabeth Parker Powell '56, John Richards, II and Sandra Urie Thorpe '70.

Donald W. McNemar
Headmaster

Alumni met the new Secretary of the Academy and his wife at Reunions.

Mesics on board as Academy Secretary

The new Secretary of the Academy is 5'9" tall, square jawed, in superb physical condition, a lawyer by training and practice, and with roots deeply grown in two communities—his home city of Lebanon, Pennsylvania and the alumni body of Phillips Academy of the early 1950s. Joseph C. Mesics, Andover '53, Yale '57, and Dickinson School of Law '66, was named Secretary of Phillips Academy by Headmaster Donald W. McNemar, and took over the helm at Andover's Office of Academy Resources (Alumni; Development; and Publications) on July 15. He succeeds Fred Stott '36 who retired from that position, but will continue on a part-time consulting basis next year as Advisor to the Headmaster with responsibilities in the Addison Campaign.

Mesics, who attended Andover from 1949 to 1953, was well known by his contemporaries as a fine athlete (football and lacrosse), as a member of the Student Congress and for his work on the business board of The Phillippian. Since graduation he has been active in alumni affairs, serving as Agent for the Class of 1953, member of a Bicentennial Campaign committee, and as a committee member and attendee at most of his class reunions. His wife Sandi has attended all Andover dinners and reunions with him and is well known by their contemporaries.

The naming of Mesics followed the effective work of the Advisory Committee for the Search for the Secretary of the Academy carried on during

Fuess Award to Monro, Watts

John Monro

Elizabeth Watts

"Give me a robust non-conformist who has the strength of his convictions." -- This imperative, inscribed on the Fuess Award Medal, was written by the late Claude M. Fuess, PA teacher for 40 years and headmaster, 1933-48. In May, Andover honored two robust non-conformists when it presented the Fuess Award for Distinguished Public Service to Abbot's Elizabeth C. Watts '08 and Andover's John Usher Monro '30, as great teachers. The Fuess Award is the highest honor Andover can give its alumni.

What is similar about these honored teachers is that each followed a call to an out-of-their-way place and to people who sorely needed excellence and dedication in teaching. Each found the work well worth doing and stayed, and became great teachers in the process.

Elizabeth Watts heard in 1909 that the Hindman Settlement School in the mountains of Knott County, Kentucky, needed a teacher, and a week later Elizabeth set out alone for the Kentucky mountains. The last 40 miles, she had to ride, sidesaddle, on the first horse she had ever ridden, following a guide to the banks of Troublesome Creek, where Hindman was the only school for mountain children in the region. In the intervening 70 years she has taught high school classes, run a boys' dormitory, served for many years as co-director and Executive Director of the school, according to her friend Marcia Dana Eastham, who accepted the award for her. For the past 25 years Elizabeth Watts has remained a vigorous board member of this small school, which has provided mountain school children with a sound education and a consciousness of their own Appalachian cultural heritage. Pulitzer Prizes for Andover Alumni Three Andover alumni took top awards in nonfiction and in journalism this year: John Darnton '60, Tracy Kidder '63, and H. Gerard "Buzz" Bissinger '72.

Tracy Kidder has won both the Pulitzer Prize and the American Book Award for nonfiction for The Soul of a New Machine, reviewed in this issue under Books.

John Darnton, Warsaw bureau chief for the New York Times, won the Pulitzer Prize for his coverage of Solidarity's revolt and its crushing aftermath in Poland.

Buzz Bissinger, now a Philadelphia Inquirer reporter in Atlantic City, has won the country's top dollar money award for journalism, the $1,000 Livingston Award for excellence by journalists under 35. Bissinger's eight-page feature on the causes and repercussions of a major airline mishap in Michigan, which he wrote for the St. Paul Pioneer Press, also made him runner-up for the Pulitzer Prize for national news.

This issue marks the completion of Helen M. Eccles' four-year term as Editor of this publication. Thomas J. Regan will succeed her as Editor of the Bulletin while she will continue to serve Andover as Director of Public Information.

During Helen (Skip) Eccles editorship the Bulletin has received an array of awards from CASE (Council for the Advancement and Support of Education) including the Grand Award as best independent school periodical (twice) and Exceptional Achievement Award (also twice). These national honors speak to the sustained high quality level of the publication. They further reflect a publication and an editor which have sought to keep its readership "accurately informed and deeply interested in the school—its policies, people, achievements and problems."

Pursuit of this goal puts a rigorous demand on the editor and requires great sensitivity to the pulse (really pulses) of the school, coupled with editorial independence and objectivity. Skip Eccles has met both requirements well. She has accurately portrayed the school, both in the continuous daily effort to help in the growth of young men and women—and also at historic moments in the Academy's history—the four-day Bicentennial Celebration in 1978, the completion of the Bicentennial Campaign, the Fuess Awards and the Sizer-McNemar transition. The Bulletin has chronicled well this era. The Editor has wielded a sensitive pen and has skillfully presented a well-balanced content.

Commencement

by Helen M. Eccles

The Class of 1982, Phillips Academy's 204th and Headmaster Donald McNemar's first, was graduated in a weekend rainstorm that thoroughly baptized this new class of Andover alumni. In the blue-and-white setting of the Case Memorial Cage at Commencement the new headmaster goodnaturedly wondered to parents, "what this class, or I, did this year that would require three days of rain to wash it away?" Adverse weather brought out extra camaraderie; families shared umbrellas and crowded into special gatherings on Saturday that honored seniors' accomplishments in the arts before Commencement, this year on a Sunday.

Graduation activities began Saturday noon with a gala Addison Commencement Picnic in the Cage, with music by the 8'n 1 singers and "Youth in Asia", a student New Wave band. This was prelude to the Addison Gallery's Senior Art Exhibit and Poetry Reading by seniors from Instructor Michael Lopes' course in Creative Writing; seniors read their poems to a full house against a backdrop of the Addison's masterpieces upstairs in the Masterworks Gallery. Nearby, Cochran Chapel filled with families for the Commencement Concert by the Academy Orchestra and senior soloists. Later, the Senior Entertainment added more music, drama and dance performances.

The Candlelight Baccalaureate brought everyone together late that night in Cochran Chapel for thoughtful preparation, expressed in prayer, music and psalm, and by one parent and a teacher. Beverly Tuller of San Francisco, mother of Robert '82 and Geoffrey '83, expressed for boarding student parents the difficulty, but necessity, of "letting go of your children" and the rewards that come with their education, maturity and friendships. French Instructor Henry Wilmer '63, speaking to the seniors, recalled being kicked out of school just before his own PA graduation, which forced him to listen to himself and think for the first time. "Rites of passage are a rare time for thinking, and thinking is the key to understanding what and why I'm doing what I'm doing, and going where I'm going." Said senior Hilary French (sister of Tom '77) afterwards, "I'll remember that; he wants us to think about where we're going, not just barge along, doing."

In the morning, the Clan McPherson Bagpipers led the traditional procession of seniors and faculty along an untraditional Commencement path to the Case Memorial Cage for Phillips Academy's 204th Exhibition Exercises. James Gile of Aspen, Colorado, won the Yale Bowl; the Faculty Prize for outstanding scholarship in the senior year was shared by Jean Keamy of Andover, Harold Kim of Potomac, Maryland, and Anja Bettina Osiander of Wachtberg, West Germany. Kathryn Gayner, of Brunswick, Georgia, won the Madame Sarah Abbot Award and the Aurelian Honor Society Prize was won by James S. Donnelly of Hudson, Ohio. School President Hadley Hovenden Soutter spoke and reminded her classmates that they stood surrounded by the traditional institutions they knew best--school and family--but urged them not to "just follow along" with things as they are: "We are the children of tradition; let us become the children of vision; let us stand on the shoulders of tradition, long for something better and build for it."

"You will always be unique as our first senior class," the 13th headmaster told the Class of 1982, and in his Commencement address, excerpted below, he charged them to work for the goal of justice and peace.

"Here at Phillips Academy you have acquired skills, learned a few facts and expanded personal horizons. And yet the importance and impact of your education is based on you and how you choose to use it. To be liberally educated is to have seen visions of truth and beauty in the midst of everyday complexity and confusion . . . To use this education to the utmost is to work to achieve two of society's abiding goals--justice for the individual and peace for the community.

By justice for the individual I mean a society in which each person can live with dignity and achieve his or her potential. We have not yet achieved this in our nation or in the world or even here at Phillips Academy . . . We must not be hindered by a person's sex, race, culture, class or religion. "While we have made progress in changing the formal legal structure surrounding human justice with court decisions, civil rights legislation and efforts at Constitutional amendment, we have not achieved the shift in attitudes which will assure every person the opportunity to live his or her life with dignity. Even the limited progress we have made currently is being eroded . . . The goal must be an environment in which each individual can fulfill his or her unique potential and make contributions.

"The second goal must be peace. Your education here has given you the opportunity to understand both the necessity of global peace and the difficulty of achieving it . . . The tragedy . . . is not that principles come into conflict or that nations are willing to defend their beliefs--Those are honorable realities. The tragedy of the situation is that in the 20th century, in the midst of nuclear peril, we still rely upon war as the means for resolving conflicts among sovereign states.

"While we have not yet assured peace we are experiencing a remarkable . . .

1982 Reunions

Running the Reunion classic.

by Helen M. Eccles

"Together at last!" proclaimed the tee shirts of the Andover and Abbot 25th Reunion Classes of 1957. That really expressed it for alumni of every class. They were together with old classmates, and some new ones, after 5 years or 60; together at their schools, Andover and Abbot—in Flagstaff Court, in Morton House, the Addison Gallery, and the Chapel and Memorial Gym; together as the reunion alumni of 1982.

The initiative of this year's reuning classes provided more content and variety to the June 11-13 weekend program than at any previous Reunion. There was already much to celebrate. This was Don McNemar's first Andover Reunion as headmaster; it was a chance for 800 Abbot and Andover alumni to meet Don and Britta, to say hail and farewell to Frederic A. Stott '36 on his retirement and to welcome Joseph P. Mesics '53 as the new Secretary of the Academy. Add all this to reunion with old friends from Andover and Abbot school years, plus the Alumni Seminars and the Abbot tea; it made a full weekend for the reuning classes from 1922 through 1977.

Some of the variety the reuning alumni brought and shared: The Class of 1967 persuaded the Rising Storm, its suddenly-notorious-again rock group of 15 years ago (see Feb. '82 Bulletin) to come back and play for a Reunion Dance for three classes. On another note, '67 sponsored two film screenings of The Last Epidemic: The Medical Consequences of Nuclear Weapons and Nuclear War, produced by the Physicians for Social Responsibility; discussions were led by Vicki and Walt Mintkeski '67. The 25-year Class of 1957 offered a panel on Prep Schools Today in Kemper Auditorium featuring 1957 talent, and also a panel on Mid-Career Changes. 1972 arranged screening of All for Andover, the movie many of them helped Instructor Steve Marx make in their senior year, starring their own Class Secretary, Sam Butler. Finally, the Abbot and Andover Class of 1922 may have begun a new tradition by switching their Class Dinner from evening to noon on Saturday. "At our 60th Reunion, many of our classmates no longer drive at night," said Don Walker, chairman of PA '22. "This way many more of our classmates were able to come and enjoy our Class Dinner. We had a great turnout, both Abbot and Andover."

The alumni gathered Friday afternoon at receptions at faculty homes where they were serenaded by student singers of the 8'n 1, (revived at PA this year), then moved on to the Alumni-Faculty Barbecue in Flagstaff Court.

At the Headmaster's Reception in the Addison Gallery, Don and Britta McNemar received in the Masterworks Gallery with Fred Stott and introduced the new Secretary of the Academy and his wife, Joe and Sandi Mesics.

On Saturday morning, the Alumni Memorial Service brought back layers of memories, eloquently summoned by the words of Bill Babcock '57 and the beautiful Handel solo of Tony Fisher '52, with prayers led by Sarah Emmons Warren '52 and a reading by Robert Crowell '27. Many memories were awakened by the very feel of Cochran Chapel's pews, the sight of the carved cherubs at the top of its oak pillars, and movement of elm leaves through the windows.

As the Clan McPherson Bagpipers led the Alumni Parade in the sunshine to the Athletic Complex, it was weather for 1932's boaters, and 1937 hoisted its blue and white Andover umbrellas only for effect. After the Annual Meeting of the Alumni, reuning alumni relaxed and mixed at the picnic lunch party, which spread from Bulfinch to the Bell Tower.

There was wide choice that afternoon, thanks to Associate Director for Alumni and Parent Affairs Mary Stevens, responsible for the weekend, and her Reunion Chairmen. The Addison and Art Department faculty offered Seminars on the Arts at Andover, with workshops for adults and children. Andover students and music faculty gave a chamber music recital in the Masterworks Gallery (pianist Jimmy Mrose, just graduated, also has won a Beethoven Society Music Competition in the Boston area). There were film showings, including Twentieth Century Landscape by Diz Bensley '43. 1957's Gerrit Keator, headmaster of Pomfret, spoke at Preps School Today seminar with Ted Harrison '38 and two of '57's children at Andover now--Chris Dean '82 and Abby Shuman '84. Outdoors, 60 people ran in the 2.2 mile Reunion Classic; Bruce Wolfe '72 came in first for men and Connie Adams, wife of Dinny '62, for the women.

At the Abbot Alumnae Tea, hosted by Dorothy Judd, Jane Sullivan '31, and Carol Greene Donnelly '58, a steady stream of alumnae came to be together, to catch up with Eleanor Tucker and talk with Miss Alice Sweeney, Kay Ayer, and Don and Britta McNemar. That evening, each Abbot and Andover Class had its joint class dinner and evening plans. The Class of '72 and the youngest reuning class, '77 combined with '67 to dance to the beat of The Rising Storm in the Athletic Complex. Out in the Log Cabin the Abbot and Andover 25th Reunion Class of 1957, ate lobster, imported a juke box and had their own dance. Together at last.

Annual Meeting of the Alumni

William Rosenau '53, president of the Alumni Council, welcoming the alumni, briefly reviewed this year of alumni activity in Don and Britta McNemar's first year with the alumni, cited the search for the new Secretary of the Academy and introduced its successful conclusion: Joe Mesics '53. Rosenau announced that the next president of the Alumni Council, who would be working with Mesics and the headmaster for the next two years, would be Washington attorney Stephen Clarkson '55, the driving force in organizing the Washington D.C. Andover-Abbot Regional Association. The outgoing president also announced appointment of 24 new members to four-year terms on the Alumni Council, which meets yearly in October.

J. Kenneth McDonald '50 and Caroline Greene Donnelly '58 reported on Reunions: the 1891 Bowl for highest percentage of Reunion returnees went to the Abbot and Andover 50th Reunion Classes of 1932. Six alumni shared honors for coming the greatest distance to Reunions: Judy Hannegan Sherman '67 from Bangkok, Thailand; Jack Cates '32, Justin Lindy '57 and Quentin Rappoport '62 from England; and Albert Koehl '57 and Gloria Haselton Charat '62 from Mexico. President Rosenau presented a handmade Andover clock to Carol Donnelly in appreciation for her three-year term as co-chairman of Reunions and Class Secretaries, "for all you have done to make Reunions at Andover for both Abbot and Andover alumni a very special time."

At the high point of the meeting, Rosenau presented Frederic A. Stott '36 with a large, stunning, framed aerial photograph of the campus, in color; he expressed the appreciation of the alumni for Fred's 31 years of accomplishments for Phillips Academy, and said, "no one can work with this guy and not catch his enthusiasm and his energy."

In response, Fred shared with the reuniting alumni "A Short Sweep of History" -- recollections of moments or eras of his years at Andover—and spoke of four qualities or characteristics that stand out: "fragility, the long reach, transition and change, and ownership." His points, in brief:

Fragility: "That may seem an odd word when you think of the 600 acres of hilltop land, the spreading fields, close to 150 buildings and the 2,000 students, faculty, administration and staff who populate that hill. But fragility is a proper word for, with all those assets and the fine history of both schools, the key to the future lies in the people, both on and off Andover hill who care about it, and the element of trust inherent in their relationship. We only have to think back 11 years to the turbulent era . . . For all its wonderous and apparent strengths, Andover is a fragile institution."

To exemplify the long reach Fred cited Peter Capra '21, a cocky, scared immigrant boy who arrived at Andover "lonely, scared (and because of that, belligerent) with 10 cents in his pocket which he used for a cigar. Somehow he survived Andover, then Yale." Capra became successful in business; then at the age of 40 gave this up to devote himself to running the New York Boys' Club, and also sent scores of Boys' Club youngsters to Andover through the years. Again, Walter Scott Leeds '08, "that wonderful alumnus no one knows," dismissed after five months at Andover and never returned, but so indelibly impressed by Headmaster Alfred E. Stearns and Andover that when he read of the Academy's financial need nearly 70 years later, he left Andover $6,000,000.

Transition and change means people, great teachers of the past, "Freeman or Forbes or Fuess or Benner or Hancock or Chase or Sweeney or Goodwin or Allis or Brown or Hayes or Fitts or Shields or Pieters," and on to a new generation at Andover now. It means the leadership of the school: "Don and Britta McNemar—the right leadership at the right time. And as I reflect back over a fair span of this century I think of how wisely (and 1932's Charlie Woolsey, Betty Holihan Giblin and Marie Holihan Foley with the 1891 bowl, and Carol Donnelly.

Alumni Fund breaks $1,000,000 barrier!

"I am particularly pleased," Alumni Fund Co-chairman Julie Schaufler Bucklin '48 told Headmaster Donald McNemar, "that in your first year as Headmaster, we alumni can present you with Andover's first $1,000,000 Alumni Fund. I hope it is the first of many." By the closing date of the fund on June 30, that check totalled $1,009,483 from 6,195 Abbot and Andover alumni.

Chairman Bucklin noted three factors that helped the Alumni Fund break the million dollar barrier for the first time. The Non Sibi Associates grew in this second year from 211 to 322 members and contributed $558,249 to Andover this year. "This leadership giving program is well launched and clearly has become one of the mainstays of the Alumni Fund."

The reunion classes outdid themselves, Bucklin said. "Under the leadership of their reunion gift chairmen and agents, they have raised $354,366 for Andover. We are deeply grateful." Finally, the Abbot women again distinguished themselves by topping the 1,000-donor mark for the second consecutive year and giving $74,416 to the Alumni Fund, nearly $23,000 more than last year. Sandy Urie Thorpe notes that Julie Bucklin's tenure as co-chairman has meant three years of record giving for Andover, and brought Abbot giving from $30,000 in 1980 to $75,000, and Abbot donors from 700 to 1000 donors. Bill Rosenau presented Julie Bucklin with a handmade Andover clock in appreciation and told the alumni: "She was there for every meeting and conference; when anything required her presence or her help, she was there."

Major Reunion Gifts

The 50th Reunion Class of 1932, led by Class Agents Jo Barclay for Andover and Betty Holihan Giblin for Abbot presented $102,000 to Andover as its 50th Reunion Gift.

The 25th Reunion Class of 1957, led by Alan Blanchard, Tom Fox and Mimi Ganem Reeder presented a check for $92,000 to Andover "with the respect and affection of the two classes of 1957."

"These are wonderful gifts," said Sandra Urie Thorpe '70, director of Annual Giving. "What's so exciting about this year is that for the first time in Andover's history the Alumni Fund has passed the $1,000,000 mark."

"And when the record Parent Fund total of $140,544 from 720 donors is added, Annual Giving has quite literally soared above the million mark to a total annual gift of $1,154,026. Credit goes to the many alumni and parent volunteers who worked on the two funds this year, to the leadership of Clint Kendrick and Julie Bucklin, and to Tony and Nancy Ullmar, Parent Fund Co-chairmen. During the Ullmans' two-year tenure, the Parent Fund has increased by 75%.

Outgoing honors; Carol Donnelly and Julie Bucklin admire Fred's retirement gift.

how fortunately) the Trustees have chosen their headmasters in this century . . . Stearns . . . Kemper . . . Sizer . . . and Donald W. McNemar. I suspect each choice had an element of a gamble to it, but how wisely successive generations of Trustees have gambled!"

Finally, on ownership he told the assembled alumni: "You don't hold stock certificates. You don't hold saplings from the Andover Elms. But, oh the intangibles! Your influence is there in countless ways: by word of mouth, by deed or misdeed, by recommendation given or withheld, by gift given or withheld, by attention or inattention. In the finest sense of the word . . . it is your school . . . you own it . . . you collectively and individually make the difference between the school that is Andover and "just another school."

New Alumni Trustees elected

Richard Lombard '49

Frances Young Tang '57

Richard D. Lombard '49, of Rye, NY, and Frances Young '57, of New York City, have been elected to four-year terms as Alumni Trustees of Phillips Academy, Alumni Council President William Rosenau announced, noting that they will join the Board at its fall meeting and carry all the responsibilities of trusteeship during their term of office. Lombard and Tang were elected by ballot of the entire Abbot-Andover alumni body in its biennial Alumni Trustee election this spring.

New Officers

Stephen Clarkson '55 will begin a two-year term as President of the Alumni Council July 1, 1982. Mimi Ganem Reeder '57 (Mrs. Larry) will succeed Julie Schauffler Bucklin '48 as co-chairman of the Alumni Fund, joining Clint Kendrick '61; and Carolyn Butler Lisle '61 (Mrs. Robert W.) will succeed Caroline Greene Donnelly '58 as co-chairman of Reunions and Class Secretaries with Ken McDonald '50.

Headmaster's Report to the Alumni: three goals

"I made the decision to come to Andover because I wanted to be a part of offering an excellent education to young people from diverse backgrounds. I can think of no more important work to be about today than educating young people.

"Secondly, the commitment of Abbot Academy and Phillips Academy has been to the concept of education of the whole person . . . I believe the years between 13 and 18 are terribly important in helping young people fashion their futures through decisions about their aspirations and goals for life. During these years they wrestle with the question of 'how hard am I willing to work, what do I really believe in, what are my dreams for the future?' In short, I feel this time in the life of young people is where the education 'action' is and I wanted to be part of it. Finally, Britta and I felt this was a community in which we could work together to contribute to the education of young people . . .

"In thinking back, the most striking impression of the year must be that of seeing the extraordinary wealth of talent among the students in this community . . . We were surprised and pleased with the outstanding quality and breadth of student involvement in the arts. This winter, Cochran Chapel provided the setting for the production of Handel's opera, Hercules, with over 100 students singing in the chorus and playing in the orchestra, 11 lead singers from the student body and a dance troupe of 20—a remarkable performance! . . .

"A second quality which has been striking to us newcomers is the open warmth and sharing among members of this community . . . Part of this community sense also is a generosity of spirit among the students, whether it is helping a classmate by tutoring, or cheering students at a swim meet, or going to the Addison to see a roommate's work in the art show. If I had to choose one word to describe our students it would be: joy. Somehow, despite the rigors, pressures, and intensity of life together in a residential school, Andover students today manage to find the time to share an exciting sense of pride in their school, good fun in their activities, and joy in their life together.

The other strong impression I have from this year is the dedication of the faculty. We now have 123 men and 86 women teaching, house counseling and coaching in this community . . . Those who accept the appointment and the challenge tend to be a remarkable group of people. Their care and concern for young people and their commitment to all that is strong and wonderful about Andover is what, in the end, makes this place work . . .

These have been my impressions—now what of the future of Phillips Academy? Andover, like all educational institutions will face the economic constraints of the 1980s. Despite solid alumni support in the annual giving program and our ex-

A job well done

"Be it Resolved, that we speak of our admiration for William Rosenau," a May 14 resolution of the Andover Trustees begins. The reasons why run down the page, but focus on his extraordinary services as alumni leader in the past two years, years of transition for Andover. "You led the Alumni Council in its newly reorganized form to counsel with the Administration and the Trustees concerning the issues facing the Academy and its new Headmaster in the decade ahead. In addition you accepted responsibility for leading the Advisory Committee charged with helping the new Headmaster to select a new Secretary of the Academy." Finally he has sat with the Trustees at every meeting, and as their resolution puts it, "we have come to know you not only as a colleague but as a friend whose human reach is great and warm and good." The Andover chair presented to Bill at the Annual Meeting is a symbol of solid service to Andover.

Trustees fete Secretary Stott at gala

by Ann M. Parks

At a gala dinner and dance on May 14, Trustees, colleagues and friends honored retiring Secretary of the Academy Frederic A. Stott '36. The celebration moved from Oliver Wendell Holmes Library, where the rejuvenated 8' n 1 provided singing entertainment for the reception, on to Commons, and finally to the Gelb Reception Area of the Athletic Complex for dancing to the music of Hart Leavitt's orchestra. Trustee President Mel Chapin '36, presided as toastmaster, and Trustee R. L. Ireland, III '38, reminisced humorously about Fred's past—as a teacher of history at Governor Dummer, his career from PFC to Captain in the Marines, his work as a member of the Republican Central Committee in California—all before accepting John Kemper's invitation in 1951 to join the Andover administration.

Mel Chapin announced the establishment by the Trustees of the Frederic A. and Georganne S. Stott Fund and presented Fred with tributes from his admirers, and gifts, including his office desk.

Former headmaster Theodore Sizer highlighted Fred's achievements and praised him for his loyalty to institution and community. Sizer cited that "in terms of today's dollars, Fred Stott has raised about $100,000,000 for Andover . . . through an uncanny sense of the possible; conviction; integrity; and endless patience"; Sizer wondered if Fred's next career might be in politics.

Fred's Female Fans (Sandy Urie Thorpe AA '70, Ann Caldwell, Carol Hardin Kimball AA '53, and Betsy Parker Powell AA '56) serenaded him with a song highlighting 'Fireball' Stott's illustrious past, his baseball and fund-raising careers.

In his remarks Fred thanked his many friends and his family, and he spoke of four teachers who have meant a great deal to him: Ann Caldwell, who was Associate Director of the Bicentennial Campaign and taught him that "men and women engaged in a good enterprise work with each other as equals, as partners, and with resultant success"; Sandy Thorpe AA '70, Associate Secretary of the Academy, fellow worker on the Bicentennial Campaign, and organizer and manager of the Office of Academy Resources, "at the very heart of her, the quality which attracts responsibility"; Nan Stott, "her lessons centering on the fundamental concepts of human decency, compassion and understanding"; and Don McLean '28, past president of the Board of Trustees, "who has showed a conviction for things of value, the work of Phillips Academy, and a belief that the good instincts in man outweigh the bad, but by a narrow margin—therefore exertions for the good are important"; and a look forward to the company of a fifth great teacher, Susan Comstock, Fred's bride on June 20.

tensive resources, we will have to adjust our program, our plant, our activities to the new realities of the changing economics . . . I do not see these changes affecting the quality of the Andover experience. The school may be a little less extensive in the range of course electives or the number of activities, but I assure you the quality of the experience will be constant.

The school administration and Trustees are now embarking on a year of long-range planning for the school, including decisions about the future of the Abbot campus . . . This plan's effort will assess and establish Andover's course for the 1980s.

Headmaster McNemar set three goals for Andover:

"One priority which must remain primary in our considerations of these issues will be to maintain the opportunity for young people from all backgrounds and financial situations to study here . . . and hopefully expand the scholarship program.

"As a second goal, Andover must have the strength to continue to lead in a time of national need in education;" here McNemar cited the national models established by the Academy's English Competence program, its Visual Studies program developed by the Addison Gallery/Art Department, and most recently the summer (MS)² Program, Math and Science for Minority students. Finally, he said, academic excellence must always be the goal of Andover—"a national high school of talented youth preparing to contribute to society on all levels and in all sectors."

most of the past year. Chaired by Alumni Council President William Rosenau '47, this Committee contributed valuable assistance to Headmaster McNemar by giving wide notice of the availability of the position and then interviewing scores of individuals interested in it. Its membership included: Bruce A. Hughes '68, R.L. Ireland, III '38, Raymond A. Lamontagne '53, David S. Paresky '56, Elizabeth Parker Powell '56, John Richards, II and Sandra Urie Thorpe '70.

Commenting on the choice of Mesics, Raymond A. Lamontagne '53 said, "No one holds a candle to Joe Mesics when it comes to loyalty and dedication. Further, his wife Sandi is a superb companion and partner and will be a great asset to the Andover campus. When I served as Alumni Council President in 1972-73 and we were soliciting alumni opinion on the question of coeducation, the letter which Joe Mesics wrote was the most sensitive and thoughtful communication I received. I am confident he will make a fine Secretary!"

Lamontagne also recalled that, "In the fall of 1952 when Joe was a starting guard on our undefeated football team the school had a special cheer for him. The cheerleaders would yell, "Let's give a growl for 'Angry Joe,'" and the whole student body would growl! He was known as 'Angry Joe' because he was tough, determined, and had a fierce loyalty to the team and to the school. He was a real team leader and these qualities will hold him in good stead in his new job."

The announcement of Mesics' appointment must also include the impressive record he has compiled in his home community of Lebanon, Pennsylvania. Service has been his byword. While he is a partner in the law firm of Henry, Beaver, Wolf & Mesics in Lebanon, he has been widely active in the community, serving importantly for St. Luke's Episcopal Church, the community library, the Lebanon School Committee, and the Lebanon Lions Club. Additionally, for the past dozen years he has been Public Defender of Lebanon County. His colleagues in the community and in the judiciary speak in superlatives of his work in the courtroom and throughout the county.

Joe and Sandi Mesics, and their two children Joseph, Jr. and Laura Ann, will move into Moses Stuart House at Phillips Academy during the summer.

Three other important staff appointments to the Office of Academy Resources were also announced in May.

Sarah L. Craver becomes Associate Director of Annual Giving. In this role she will work closely with the Class Agents for the Alumni Fund and members of the Parent Giving Committee. She will assist Associate Secretary of the Academy Sandra U. Thorpe '70, who during the coming year, will serve on a half-time basis. A graduate of the University of Vermont and a recent recipient of a Master of Education degree in Administration from the Harvard Graduate School of Education, Sarah has served as an Intern at Andover during the past year. Already she is well known to a number of Class Agents for she was coordinator for the highly successful Alumni Fund telethons conducted in New York and Boston, as well as the six student telethons emanating from the Academy Offices in late May.

Joining the staff as Development Officer is Christopher L. Shaw, Andover '78 and Wesleyan '82. Active and well known in both theater and music at Andover, he completed his Wesleyan degree requirements in three-and-a-half years. Additionally he has had extensive experience in the Development Office of Wesleyan, playing an active role in fund-raising efforts which succeeded in doubling the Wesleyan Annual Fund over the last three years. At Andover, Chris Shaw will work closely with the Planned Giving Committee chaired by Philip M. Drake '43. He will also work on a variety of other projects relating to capital giving and including the Campaign for the Addison Gallery.

Jennifer McLean Cooke, Abbot 1973 and Dartmouth 1977, was appointed to the position of Data Base and Alumni Records Manager. In this role she will be responsible for work related to the computer, most especially the new Alumni Directory scheduled for publication late in the year. She will also have responsibility for the research function of the office. Her past experience includes work with two publishing companies and Boston University.

able movement among the American people to limit the means of destruction, the campaign to freeze and reduce the nuclear weapons of the world . . . The American people are awakening from a sleep of unconcern and are now emerging from "nuclear numbness" to face the reality that we could indeed make this planet uninhabitable for human life by engaging in nuclear war.

"Here at Phillips Academy you have wrestled with the ideals of justice and peace; you have been encouraged to care deeply about them; may you act to achieve their reality. As you leave Andover Hill, you take with you the two mottoes of this Academy: NON SIBI--not for self--but for others. May you bring justice to this divided world. FINIS ORIGINIS PENDET--the beginning determines the end. May this ceremonial ending, which is today's new beginning, lead all of us to live in a world at peace."

The seniors cheered their headmaster, and another cheer resounded in the skylit Cage at the words, "You are now alumni," when Trustee President Melville Chapin '36 had delivered their diplomas to class officers. The seniors formed their traditional circle around the running track above for distribution of diplomas--even one senior on a stretcher. Andrea Maier's back was broken in a riding injury two weeks before, but she did not miss her Andover graduation.

An Open Letter from Robert Walker

Dear Fellow Alumni, Alumnae and Friends:

We have been working hard on the 50th Anniversary Campaign for the Addison Gallery. This museum, founded 51 years ago by Thomas Cochran, has a world famous collection of 5,000 works of American art. The Gallery serves 25,000 people a year: the Phillips Academy students and faculty, and people from the Merrimack Valley, New England, and the nation at large. The quality of our collection is such that works are frequently borrowed by museums around the world. Four of our works by Thomas Eakins are featured in the superb Eakins' retrospective at the Philadelphia Museum which will travel on to Boston next fall. Winslow Homer's Eight Bells and Eakins' Portrait of Henry A. Rowland will tour the US and Europe from September 1983 to June 1984 in an important exhibition of American painting.

Last year in May we launched the Campaign for the Addison to raise $4.765 million dollars. It is the first major fund-raising effort in the museum's history and urgently needed.

The museum is open to the public free of charge and is totally dependent on its original endowment. But inflation has so diminished the endowment's purchasing power that the Director's annual budget for Acquisitions, once a princely sum with which to bid for major works of art, is no longer competitive. The Addison Gallery is a teaching museum, but although use of the building has continually increased, the Director's staff presently consists of only one assistant, and one part-time curator—each one of them exceptional, fortunately.

Conservation needs far exceed the available funds. This year, for example, funds had to be shifted from the program budget to meet urgent conservation priorities. The program for students at Phillips Academy was the vision Thomas Cochran had for the Addison Gallery and we must not allow this to be compromised. Holding students' interest requires a varied, changing program of exhibitions and events. The kind of exhibition schedule that Director Christopher C.

Cook would like to mount or bring to Andover is beyond the Addison's present means.

The Gallery's educational programs receive wide acclaim. Phillips Academy's Visual Studies program, a product of the Addison Gallery and the Art Department, is a national model for teaching people to observe and understand art. Students from other high schools come for training in Short Term Institutes winter and summer, and the Art Department runs Teacher Training Institutes as well. Excellent programs like these deserve support.

The Campaign for the Addison Gallery has currently raised just over $1.8 million of its goal. What have we accomplished?

The museum's roof, which was dangerously deteriorating, is being rebuilt thanks to generous support from two major donors. An Artist in Residence program has been wholly funded. Half the funds for a Curator/Art Historian have been raised.

But we have a long way to go and a short time left.

We must raise $2.9 million dollars by December 31, 1982.

There is far more we can tell you. I hope we have the opportunity before this Campaign ends.

If you can, please visit the museum and let Director Christopher C. Cook show you around. Our 300 volunteers would welcome your help on our Volunteer Committee for the 50th Anniversary Campaign. Josephine Bradley Bush '57 and Robert A. Feldman '54 are Co-Chairmen of the Committee and will be happy to explain to you what is involved.

We invite your participation in this effort for Phillips Academy. Please consider how you can help us and let me know. Whatever support you can give us will be profoundly appreciated.

Sincerely,
Robert M. Walker '28

The Andover bookshelf this summer bursts with a wonderful variety of good reading that comes trailing clouds of critical praise. An Andover alumnus wrote so compellingly about computer engineers racing to build their electronic pyramid on deadline that he has won the nonfiction Pulitzer Prize and the American Book Club Award (See profile, p00). A new faculty member's murder mystery set in Russia is called "far superior to Gorky Park" by the Chicago Tribune's reviewer. Another alumnus' roaring romance of Massachusetts politics, passion, priests and textile strikes in the Depression is a Literary Guild Alternate Selection that critic/author John Gardner calls "stunning . . . a mountain of a book." Where you publish, let us know. The best way is to send us a copy, which will come to rest in the Alumni Collection at Oliver Wendell Holmes Library.

'19 Logan, Sheridan A, George F. Baker and his Bank, 1840-55: a double biography NY, George F. Baker Trust, 1981.

'27 Hardy, C. Colburn, Dun & Bradstreet's Guide to Your Investments, 1982. NY, Harper & Row, 1982.

The style doesn't vary much from volume to volume of this serial, but the subject matter holds unflagging interest for many!

'28 Mendenhall, Thomas, A Short History of Rowing, Charles River Books, Boston, 1982. Here is clear pleasurable prose, with excellent illustrations, about rowing in America from its beginnings in the late 18th century to the 1980's with race results and records. Long before he retired as president and professor of history at Smith College, Tom Mendenhall was writing about rowing; this one was written "out of the conviction that those who enjoy rowing should know its history."

'34 Belcher, C. Francis, Logging Railroads of the White Mountains, Boston, Appalachian Mountain Club, 1980. The Journal of Forest History calls this "outstanding . . . a first-rate addition to both forest and railroad history."

'35 Adams, Alexander B., The Disputed Lands New York, NY, G.P. Putnam & Sons, 1981. An account of the Far West, from the Rockies to the Pacific from the time of the arrival of the first Europeans to the end of the frontier.

'41 Wood, Orrin, Your Hidden Assets, the Key to Getting Executive Jobs, Dow Jones-Irwin, 1981. This book results from alumnus Wood's experience as co-founder of a workshop for executive job hunters, which has in the past ten years served over 1000 people, mostly Harvard Business School Graduates. Good recession reading.

'53 Oliver, Raymond D., Entries, Boston, David R. Godine, A first book of poems, published in the 4th Godine Poetry Chapbook series; these are scholarly in nature and traditional in form.

'54 Lippard, Lucy, Ad Reinhardt, NY, Harry N. Abrams, 1981. The New York Times calls this monograph on the Minimal artist "not only the best thing anyone has written about Reinhardt's paintings and the ideas that animated them, but it is also one of the best books we have on an American artist."

'55 Loosigian, Allan, Interest Rate Futures. Homewood IL, Dow Jones-Irwin, 1980. Foreign Exchange Futures. Dow Jones-Irwin, 1981.

'58 Hamilton, William, The Love of Rich Women, Boston. Houghton Mifflin, 1981. Cartoonist and playwright Hamilton's first novel is of the same stuff as his cartoons—a satire of the very rich, eastern variety, seen by a knowledgeable western eye. There's a bird-watching quality to Hamilton's observations of these specimens, and sharp attention to plumage and calls.

63 Foster, John B. Heirs to Dionysus, A Nietzschean Current in Literary Modernism, Princeton University Press, Princeton, NJ, 1981. Foster's examination of Nietzsche as a stimulating but troubling force and the response of such modernists as Gide, D.H. Lawrence, Malraux and Mann.

'66 Tresemer, David W., Splitting Firewood, Hand & Foot, Ltd., Brattleboro, VT, 1981. One reviewer calls this "a thrill on an unlikely topic—how to split firewood . . . a book whose importance goes beyond its almost trivial subject and shows us an emerging way of looking at the world."

'68 Daly, Martin W. and P.M. Hall, The History of the Sudan From the Coming of Islam to the Present Day, Third Edition, 1979, The Weidenfeld and Nicolson Asia-Africa Series, London, England. In this new edition, 20th century Sudanese history has been rewritten in the light of new source materials and a greater body of research available.

Although not an Andover graduate, Sidney Lovett's life was woven to this school through his marriage to Esther Parker, Abbot '08, his long service as a Trustee of Abbot, his sermons to Andover students in Cochran Chapel, his friendship with many of them later at Yale and with his close association with those who have cared deeply about both Abbot and Phillips Academy. Many graduates of Andover, and Andover's Protestant Chaplain and English Instructor Philip Zaeder, Yale '58 have contributed short pieces in the section, "Uncle Sid Remembered."

The Soul of a New Machine by Tracy Kidder. Boston, Atlantic-Little, Brown 1981

In The Soul of a New Machine Tracy Kidder records the odyssey of Tom West and his crew of young engineers in their quest to create a powerful, complicated and profitable mini-computer—a machine more advanced than any other on the market. Although non-fiction, this odyssey, like its Homeric prototype is enriched with philosophical questioning and captivating digressions that complement the exciting drama that unfolds.

Dubbed by his men, "a prince of darkness," Tom West is the motivating genius behind Project Eagle. As inscrutable as he is magical, West is appropriately drawn as a descendant of the great mythic and popular heroes. With Ahab's passionate monomania, Odysseus' wisdom and breadth of character and Clint Eastwood's taciturn audacity, West pushes himself and his men to do the impossible—to build a computer in a year. Driven by a Faustian longing, West seems to want to reach beyond the limits of flesh and blood: "I always wanted to do something like this," he says, "build something larger than myself."

The price of such hubris is steep, particularly for the eclectic West. A folksinger and wanderer at heart, his commitment to his momentous task drains his body and spirit. Midway through the saga, his wife comments, "Why is he doing this? He belongs in the woods somewhere canoeing and appreciating nature. He doesn't belong here." Nonetheless, West is ennobled by the depth and power of his commitment, as well as by the success he achieves. By the end of the book one feels that West, for the short time he led his men in building the machine, truly reached heroic proportions.

West's crew is similarly ennobled. From a sundry group of college kids they are transformed into a team welded together by a common passion. In "signing up," the initiation rite each of them passed through, they agreed to give their hearts and souls to the job. Often abandoning family, friends, hobbies and other "distractions," they sacrificed much of themselves and their lives to their job. "It was like signing up for a suicide mission," said one of West's right hand men, "you're gonna die, but you're gonna die in glory."

Though they operated in the business world where money is purportedly the bottom line, few, if any of these people worked eighty hour weeks (with no overtime) just for pay. Moreover, their company, Data General, then a small struggling company, could not afford to pay them the kind of salaries they would command at IBM or other corporate giants. The lure for these ambitious engineers was the promise to be in the thick of the action. Unlike the bigger more stratified corporations, Data General offered them a chance to see what they were worth and make a visible impact though still fresh out of school. By the time the machine got "out the door," each man and woman felt that he or she had had a personal part in "breathing life" into the Eclipse MV/8000.

With poetic insight and lyric sensitivity, Mr. Kidder bursts the stereotype of engineers as narrow, bloodless people. One emerges from the tale filled with a sense of wonder about the strange process and the mysterious machine that was created, but most of all about the people themselves, whose vision, passion and dedication attest to the power of the human psyche. Furthermore, for neophytes in the computer world, the book is a must, for it explains in laymen's terms what Robert Pirsig, author of Zen And The Art Of Motorcycle Maintenance, describes as "all the incredible complexity and chaos and exploitation and loneliness and strange, half-mad beauty of this field . . ." The Soul of a New Machine is a stunning book, a moving story of man and his machines in the age of technology.

Jericho by Anthony Costello. N.Y. Bantam Books, 1982, 512 pp.

Already a successful painter, and actor, Anthony Costello now has produced a fast-moving, big, first novel that will be a great summer read. Jericho is a colorful novel of the Depression packed with memorable people and rich in the detail of life in the '30s in a textile mill town in Massachusetts. Harriet Hoskins' turbulent relationships with Elliot Phelps, the rich mill owner's son, and Patrick Flynn, the almost-priest turned editor, is set in the texture of Catholic-Protestant resentments, a brewing textile strike, and Massachusetts politics swirling around the Roosevelt-Landon presidential campaign. Over the radio come FDR's Fireside Chats, Father Coughlin's rantings, and the first news of the Spanish Civil War.

The sexual and political tensions between Harriet, Elliot and Patrick, and the foibles of their families, could be prolonged into a superb PBS TV series; the wealth of characters is here, and Gert Flynn, Patrick's bigger-than-life mother, probably would demand a series of her own. Some scene shifts in Jericho seem too-coincidental, placing the fiery Harriet athwart every significant happening of the era; yet character and setting ring true in this Literary Guild Alternate Selection. Andover readers get the bonus of dozens of familiar landmarks: Old day student Costello sets his town of Jericho on Lake Cochewick just outside of the mill city of "Leverett."

Murder at the Red October by Anthony Olcott. Academy Chicago, 1981. US, Canada, Bantam Books, 1982, 244 pp.

W.H. Auden described the reading of detective stories as an addiction, like tobacco or alcohol. Among the symptoms of this particular addiction is, according to Auden, that the reader forgets the story as soon as he has finished it and has no wish to read it again. As a long-term addict, I can testify the Murder at the Red October is a good fix (from the first page, both the plotting—"Oh, Ivan Palych, you'd better come, there's trouble, oh, such trouble . . ."—and the wry wit—"It was still night, and in Moscow, in December, that pinned the time down to within fifteen hours."—engage one fully); and as a sometime reader of non-detective fiction, I can testify that the book is memorable and will repay additional readings. The main characters—Duvakin, detective in spite of himself; and Tanya, his friend and lover—are interesting and deftly drawn—and the minor characters varied and convincing. There is the feel of Chekhov about this story: the basically dull, basically good-hearted man who gets pulled into situations the complexity of which he cannot fully appreciate; the sense of atmosphere—samovars and smoke and vodka and motives within motives; and the positive feelings toward humanity which the main characters, in spite of their failings, evoke in the reader.

Be on the lookout for May Day in Magadan, English Instructor Olcott's second book, now in the final stages of revision.

The University and the Public Interest by A. Bartlett Giamatti '56. NY, Atheneum, 1981.

A. Bartlett Giamatti is an articulate spokesman for higher education in its current time of crisis. In an era when colleges and universities face a range of difficult choices, Giamatti—the nineteenth president of Yale University—has articulated goals and priorities as few others have. The University and the Public Interest brings together under one cover the major addresses of the first years of his presidency. At the heart of these thirteen speeches lies a deep concern for a nearly-forgotten process—liberal education. Giamatti reminds us that higher learning is more than fancy pre-professional training—it is a quest for a style of understanding and a style of action that fits us to be citizens of "a civil society." Giamatti's pleas for liberal education and the private university can not be mistaken for similar statements by college presidents of the 1950s and '60s. He describes with forceful eloquence the effects on higher education of federal government regulations, the student movement of the late '60s and early '70s, the disappearing market for young Ph.D.s, and those twin enemies, inflation and demographic change. Bart Giamatti is a man of strong convictions, and many will take exception to one or another of the ideas expressed in this book. But no one will deny that this collection represents one of the most important statements on private higher education at a time when such statements are sorely needed.

Old Lessons for a Deadly New Age

In his Fuess Award address of May 17, John Monro tells how "a remarkable set of ideas of how to change human attitudes and entrenched institutions" that inspired Tolstoi, Gandhi and Martin Luther King—and surely Monro himself—came out of a chance set of circumstances and bounded around the world before it returned to this country, with power.

by John U. Monro

Jack Fuess was one of my favorite teachers. Some thirty or more of us met him in Senior English every day in one of the big sunny rooms in Pearson Hall. I remember him as a cheerful, energetic man of medium height, in a tweed suit, who stood square before us on the little platform, talking in staccato bursts, his left knee jerking back and forth, nervously rubbing the palm of his hand across his bald head. I recall also that we plowed with distaste through some pretty heavy, traditional stuff, like Milton's "Lycidas" and "Il Penseroso." But Jack Fuess was always energetic and upbeat, and despite the heavy stuff, we learned a lot about making good precise notes, and about clear writing

One idea he had I want to develop a bit further this morning. Fuess said: "Education does not always have its source in school and college. . . . Books and lectures are important, but so are travel and hardship, and worship and love, and all the diversified experiences of our earthly pilgrimage."

I would go further. I believe that the most important things a man or woman learns do not come from formal schooling but from experience, from contact with other people, from self-directed and self-initiated reading and thinking, from struggling with real-life problems, from hitting on new ideas.

In trying to pursue this idea with you today I have two basic circumstances in mind.

First, in ways that have begun to frighten us, all of mankind seems to be rushing pell-mell toward massive dislocations and tragedy. There is the awful threat posed by nuclear weapons in a world splintered into sovereign, often ambitious and bellicose nations. There are the appalling problems of stark poverty and hunger in underdeveloped countries. We have lots of anxiety, but no real idea, about what our scientists are up to in fooling around with our genes. The list could go on.

Underneath it all we need to be aware from what is happening around the world, that the kind of democracy, of freedom, that we enjoy in the U.S.A., seemingly so traditional and secure, is in fact a rare and fragile condition, and may well be overwhelmed if our institutions fail to deal with the problems that lie ahead.

The second circumstance I have in mind, as I look at you all in this room, is that each of you—by level of intelligence, by the educational opportunities here beginning to open up for you—you are rich and favored beyond measure. And being rich in intelligence and opportunity lays upon you the responsibility to tackle with brains and energy the terrifying problems that lie out there ahead of us.

Let me put it another way. Considering the consequences for humanity, for yourselves, for your children, do you want to have a hand in solving the grave problems, or do you want to turn them over to the waiting totalitarianism and military juntas?

Now, what I have seen of the world persuades me that the necessary fundamental solution to most of the major problems threatening humanity depends not so much on our learning more science, or math, or history, but rather on learning how to change deeply entrenched human attitudes: habits of mind about national sovereignty, national pride or territoriality; habits of mind which we call chauvinism, or religious bigotry, or racism, or sexism; habits of mind arising from materialism and personal comfort, which lead us to seek posh jobs or flee to the suburbs, and to turn our backs on the poor and the oppressed.

Do you think I exaggerate about this need to change attitudes? I watch my old friends in science, friends like George Kistiakowsky, great Harvard chemist who helped make the first A-bomb. What George Kistiakowsky is desperately trying to do now is to change people's traditional attitudes about nationalism and war, before it is too late.

So I want to talk briefly about a remarkable set of ideas that has been bouncing around the world for over a hundred years, and which has come to have a revolutionary impact in our time. The ideas I have in mind are contained in Henry Thoreau's Essay on Civil Disobedience.

I am fascinated by everything about Thoreau's essay, how he discovered the ideas, sort of stumbled on them really, how the ideas were virtually ignored in the U.S.A., but were picked up by Leo Tolstoi and others in Europe, were passed on to Mohandas Gandhi in South Africa about 1905, and finally came home again to the U.S.A. through the mind of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

In 1846, Henry Thoreau, aged 29, nine years out of Harvard, was rightly regarded by his Concord neighbors as the village eccentric, bright but odd. Henry was halfway through his two-year experiment of living by himself away from people and close to nature at Walden Pond. On a July evening he walked to town to pick up some shoes at the cobbler shop, and he was confronted by Sam Staples, the local constable and tax collector. Henry had not paid any poll taxes for several years because he hated the idea of slavery, and he did not see paying taxes to a government that supported the slave system. Sam Staples was an old friend, but he had a duty to perform. He demanded the tax. Henry refused to pay. So then and there Sam shut Henry up in the town hoosegow until payment should be received.

Henry found that his cellmate was a man accused of burning down a barn. Henry had a long talk with the man, became fascinated with being in jail, and settled down, as he fancied, to a dramatic protest against slavery.

But alas, next morning Henry's family got the news, and his Aunt Maria rushed down and paid the tax. When Sam Staples went to let Henry out, he found his prisoner was "mad as the devil" to have his protest cut short. But once again Sam did his duty, and he kicked Henry out of jail. Grumbling away, Henry picked up his shoes at the cobbler shop and walked back to Walden Pond.

The good folk of Concord were naturally curious about why Henry had gone to jail, so two years later he obliged with a lecture at the town Lyceum, a talk entitled "The Relation of the Individual to the State." As it turned out, Henry's chance meeting with old Sam Staples and being in jail overnight had led Henry Thoreau to some far-reaching conclusions.

To be brief about it, Thoreau asserted that the majority rules through the government, not because it is right, but because it is physically the strongest. When a citizen finds that a law of the state is in conflict with his conscience, he should obey his sense of right and wrong, the law of God.

mention," she wrote, "that for years Abbot contributed to the Hindman Settlement School and, sent the most wonderful Christmas boxes you could imagine. They dressed any number of dolls most expertly; and they were received with open arms by all the girls, and once in a while a very masculine small boy would beg for one"

"My children' are now doctors, lawyers, preachers, teachers, engineers and on and on," Miss Watts wrote for the Andover students. "They write to me and come to see me. They give me great joy and contentment The best wish I could make for the members of the Senior Class is that their life work might be as happy as mine has been."

John Monro, Dean of Harvard College 1958-67, left that post to become Director of Freshman Studies and teacher of writing at Miles College, Birmingham, Alabama, for 11 years; since then he has taught writing in a similar Basic Studies program at Tougaloo College, Jackson, Mississippi, where he is Lawrence Durgin Professor of Writing. He is a trustee of the Southern Education Foundation and of Tougaloo College, and is a Charter Trustee of Phillips Academy, where he is known, Headmaster Donald McNemar noted, for being "the conscience of the Board." In honoring John Monro with its degree of Doctor of Humane Letters, Amherst College's former president, John Ward, said: "Why would one move from the serene security of Harvard Yard to sooty, segregated Birmingham? We at Amherst pay you public homage not because you moved, but because you stayed."

What these two teachers had to say about their work was also similar. Ninety-two-year-old Elizabeth Watts, Fuess Award Assembly in Cochran Chapel: Marcia Dana Eastham representing Elizabeth Watts, Don McNemar, John Monro.

Thoreau said: If ten just men—if only one—went to jail on such a moral issue, the effect would arouse hundreds of other citizens to follow the lead. He said: "A minority is powerless when it conforms to the majority; but is irresistible when it clogs by its whole weight." If a thousand men did not pay their tax bill it would be a peaceable revolution, and the state would have to give in. Thoreau said: The problem is, most people just go along with the system, no matter if it is wrong, and what is needed is leaders who are willing to take a moral stand, and "leaven the whole lump." He said: "Any man more right than his neighbor constitutes a majority of one already."

All this was heady stuff, but the lecture got little attention in the U.S.A., except that it was finally published in an obscure magazine.

Years later and thousands of miles away, Thoreau's ideas made an impact on the great Russian writer, Leo Tolstoy.

Most of us tend to think of Leo Tolstoy as probably the world's greatest novelist, author of War and Peace and Anna Karenina. But today I want to speak briefly of two other aspects of Tolstoy's remarkable life that exemplify some of my thoughts for you today.

First it is important to know that at age 50, at the peak of his fame as a novelist, Tolstoy experienced a profound religious conversion. For the remaining thirty years of his life he devoted his main intellectual and personal efforts, not to writing novels, but to comprehending, writing about, and trying to put into practice in his daily life, what his studies told him were the true meanings of Christ's teachings in the New Testament. To cut through the false overlays of church doctrine, Tolstoy went back and retranslated the Gospels, and from what he learned there, produced book after book developing and expounding his new religious views. Central to all his convictions was his understanding that the core of Christ's teaching was an absolute commandment to "non-violent non-resistance to evil."

Tolstoy's convictions led him into one confrontation after another with the tyranny of the Russian state and of the Orthodox church. He was finally excommunicated by the church. The other surprising aspect of Tolstoy's life is the degree to which, seemingly isolated on his country estate 100 miles south of Moscow, he kept in touch with ideas from all over the world, and engaged in a worldwide correspondence. He was fluent in English as well as other languages, and he kept up with major religious and philosophical trends in the U.S.A. Late in the 19th Century he picked up on Thoreau's ideas, and found them helpful in his struggle to establish Christian non-violent resistance as a force for change in Russia. And in 1909 he entered into correspondence with a young Indian lawyer, Mohandas Gandhi, aged 25, who was then living in South Africa.

Gandhi, though involved in a law practice, was already struggling with a deep religious conversion of his own, and had begun his first major civil rights struggle, an effort to improve the status of Indian nationals living in South Africa. Gandhi initiated the correspondence with Tolstoy because his own religious thinking had been much affected by Tolstoy's published work on non-violence. Gandhi had already been acquainted with Thoreau's work by friends in England, and Tolstoy added to that impetus early on in their correspondence by sending Gandhi a copy of Thoreau's Essay on Civil Disobedience.

In 1913, after achieving a measure of success with the strategy of non-violent resistance in South Africa, Gandhi moved back home to India, and took on the incredible task of changing not only the imperialistic attitudes of the British, but the hatreds of India's Hindu and Muslim communities for each other, and the deeply entrenched prejudices of all upper caste Indians against the Untouchables.

Through all this extraordinary continent-wide effort, that went on for 35 years, Gandhi had a copy of Thoreau's little essay close at hand.

In his turn, Martin Luther King, Jr., picked up on Gandhi's use of Thoreau's ideas when he was a graduate student at Crozer Divinity School, struggling to keep his Christian non-violent ideas intact under the impact of reading Nietzsche. Dr. King said he happened to hear a public lecture on Gandhi, and was so excited he ran out and bought six of Gandhi's books on Satyagraha (Love Force) and its revolutionary power to change attitudes.

King said: "Gandhi was probably the first person in history to lift the love ethic of Jesus above mere interaction between individuals, to a powerful and effective social force on a large scale. It was in this Gandhian emphasis on love and non-violence that I discovered the method of social reform I had been seeking."

So, five years later when Dr. King was a fashionable young preacher in Montgomery, Alabama, and the moment of crisis came on how to conduct the bus boycott, Dr. King was ready with a sound philosophical basis for leading black men and women to begin to overcome three centuries of oppression by a strategy of strict non-violent resistance and civil disobedience.

Everywhere King went, through all his demonstrations, he carried a copy of Thoreau's essay. He moved non-violent resistance into Birmingham in 1963, and he won. He moved into Selma in 1965, and won. He kept on. He finally tried it again in 1968 in Memphis, in a combination of white and black workers, but this was getting too close to the bone of the power structure, so he was killed. Dr. King knew that would happen someday. The only question was when. But he kept on.

We need to recall today that Martin King in his day tackled desperate, deep-rooted and apparently intractable problems that threatened our society. He made each one of us, black or white, a freer man or woman, free from ancient shackles of prejudice and hatred.

So now it is our turn, yours and mine, and as we well know, the problems ahead that we must confront and work through are just as desperate and dangerous as the problems

Martin King faced.

None of us can be sure that Thoreau's ideas that worked so powerfully for Gandhi and King will work for us. But if you agree with any part of my premise that we need to find ways of making, as rapidly as we can, drastic changes in wide-spread, ancient, disastrously anachronistic attitudes of mind, then perhaps you will also agree that the study of Henry Thoreau's essay and its remarkable odyssey may be a good place to start.

I know now that Andover can be a good place to begin. I discovered yesterday, with great pleasure, that Rabbi Gendler will offer next year a course for uppers and seniors on Non-violence in Theory and Practice. I will close simply by noting that in my opinion such a course could well be the most important you will ever take in school or college. And if you cannot take the course, or don't want to, for whatever reason, please remember what I have tried to say today about getting into important ideas on your own. Get hold of Rabbi Gendler's course outline and reading list and go at it the best way to learn anything: Do it yourself.

could not be there, but her message was eloquently carried by her friend and colleague at Hindman, Marcia Dana Eastham (mother of William '43, John '45, Dana '49, and Nancy, Abbot '55): "When you are approaching your 92nd birthday, having had a happy life, living with people you liked and doing work you enjoyed it is hard to believe you are being given a prestigious award for it. I loved my work because I liked and enjoyed the people."

John Monro told students gathered in Cochran Chapel for the Fuess Award Assembly: "I am doing what I enjoy most in the world, and am personally enriched by the whole experience as never before in my life. Why I should get a medal for this, as well as monthly paycheck, is a mystery to me."

Faculty Appointments

When the Trustees met in May, they elected two faculty members to Teaching Endowments and another to a three-year Bicentennial Instructorship. Each endowment carries additional income for expenditures for educational purposes to be used at the discretion of the appointee. The appointments:

Thomas T. Lyons, Chairman of the Department of History and Social Sciences, to the third Independence Foundation Teaching Endowment, a faculty chair created by the grant of the Independence Foundation this past academic year. (The first and second Independence Foundation faculty chairs are held by Robert A. Lloyd and Frank M. Eccles.)

George William Best, Instructor in Mathematics, to the John Mason Kemper Teaching Endowment vacated by Thomas Lyons.

Henry Bond Wilmer, Jr., Instructor in French, to the John H. Porter, Jr., Bicentennial Instructorship held for the past three years by English Instructor Elwin Sykes.

In addition, the Trustees appointed K. Kelly Wise to a one-year term as Dean of the Faculty, 1982-83, during Jack Richards' sabbatical year.

Trustee action

At their May meeting the Trustees postponed a decision on the new equipment purchase and upgrading for WPAA-FM requested by officers of the student radio station to operate under its newly acquired 25-watt license. The Trustees first want a clear statement of support from the administration after an assessment of both the student radio station's capabilities for substantive programming and the school's capabilities of providing the engineering and staffing necessary. Trustee President Melville Chapin '36 said the Board will be very willing next fall to invest in WPAA as an education venture if they can be sure of "some substantial content, making it more educational."

An investment of $300,000 was approved in additional energy conservation measures to continue the program by the Office of Energy and the Office of Physical Plant that has saved the Academy more than 12,500 barrels of fuel oil and $400,000 in the past two years.

The Trustees heard that the Addison Campaign, with six months to go, was just over one-third of the way to its goal. The Board voted to go ahead with rebuilding the Gallery's roof, for which funds now have been fully pledged. Still needed: endowment funds for what goes on under that roof: the Addison's program for students and its other constituencies, staffing, preservation of works of art, are among the critical needs.

Cantata and Theater Spring Tours

Florentines hear the Chorus and Orchestra in Santa Trinita.

by William Thomas

The Cantata Choir, some 40 students selected by audition, and the Cantata Chamber Orchestra, 20 students selected from the Academy Chamber Orchestra, had a triumphant concert tour this past March in Italy during spring vacation. They visited Venice, Florence, Rome, Sorrento and Siena, and sang in St. Peter's Square in Rome. All of the cities had their special charms, but the group's visit to Florence and Rome represented the zenith of the tour.

On our arrival in Florence, we found gigantic green posters splashing the name of Phillips Academy all over the city. They publicized our weekend concerts in the church Santa Trinita and in the Palazzo Vecchio. In between, the town fathers of Florence put on a simply fantastic reception for the orchestra and chorus in a mediaeval palace and its gardens near the Duomo. Besides presentations and thank yous, the Florentines had a vast array of sandwiches and Italian goodies for students who already had been sampling "gelati" in every corner of the city. On Sunday morning, the Brass Ensemble and Fidelio Society participated in morning worship at St. James Church, and a concert that evening after our afternoon concert in the Piazza della Signoria.

In Rome, staying near the Colosseum and Palatine Hill, we performed at the Vatican, participating in the Pope's Wednesday audience outdoors in St. Peter's Square. The drama of Bernini's great design, throngs of people, and the Pope himself created an impression none of us will ever forget. That same evening we gave a concert at All Saints' Church, the Anglican congregation in Rome, which gave us another wonderful reception after the concert.

It is impossible to convey the tremendous warmth of our reception throughout our Italian tour. This, combined with seeing some of the world's great monuments and art works, sampling all sorts of wonderful food, and having the chance to work, grow and share our musical talent, made for all of us a truly great experience during the spring vacation weeks.

We owe deep thanks to many parents of our musicians, whose generous gifts to a music tour fund made it possible for scholarship students in the group to make the trip. The musicians themselves raised the initial funds through candy sales during fall and winter term, and by giving outside concerts.

Dramatists Play Wilder in England

by H. H. Owen '43

In March, 13 students and three faculty members left Logan International, Boston, and flew to Heathrow, London, for an 18-day visit during spring vacation. For this, the tenth such visit to British schools, the players brought Thornton Wilder's Pulitzer-Prize winning The Skin of Our Teeth, the somewhat farcical comic-strip account of survival, and presented it to enthusiastic audiences. We staged it at Manchester Grammar School and again at Dulwich College, two top-ranking British secondary schools (like most British Public Schools, still all-male). Accompanying the tour were Timothy Hillman and Mr. and Mrs. H.H. Owen.

Hosted by the parents of students at the two schools, the Andover visitors had first-hand experience with British education and culture. As always, our British hosts were warm and generous. Andover had a chance to reciprocate when Manchester Grammar School visited us in April with their production of She Stoops to Conquer.

The Andover Touring Company spent the last few days in London, visiting museums, historical attractions and especially gorging themselves on theatre, including three plays at the National, one in each of the three magnificent theatres.

As school president, Bob Weisbach will lead the newly established 15-member Student Council, representing all classes and both boarding and day students. Headmaster McNemar looks to the Council for broad responsibility for coordinating programs among students.

ships in meeting their Andover tuitions. Families with incomes of $30,000 - $70,000 will be eligible next year for loans at 12% interest up to $6000. Last year the eligibility range was $20,000 - $60,000 and the loan limit $4500. Also approved was a new policy on divorced parents; beginning in 1983-84, both parents will be responsible for tuition. Neilson noted that although tuition has risen by 14% to $8200 for the coming academic year, financial aid has risen by 20%. The school's aid budget now is more than $2,000,000 in grants alone, covering approximately 21.6% of the total tuition costs.

Long-term planning will come to a head a year from now when the Board meets in July of 1983. After the Trustee meeting, Headmaster McNemar said: "The Board is moving into a process of long-term planning and studying the size of the school, the nature of the curriculum and activities, the finances of the school and the use of the real estate in the old Abbot Campus." While the Trustees were here, the History and Social Sciences Department siphoned off some of their talent into the classroom. Trustee Thomas Wyman, who had been a member of President Carter's Commission on Hunger, took on a combined session of the Economics and the World Hunger classes, to discuss with them that commission's report. The following day Alumni Trustee Alexander Trowbridge '47, a former Secretary of Commerce, taught the Economics class, leading a discussion on different ways (i.e. Democratic or Republican) to come up with a federal budget. On Saturday morning, a group of students, including next year's elected student leaders, had breakfast with the Trustees.

to start and will extend through fall term, says Business Manager George Neilson. But the results of complete redesign and renovation inside will make a first-rate music center out of the Victorian campus landmark. "What had become an eyesore will be something of a jewel again," says Music Department Chairman William Thomas. "The orchestra and band rooms will have 45-50 foot ceilings again with exposed beams and wonderful acoustics. Graves will be a valuable center for the campus." The renovations will double the number of practice rooms in the building. "Now we don't have enough pianos for the rooms," says Thomas. "If any people out there have good pianos not in use they would like to donate to the school for students' practice or performance, I would be delighted to have them let me know." In the fall, while Graves is being completed, music classes will continue to meet in Cochran Chapel and practice in odd corners.

Computers—like Topsy

After school some 46 faculty from various departments enrolled in the Math Department's four-day Faculty Computer Workshop funded by an Abbot Academy Association grant. This departmental workshop offered three introductory courses in areas that the participants wanted to explore.

In Zab Warren's Introduction to Programming and Basic, 16 faculty members learned how to program on the school's Digital PDP 11/70 computer in the BASIC-PLUS language. By the end of four days, they were able to write small programs to manipulate alpha-numeric characters in both text-editing and cryptography.

Al Coons, an expert on micro-computers, offered fellow faculty members an overview of what the micros can do and some of the software available. He began by giving them an Apple Computer in parts, and showed them how to put it together. There were hands-on examples for everyone. David Penner had an eager clutch of teachers from nearly every department in the school for his word processing class. He called it a very practical course, "to help you do what you already do, more easily, if not better." His samples ranged from History 35 notes to a biology exam, to different ways a word processor can set up poetry, or student lists.

Math Department Chairman Dick Lux said that his Abbot Academy Association grant provided for, among other things, purchase and rental of equipment; now he and Librarian Lynne Robbins are working on plans to set up a micro-computer facility for word processing and computing in a room in the Oliver Wendell Holmes Library for faculty use.

Student interest in PA computer courses is soaring. In the '80-81 academic year, says Scheduling Officer Dave Penner, 40 students took a computer course. Last year there were 116. For the coming year, 188 students have signed up already. Last year there were two sections and an intermediate course. In the coming year there will be three sections and the intermediate course each trimester.

Curriculum Committee Chairman Nat Smith says that Andover's computer use has grown like Topsy: "We're beginning to ask ourselves the right questions about computers in the curriculum, not to speak of the school's growing use outside the classroom. What are our objectives in computer education? If our goal is computer literacy, how much should our approach be vocational and how much humanistic? Should computer instruction be independent of the math and science departments? Should we have a computer requirement? What impact would that have on other fields of study?"

Headmaster McNemar and Associate Headmaster Peter McKee have arranged for an independent consultant in computer systems to visit the school and help Andover assess its overall computer needs. This will be funded by Don McNemar's computer study grant from the Abbot Academy Association. Meanwhile, over in Evans Hall, McKee, as chairman of Andover's Science Division, has just hung the sign on the door of the new Roscoe E. Dake Computer Center with its half a dozen micro computers, made available for science students by the family and friends of the late Chemistry Instructor Emeritus Rocky Dake.

Cochran is 50

Cochran Chapel now holds 50 years of school year memories.

On its anniversary, May 14, a remarkable service of music, prayer, dance and Scripture in many tongues brought the school community together in a memorable way to rededicate the Chapel. The service also initiated a year-long festival of the Andover's record for the spring term was 77-40—.658 pct. The boys' tennis team highlighted male sports with another undefeated season, continuing their dominance of tennis at both the prep school and college levels. For the females, the girls' crew with six strong seniors rowed to a 6-0 record.

The boys tennis team out-slammed, out-served and out-classed their opponents this year to capture a 10-win, no-loss season. Coach Michael Lopes' team started off against a tough Choate squad with the edges of the courts still lined with snow from the April blizzard. The Blue emerged from that match with a tough but satisfying victory, and then proceeded to roll over all opponents bonds between religion and the expressive arts; students and faculty were invited—commissioned—to create artistic forms in many media to celebrate this; the winning works will be performed in a festive Cochran service a year hence. Highlighting the service were two organ compositions, and a talk, by Daniel Pinkham '40, who spoke to students with wisdom and great wit; he is one of the nation's foremost composers of music for the church, exemplifying the bonds between religion and the arts.

Maryellen Gurry

The sudden death June 9 of Daggy Gurry, 34, wife of History Instructor and Associate Athletic Director Christopher Gurry '66 and mother of Erin and Adam, is a terrible loss to our school community and to Pike School, where she was a superlative reading teacher, as well as to her family and wide circle of friends. She was a candid and understanding advisor to 10 years of students in the Gurrys' dormitories, Taylor Hall and Stearns House. Perceptive and direct, full of warmth and fun, Daggy will be sorely missed among us and among the Andover alumni, especially the Class of 1966.

Tennis ace Peter Palandjian to an undefeated season and a convincing Interschol win. The sensational brother tag team of Peter and Paul Palandjian, Jeff Koffman, Ming Tsai, and newcomer Joe Capella, led the team. Koffman-Tsai and Capella-Scott Gwozdz formed a pair of formidable doubles teams.

Kit Washburn's girls' crew took to the New England waters this spring a string of satisfying victories. Against Tabor, the first boat led by captain C. C. Richards left the competition far behind. Versus St. Pauls, the squad pulled a hat trick as all three boats speeded past their outmatched rivals. The squad continued their winning ways as they ran off triple-victories against Middletown, and Northfield-Mt. Hermon. Against NMH, the second boat, led by Lisa Crowther (daughter of Daniel F.S. '53) and oarswoman Thayer Tolles (daughter of Carolyn Kimball Tolles AA '58) emerged victorious by less than one second in the season's best race.

Something new happened to the girls' tennis squad this year—they finally lost a match. Beyond the one blemish at the hands of Choate, the squad put together an outstanding season under the tutelage of Coach Greg Wilken and Captain Jane Simoni. "We proved ourself as probably the strongest girls' team in the area," Wilken said. Along with Simoni, the team received fine play from four-year veteran Mary-Ann Somers, and seniors Ritchey Banker, Pearson Marx and Catherine Connor.

Under the direction of coaches Peter Washburn and Ron Minne and captain Neil Batt, the boys crew team ended their season with a 4-1 record. Batt, coxswain Devin Mahoney '82 (son of Frederick J. Jr. '53) and oarsman Steve Hochman each contributed greatly to their respective boats' fourth place finishes at the Interschols, which certainly pleased the coaches.

Girls' lacrosse ended the season 7-2-2, based particularly on the excellent efforts of seniors Mary Ogden, Sam Chivers, Katrina Sorenson, and Kathleen Kinsella. The team tied rival Exeter, 9-9 in the season finale, but the most exciting game was a 7-7 standoff with Governor Dummer.

With two minutes left, Andover trailed 7-5 only to see senior Patti Doykos (daughter of John D. III '55) take charge and score two goals in a one hundred and twenty second span.

Three-year pitching ace Tristin Bat-chelder, and co-captains Hilary Huber and Naomi Mulvihill led the girls' softball team to an unexpectedly superior 9-3 season. Coach Willand said, "Having lost the whole left side of the defense to graduation, I was very pleased with the addition and performance of new lowers Caroline Higgins and Kathy Mulvey." The softball team won a "tough" contest against Milton Academy and in a superb effort bounced back from 7-5 to beat Worcester Academy 17-10.

The greatest accomplishment of the boys' track team, with its 7-3 record, was to win the New England Prep School Championships for the third consecutive year by a convincing 37½ point margin. Many Andover athletes dominated events that May afternoon. Upper John Kim, next year's captain, and senior Rob Tuller placed first and second in the pole vault; lower Stefan Kaluzny won the 400-meter run, with Steve Wemple and upper Scoba Rhodes placing third and fourth; Wemple and Kaluzny returned to finish first and second in the 800-meter run. Seniors Femi Obi and Mike Tonneson '82 and Rhodes gained second, third, and fourth in the 200-meter run. In the final event of the afternoon, the Blue's 1600-meter relay team (Kaluzny, Mike McCauley '82, Rhodes and Wemple) smashed the old tournament record and posted a grueling :27.7 mark.

During the regular season two school records were established: Steve Donahue '82 in the Triple Jump (43 feet ½ inch) and Jim Moore '84 with a (9:01.4 minutes) in the 3000-meter run.

Under coach Rebecca McCann, the girls' track finished their season at 7-3, smashing four school records. Senior Meg Hall set records in the 400-meter and 300-meter hurdles, 61.7 seconds and 49.8 seconds. Moira Recesso '83, the captain for next year, raised the high jump record from 4'10" to 5'2". Joyce Burnett's 35'2" shot put throw also ranks number one at Andover now. Co-captains Londi Fannin '82 and Ashley Tobin '82 (Wallace E. III '55) were instrumental in the success of the team.

Several times during the season the boys' lacrosse team thrilled the Andover faithful. The most exciting game occurred against perennial Longmeadow, the Division One Lacrosse Champions. The Blue was down with thirty seconds remaining in the game. Suddenly Charles Gildehaus (son of Barbara Quimby, AA '59) took a pass, cut across the middle of the crease and rifled a shot past the Longmeadow goalie. The Andover faithful were on their feet and an electricity ran through the crowd. In overtime Coach Paul Kalkstein pulled out a trick play from his old college days. Defenseman Alec Hogg released from his position and sprinted downfield. The confused Longmeadow defense did not see Hogg receive a crisp pass from Gildehaus. Hogg with all his 6'6" frame fired a blinding shot past the unaware Longmeadow goalie. The unbelieving Andover crowd ran onto the field cheering their heroes.

Throughout, the lacrosse team had an excellent combination of offense and defense. Gildehaus and next year's captain Josh Steiner each had four-goal games. On defense, the Blue received outstanding play from newly-elected All-American Ralph Hartmann and New England Prep School All-Star Steve Moreland. The final record was 9-6.

Perhaps if the boys' golf team had used the special Maxfly golf balls which carry ten yards further, their 9-8-1 record would have improved considerably. This young team encountered a tough schedule; as a result they lost several close matches. The tough schedule did not fluster Captain Andrew Siderowf '83 who shot a team's best 72 (even par). For his efforts he received the Kazickus Cup (for the second consecutive year).

Four-year veteran captain Jon Pelletier '82 unquestionably the finest baseball player to grace the Andover outfield in several years, completed his final season batting .356 avg. Unfortunately Pelletier's bat could not help the young pitching staff as the Blue ended their season at 4-13. Coach Hale Sturges said that this team "suffered from a lack of pitching depth, inexperience and a perhaps over-ambitious schedule (8 games against College JV or Post-graduate studded teams)." However, this team captured a shocking 4-3 victory over the Harvard College JV—only the second Andover win over Harvard in sixteen years.

The up-and-coming sport of cycling under Coach Derek Williams showed that it is here to stay. Co-captains Frank Considine and John Morrell as well as Warren Zanes '83 helped the team to achieve second place in a fifteen-team competition in Vermont. Zanes certainly will help the team and the sport grow at Andover as captain next year.

Alumni-Varsity soccer game

Alumni soccer players interested in playing under Deke this fall against the boys' varsity team should circle Saturday, November 6 for the Alumni-Varsity Soccer Game. Notify the Athletic Office or Coach Meredith Price at Admissions now; give your fall address to be sure of getting a reminder and more information. Coaches Price and DiClemente want a big turnout for the game and the reception afterwards.

Alumnae soccer players: the girls' varsity already has a game that day. The next weekend, Sunday Nov. 14, (the day after Andover-Exeter football) the girls will be hosting the Andover-Exeter Invitational Soccer Tournament, so no alumnae game is possible this year. But if there is enough interest (let the Athletic Office know!) a game will be scheduled the following year.

DEATHS

The Reverend Alfred Graham Baldwin Gray Baldwin came to Andover in 1930 as "Instructor in Religion and Modern Life", to assist Buel Trowbridge whose course was called "Religion and Science" (and whose son is now an Alumni Trustee). He never gave up the classroom, but added the onerous duties of School Minister in 1934, continuing until his retirement in 1968. He died on June 25, 1982, after a retirement spent deeply involved in social service affairs.

His influence on the Academy was larger than we can estimate, even today. He was a trusted advisor to four headmasters, deeply and increasingly influential on the other members of the Faculty both individually and as a group, and to the undergraduates, a model of a transparently good man, enlightened and open-minded. Many of these probably learned less in his classroom than they did from the eye-opening trips which he took them on to such places as mental hospitals and jails, and from the social services in Lawrence that he made it possible for them to perform as volunteers. For the last, he was especially aided by the discretionary funds that became available when he was appointed to an Independence Foundation in 1965; from these funds he was able to pay for transportation to and from Lawrence—a seemingly trivial but actually essential expenditure.

Some of his colleagues thought him lax in discipline, and so he was. He was lax because of a firmly held point of view: few adolescents have fully developed characters; commonly, they learn by their misdeeds. The duty of the school is to help them learn, and a boy who shows penitence deserves a second chance. Gray's intervention saved many boys. Not even he could know how many.

Walter Gierasch

When Walter Gierasch joined the faculty in 1941, I was at the beginning of my teaching career, he nearing the height of his. We struck up a friendship which grew deeper through the years. When I returned from the war, we shared the two sides of Johnson Hall and many hours of conversation. He was a teacher's teacher. He knew exactly what he was doing and enjoyed sharing his enthusiasm for the profession. He insisted on precision, accuracy, succinctness and completeness of thought and expression. He was impatient of evasion and sloppiness. Yet to those who were willing to work to learn to read and write, he was a patient and friendly teacher. There are a great many former students who owe their effectiveness and clarity of expression to having sat with this best of taskmasters. Students living in his dormitory knew exactly where he stood and were the happier for that sense of structure. He was a fine photographer, a crisp and wise editor of the Bulletin, the conscience of the English Department. To these and all efforts he brought characteristic order, precision and commitment. When he retired in 1970 he and his wife Mary moved to Pacific Grove, California to be nearer his grandchildren. Our conversations continued by mail and telephone, for which I will always be grateful. In the fall of 1981 he discovered a fatal illness. This he faced with the directness and fortitude by which he lived. He died peacefully in his sleep March 26.

Patrick H. Morgan

Patrick Morgan, 78, painter, writer and teacher of art at Phillips Academy from 1940 until 1957, died June 11 at his home in La Malbaie, Quebec, where he had summered since 1932. A New York City native, he was graduated cum laude in 1926 from Harvard, where we were classmates. He studied art in Paris, where he painted and established lifelong friendships with many leading figures in literature and the art world, including Ernest Hemingway and Alexander Calder. Pat and Maud Morgan came to Andover as priests of the visual arts to help the program initiated when the Addison Gallery opened in 1931. He was instrumental in organizing at the Addison Gallery, the first major U.S. exhibition of Hans Hoffman. He was magnificently articulate—a truly great teacher—and his influence on students was in many cases the turning point in their lives. What Pat contributed was not only his sensitive one-to-one instruction in the studio, but his broad invitation to students, both in course and out of course, to his own faculty house. There he and Maud provided a family environment for a multitude of different ages, most far away from home and delighted with the Morgan solicitude. Conversation included the arts, music and the playing of it, poetry, philosophy and the cultural world in general and the role that art played in it. Other faculty friends often joined but it was the intensive, continuing welcome that distinguished the Morgan household, and it was they whom students of those years remembered. Pat was literarily as well as visually and emotionally articulate. He wrote essays and short stories on occasion for the Atlantic Monthly, winning a literary award. He was a delicate and scintillating writer. Pat didn't stay on campus. He resigned in 1951 to return to himself, to paint, to write, to be free to become a particular person. It is in that way that we remember him fondly.

Dr. Willet Lawrence Eccles

Dr. Willet Lawrence Eccles, San Marino, California, died February 26, 1982. He came to Andover in 1930 as a chemistry instructor and was Registrar of the Academy and a great force in the life of the school for 13 years, before becoming headmaster of St. George's School. In 1953 he became director of the Junior Officers' Training Program of the Central Intelligence Agency, Washington, D.C. Since his retirement, he and his late wife, Dorothy, had lived in Pasadena and San Marino, CA. Dr. Eccles was born in Bayside, L.I. in 1897, and graduated from Trinity School and Columbia College, where he earned both master's and Ph.D. degrees (in chemistry) after serving in the U.S. Navy in WWI. Before coming to Andover he was an assistant to the dean at Columbia College. He received the Honors Medal for Service, Columbia University, 1946, and the Intelligence Medal of Merit from the CIA in 1963. He is survived by four children: Nancy Roome of Solvang, CA; W.L. Eccles, Jr. of San Marino; (Mrs.) Dorothy de Ganahl of Sanford, FL; (Mrs.) Lydia Page of McLean, VA; and by his brother, Adm. Henry E. Eccles, U.S. Navy (ret.) of Newport, R.I.

According to the most recent roll call we are now down to only 15 survivors. Can you believe it? Sic transit gloria mundi as Charlie Forbes would have put it. I was one of a large group who went on to Yale 1914 when we left Andover. Now there are only four of us left: Brownell, Hobson, Stan Smith and Keith Warren.

I had a letter in February from Peter Smith son of our Fred Smith saying that his father was very ill in the Cape Cod Hospital. Fred's wife died a few years ago but for some time he lived alone in South Yarmouth, MA. His son finally persuaded him to make his home with his family as they lived nearby in South Yarmouth.

I have just received a letter from Dorothy Donworth, widow of our classmate Carl Donworth giving me the sad news of the death of Hugh Brady. This was a great shock to me because I have always thought that Hugh would be the last survivor as he was still active and completely functional at the age of 92. . . . Hugh went on to Yale after leaving Andover and graduated in 1914. He was born in Sitka, Alaska, the son of Alaska's first governor. He became involved in the lumber business first in New York State and later in Seattle where he started his own international lumber company of which he was chairman at his death. He became very active in Yale Alumni affairs on the West Coast and I seem to remember that he was awarded the Yale Medal for his service in stimulating interest in Yale in his region. Hugh is survived by his wife, Mary, by a daughter who lives in Switzerland, three grandchildren and two great grandchildren. His life-long hobby was sailing in Puget Sound and it is interesting to note his favorite crew member was Carey Donworth, son of our own Carl Donworth.

For an unusual Christmas gift it would be hard to beat the one Leo and Wilda McMahon received. Their niece who lives in Pittsburgh sent a plane with two pilots to Harrisburg to pick them up and take them to Pittsburgh for a very pleasant weekend and of course flew them back home. Leo and Wilda are in good shape. Tommy and Jean St. Hill in Little River, CA continue to be in reasonably good health. They live quietly and enjoy their children and grandchildren. We regret to report that Bill Fay recently lost his wife, Ruth, and has moved to Los Altos, CA to be near his son. Word has been received that Dudley G. Poore died January 9, 1982. No details are available. Dudley attended Harvard and lived in Marietta, NY.

Hugh Picken Brady '10:

steadfast as a redwood

A soaring eagle carved from a solid block of redwood was presented on March 30 to Hugh Picken Brady of Seattle, native of Alaska, a pioneer lumberman and civic leader, for his lifelong dedication to the highest standards of integrity in his lifework and contributions to the community. What meant most, Hugh Brady said at the time, was that the honor came from "those friends and peers" in the lumbering industry in which Brady, chairman of the board of the Brady International Lumber Company and of the Brady Lumber Company, spent 70 years of his life. The redwood eagle symbolizes the John J. Mulrooney Award, the highest award of the North American Wholesale Lumber Association, for which nominations may come from all segments of the industry, from politics or from government. Brady was due soon to receive the Christian Citizenship Award of Sheldon Jackson College in Sitka, Alaska. But two weeks later he died, at 91, and what was intended here as a Bulletin profile must serve also as his obituary.

Hugh Brady spent his earliest years in Sitka during the Alaskan Gold Rush. Hugh's father, John Green Brady, a Yale graduate and Presbyterian minister, came to Sitka to work under the missionary Dr. Sheldon Jackson, and in 1878 opened a school in an old Russian barracks that grew into Sheldon Jackson College. The elder Brady promoted the welfare of native Alaskans, opened a sawmill and the Sitka Trading Company, and became the fifth Governor of Alaska, 1886-1906.

In 1906 the Brady family returned to Massachusetts where Hugh, the second of five children, entered Phillips Academy, Andover and then went on to Yale, graduating in 1914. Hugh Brady's listing in Marquis "Who's Who in America" ended with this simple line: "I am eternally grateful to a mother and father whose prime objective was the education and welfare of their children." Brady's life demonstrated his gratitude through the successful intertwining of his career as a lumberman with support of education, conservation, natural preservations, and the Seattle community causes.

His roots in the lumber business go back to 1913 and a job in the Quebec forests. In 1922 he returned to his native Pacific northwest, and first formed his own company, Brady International Lumber, Inc. in 1933.

Throughout his life Hugh Brady was totally committed to Yale University, and at the other end of the spectrum, he was a benefactor of Jackson College in Sitka. He set up the Alaska Yale Club to recruit students for Yale in the Northwest, served on the executive committee of the Yale Alumni Board, and headed the School of Forestry's Alumni Association. He was awarded the Yale Medal in 1952. In 1979 the Hugh P. Brady Scholarship Fund was formed and now exceeds a quarter of a million dollars to assist Yale undergraduates from Washington and Alaska. Brady also steadfastly supported Sheldon Jackson College through the years and was presented posthumously in May with the college's highest honor, their Christian Citizenship Award. His primary interests were in the college level but from 1940-1962, he served as an Alumni Representative for Andover, seeking promising applicants from the Seattle region.

Other achievements include service to the Snoqualmie National Forestry Advisory Council and Sitka Historical Restoration Association. He was a trustee of the Washington Forestry Conference and recipient of their Outstanding Service Award in 1973; Fellow of the Forest History Association; and past president of the Washington Conservation Society.

Alaskans speak of Hugh P. Brady's keen sense of history and his vivid memory of early events in Alaska—the burning of the Russian Baranof Castle and the Alaska Gold Rush of 1898. They also referred to his high ethical standards and his generosity. He gave "according to . . . and beyond his means . . ."

The soaring redwood eagle is a fitting image for Hugh Brady, symbolizing the high standards and a keen vision for what matters. With his death at 91, the lumber industry has lost a giant, and education has lost a friend.

Mr. Brady was survived by his wife, Mary by only two months; a daughter, Cornelia Brady Meili of Zurich, Switzerland; two sisters, Elizabeth and Mary Brady of Patterson, NY; grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

his release entered the banking business in Boston, becoming manager of the Foreign Department. A few years later he purchased and operated as president for 20 years a small construction company, the James A. Glass Company, Inc. His final business connection came when a Harvard classmate asked him to head a purchasing subsidiary of the Sheraton Corp. of America. He was responsible for the purchasing of luxury items for furnishing and decorating luxury and presidential suites, ballrooms and function rooms in the Sheraton hotels. Your Secretary usually is able to glean a little first-hand Class News at year-end. This time he drew a blank. It appears as if all members carried through the heavy winter. That is good news.

We had a successful 65th Reunion last year. Although there is nothing planned for this year, as a member of the Old Guard, everyone is welcome on Alumni Day. There will be enthusiastic recognition of the success of the new Headmaster, Don McNeer, and his wife. The retirement of Frederick Stott, the School Secretary, will be duly honored. From 1916 point of view, it will bring to a close the association with the Stott family from our first years at PA.

Don't let your Secretary down. Send me some news of yourself and family.

"Class Notes" hadn't heard from Miriam Rowell Barnes in some time so we were very glad to have word from her. And a good word it was. She still lives in her "hometown" of Plymouth, MA where her husband died ten years ago. She is busy with churchwork, club work and gardening. And also with her family: she has four sons and one daughter (who went to Abbot), eight grandchildren and four great-grandchildren. Her first love in travel has been England and Scotland.

As always we were pleased to hear from Margaret Worman Thompson who was quite "excited" over the prospect of attending her grandson's graduation, summa cum laude, in Engineering from Duke University. She, herself, is a member, 1982-83, of the Board of Directors of the New England Women's Club. Margaret's sister, Bertha Worman Smith, living in Sudbury, MA was unfortunately involved in an auto accident last year, and had a difficult winter, but hopefully is now doing better.

Mildred Linscott Havighurst plans a trip to England with her husband for several weeks in June and July.

Social Note: Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Wilson of Vineyard Haven, MA have returned from a brief sojourn in New York City.

At last, LaGuardia airport, and time was beginning to run out. "You can stop here," Al Wilson said. The cab kept rolling. He grabbed the driver's shoulder. The cab leaped ahead into the torrent of Manhattan-bound traffic. In the driver's hand suddenly glittered a knife. The doors were locked, the windows would open scarcely more than a slit. This was trouble. Big trouble. It happens—elsewhere, to others. "Why me?"—strike the "me"; what is the "why"—has tormented philosophers for ages.

Parking at the curb of a dreary tenement street uptown, the driver explained. He was a junkie. "I am a drug addict," he said, and hearing Al quote him, you can't help thinking he was trying to appeal, at least to himself, for understanding and sympathy. "I am a drug addict and my addiction costs me $500 a day," and he'd be obliged if the Wilsons would hand over their wallet and bag of jewelry. When he reached for them, there on his arm were the telltale punctures. He rummaged thru tiny Fefa's bag and saw she was christened Josefa Maria. Suddenly he was looking to her for understanding. She's simpatico. He was Cuban, he said, and 30 years old. He looked wan and frail. Still brandishing that long thin knife he reached to take the gold necklace from Fefa's throat. "Just let me see the carats," he said. "Just touch my wife and I'll kill you," said Al. Fefa tried to fend it away. She told the driver her husband was an Olympic class athlete (Yale varsity crew 1924) and at 78 Al is lean and leathery, but the guy grabbed for the necklace and Al twisted the knife out of his hand and through that slit of open window flung it into the street.

They parked again in some desolate reach of the Bronx for a second half-hour round of negotiations. Fefa was crying. So was the driver. He wept. He ranted. He threatened. He pleaded. Would they promise not to turn him in? They'd better come across with all they had or he'd take them to his friend's garage and they'd come out naked.

"The main thing I did was try to calm him down," Al said, and abruptly the Wilsons and their bags were out on the sidewalk, minus $10 from Fefa's purse and $90 from Al's, and the yellow cab was gone, leaving its plate number seared in Al's mind. The driver had a job or so more to do before he'd have the $500 for that day's fix. It was a stolen cab.

Out to the sidewalk came a grave black woman. "You in trouble?" she asked. "Sure are," said the Wilsons. In minutes the alarm was on the air, and the Wilsons were on their way to LaGuardia—thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Johnson.

Al and Fefa were home on the hill over Vineyard Sound by 7 o'clock rather than the scheduled 1:15. At 9 o'clock the phone rang. It was Mrs. Johnson—they'd remember her, of 172nd Street?—she and her husband just wanted to know if everything was all right.

Everything was all right. Fefa noticed that she had started to tremble.

(The above was condensed from the Vineyard Gazette issue of April 16, 1982.) Tom Darling sent me a clipping about $1 million worth of stolen art objects recovered in Philadelphia and among them were three of Joe Cornell's "Boxes" valued at $40,000 each—as much or more than a Picasso! wrote Tom. But Nicki Thiras at the Addison Gallery was not not surprised (but says Picassos still bring more). The Addison has one early Cornell box entitled "The Cage".

Space limitations unfortunately cut short writing news from Al Pearson, Don Leach, Harry Reiff, Dave Williams, Charlie Gage, Lou Lincoln and, at long last, Jeff Drew (!). Something to look forward to in the next issue.

Sadly we report the death of Dave Fanning in North Grafton on December 15, 1981. Dave had retired from Sawyer Lumber Company of Worcester and had been a long-time resident of Grafton, MA. Dave graduated from Brown in '25 with a Ph.B. Besides his wife, he leaves a son and a daughter.

A few less classmates than we had earlier hoped were on hand for our 60th Reunion but those who did attend had a most pleasant and rewarding experience. After three very stormy weekends, the weatherman provided us with lots of sunshine but very chilly temperatures for June. The highlight of the Reunion was the Class Luncheon at Cooley House on Saturday with thirty people in attendance including George Bates, Hoddy Cole, Don and Ellie Donaldson, Bart and Clare Hayes, Frank and Katherine Lackey, Lathrop and Barbara Merrick, Pres. Preston, Les and Kay Sherrill, Terry and Kay Treadway, Don Walker, Jack and Mary Watson and their daughter, Mary Louise Foster, Gerry Woodruff and Sid and Peggy Wylie. Jim Durgin's widow, Jane, and four Abbot Alumnae were also on hand. Our speaker was Josh Miner, Andover's Director of Admissions, and we were delighted that the headmaster was able to be with us for lunch and to spend some time with us.

The annual meeting of the Alumni/ae in the Memorial Gymnasium was of special interest and the talk by Fred Stott, the retiring Secretary of the Academy, was especially fine.

Saturday evening we had a most pleasant cocktail party and dinner at the Andover Inn with eighteen in attendance. Fred Stott and his bride-to-be and Joe Mesic, the new Secretary of the Academy, with his wife, Sandi, were with us during the cocktail hour.

Several classmates had not been on the campus for many years and they were especially interested in the many changes. It was a beautiful weekend and one which we shall long remember.

Sixty years ago, our Class Day program listed 161 members of the Class of 1922 and 131 diplomas were awarded at Commencement. Of the 161 classmates, 57 are still "present and accounted for". In addition, there are a number of active members of the class who left Andover prior to June, 1922 for one reason or another and are included in the present mailing list.

Word comes from John Edwards in Oklahoma City that he has completed arrangements to turn over the family business, established in 1892, to his son, Ellis. John fell down a long flight of stairs early this year and suffered a broken shoulder. As a result, he has been unable to cut firewood which he likes to do for recreation. Elie Weeks and his wife, Helen, have celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary. Their 435-acre farm in Virginia keeps Elie busy. Their latest project is the restoration of an old house on their farm built in the early 1800s. A letter from Otis Tenney, who retired from Chrysler Corporation in 1971, reports that taking care of his West Los Angeles home and caring for an older brother who is almost totally disabled keeps him busy.

Joe Lund died on March 13th at his home in Duxbury, MA. After Andover, Joe attended Harvard and prior to his death, was chairman of R. M. Bradley & Co., Inc. in Boston. He is survived by his wife, Margaret, their three children and more than a dozen grandchildren.

At the class dinner of Yale's Class of 1957 in New Haven for its 25th reunion, announcement was made of the establishment of the Donald K. Walker Scholarship Fund by a number of members of the class as part of their reunion gift to the Alumni Fund. Don was a member of the Admissions Committee at Yale from 1948-59.

It is difficult to realize our long-awaited 60th anniversary is over! We were represented at Friday's events by Helen Knight Wilkinson who also carried our class banner in the parade from the Addison Gallery to the Annual Meeting on Saturday morning with the PA '22 group. About that time Jimmy Burr Sanders and I arrived at the Underwood Room to register and were joined by Clyde and Betty Ohnemus Hicks. We four rode around the PA campus, the town and the Abbot Circle. It hurts to see our buildings looking so deserted and run down!

Don Walker, PA '22 chairman, and Helen gathered about twenty-eight in all to have our group pictures taken on the steps of Cooley House. During the social period before we were seated for a delicious meal, old friends and mutual acquaintances were discovered.

It was not until the five Abbot people had traveled to Helen's home in N. Andover, where we were warmly welcomed by her husband, Wilkie, that I passed around the letters and postcards that had come from several of you. Ruth Hill English had telephoned Helen the day before to explain that a combination of family matters had prevented her being with us. Susie Welborn Osborn sent several excellent pictures of her handsome family. Both Gwen Bloomfield Tillson and Barb Goss were undecided and we missed them; Barb is suffering with painful arthritis in her neck.

Bubbles Hutchinson Matthews sent a letter to say she did not like to leave her husband and to report the birth of her second great-grandchild, a girl named Chara (Greek for joy) Elizabeth (for Bubbles). She was elated! Anne Whinery didn't come because of arthritis but she and Bubbles hope to see each other in Fredericksburg. Also Bubbles hopes to meet C.P. Damon Mason in Bay Head this summer. There are two more possible reunions. Barb Sands Sherman reports ten grandchildren, one married and one following in his father's footsteps by graduating last month from the Naval Academy. The youngest, is ten years old and "they are all wonderful." I agree with her final remark that "the Class of '22 was a great year."

Cards from Sally Bodwell Nelson said her college reunion and a trip to the west prevented her being with us. Anne Whinery shares a difficulty with many of us - arthritis. Kay Gage (Sister Mary Anselm) was to give a Retreat on our dates, followed by hosting a World Mission Conference. Marian Rugg Caywood asks "Is there still a Draper Hall?" All of these girls sent love and greetings.

My apologies to Mary Mallory Hadlow for spelling her last name with an "n" instead of with a "w"! She and her husband are enjoying a cruise. Jimmy Burr Sanders rode to Andover with me, leaving a flooded cellar and leaking roof! She was glad to forget them and we had a great time together.

Our visit at Helen's was perfect in every way, for Wilkie and Clyde got along famously. The Wilkinsons had spent much of the winter in Sarasota while Wilkie made fine progress after surgery early in the year. Clyde and Ohnmues live in Titusville in the winter and on the Cape in Brewster in the summer not far from one of Helen's children. All in all the exchange of news was constant and we all agreed that being together at the Wilkinsons was a fitting climax to a fine reunion! We wished you had been there with us.

Keep your news coming and I'll pass it on to the Bulletin office.

Love to each and every one of you! Olivia.

The Bible says that thou shalt not envy thy neighbor's ass, etc. However, I do envy the superscribe "Swede" Larsen, who not only composes the Class Notes for PA '24 but publishes on his own a multi-paged supplementary letter of news about his classmates. The cornucopia of news is fed to him without prompting by his friends with whom he has kept close contact over the years as he travels about the country. To console your lamenting secretary, who is no such skilled ambassador of good will, resolve, please, to send, now and then, without a specific plea by card a short note about you and your family. It can be as brief as the one from John Munger, who says, "Watching life flow smoothly and swiftly by. Big deal coming up in two weeks-fishing in Maine." Thus we know Johnny is contented, philosophical, and angler.

"Mitch" Posey reported that he is fresh out of grandchildren at Andover, but a granddaughter (PA '81) is now a good student, hockey player at Yale. Another granddaughter, Lisa Anne, about whose charming dancing I wrote after the 200th anniversary spectacular, is at Harvard, won an Andover prize for highest marks in freshman year of any PA grad, has put on a major ballet in Cambridge as choreographer and dancer. Others are at Hotchkiss and Kent. One is entering Farmington (Miss Porter's). Mitch travels from New England to Virginia. Wife Sue has been to California, will go to Ireland in Sept. Mitch still works as an architectural historian, does much photography. He is chairman of headquarters for the 55th reunion of Princeton '27. Per chance he will meet our redoubtable C.A., Bill Gay, at said function. It is good to learn that Mitch and Sue are blessed with good health and enjoy life more than ever.

"Red" Cleaveland and wife Katie went to Austria last July to attend the wedding of K's nephew and an attractive Austrian girl. The nuptials took place in a Lutheran Church in Linz, the bride's hometown. The minister did not speak English, so Red, an Episcopal Deacon, read the scripture lessons in the King James mode. After the festivities the happy Cleavelands toured Austria and Germany, especially enjoying Vienna and Salzburg. At home Red is busy with church work, plays poor golf ("poor" is his word), holds miserable cards at bridge (wears long, full sleeves, Fred), but with pretty good health declines to complain. Your Secretary is settled in Tucson (if one ignores unpacked cartons to be opened at a dim future date). Son Duane, PA'54, is in Berlin, Germany, where the recession is giving him a bad time. My great-nephew, who is confined to a wheelchair after a fall from a roof he was repairing, is due to visit me on May 8th. We will view the wonders of Arizona, especially its awe-inspiring canyons.

On March 29, 1982 we lost our classmate Francis O. Goodwill, who endured a long fight against cancer. Fran, a graduate from Yale in 1927, was a furniture manufacturer's representative in the New England states, active until a month before he died. He is survived by his wife Helen and his daughter Leslie and three cousins. To Fran's family his PA class extends deepest sympathy.

Thanks to all of you who have replied to my cards—it was fun hearing from you and I appreciate your help. Between now and the next issue of the Bulletin I shall send out more cards and hope to hear from more of you. I gasped the other day when it came to me that next year will be our 60th year out—can you believe it?

M. E. Rudd wrote that she is feeling better now after having troubles this winter. She spoke of having a family reunion last year where she very much enjoyed seeing "all the family". Elizabeth Thompson Elliot says that she spends much time in children's and youth activities at a Local Community Center, and has travelled considerably. She has been "Envoy" for the local Unitarian Church to United Nations workshops and conferences for several years. She also has done volunteer work for a thrift shop which is 25 years old. Dottie Taylor Booth said that she was disappointed that her trip from Wolfeboro, NH to Blue Hill, ME, did not go through Guilford, ME. So am I—wouldn't that have been fun to go to my door and see Dottie Booth standing there! She further said "we have 7 grands, 3 grands-in-law and 3 great-grands. Isn't that a great family."

Ruth Holmes Durant said that she didn't have much for news, but listen to this—they spend 5 months in Florida where her husband is one of the top bowlers in the So. East Division, and in Sept. they will go to California where he will compete in the U.S. singles championship. Personally, I call that pretty exciting news. To go on with the Holmes family, when I was in Florida I noticed that Fran Holmes lived right near where I was visiting, so I called and had a nice chat with her. She told me that she has lived in Florida for 19 years, I think, anyhow a long time.

Cal Lakin Mayers wrote that her husband passed away this year, and that she keeps busy with two daughters and families living nearby. She has 5 "adorable grandchildren, ages 16, 12, 12, 9, 6". She sent love to us all and said it would be fun to see us. Martha Buttrick Rogers' husband and son are still in the publishing business where son Irving is now co-publisher and doing a "great job". And she says her grandchildren are in and out. Two work for the paper, one teaches, another works for a doctor. "So they keep us young and busy, I can assure you." I should say so. Edie Damon Bugbee wrote a great letter long before I sent out the cards, about living with a son and family and being very active. We can well imagine that.

Just received word from Libby Flagg Dow telling me that in one week in June of 1981, her grandson graduated from Harvard cum laude; her son had his 25th reunion at Harvard; and she and Sterling celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary!! In June of 1982 Libby had her 55th reunion at Wellesley!

The Bulletin office has received word that Rosamond Martin Johnson died on May 14, 1981. I had known for several years from a relative of hers who lived near me that Ros was not well. She was a good friend of mine.

The Andover dinner at the Arizona Inn, hosted by its owner, Jack Greenway, PA '42, was a great success. Bunny and I were glad to meet the McNemars again and, of course, Fred Stott was the MC for the evening. Green Valley was represented by Mary Dake, Dick Knight, the Bob Woods, and the Dick Tates. Dick was '28.

During the winter several Andover alumni visited Green Valley: the Fletch Nyces '26, the Red Cleavelands '23, as well as the secretary Jim Bruce '23. We heard several times from the Don Harrises, another '23.

The Art Taits drove on from El Paso to see friends in Tucson and to spend some time with the Larsens. A dinner at our Country Club was in order for Art and Frieda. Gige Mumby arrived in April for his annual visit and, during the week, we drove to Phoenix to see relatives and call upon Hought Reed's widow, Joan, now Mrs. Bill Gawer. We talked with Van Johnstone in W. Palm Beach who sounded great.

We were disappointed the Ed Thompsons couldn't make it this winter but we may see them in the East this summer. I called my roommate, Dick Vaughan to see if he owed me a letter or I owed him one. A letter came shortly. Dick mentioned the Princeton victory over Yale and thought I shouldn't begrudge the Tigers first victory in 14 years. I also heard from Bob Redpath in Ft. Myers, FL to say I was wrong about Yale being robbed by the referees. Ed Fischer, our 1928 Yale Honorary also supported Princeton. I only print what I hear or is put in my mailbox.

Bob Clark reports that he and Esther are making plans to fly to Athens and spend 5 days in Thebes and Delphi. Then cruise the Greek Islands as well as the city of Ephesus in Turkey—then to Egypt and home. It is hard to believe that Bob has been playing golf regularly all winter in Ft. Collins, CO.

Phil Block's widow, Maggie, wrote from Carmel where she was visiting her sister for the month of March. Maggie is an avid golfer and she writes "the course is magnificent—beautiful countryside, excellent restaurant and good company." She was at Lyford Cay earlier. When Gardie Brown called he had seen Maggie in Chicago. The Browns were in Cameron, Africa in January and two months in Santa Barbara. Dick Chace collects bumper stickers and graffiti and thinks a book should be published for our 60th. It must run in the family as Dick's sister, Margaret, also sends me bumper stickers and also comments about our soap opera which we both watch. I found one for Dick Knight whose middle name is Custer. It read, "Custer wore an Arrow shirt." Jack and Roberta Ottaway returned to Grosse Pointe after their winter in the South. Many of their children were with them. They had their 50th last year.

Vic Earle writes from Jerusalem, "Having a wonderful trip and really getting to understand Israel's problems in particular about the West Bank." Berry Grant hopes the Andover football schedule is back to normal with the A.E. game the final one. Berry says he plays at golf and watches tennis. He answered my question about Bill Tilden by saying Bill would be superior to the present players on grass but not on a hard surface. I remember when Tilden was at Andover and played Charlie Watson. I tried to reach Vangie Schulten, Alex's widow, in Orange, CA to see if the terrible fire was near her home. She had written expecting to see us this winter. "I'm climbing up the ladder of age and am definitely a senior citizen! If everything works in the morning, I'm set for the day." Ralph Blank and Grace wrote that their daughter is putting on an exhibit in York, England. Prince Charles will open the exhibit and she will be his guide. Her chief concern was what she should wear. The Blanks made a 10-day trip to Charlottesville, Raleigh, Charleston, Savannah, and were with friends in Hilton Head.

Eather Burton, Myron's widow, was in Vermont for Christmas with their oldest daughter and family. She mentioned the record cold while she was there. Says she enjoys our Newsletter and "especially to read of people our age who have not given up." Both Fonty and Red Sanborn wrote in Feb., "We're fine and doing a lot of birding." They were in Winter Haven, Flamingo and Sanibel—then Cedar Key and Wakulla Springs. Red spoke of the earthquake in Franklin, NH his birthplace. He couldn't understand how the quake missed his 75th by three weeks. The Sanborns have been doing much skiing and after two years of no snow he could still bend over to put on his skis and they didn't have to stop the lift to let him on.

Barry Treat, Frank's widow, is all settled in Leavenworth, WA and is thinking about a cruise to Alaska next year. Chick Peck writes from Montreal that he feels no different hitting the three-quarter century mark. Gardie Brown and Bill Keator will see Chick this June at the senior golf tournament.

Had letters from former members of the Alumni office: Bob Hulburd and Helen Bronk. Bob is now in Admissions and Helen is in Academy Resources. We will miss his help during our 60th. Bob receives our Newsletter and says he recognizes many of the names. Dave Mdivani sent along a card with a message on it. Thanks, Dave. I was glad Bob Hamilton translated some of his Latin expressions he uses in his letters. He keeps forgetting that I was bounced out of George's class. "De Gustibus non disputandum est" he translated "I like gin; you like Scotch." Les Hicks reports he and Florence did not miss Florida this winter. They put in a wood stove in Wenham, MA as they liked the one in their summer place in Jefferson, NH—their NH neighbors told them of the tremendous snow fall this winter. We hope to see the Hicks this summer.

Bill and Min Dickerman wrote they were swimming three times a day in Antiqua, WI and they were fit and healthy. John and Marge Lockett were on Padre Island in January, which they considered a fine place. The Colonel thinks the most encouraging news is that the days are getting longer again which means spring is here and the "wing is on the bird" as Jack Barss would say. Morry Skinner says his wife, Ethel, was in the "middle of housecleaning which is worse than Congress trying to balance the budget." Says the State of Oregon is facing a deficit of 300 million. He thinks his legislators are a bunch of clowns. "I get more disgusted each day with government, Federal, State, or whatever." On our way East in May we stopped off to see the Vaughans in Albuquerque. The Louie Wienecke's in Bartlesville, OK, the Bob Woods in Decatur, IL, and Bunney's Wheelock classmate in Waverly, PA, Jean Peck.

It was Fletch Nyce who sent along the obituary of Bill Kelly and a warm letter was received by your Secretary from Bill's wife when she received our letter of sympathy. We used to see Bill and Kelly when they summered in Maine. George Penny died March 4th. It is hard to believe as we had dinner with George and Sallie last fall on Nantucket and he looked so young and well. George's achievements were tremendous. He was leader in the drive to control lung disease and pres. of the Greater Providence YMCA and of the National Council. His community projects were numerous and he took an active part in his town government and church. At his services his daughter, Clarissa, read letters written during his year at Andover which told of his early impressions and aspirations. She will send me copies. His loyalty to both Andover and Yale will be missed.

Sybil Bottomley Talman will visit old friends in Maine this summer and her niece and young family in their new home in Manchester, NH. Polly Bullard Holden and John escaped the heavy winter in VT (but not the flu) when they visited Polly's brothers in Sanabel and Harbour Island. The Ladies Assoc. of the Union in Mt. Vernon prevents Polly from coming to 1924 N.E. lunch at Pillar House. She must return her papers to D.C. after her work of 17 years as their Vermont Delegate.

Lila Clevenger Burke is so happy in her "efficiency" in Abington, MA, for she is near her son, her daughter and her 2 "grands." Lila is now nimble enough to supervise her 8 and 12-year-old grandsons when her daughter works! And, for the first time, Lila is driving to Pillar House '24 Reunion with her daughter! Kay Hart Mitchell—six organizations still keep K ever busy, but she still hopes to be at our '24 Reunion. Kay is giving part of her land in memory of her husband to the Shirley Historic District—this is "full of flowers and varieties of birds - even killdeer." Mary Harvey Kindel writes that her husband, Tom, died a year and a half ago—2 weeks before their 50th anniversary. Mary sent us the "little newspaper" which Tom and his two daughters put together for this festive occasion. Now, Mary has made a difficult decision to sell the house she has lived in for 52 years to move into an apartment. But this does look over their small lake and the beautiful garden of azaleas and rhododendrons of Tom's "blumewald." Mary will continue her volunteer work in "her" hospital and with Planned Parenthood. Mary will be East this summer to visit her daughters, one of whom "has built a house on the tip of L.I."

Ruth Kelley Perry and Elwyn, her husband, will drive from Chatham to Pillar House, then on to Lincoln to visit their daughter in her new home in the Bethany Episcopal Residence, which Joannie likes so much she doesn't call it a school! Again, the Perrys ask '24 classmates to drop in anytime. Ruth Larter Eveleth is delighted her worst winter is over. She has had 2 falls and even a 3rd on her couch (?). She was fortunate to have her daughter, Pat Buchanan, nearby in Concord. Ruth says she is a real great-grandmother. "Her grandson is the only real son of her son, Peter." Ruth hopes Geneva Rumford of Wilmington, can visit her in time to attend the '24 Reunion at Pillar House.

Peg MacDonald Vester claims that "2 replaced hips limit one's activities." Still, she says life in her retirement hotel is "pleasant, amusing, interesting and worthwhile." Although traffic is even more congested, the hotel buses still drive to beaches, concerts, shopping, etc. "75% here are Republicans, though some are now critical of environmental policies." Peg added, she loves reading of our young people in the Andover news, adding she "is proud of their being so aware." Peg Williamson and Bob have just attended a class officer weekend at Dartmouth. Their grandson will graduate from there this June when Bob and Peg return for Bob's 55th reunion. Laura S. Williamson—Boston continues to be a busy retirement city with art, music and interesting walks, which I hope activates brain and brawn. The trip on the Regina Maris, visiting islands from Hongkong to Singapore, was most interesting, (except the oblong, loud colored plastic pails—instead of round clay pots—on the heads of lovely girls in blue jeans and shirts). But the rice fields on the hills still look like nature's lace.

Would '24 prefer a reunion at Pillar House in the fall, perhaps after Polly H. attends the Trustee's meeting in Andover? May is such a busy month for me too. Our many regrets from Ruth Beach Newsom, Dorothy Converse, Jane Kilby, Elsie Phillips Marshall, Frances Platt, Barbara Loomer, Priscilla Mansfield were from our classmates who will be away on visits or trips, in the merry month of May. Happy summer to us all—Laura Williamson.

Last February your scribe and wife Louise had a memorable trip to Yugoslavia. We stayed in Dubrovnik, a remarkably preserved medieval city on the Adriatic Coast, a favorite spot for honeymooners from Italy. Tito is still idolized—his picture hangs everywhere. Yugoslavs are a proud, independent people, stressing that they are socialists, not communists and are not a member of the Warsaw Pact. My wife is attending her 55th Reunion at Mt. Holyoke this May—your Secretary tags along as bartender. Jack Chickering and Claire wintered in Naples, FL. Jack reported that on New Year's day it was 83 degrees and on Jan. 12th, 24 degrees, the coldest on record. Quite a season! A phone call to Rev. Hugh McCandless elicited the disturbing news that wife Dorothy was facing a serious eye operation. Am glad to report that she came through in good shape and hopes to have improved vision. Hugh revealed that he has an article in the Yale Alumni Magazine and that he was recently in touch with Clare Barnes.

The class extends its sympathy to Helen Connolly McGuire who recently lost her husband.

Aylmer Stantial Kempton has been retired for 7 years and I can't begin to tell you

With assorted 50th reunions on the horizon, including that of the venerable institution 'neath The Elms, whither traipsed such a multitude of PA '28sters, an lemming-like masse, it was to be hoped that submission of Class Notes for the Summer-bull might be post as well as proper hoc. No such luck. In Official Ukase to Class Secys re. "Class News Deadlines", amiable, Gibraltar-firm Bull. Ed. Helen Eccles made it perfectly clear: "Fri. May 7—In the mailbox." Quibbling in the face of such Nixonian clarity would be unseemly, as well as futile, when one considers the frequency of slippage 'twixt mailbox and intended recipient. All this being the case, we shall hope for reunificon encounters to provide fodder for Fallbull perusal.

Advices from Joe Byram in Naples, FL, tell of heap big Encampment in the wilds of New Hampshire, covering a 6-day interval, split between 3 days in Hanover and 3 in Whitefield for Big Green 1932 Open Golf Tourney, of which Joe has been designated Head Honcho. One can but wonder how many "wah-hoo-wahs" will be audible at the conclusion of that no doubt memorable session. Joe also thoughtfully enclosed clipping headed "Old Naples Farm House Included on House Tour", with photo of handsome Al Rowland living room and eminently fitting description of dining room graced with "a royal blue carpet with a wide white strip running along the edge." As of Jan. 1 Al Parker reported move from Dayton, OH to join the '28 Neapolitan Mafia. Request for more details thus far abortive. Tsk-tsk, Al. Unlimber thy Bic! Good news from Bill Adams, who accompanied good letter with Xerox of recent Dartmouth 32 class notes reporting the whereabouts of Sunny (Roland) Sundown, traced via an ad placed by Dartmouth friends in the Albuquerque Journal, answered by his only child, Ramona, to the Dartmouth Alumni Office. Since a hip-fracturing accident in May '81, Sunny has been residing in a Santa Fe nursing home, "able to get around" (Granada de Santa Fe, Inc. 313 Camino Alire, Santa Fe, NM 87501). He'd doubtless be delighted to hear from PA friends, who can still cherish fond memories of the sensitive Sundown solos at vesper services in the old chapel. On the Adams, San Diego front, Bill says all's well, with continuing writing activity (2 articles in Desert Magazine last fall) plans for another Hawaii visit soon ("We love it there"), jaundiced-orbed view of Tar Heel weather after visit to NC last fall ("It was so damn hot you couldn't give me the whole state"). Come, come, Win! Do you want to injure Jesse Helms' sensibilities? — Parson Dick Clark, "in the midst of retiring" (as of Sept. '82), plans to attend Kenyon 50th and PA 55th in 1983, anticipates no repeat of the weekend matrimonial officiating problem which prevented 1978 Bicent. attendance — Dave Dudley, still in Columbus, MS, writes of monthly commutes to Houston for chemotherapy for wife, Villa, who is making good progress in battle vs. cancer. They hope for visit to daughter Sara in L.A., where Dave recounts horrendous tale of her being mugged, kidnapped, badly beaten but not sexually assaulted, escaping by using "extraordinary intelligence and coolness," receiving loving osculation from the police dog "Who had nearly torn the villain apart." A valued friend in the aftermath of this ordeal was Chris Rafferty, PA '66, whose judgment in paying attention to Sara Dudley is strictly impeccable in the opinion of a self-appointed godfather. N. B. Dave, like Dick Clark, hopes to be on hand in June '83, for our 50th—2 sterling sights-setting examples, which it is devoutly to be hoped, will be followed and acted upon by a veritable swarm of bright-eyed and bushy-tailed '28sters.

Belated sad news from the Alumni Office reported the deaths of Carlton E. Knight (father of Carlton, Jr. '50) on Feb. 19, 1981, and Richard R. Hall on Nov. 22, 1981. Attendants at past '28 reunions will remember Dick's extraordinary enthusiastic and generous participation, most recently as an active member of our 50th Reunion Committee.

Thank you for your replies to my postals. To all who plan to attend a 50th Reunion at various colleges—have a fine celebration.

Betty Hawley Beattie claims to now having four grandchildren. "We just celebrated my mother's 101st birthday January 23. There were four generations at the party and she received a letter of congratulations from the President and Nancy." From Winnie Dudley Burnham . . . "Tancy (mother) died October 22, 1980 at 98, and though we miss her, it was a release for her. She did not like being restricted to a wheelchair. We had a memorial service for her at Old South (Andover). Other news is sketchy: I'm still librarian at North Yarmouth Academy, and enjoy it. It keeps the moss from collecting on my north side."

Gwen Cochran says, "news is that I have just moved to this retirement village—Carolina Village, Henderson, NC—after clearing and selling my home of 60 years, and I am still in a state of shock. My hope is that one day I will be able to think again of New Hampshire. Must have been bad this winter but it has not been salubrious even here." From Manchester, CT Dottie Jennings Crocker reports, "We still enjoy 'Cozy Cottage'. I have a deep interest in gardening, antiques, braiding, hooking, quilting. Each winter we look forward to exploring another part of our country." Truly sounds busy.

Gee Gee Gay d'Elseaux claims, "Really I don't have any exciting news—my husband isn't very well so I don't get too far from home—or for very long. I do enjoy symphony and bridge—and oh yes, our oldest granddaughter is engaged so maybe I'll get to see a great grandchild—that would be fun." Do hope that latter comes to pass. Paighi Graham Greenleaf from Nashville, TN says "It was odd to get your card yesterday—I grew up in Shawshen Village and went to Mount Holyoke. You mentioned Wellesley. I have enjoyed reading about all our friends but have only been back twice. World War II lived in Marblehead (my favorite place). Bob and I have had wonderful trips to Japan—Spain, Costa del Sol—a tramp steamer trip six weeks in the Caribbean—England and Scotland. Our two daughters and five grandchildren live in Dallas and Austin and Puddie and Charlie (marine biologist) lived in Africa, Honduras, Central America and now Kenya. Now I am trying to have a New England May and June—my 50th at Mount Holyoke, my brother in Camden, ME in a 250-year-old house and Andover and Marblehead. Had three years of arterial sclerosis operations and am getting back to a better 71 years in March. Tally-ho! No dust gathers under her feet."

You have probably all heard from Emily Sloper Shailer, our Class Agent. Am glad she reports, "Russ and I are on our feet and looking forward to spring. Life in Connecticut River Valley never at a standstill—so many interesting birds! Several Eagles sighted between East Haddam and Saybrook. Ice jams this past week! My doctors tell me that I'm doing extremely well, so do not have to report so often!" Keep up the good work, Emily.

From Eleanor Thompson Snedeker, "No news items for me. I seem to be in a rut. We know how fortunate we are here (Pasadena). Northern California really caught it this year. Louise Hyde Reilly was here with her sister this past year for a visit at a friend's house nearby and I went by to see them. It is always so good to catch up on news of Abbot friends."

According to Sue Ripley Ward, "there are people who have discovered it is possible to reverse the trend to aging. You may have to look at me to believe it—my husband, Ted, is celebrating his 80th birthday in good health and spirit. Our son, Phil, is giving classes in golf the year-round. He says 90% is done indoors-between the ears. Love to everyone." Should like to see young you.

And finally from Eleanor Leech Williamson, "There is very little to report for the Class Notes. Pat (who is now known in this area as Steve) retired February 1. He wanted to work until he was 78 and he made it by 3 days. The children are all scattered. Stephen, an Episcopal priest is moving to the Diocese of Southern Ohio in May. Ann lives in Basking Ridge, NJ and Bob is in Kalamazoo, MI. We are both well at the moment... Love from us both."

You truly have done wonders about responding and I hope you enjoy all the news. With very good wishes. Have a dandy summer, Laddie.

Dear Abbot '29 friends—

We have nice news from Eleanor Jones Bennett. She has been given a very nice award by the Orange, NJ League of Women Voters in recognition of her twenty-one years of service. Congratulations, Roomie! Kay Bowden Barnes writes that she and her husband, Dr. Barnes, continue to enjoy living in Providence and being a part of Brown University. They have been lucky enough to travel and last year went to Southeast Asia and before that, to Saudi Arabia, a wonderful country.

Kay Kennedy Beardsley writes: "We love living in Florida and are looking into a retirement home for future use. Don't want to live with our children or grandchildren—6 grandchildren and a great grandson—5 years old. Kay and her husband stopped to visit with us while staying with friends here in Hancock and we had a delightful chat catching up on Abbot news. It was great to see her and she is just as stunning as ever!

My only news is that my youngest son, a Cornell researcher in vegetable crops, has lit out for Sumatra for two years to help develop new agriculture crops in that country. Hopefully, we will use him as an excuse for a trip to Indonesia next year.

Keep the news coming in—it is so much more fun when we hear from many of you!

From Frank Miller, "Still helping independent schools find new heads. It's a delicate, fascinating job—and at times scary. My tennis game doesn't improve, but it's still great fun. Enjoying retirement!" Ed Batchelder "retired" not long ago from his position on Massachusetts' Juvenile Court Judges Commission and keeps busy, he says, working with the mentally retarded in Plymouth, MA. There's a warm welcome for classmates there. You'll find him in the phone book.

From Hawaii Ed Barnet tells of a visit there from classmate Frank Babcock. Ed's still on the faculty of Hawaii Pacific College teaching "Applied Geography" - the travel business. "Life begins at 70," he says with enthusiasm. "Abdul Bull also reports with enthusiasm a fabulous trip through South Africa and the game parks of Kenya and Tanzania. More class news? It's up to you..."

Summer greetings to all. Four of us had luncheon together in March, gathering at my house first: Kathie Libby, Donna and yours truly Marianna. Kathie now has a second granddaughter in college in Florida. Two cards arrived too late for the last news. I do hope Doris Sturtevant Bacon, who was ill most of 1981, is now well recuperated. Betsy Walworth Ross winters for 6 months in Stuart, FL. Her husband enjoys gardening and she teaches a painting class. "Otherwise busy on the golf course." Ruth Baker Johnson is now retired from teaching. I wonder if she is going to U. of Cal. at Berkeley for her granddaughter's graduation? Barbara Lord Mathias writes "Since Jim retired we have been going to St. Martin in the Caribbean for a Feb. vacation. Met Betty Brewer Dericks and husband and had a good time reminiscing. Usually go to England in Sept. to see friends and relatives and sights we missed when we were there as students before World War II. Our son is a lawyer in Glens Falls, NY. If I say we occasionally babysit for our two grandsons aged 4 and 1, you will know that we can still get around!"

I am carrying on a bit of correspondence with Betty Quinby Parmelee, and hopefully she will get to Sarasota next winter. Our news is my husband had complete prosthesis of his other (2nd) hip in March and is making his usual good recovery. Both our daughters were with me at different times and the youngest who has been living in the Netherlands for 3 years is now in Minneapolis. They came directly here from Holland and stayed a week. It was a lot of fun with the grandsons aged 9 and 7 beaching, kite flying and exploring. They were even allowed in the hospital to visit grandpa. Cheerio and my best.

Thanks to all who answered my postcards. Any of you who didn't reply this time, please keep the news coming. A little news means a lot especially from those we haven't heard from recently.

Edith Keller Phillips writes that she is officially retired but is still working as a physical therapist and has 2 to 3 patients to "keep her hand in". When not working she goes back and forth to Maine where her sister celebrated her 80th birthday recently. Maine is the locale for many other family celebrations. Edith has one son, Robert Carl Phillips. She is a Life Member of Amvets and has not only made her goal in T.O.P.S. but also is the current leader in her chapter.

Gertrud Van Pourseum Bell and her husband are planning a trip in late June to their summer cottage in Ontario. Their eldest daughter and granddaughter will join them there. At the end of September they will fly to Seattle to visit their youngest daughter, Susan, and her family and will see a brand new grandchild who is due in July. Eleanor Foreman Barber is our world traveler. She and her husband moved to Crystal River, FL 13 years ago and she has stayed on there after his death 6 years ago. With 4 married children and 11 grandchildren she does a lot of visiting. In between visits she has taken the time to travel; a cruise each January and to Europe or to Alaska in the summer. Her 3 daughters have joined her on trips to Mexico, the Caribbean and South America. They are planning a trip in October to Greece, a cruise to the Greek Isles, Egypt, and Israel. Sounds great, Eleanor!

Faith Chipman Parker tells of a fun visit last March from Rosamund (Posey) Castle Olivetti ('30) and Abby Castle Kemper who had been on a 3-week cruise from Florida to Los Angeles and stopped to see Faith on their way home. They also had a real homecoming in Quincy, IL where they grew up. Faith is still painting and teaching but will take time off in August so that she and Ed can travel to Seattle for a month's vacation with 3 of their children. Cora Budgell Bourgeois replied that she enjoyed our 50th reunion so much she is looking forward to our 55th. Mary Jane Manny Lewis and her Abbot roommate, Harriet Bolton Allen ('32) and their husbands took a week's cruise this spring from Savannah, GA to the Golden Isles. Mary Jane is still in the travel business and travels herself a lot. A barge trip last fall on Canal du Midi in southern France and 10 days in Ireland sounded like fun. Her most enjoyable trips are to San Francisco where her 17-month-old granddaughter lives and she looks forward to babysitting when her daughter takes trips. Janet Simon Smith let on that her husband, Bob, was surprised to be acclaimed an honorary member of '31 at our 50th reunion dinner. His announcement that he would always cherish this as one of his slightest honors was greeted with gales of laughter.

We all express our sympathy to Carol Grosvenor Myers in the recent death of her brother, Melville Bell Grosvenor, Chairman Emeritus of the Board of Trustees of the National Geographic Society. They were vacationing together in Florida when it happened.

REUNION WEEKEND, JUNE 11-13

I am almost as pleased to be able to report to you the great successes of our Reunion weekend as I was to be a part of it. From the very outset, good auguries abounded. For instance, Britta and Don McNemar had the members of our class for cocktails Friday afternoon at Phelps House which has now been the headmaster's home for some years.

The Saturday weather smiled benignly upon outdoor activities - those described elsewhere in this issue, including walks under the elm arch (which still survives) and in the bird sanctuary (as impressive as ever); tours of the Art Gallery (Winslow Homer's West Wind and Eight Bells as pleasing as they were 50 years ago).

Fred Stott and Susan were guests at the class dinner (102 present and accounted for), along with the incoming Secretary of the Academy, Joe Mesics and his wife, Sandi, Ring Lardner, Bill Beinecke, and Ollie Jensen each proffered some gracefully laconic words, which made the occasion particularly pleasurable, and Fred Stott capped the climax with an address that was truly memorable, for many of us the absolute high point of the whole shebang.

The fiscal news was in keeping with the rest. Last fall we received from our fund drive chairman letters setting forth good and sufficient reasons for supporting the 1932 Reunion Fund drive. On Saturday morning of the Reunion weekend, after a series of letters, innumerable phone calls and a couple of phonothons, Joe Barclay announced that the members of the class, with over 70% participating, had contributed over $100,000 to the Alumni Fund.

The fund drive efforts clearly paved the way for the success of the Reunion, plans for which were well under way in January. In that regard, Marie Foley and Betty Giblin, Co-Chairmen for Abbot, Clare Sullivan, and Jane Sullivan, a ringer from the Abbot Class of 1931, were of enormous assistance to our committee in making and carrying out the Reunion plans. Under these circumstances it seems only fitting that 1932 is now inscribed on the 1891 Memorial Trophy, a large and impressive silver bowl memorializing that class with the greatest percentage of members returning for Reunion. Those earning the award for us all were: Angell, Austin, Bagg, Barclay, Beinecke, Bird, Bruce, Jack Cates, Wid Cates, Clapp, Clough, Clymer, Corrigan, Dean, Edie, Fawcett, Fitz, Ford, Gardner, Gration, Harper, Harris, Hart, Holland, Jensen, Jones, Krey, Lardner, Mayo, Mohan, Newell, O'Neil, O'Reilly, Ott, Peters, Preston, Reed, Rhodes, Ritzman, Rowland, Savage, Schroeder, Schultz, Tighe, Upton, Walker, Waring, and Woolsey. The rest of you were much on our minds. As Charlie Forbes used to remind us: FORSAN ET HAEC OLIM MEMINISSE IUVABIT.

After thirty years in the foreign service, Henry Dearborn has retired to Bethesda, MD. Close by in Washington, daughter Pam is married to an Australian who works for the World Bank and son Rick (Dartmouth and Yale) is an architect there.

First from Betty:

It's come and gone—gone with the wind—and from personal observations, conversations and the woman's intuition, I'd say everyone had a whale of a good time. Stimulating, satisfying, interesting—great to renew old acquaintances, to meet the delightful McNemars, to congratulate Fred Stott, to see our old faculty friends and so on and on and on. Those of us who were winned, dined and enjoyed included: Helen A. Anderson, Priscilla D. Anderson, Helen C. Appleton, Kay B. Callanen, Judy W. Lindahl, Florence D. Robertson, Helen W. Hight, Clare O'C. Sullivan, Fran H. Starkweather and naturally, your hard-working chairpeople—the twins, Betty and Mame who led the entire 1932 contingent in the Saturday a.m. Parade to Alumni Gym for the annual meeting. 1932 received the silver cup for most returnees percentage-wise, coughed up the most money (over $102,000), and maybe even had the best time! Very interesting program for the in-between times.

Highlights: the beautiful garden reception at the McNemars; Abbot '32's own personal dinner and meeting at Morton House, preceded by a delightful cocktail party at Priscilla's, the parade, the campus box luncheon, the Abbot tea at Morton House and the formal dinner for all of 1932 in the Underwood Room, at which the undersigned was asked to join a distinguished group of after-dinner speakers in saying a few words. Few they were, but I survived, somehow.

Jane Sullivan "reunited" with us most of the weekend; Fran Starkweather is continuing as Secretary and Betty Bigler deMasi as Class Agent. Our donor participation was 50%. Congratulations. If you haven't yet given, it's not too late—ever.

'Til 1987, I am — Betty Holihan Giblin

As someone once said, "Reunions are like mammoth cocktail parties—you never really finish a sentence or a conversation, "but just being there was great, wearing boaters and trying to hang onto balloons to take home to grandchildren, catching up on news, and consuming meal after fabulous meal. Friday night the early birds and two husbands (Randal Robertson and Gardiner Callanen) had a potluck supper at Morton. At our sort of a, kind of a class meeting, (finished the next day), Priscilla Anderson agreed to be Reunion Chairman for Abbot in '87 and I agreed to continue as secretary.

Random news notes: Helen Allen says her Harry hit a hole in one in Florida this winter—Marie Holihan Foley's son, John, was nominated for a Tony Award for his musical "Pump Boys and Dinette" which has been playing on Broadway for a year... Marie, herself, completely exhausted by being Co-Chairman of the Reunion, is taking off with Tom for Ireland next week...

Betty Holihan Giblin said she wasn't exhausted at all but pleased that everyone seemed to enjoy the whole weekend... next time, if it's as cold as this year, take your own blankets; Bill and I found none on our beds and had to scrounge some from Morton House.

And now, Abbot impressions of the school today: tangibly and intangibly Abbot remains a force in Andover. In the hymn we sang at chapel Saturday morning, in the familiar rooms at Morton House with Draper just across the way, in the girls of recent classes returning with their children and husbands, we find reassurance. We also know that if it had not been for the merger, all this would have been lost to us, with never a chance, together, to review our bittersweet teens.

Slim pickings this time, dears, because just when I should have been busy at the typewriter Bill had to spend 5 weeks in the hospital and the 40-mile round trip every day (except for April 6th when the blizzard dumped two feet of snow on Lempster Mountain) didn't leave time for anything except necessities. The thought that there will be reunion news along with these notes, however, does cheer me up.

Helen Allen Anderson also mentioned the snow—they arrived back from four months in Florida to find six feet of the stuff in their driveway because it hadn't been plowed while they were away. I'm pleased to hear that she saw Harriet Bolton Allen in Florida and will hope to learn more at reunion. Jean Will Wilson, among those who cannot be at reunion, nevertheless wrote that "veggies, flowers and weeds" are occupying all her time now that spring has finally arrived; she didn't mention the herbs she wrote about last year, but I hope she's still making goodies for sale from them and hope also to get that far (Pittsfield) this summer.

—The winners—32's big one.

Bill Beinecke, Charlie Woolsey, and Jack Cates

Abbot '32 in force.

Among those we'll miss at reunion are Isabel Arms, Atossa Welles and Va Wolfe. Isabel says she is planning a trip to Spain, Bali and China this fall which sounds fabulous and quite a tour de force. Atossa's trip, which she'll be on at reunion time, is braving the Colorado River in a rubber raft. Va said she's sorry not to be with us, and added that she spent a couple of days with Miyu Hirooka Mitsutani last summer when she was here for her reunion at Wellesley - "we had a grand time and she even looks the same."

Bettie Piper Thornton sent a really complete run-down on their family and I'm grateful. She and John have retired to their summer home in Penobscot Bay (Maine). John is a music critic turned politician (regional planning commissioner) and their three sons John, Doug and Matt all live in Maine, too. No. 1 is a political cartoonist, No. 2 is a chemical research engineer for a paper company, No. 3 is a stevedore, wood-cutter, potato farmer and general factotum. Bettie is another herb-fancier—she grows them summers, along with visitors!

That's it. We'll be thinking of all our absent and silent members during our reunion weekend—50 years is a long time for "do you remember?" but we'll jam as many as we can into those three days.

Alfred R. McWilliams, Jr.
20 Stonehouse Road
Glen Ridge, NJ 07028

We lead off this time with a note from Bill Nute. Sort of Christmas in July it is, for the worthy who handles our local mails—and sometimes delivers them—came ambling up our path last winter with Bill's missive one day after we had mailed our last, yet to be published, PA '33 notes. It was a copy of Bill's and Betty's annual report/Christmas greeting, so packed with their doings and coming and goings that it would probably have taken until now to boil it down to alumni note size, anyway. Bill was fresh from a year's leave of absence, spent in their flat in Oxford, England, which they had used as a base of operations for trips to the continent and various journeys into the north of England and Scotland. It sounded like a terrific year, but in deference to Helen Eccles' entreaties we confine ourselves to the highlights: their attendance at the Encenia of Oxford University, the colorful ceremony at which the University awards it honorary degrees (and it sounds as if Bill's academic plumage was not the least of the color); and exploration of 16th—and 17th century parish records in Devon and Cornwall in search of one of his ancestors. But unfortunately it all had to end, and Bill is back at his job with the Health Department in New York City—which job, he says, continues to grow. He describes himself as "a public health generalist handling, or delegating a series of ad hoc tasks of evaluation, consultation, or innovation." And he still pedals 16 miles to and from his office on Worth St., NYC, each day!

A couple of brief notes complete our bag for this time around. We hate to think of our fate if it had not been for the leisurely mailman last winter with the Nute odyssey. Anyway, our thanks to Fred Smith for his greeting from Vermont. We are concerned, though, at his reference to having suffered a stroke. Hope at this writing he is recovering well. Had a nice telephone visit the other evening with Barc Kingman and Ellen. Barc sounded chipper and was making plans for our 50th in 1983. (It's going to be here quicker than you think!) Bob Keeney reported himself "more or less retired" in Somersville, CT, but still interested in business, banking, Republican politics, traveling AND his five grandchildren, who are frequent visitors. Again we must close with word of the death of one of our classmates. John Mahoney died at his home in Syosset, NY on January 25, 1982. John graduated from Harvard in 1937 and from Harvard Law School in 1946. During World War II he served in the Persian Gulf Command in the Army Transportation Corps. Following law school, he specialized in maritime law, participating in a number of noteworthy international cases, including several arising out of the Andrea Dorea-Stockholm collision of Nantucket in 1956. We shall remember John as a loyal Andover Classmate, and we shall miss him at reunion. John is survived by his wife Louise, and his daughters Jennifer, Regan and Laura. The sympathy of our class goes out to them.

Well, the retirement years are upon us, no doubt, though a few tough-minded classmates won't hear of taking the shoulder from the wheel. Life after 65 has many styles, and most of the Class of 1934 find themselves, no matter what the details, busier than ever. The only style I haven't seen in our class is the traditional one that after retirement one dies of boredom. For most of us who have made it so far, life seems richer and fuller than ever before, yet with the most extraordinary variation. For some a new marriage has in effect created a whole new life, a beginning not an end. For others the deaths among those close to them have forced them into new perspectives and undertakings.

As for myself, never before a city dweller, I am enchanted with Boston, which each day offers a multitude of new stimuli and opportunities, the same being hard to take proper advantage of as one struggles to put together six newsletters four times a year, to serve as an officer of eight clubs or associations, to travel a bit, to race under sail, to row, to write letters, and to read. Disconcertingly, I find the least time for reading. By now I had expected to be half way through Gibbon and Plutarch.

Steve Powelson is a splendid example of one who has found his true calling. He writes: "I am at present working as financial controller for a company in Paris owned by an Arab businessman. My spare-time hobbies include tennis, French chess competitions, and memorization of Homer's Iliad in ancient Greek—a project born from the love of Greek which Zeus Benner instilled in me at Andover, reawakened in 1978 after 44 years of hibernation. To recite the entire Iliad's 15,693 lines would require more than 13 hours. Thus far I have learned by heart 51%. On January 7, 1982, I gave a one hour recitation by memory of selections from the Iliad before a group of faculty members and students at Andover." Who can possibly match that style? Monty Munroe is one of those who is working on at the old job. His reward, among others he did not mention, is to see Jerry Cook occasionally for lunch.

Soapy Chamberlin, building a new house in Waverly, PA, (woefully expensive), scheduled to move in early May (wanna bet?) finds the social-and sports- life mix a trifle hectic. In Aspen for February, Bermuda in April, moving in May, Sault St. Marie in July and August, he still hopes to arrange a visit. Trev Cushman basks in the California sun year-round at Laguna Beach, except in November, when he and Joss invariably make the pilgrimage East for a Yale football game and assorted travel goodies.

Walter Snell, by way of contrast, writes from Paradesos in Greece, where he continues to slave the days away for a few more years before retiring to Annapolis. A sad note comes from Ed Seymour, who reports the death of his wife, Mary, in July of 1981 three weeks before their thirty-seventh wedding anniversary. But Ed's life, as he describes it now, is perhaps the most characteristic of us all. "About to retire from a variety of hats I've worn on staff of American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics, and already getting involved in a variety of consulting activities—problem is, how busy does one want to be? Still live in beautiful Bucks County, PA. See John and Kitty Petrie frequently. Car pool with John Charlton, PA '59.

Thanks to the Alumnae Office I have news of two classmates. Marion Rogers Wheat writes that she is busy with many organizations and helping her husband who is state president of the Sons of the American Revolution. "I take tours thru the John Stark House (the DAR meeting house) and also hold offices in D.C.W. and D.F.P.A. I have a greenhouse which is beautiful right now. I still feel sad about Abbot. It is no more in my mind."

I know many of you share and have shared her feelings, but the girls now at Andover have such wonderful opportunities. I have been excited about the Russian teacher exchange program. Had a marvelous trip to Russia in October '79 and will return this summer for three weeks, including a ten-day cruise on the Volga. In preparation, I have been taking Russian lessons determined, at least, to be able to read signs. Peggy Morrill Wilkins writes that her two daughters are both Abbot graduates. Margaret Wilkins Noel, 1960, and Mary Wilkins Haslinger, 1963. "Margaret lives in Potomac, MD, and works in the school system on educational film strips. Mary lives in Bloomfield, CT, is active in civic affairs and was named one of the Outstanding Young Women in America for 1981."

How about the rest of you—either get in touch with me or the office in Andover. Abbot is alive as long as we are!

Your Class Secretary has received several nice letters containing news of our classmates. The first one is from Pete Davis, reading "I do plan to attend our 50th in '85 as my conflict with Brown University commencement no longer exists. I served two terms as a Trustee of Brown for a total of 16 years and they were very kind and gave me an Honorary Degree in 1979. My business life has been in investments and since 1964 I have been manager and now senior vp of the Providence office of Tucker, Anthony & R. L. Day. My golf handicap is 10 and I play indoor tennis in the winter to keep my competitive spirit alive." Pete has had a fine well-rounded career balanced between business and the academic world.

Speaking of Brown, I am reminded that at long last I've obtained an update on Bill

Russell. You may remember that he was with us only during our senior year and then went on to Brown with Davis and others. After Brown, Russell joined United Aircraft (now United Technologies) and worked with George Estes in their International Dept't. Bill took early retirement from UTC and set up his own consulting business. He travels a lot and represents some German companies and one in Minneapolis. He did live eleven years in Paris. He has an apartment in West Hartford and a place on Cape Cod. He says he is a distant cousin of our famous Headmaster, Al Stearns.

And now to the other letter I mentioned. It's from our good friend and popular classmate Bill Swope. He writes "I am still in the management consulting business in Chicago and intend to continue for about a year before starting to wind down. We consult in a number of areas, including planning and executive compensation. I have written and had published several books on management subjects, and, I am currently working on one, Decision Making Dynamics. We have two children. The elder is George, Jr. (also Bill) and the younger is Lucy. Bill is PA '68 and Lucy is Dobbs '70. I continue to fish for bass and trout up north, and for anything I can catch in Florida. My golf is suffering from lack of play, and my handicap has risen to an unmentionable number." Nice to catch up with you, Bill.

We are also the beneficiary of a short note from Theron S. Curtis. We used to call him "Smitty" or "Curt". Remember? Here it is - "I am retiring from First National Bank of Boston on June 1st, where I have been a vice president in the Trust Investment Division. Living year-round on Cape Cod with hope of doing much sailing, carpentry, puttering, tennis and swimming."

In the April '81 issue of the Andover Bulletin I gave a report on Bill Moody. I am sad to tell you that Bill died on March 21st at his home in Woodbury, CT. He leaves his wife, Polly, three sons and a daughter. His accomplishments were many—varsity football at Yale (scored two touchdowns against Michigan), Marine Corps, a prominent insurance agent owning several agencies and buildings in Waterbury. He had directorships like Citytrust—too numerous to mention here. Then, too, he had many civic and church responsibilities including scoutmastering. And Bill was an avid hunter and fisherman.

Thanks to two faithful classmates I can report the following: Doris Anderson Clark (now enjoying retirement) writes that son David Whittredge is chairman of the History Department at Pike School and has plans to be married in May; that same month daughter Carolyn will receive her MA from Smith. If Doris' plans were fulfilled, she spent March and April on the Q.E.II sailing through the Panama Canal. Lucky Girl!

Another proud parent is Cathleen Burns Elmer who reports son Ned ('76 PA) is now Fund Agent for his class. As a Harvard medical student ('83), he spends time at Mass. General Hospital and "has already begun to 'publish' in clinical and medical related journals." Kate also referred to Lucia Nunez Atlas as being a "devilishly persuasive" fund agent for '35. How about that? Hearty thanks to both of you! It will be interesting to hear the number of donors exceeding last year's total. May those 550 be rolling in under the Abbot Matching Plan.

Have any of you had a close encounter with a brown recluse spider? Our daughter has learned this is not an experience to be welcomed or taken lightly. She was bitten on the left index finger while still in Delaware but getting ready to move to Martinsville, VA. Pain, discoloration, swelling, and distortion of the finger followed, some of which still exists. Jake had already taken up duties of his new assignment with Du Pont in Virginia. To make things more complicated during the same period a bicycle spill caused Daniel, age 8, to break his arm. You can see why Wes and I thought our presence in Martinsville would be welcome when the movers arrived! What better way to spend a few days' vacation! The finger is now getting 2 hours/day therapy. We hope she regains full use of it. Having just launched a career as a consultant for "Color Me Beautiful", in Delaware, she is now setting up her business in Virginia. She determined I'm a "winter" so now I carry those color swatches with me whenever I shop!

A week's vacation accompanying Wes on a business trip gave me an opportunity to enjoy "southern hospitality" in Alabama. The location was Grand Hotel at Point Clear on the Mobile Bay, a great place for golfing, bicycling, dancing, and of course, eating. Losing the results of the latter is proving difficult.

It will be late summer before I will be doing this again. Between now and then, please send me your notes for these notes!

Our Washington correspondent, Lou Dolbeare, reports "a most pleasant and rewarding time while visiting American friends in England for five weeks in March and April." Cleve Cory is now "of counsel" in the Portland, OR firm he has been with for the last 25 years. His daughter, Camilla, who was at our 45th with her husband, Ron, produced a granddaughter last November. Cleve's youngest son, David, was on the all-state soccer team and captain of the basketball team at Catlan Gabel School. It will be interesting to follow his college career. Ax Hammer—"it would be great if I had some earth-shaking news, but it all boils down (and now get ready for a 'Hammerism') for me to 'people fun' whether business, family or squash—the variety is infinite and stimulating, even when you lose, because there is always another go-round." Ax doesn't change, he just gets better. Ned Bixby in a thoughtful mood, "Andover gave me a great deal, solid stability and a true sense of proportion and appreciation in all ways. I'm lucky to be around so long to recognize this. I, we, have 4 daughters and will try to send back a grandchild." Ned then asks, "look at Andover and its accomplishments, support, endowment, status—does Andover need me very much at all?" Frankly, I think Ned answers his own question but the following poem from Mr. Andover '36, Mike Jennings, written on the occasion of our last reunion, but never before published, amplifies Ned's good remarks.

Toast to the Class of 1936 (M.C.J.)
"Forty-five years is a pretty good spell
And over those years there are stories to tell

Go belly to the bar and spend the long night

Our school is still here so the world is all right

Since 'Andover's' legions her ancient foe defy

And any other songs our hearts to satisfy
Since this is a time for preppy nostalgia
And to hell with our age and aching neuralgia

Just remember those days before we were twenty

When we had all our teeth and good health aplenty

Let us wave that blue banner as we did before

And pray to God that we make it once more.

News from and of: Ax Hammer, Harry Lyman, Ned Bixby, Cleve Cory, Herb Boas, John Bishop, Ray Korndorfer, Lou Dolbeare, and Jerry Bradford. Topped off by an epic one year late. Leading off with Jerry Bradford, he had led a non-traditional life by last column's definition. Brad has been flying around the world for TWA until four years ago. Since then and six years prior he, Bev, two sons and two daughters have called Bermuda their home. Their children finished their formal education in the states. They also traveled with Captain Bradford. One daughter at age 11 balked at going to New Zealand for Easter vacation, because she had already been around the world twice. The other was once rebuked by a teacher for having too much imagination. She had truthfully told her classmates that she had spent the weekend at an Irish castle. Jerry, now retired, walks out of his Somerset house and on a clear day can see all the way to the Hill. That is when he is not golfing, fishing or just taking in the beauty of his surroundings.

Herb Boas is trying "to develop a well-formed case of 'the slows'." Ray Korndorfer writes from St. Paul's in Taylor, PA that he still has the problem of "C. and E. people (in the trade that is Christmas and Easter). Yet, people are growing in the faith and there are always opportunities in the ministry." Ray was our golf captain and if you accept Finis Origine Pendet, you won't be surprised at the report he shot a 74 last October. A nice report from Harry Lyman, out of Osprey, FL since 1972, "enjoying full retirement—volunteer a good bit for the community good with the real activity being in a barbershop chorus in Venice and singing to help speech-handicapped children." Harry in a P.S. asked, "if I ever got to Middlefield, CT to see the Lyman farm operations." That night in reading the local newspaper, I saw "One Middlefield orchard farmer, Charles Lyman, said the late snow was a blessing." (For whom?) And from that old agrestic Brahmin from Anasquam, John Bishop, "only exciting thing here (3/15/82) is that I've started tomat's."

Our 45th brought back to Andover's magnificent campus Bill and Phyllis Bowne, Vin and Sally Broderick, Ed and Tuschka Chapman, Bert Davis, Pat Deming, Ty Dines, John and Maggie Foskett, Angus and Pat Gordon, Jake and Ann Jacobs, Tom Lough, Kim and Pat Loring, Joe and Miriam Machell, Horace and Betty Poynter, Bill and Connie Quinby, Howie Reed, Tom Rockwell, Chuck and Winnie-Lou Rounds, Bill and Gertrude Scheft, George and Adrienne Schreiber, Bill (H.Y.) and Mary Stevens, Jack and Jane Ware, and Connie and Rosalyn Wood—plus ten or so from Abbot '37 who contributed greatly to the success of our Reunion. I'm persuaded that '37 was a vintage year at both schools!

Nature smiled on the Reunion: until Sunday it was cool and sunny and the elms were spectacular. The Reunion program was excellent, the opportunity to hear, and to get to know, Don McNemar left us confident that Andover is in good hands - and it didn't take long with Britta for us also to know that Don is in good hands! The Alumni Fund report was impressive: the 50th Reunion class topped $100,000—it is not surprising that Jack Ware, Bill Quinby and Jake Jacobs are already hard at work getting us in a position where we won't strike out when we get to bat for our 50th in 1987! They can't succeed unless we help them.

Chuck Rounds and Jake Jacobs saw to our nourishment at our class dinner, and Horace Poynter provided the music. They did well. By acclamation, Chuck Rounds was elected Class Secretary. His address is 3 Fox Hill Lane, Norwell, MA 02061. Our 50th should be a humdinger—plan to 'be there'!

Word was recently received of the death in June 1981 of Dr. George R. Read. Members of the Class of 1937 join me in deepest sympathy and best wishes for his son Peter S. Read, whose address is 6 Stewart Road, Essex Fells, NJ 07021.

Reunion has come and gone and a good time was had by all! Bancroft housed both PA and A.A. Alumni. It was a short walk to the outdoor cocktail party on Friday night, which was held in the garden at Stuart House and another hop, skip and a jump to the outdoor barbeque in front of Commons. It was a bit cold and damp, but we were soon warmed by a cordial reception for the new headmaster and his wife in the Addison Gallery. Afterwards, we all returned to Bancroft for an informal get together with our old and new friends.

The Abbot Reunion returnees were the following: our Reunion Chairman, Mary Pettengill Smith-Peterson; Louise Stevenson Andersen; Barbara Randolph Bowman; Pri Richards Phenix; and yours truly, Sally Gage Curtis; Skeeter Ransom Tucker; Alice Brennan Rock; Betty Melcher Anderson and Nancy Burns McArdle joined us for the Alumni Parade on Saturday when we all sported blue and white golf umbrellas with a blue silk screened school seal. (Sorry, but there are no extras left over!). An outdoor picnic followed, plus an "Abbot Girls" party at Nancy's house in Andover where Pett showed movies of our school days taken by her father circa 1937. Around four in the afternoon, we attended the Abbot Alumnae tea at Morton House and had an opportunity to chat with Miss Tucker and Miss Sweeney.

The Class Supper was held with our PA colleagues and their wives at Cooley House—cocktails, roast beef dinner, dancing and speeches—with about forty-five people in all attending. It was a fun evening and we all enjoyed it.

Sunday morning was busy with chapel; PA movies, tours of the Addison and a movie about nuclear war called The Last Epidemic. The high point of the day, of course, was the seafood brunch at Cooley House where we said our goodbyes and vowed to return for the 50th!

Bar Randolph Bowman came from Houston, TX to the Reunion and gets the prize for coming from the farthest point. After the Reunion, Barbara visited me in Amesbury, MA for about five days and we went sightseeing and toured New England from Cape Ann to Maine. Bar's son, Booty, has just been made president of his steel company and she is now the grandmama of five.

The class extends its deepest sympathy to Grace Vibberts Conlin who lost her husband after a bout with cancer in March, 1981. "Phronise" is now teaching the first grade in Portland, CT and loves it. Her children and two grandsons visit often. More news will be forthcoming in the next issue when there will be more space and hopefully more time to write!

Many, many thanks again to all of you who gave so generously to the Alumni Fund during the past year. It was the largest gift that our Class has ever made and it was gratefully received and appreciated.

Very special thanks to Nancy Burns McArdle for her warm hospitality and for opening up her lovely home for us. The wonderfully efficient PA Reunion Committee deserves much praise and credit as does our Reunion Chairman, Mary-Emily, for all of their efforts in making our 45th Reunion a successful and happy occasion!

Parker Blanchard aptly calls my last-minute memo a "panic request" to which he and five others responded with alacrity. Parker describes himself as scrambling to recover from the disastrous '70s, and having developed a consulting firm called Securities Associates to help solve problems of businesses in general. He and Esther, who have four kids and five grandchildren, live in Winchester, MA and she'll summer in Acton, ME. . . . George Horwitz and Joan met PA trustee, Peter Grant, on a "Vistafjord" cruise, and play golf with Kay and Bill McConnell, who also live in Boca Raton. He and Joan have seven grandchildren between them. Speaking of Boca Raton, Bob and Jean Young have a condo there and are reported on by Bob Gillispie, all being golfers. He sees no change in Bob Y. even though the latter reports losing an inch in height from recent surgery on a Princeton soccer knee. (If B.Y. had gone to Yale they'd have taken better care of him). The Gillispies have a condo at Del Ray because Cynthia likes warm weather while he's for skiing and paddle tennis. (I like warm weather too—any room?)

A bit further south, in Miami, is Dave Williams, a E. F. Hutton stockbroker and bookwriter (he's on his second—no title yet—but out in Feb. 1983). He's off to visit son, Dan, PA '67, chief of Knight-Ridder News Bureau in Peking. Dan learned Cantonese in the Army which the recruiters ought to tout. Son, Dave, is in business with father, and the third is an exporter. Dave didn't answer my inquiries as to Hank. Please do, or, better, will Hank write me? The last Floridian writes an envelope note: "Enjoyed seeing Fred Stott in Palm Beach. Wooster Richard". The other envelope note was also laconic: Hank McConnell hopes to make our 45th! (and I hope you do too); while Nat Abelson says he retired for the second time and has never been so busy. I talked to Nat not long ago and he did sound busy and, happily, well.

Oklahoma banker, Ed Kennedy, describes the life of banker/rancher as "pretty mundane"; the cattle business he classifies as "dismal". Travels took them to Cairo the day Sadat was shot, creating a wild scene. Ed hasn't seen any PA classmates since a 1972 Yale reunion, but keeps up through this stimulating? column. How about '83?

Two deaths of men I have not seen since undergraduate days: Mrs. Joe Emery (Priscilla) wrote Dave Meader, our agent, of Col. Joe's death in Union, ME on February 8, 1982, after many years of illness. She told us of Joe's warm feelings for PA. Jordan Whitelaw's death on the same day was reported in a nice encomium by the music editor of the Boston Globe, and evoked a letter to me from Henry Steinhardt. Jordan directed the highly successful TV series Evening at Symphony (the Boston orchestra). Hartford got these and I enjoyed many of them. The Globe writer described Jordan as never being "far from hot water", speaking up on truths others were too polite to utter. He characterized him as "a resolutely unsentimental person" who did a great deal for our collective lives. Henry's letter spoke of Jordan with great affection; they'd been good friends at Harvard and graduate school, and he spoke of his vast knowledge and comprehension of music. It was my understanding Jordan had little sentiment for PA, and probably none for me. I did not reciprocate: I thought those concerts were outstanding.

Henry also said Ted Yardley had retired to 410 Davisville Road, E. Falmouth, MA. He (HS) is in a second career, this time art (formerly architecture), still back-packing and spending a month each year out in the mountains of Washington state. He enjoyed a trip to China in 1981. He and I rue the fact that we see so little of each other . . . It was nice to hear from Dick Downes (long silent, I believe) from UNH, Durham, reporting Julie's and his work there, and three sons, especially David, PA '82.

Larry Viney's daughter, Vanessa, called me in April from Boston. She was at her brother-in-law's wedding; inquired of Rafferty and Fred Kent, and reports Larry and Eirlys as well. . . . Another phone call, from me to Guy Dempsey, was not long, but I can report him well after a bout with the big C. He has moved to Sharon, CT and is a partner in the law firm of Shearman & Sterling in NYC.

Lastly, with extreme embarrassment, I report Bill Lynch as living at 10592 Occidental Road, Sebastopol, CA 95472, an address I got from an envelope mailed March 31. P.S. I mislaid the letter!

A New Yorker clipping sums most of us up. Reporting a newspaper article on a book called Sex After Sixty printed in extra-large bold type for easy reading, the NY'er quips: "The flesh is willing but the eyes are weak." I do hope I haven't violated any copyright laws. It is apposite.

Thanks for all your letters.

Jack Eckle tried retirement from April 1 to May 11, 1981, but the life of leisure was not for him. He returned to insurance work but this time on the agency side of the business. He reports that he and Anne live a quiet life in Durham, NC, looking forward to visits from or to daughter Dayl, who lives with her husband and two children in Austin, TX where Bob teaches at the University, and son Greg, lives in Alexandria, VA.

Arnie Holthausen and family have had a harrowing year. Their grandson, Doug, was brutally injured by a fast-moving car on April 22, 1981. "After twenty-two terrible weeks in a coma, he began to respond. He can now take four or five steps without crutches and is beginning to read and use his right hand for eating. Speaking is terribly difficult, but he is working hard on all his therapy. His mother's devotion and tireless care are most responsible for his beginning recovery." I speak for everyone in sending prayers and best wishes to Doug for a continued recovery.

Bob Off accepted early retirement at the Mellon Bank in 1979 in order to take over the management of a Pittsburgh foundation, The Carnegie Hero Fund. He and Polly have three children, all married, and three grandchildren. There is news from Pete Strauss: daughter Eileen recently married James Murdock of Oakland, CA; daughter Sally will graduate from Yale this May and will undoubtedly receive multiple academic honors; and son John, PA '69, and his wife Anna recently had a second child, David. John is an assistant professor of economics at the University of Virginia.

The numbers were down but the enthusiasm was undiminished as the annual pilgrimage of sports fans assembled in New Haven for the Yale-Harvard hockey game in March. Those in attendance included Harry Anderson, Pete Anderson, John Kebabian and Jim Kittredge, all looking fit and prosperous.

First my apologies for these notes being so late. The reunion was a success, thanks mainly to Mel Weiner and Scotty Royce. On Friday evening Scotty and Ann hosted a fine cocktail party, which was followed by dinner in Flagstaff Court, which was followed by partying 'til the small hours of the morning in the new recreation rooms of the dorms, which was followed by the throbbing heads (one at least).

On Saturday Bob and Laurie Feinberg and your secretary enjoyed an excellent breakfast in the Commons and a pleasant walk around the Hill. Later several of us attended service in Cochran Chapel and then marched to the gym for ceremonies and lunch. The highlight of Saturday was a tennis match with Mac Marshman and Don Green pitted against the vastly superior team of Ernie and Fiona Stockwell. That evening Mel and Nancy Weiner provided the facilities and excellent food of a private club for cocktails and dinner. This preceded a few speeches and the great music of Hart Day Leavitt's aggregation, and later more partying in the dorm.

We all regretted that more classmates could not make it, but set out below are some notes from those in attendance. These guys are bad enough in their penmanship as is, but add to that several drinks, well, it's just tough reading.

Larry and Pat Blood are enjoying life in New Hampshire, having given five children college educations. Bob Feinberg has just been re-elected to a second ten-year term as Clinton County and Family Court Judge. Don Marshman, the father of five, modestly admits to being an athlete, wit, clotheshorse, bon vivant, would-be roue, gourmet, etc., and looks forward to more of the same. Everett Wilkinson still does not have the time to do all he wants, but manages rowing on the Charles River, cross-country skiing, and sailing. Tom Hartmann is a political science professor at Rutgers and is on the staff of Senator Bill Bradley. Mel Weiner is well, president of his own company, and the father of three. John Freeman is an architect in Houston, and was accompanied by lovely wife Aline. They have two children. Paul and Ann Anderson were also welcome guests. Paul is Trust Officer at some unreadable bank, and Ann is active in volunteer hospital work. Swede and Rusty Anderson boast two children and two grandchildren. They are now enjoying a more leisurely pace. George and Glo Heiner enthusiastically enjoyed the occasion. George is chairman of Marshall Elevator Company. Joe and Mary Vaumonde are the parents of three, and Joe is president of his own ad agency. George and Nancy Cooper have three of their four children who are PA graduates. Paul and Judith Whipple hailed in from Plymouth—a pleasure to see him after all these years. Red (or ex-Red) Pettit and Bill Knauss showed up briefly for lunch.

I'll update those who did not show up next time around. Promise!

Do wish I had lots of news to report, but unfortunately that is not the case. Happy news from Addie Waterhouse MacKay. Her daughter, Anne, was married in April to Joseph Albert Philippe Rossignol. The wedding took place in St. Augustine, FL.

Sad news from Dotty White Wicker. Her son was involved in a car accident two years ago which left him a quadriplegic. She writes that it has had a devastating impact on their family life and advises all to "have lots of insurance." Our sympathy and concern go to you and yours, Dotty.

Another reunion coming up for our family. Daughter, Judy and her husband Marc are returning on leave from Bangkok, Thailand, along with their two little girls, Kelly and Anne, after two years there. We've never seen Anne in person. Two years is definitely too long to be separated from loved ones. Seems like 22 years to me! Who said time flies as one gets older!! Judy and Marc will be attending her 15th reunion at Andover in June. Too bad we're a year apart for reunions—and yet, perhaps it's just as well she didn't witness her cackling mother last June at our 40th.

One humorous anecdote from our reunion last year. I had mentioned to one of the PA men I thought it was remarkable that our whole class of Abbot '41 was still living—at least to my knowledge. He retorted, "With you as class president they don't dare die!" Whatever that means. Any ideas? If so, tell me all, the good and the bad. It may be one way of getting some news from you.

The Abbot Class of '41, along with all Abbot alumnae would like to pay tribute to a very special lady, Marguerite C. Hearsey, on the occasion of her 90th birthday August 8th. We extend to her not only our love and best wishes, but sincere gratitude for the wisdom and warmth she offered in her guidance as principal of Abbot. Her patience and understanding of the giddy girls of the golden years were outstanding. She touched the lives of many Abbot girls who will always remember her with deep affection.

Between Friday night's cocktail party and Sunday's brunch at the Lanam Club a record 58 alumni, wives and children attended our 40th Reunion—several for the first time since leaving PA. (The previous record was 49 for last year's class of '41.) The overwhelming consensus was that it was a most enjoyable weekend. We are building a solid base for those reunions to follow.

On Friday night Jim Brayton and Ted Scheft got their feet wet for the first time. Jim came up from Rhode Island and Ted came out of retirement in nearby Swampscott where his major avocation seems to be keeping his score low on the golf course. Saturday evening we were joined for dinner by George Warren who is pursuing a career in fine arts and living on the Cape and Bud Thurber down from Nashua, NH. This year we held a joint reunion with Abbot for the first time but, regrettably, only one alumnae, Lois (Hudson) Aplington came down from her home in New Hampshire to join us. Though completely outnumbered Lois ran into a few recognizable faces from Andover. She certainly deserves a commendation for loyalty, steadfastness and bravery. Hopefully next time around the Abbot ranks will be increased. We enjoyed having her. Also visiting on Saturday from nearby were Grant and Betts Barker. Grant, after a long career in brokerage and real estate, is in the resort time sharing business with properties in Hilton Head and Florida. Thrus Hammer and Mary came up from Stow, MA. Many of you knew one or more of Mary's brothers at Andover—the Hudners all had illustrious careers both at Andover and later years. Jack and Linda Searle were also with us for Saturday. Jack is with TRW in New England but also has a home in Florida where he plans to spend more time in the years ahead. Wally and Margie Latour returned after a 15-year absence. Wally is in several ventures with his brother-in-law, Bill Moore '45 as well as permanently residing in the Vermont ski area. Bud Lewis and his bride along with Robin and Joan Nunez, all of Andover, were at the Reunion. Robin, who is a surgeon, again arranged a great Sunday brunch for us at the Lanam Club.

Many traveled a great distance to be with us. John and Betty Cochran flew in from San Jose where they have lived for 25 years. John has spent his whole career with General Electric and is an executive in their nuclear program. Paul and Marietta Schumacher from Hillsborough, CA made the Reunion the centerpiece of a three-month cross-country journey visiting friends and seeing the sights. Paul has retired from a long career with the park service and is now semi-retired while managing personal holdings. Fred and Cathy Kahn came from New Orleans with their son. Fred has turned a life-long love of photography into a business and now owns a photography store there. Hank and Gail See journeyed from Minneapolis where Hank is with Apache Industries while Gail owns a bookstore. Lem and Ginny Beardsley preceded their visit from Elkhart by sending survival kits for the entire class. Lem has spent his entire career with Miles Laboratories holding down a wide variety of executive management responsibilities with the company.

Jim and Kay Carrington were first timers at Reunion. After graduating from Annapolis and spending 20 years in the Navy, Jim taught for ten years at Georgetown and now runs a number of small companies in the Washington area while living in Annandale, VA. Kay told me that in one 20-year span they moved 19 times. Ken Keuffel left his daughter's high school graduation in Lawrenceville, NJ and drove all night to join us. Ken has been coaching football and teaching English for 31 years at Lawrenceville interrupted only by a short stint of college coaching.

Vern Midgeley and Audy came from Crofton, MD where Midge runs an association of insurance agents. His son, Scott, an Andover graduate, who was in TV production for several years is now an attorney in Phoenix. Bob Siegel returned after a 40-year absence from New York where he is in the commercial real estate business. He returned with Renny and Betty Wacht who have an apartment in New York, a house in Southampton and a condominium in Palm Beach. While living and traveling occupies Renny full time, Betty runs a prosperous fashion design business.

cense plate on Vin's Mercedes tell half the story of his business career—it says MERGERS. The other half is acquisitions. Vin may be the only two Mercedes family in the class. Mergers and acquisitions are obviously good. Joe Leiper, who lives in Blauvelt and Southampton, reported that he has just a short time to go with the New York City Department of Transportation. Tom and Cal Quarles came over from Amherst, where he runs the local bank while Cal is with Mt. Holyoke College.

Down from Exeter, NH were Al and Ginny Beck. After MIT and a number of years of suburban New Jersey living and a career at Amax, Al opted for a smaller community and chose Exeter. He's happy he did it. A son starts at Andover next year. Also down from New Hampshire were Nate and Ruth Cartmell. After a stint in the advertising business and a partnership in an athletic equipment company Nate has had a long career in fund raising including a key role in Yale's most recent successful drive.

Bill and Carol Flint came up from New Haven where Bill owns a company that manufactures ladders. Also up from New Canaan were Howard and Sue Gray. Howard is a marketing and merchandising director with Better Homes and Gardens in New York. Brad Griffin came in from Litchfield while employed by the state of Connecticut.

John Wood and wife, I believe, put in their first Reunion appearance although they live in the nearby Boston suburbs. John Treadwell and Connie, on the other hand, have made the last three and enjoyed them all. John continues with United Brands whom he joined after a long military career and a short stint in advertising. Win Smith, who stays busy managing personal and family affairs after a teaching career at the University of Chicago Business School, flew in from Chicago.

After 5, 10 or even 40 years everyone seemed to recognize everyone else. In fact, conversations seemed to pick up almost where they were left off many years ago. Yes, there were a few more gray hairs than 5 years ago but the combined class weight doesn't seem to have changed much in 40 years. While some of us have added a few pounds or more, others like Keuffel and Carrington look far trimmer than they did 40 years ago. A remarkable group returned. A lot more should have, but you'll have your chance in five year's time.

I can only say that I was very disappointed with the turnout of the Class of '42. I was the only member of the class there.

I arrived for the Abbot Tea at 4:00 pm on Saturday afternoon and was delighted to see Miss Sweeney and Jane Sullivan. They both look absolutely marvelous AND it was fun to talk about old times. As you all are well aware, it was 40 years ago that we departed from the hallowed gates of dear old Abbot.

There was a fabulous turn out of the classes of 1932 and 1937. Met scads of interesting people; of particular interest to me was in meeting Ruth Stott Peters of '32, whose husband Pete had been with CON-OCO and knew lots of old friends from Ponca City days.

Also met several gals from the New Hampshire area from the various reunioning classes.

From the Abbot Tea, I was off to the cocktail party with the Andover class. They were most gracious and charming. Could not help but feel a bit sad that we had not had the opportunity to meet them while we were at Abbot and Andover together. Obie Obermeyer was the chairman for our classes and did an absolutely fantastic job of coordinating EVERYTHING. His wife, Bunny, is a fabulous gal. I must add that Obie was most supportive in my efforts to try and organize our class—alas to no avail.

Admittedly, there were lots of conflicts involved for many of us. Talked with Mary Peg Boynton, Jean McKay, Irene Abbott, via Mary Peg, and they had previous commitments. Tried to reach Louise Leslie, Pam Bolton, Sue Bates, and Ninon Lacey, Rose Wind, Barbara Sanders, who I know is on the Cape somewhere? All attempts were unsuccessful.

Did meet Ruth Cartmell, wife of Nate Cartmell '42, who knew Fran Troup of '41 very well from Vassar days so I got caught up on an old dear friend. Mayhap things will look up for our 50th or even perhaps for our 45th. Here's hoping.

An informative note from Ben Hammer was so well crafted that I am no more able to enhance its excellence than, as his understudy fullback, circa '42, I was able to improve on his cross-body blocks. Here-with, Ben's note verbatim: "Daughter Kelly attended Colby-Sawyer, graduated from U. of Northern Colorado, taught in Color., Wyoming and now Utah where she is an active anti-MX missive. Happily returning to Mass. this spring. Benjie, 25, graduated from New England College with a semester at their British campus with his now-wife Margot Bibring. Benj is 6'5", Margot 4'10"; he always liked little things. Youngest son Tim had three years of varsity hockey at defense at New England College, retired this year in favor of studies including January term internship at the Boca Raton Club complex in Florida. Benj sells for Dodge Div. of McGraw-Hill. Tim will finish as a business major this spring. Julie, tired of hanging around the house, is office mgr. for Carlton Village, a great new retirement health care concept of condos, apts., town houses, and self-contained village in Bedford, MA. I continue to involve myself with the New England edition of Soundings and only wish I could sail as often as the younger Hammers ski. It's almost the end of May here in beautiful New England and I'm sure you share with me the memories of how exhilarating it is after a long northeast winter. This year it's especially happy for me because I have Bell's Palsy. That may sound strange, indeed, but there's a valid reason for it. I entered the hospital two weeks ago with what had been diagnosed as a stroke! I am a diabetic and my mother died of stroke; so, as you can imagine, there was a morbid fear

the two-ambassador family

Two-career marriages are common, but two-country marriages are not, even in the diplomatic community. When Carleton Coon was named U.S. Ambassador to Nepal and Jane Abell Coon was named U.S. Ambassador to Bangladesh, they became the first married couple in the U.S. career foreign service to become ambassadors. Carl flew to Katmandu last June, Jane to Dacca in July. The borders of their countries in South Asia don't quite touch.

Carl and Jane Coon both wanted to advance their diplomatic careers, so they felt tremendously lucky to simultaneously be given ambassadorships in South Asia, where each separately has expertise. The hard part is the separation, their first in 13 years of marriage; the exhilaration is the challenge of their diplomatic posts. As Jane Coon put it in a UPI interview when they were newly appointed last June, "It's a compromise . . . We enjoy what we are doing. Carl knew I would get pretty restless if I went out as the ambassador's wife. And the same thing would happen if he went out as the ambassador's husband."

Since graduating from Harvard in 1949, Carl Coon has served in Frankfurt, Damascus, New Delhi, Tabriz and as deputy chief of mission in Dacca and Rabat. Last summer he was liaison to the new U.S. Ambassador to Saudi Arabia in a volatile period of relations with that ally. Jane Abell Coon, a Wooster College graduate from Dublin, NH, has served since 1951 in Karachi, Bombay, and New Delhi, where she first met Carl Coon. Most recently she was assistant deputy secretary of state for Near Eastern and South Asian Affairs.

They were married in 1968, after his first wife, Janet, died of cancer, leaving six children, 4 through 16. Jane Coon gave up her foreign service career for eight years, to comply with regulations (eased since then) and to give time to the children, now all graduated from high school. Three are Andover alumni: William '68 and the two youngest, Ellen '79 and Richard '81. The Andover tradition was begun by Carl's father, Carleton Coon, a pioneering anthropologist, author of The Story of Man.

"Our tasks as ambassadors are not so different," Carl Coon told the Bulletin on a brief trip back to the States in April. Bangladesh is due east of India and Nepal borders India on the north-east, sandwiched between that country and China. One is steamy and hot, and the other high and dry, but they are almost adjacent, similar in size and both are poor countries. Bangladesh is the poorest of the poor, 93,000,000 people with a per capita income of less than $100 a year. Nepal has only 15,000,000 people with a per capita income of $120 a year, on the same amount of land, but most of it is mountainous and unarable, over 20,000 feet high. "In countries like these," Ambassador Coon points out, "the American role is about one-half diplomacy and one-half management of the official U.S. presence there: the Peace Corps, AID, the ICA (International Communications Agency, formerly Voice of America) and the Defense Attache. The Ambassador has to make sure they all have a clear idea of where they are going and that there is a consistency in all this.

Are languages still important? "I study the native language everywhere I go, to be able to communicate with people in villages, and because people appreciate it. French and Spanish are probably the most important languages world-wide, and after that a cluster of languages—German, Russian, Chinese, Arabic, Portuguese and Japanese. Arabic is particularly important because so many individual countries are involved and because the people there place such a high value on other people's fluency in Arabic.

"As a new ambassador, you go in with a general knowledge of the area. But before you can function effectively and make diplomatic judgments, you have a period of learning where you soak up information just as fast as you can. Then you can go ahead and function diplomatically and as a manager so that the purposes for which you've been sent can be effective. You don't come out with a complete game plan, but a general sense of purpose.

"In Nepal the challenge is to get a coherent view of what the modernization process is all about, what the king and the government are trying to do and how we fit in. Developing higher pervading our family. Fortunately it turned out to be Bell's which is usually a temporary nerve disorder which paralyzes the muscles on one side of the face. I am just about back to normal and thankful as can be to have it! It sure makes you appreciate life and May in Connecticut a lot more!

Genie and I had planned to go to West Palm Beach that week with the Rover Boys, Lee Bergstrom and Bert Page, but a business problem shot that down. It was just as well as I'm sure my Bell's act would have ruined their vacation. P. B. Bergstrom filled in for us and Berge reports they had a great time.

Had a letter from 'San Francisco' Bob Beach letting me know that son Bobby is attending nearby Wesleyan. We plan to get together with him soon. Bob sees Ross and Maggie Hoy and Len Richardson regularly. He was kind enough to once again urge us to make the west coast grand tour, and believe me, he's more in jeopardy than ever with that invitation!

I talked to Bill Salfonstall inadvertently one day. I was calling Steve Sorota and my tri-focular vision skipped a line in my address book and I got Bill instead of Steve (later talked to Steve and he and Steph are just great and very busily enjoying their Cape Cod retirement). All is well with the Salfonstall clan too, I am happy to say. Bill tells me that John Blake did one heck of a job as the president of The Clover Club of Boston. It is like the Gridiron Club in Washington and their annual party is a roast of state and local politicians. Bill says that John as M.C. and writer got off some really hilarious stuff which in his considered legal opinion was actionable in many cases! John was recently honored by St. Coletta Day School in Braintree and was the recipient of their Silver Anniversary Distinguished Service Award. The school serves 150 handicapped youngsters and John was the unanimous selection because of his unlimited support of the school.

Bill also told me that Howie Reed is happily active in real estate promotion in Anchorage, Alaska. Howie would invite you to drop in for an evening if you're in the area except that the evenings are 6 months long!

Seth Brody reports that daughter Deborah graduated from Wellesley last June and was the speaker for her class. Son Charlie is graduating from Yale this month. I share his pride and relief as our youngest, Leigh, graduated from the University of Hartford last week. After four kids and 16 years of Bursars' 'Dear Johns', it's parents' time. Whoopee!!

Lenny Lunder is in the next happy stage . . . both daughters are expecting in August. Len and Wilma spent a month in Boca Raton this winter playing golf and getting in shape for the double event.

That's about all from here right now. Count your blessings, write if you get work, and don't forget the Alumni Fund.

Barbara Ball Bacon reports that in 1981 she had separate reunions with Katharine Mulford Lyon, Mary Taylor Sherpick of the Class of 1945 and Nancy Stone Heyman of standards of living for the people implies changes in the economic, social and political institutions. This is very delicate and in many cases the most important role is to be there, as a helping presence, but to stay out of their way."

The U.S. Ambassadors in Nepal and Bangladesh compare notes a lot, which Carl Coon describes as a great plus. How about the minuses? "We miss each other. There's direct air service between our capitals, but not a comprehensible telephone service, so we send each other letters via government travelers going to the other country, and we aim for one long weekend a month together." But it doesn't always work out, he added. Jane had cancelled their weekend plans the previous month, because of a coup d'etat in Bangladesh.

If you have never participated in a Phonathon for the Alumni Fund, do yourself a favor and check it out the next time one is scheduled for your neighborhood. They can be a riot of fun and they serve the old school well with direct financial help and indirect, long-term public and private relations.

The Phonathon is a tradition here in New York and a festive event held annually at the club of the Williams graduates. 20 to 25 fellows and Abbot ladies from all age groups (Classes '78 back to '20s this year) gather for 1, 2 or 3 nights of phoning for a final shot at annual giving. The million dollar target and achievement are history thanks to your appreciation of PA, then and now. At the last "do" I chatted with Johnny Dupree (whose two girls were married this summer), Edge Quaintance (First time in Years), Charlie Black (Up on Upper Pucker), the Fullertons, PK Fisher, the mystery writer, Bill Christianson of Santa Fe and ex-C.I.A., Phil Sweet, Bill Pollard (Main Line), Hank Ross's mother, Pete Harrison (Also Maine Line), Barry Vroman—Down East, Jim Mellor's wife (In the Sun Belt), Cy Head (who swears Neuhoff was in the '81 reunion), Larry Barss (Was I in '46?), Harry Gruner (In Mellon Country), Jock Darling's wife (In old Virginy). Dean Estabrook (For President?), Lee Nutt, Doug Shaw, John Roger's bodyguard, Cliff Crosby (On the road Again), Ed Donovan, Dick Kimball (whose Son Charlie was at the Phonathon and is with Ogilvy, Benson), Bill Currier (A born-again reunioner), Ian Taylor of Friendly's, that Tom Carvel threat, Dennis Maxwell up in Fairfield, Arvid Anderson. Steve Fisher in his Rolls. Lindsay Bradford, "Have boat, will fish", and Bruce Parker who reports: "Things have got to get better." (Oh, and Jim Mellor, later in N.Y.C.). If I didn't call, you must have given already "at the office," so thanks lads and feel free to write checks whenever. The cause is just. The benefits great. Only 30-35% of all PA alumni give at all to the school that launched their way to success. If we matched St. Paul's (60%) think how much money we would raise? Perhaps you are thinking of becoming a NON SIBI? Get your name up in lights. Get it out of your system. Write Begien for details.

Gil Collier, one of our several musical geniuses, writes from New Jersey where he is aiming to prove "that NJ is not just a vast wasteland separating New York and Philadelphia" that he is composing and functioning as Associate Director of the Monmouth Conservatory of Music and founder of the Composer's Guild of New Jersey. . . . Another musical member of our class, John Freeman (Metropolitan Opera Guild, Inc.), comes to mind as a result of a picnic the AA of NY held in May for New Students from the New York area entering PA this fall. It was held at John's old home, "Wave Hill" in Riverdale, on the grand terrace with its breathtaking view of the Hudson and the Palisades beyond. Fred Pelham was there, with Stephanie his pretty daughter, who will be a lower.

This column would not be complete without a word or two about John Friday, the Round Hill Out-of-Bounder. Turtie's son, John Jr. was married in June and I finally got to play a round at Round Hill. I soundly pounded the Bounder into the ground, playing, of course a new set of Sounders . . . Ed and Pati Jones (Abbot '48) have moved from Cold Spring Harbor to the "East Village" just about nine holes from Sheila and me. It's very convenient. They are walking distance of St. Marks in the Bowerie (for meditation) and within view of the California Hot Tub, sauna and massage parlor on Third (for relaxation).

That's it, and just about enough too. Write if you get work. Send money to Bege. Call me when you are in New York and I'll arrange theatre tickets at the Comedy Club if you are nice.

Reunion weekend was this year, as it always has been for those who attended, a great, good time! Friday afternoon featured tours of the Addison Gallery and the Athletic Complex, a discussion of "Alumni and the Admissions Process" and a reception for '47 and '52 at the home of Peter and Jean McKee. This was followed by a buffet supper for all classes in Flagstaff Court (the weather was clear but cool), a chance to greet Don and Britta McNemar and Fred Stott who retires this year as Secretary of the Academy and an informal gathering at Stevens House (our headquarters) which lasted, for some of us, until the early morning.

Among the Friday arrivals in addition to Mary Lou and myself were Win and Maureen Allegaert accompanied by their son, Greg; Fred Fortmiller and two of his children. We were disappointed that Mary Jane Fortmiller was prevented from coming at the last minute by her teaching responsibilities. George Kurzon came in from Watertown, MA. Although they could only stay for the Friday activities, Bob and Ruth Remis added to the pleasure of the day by their presence. Bob and Roberta Lasley arrived late with son, Ross, and daughter, Beth, who had just completed final exams that afternoon at home in Moorestown, NJ. Bob, by the way, was recently granted a patent for an oxygen pulsing device used, I believe, to speed the healing of wounds.

Tony Schulte, honcho of Random House, was there as was Bud and Gay Steinbach, Bill Stopford and Mike Suisman accompanied by a fine young man named David Suisman. Chuck Leach, one of our class veterans, came from Washington, DC with his daughter, Alice Mary. Many of the war veterans who graduated with '47 have subsequently been reassigned to classes with which they would have graduated had it not been for military service. Chuck suggested that we encourage them to join '47 for our next reunion. A good idea since they may have more acquaintances among us than among their assigned classes. Harry Cornell gets our long-distance prize having brought his lovely wife, Ann, from Joplin, Missouri where he runs Leggett and Platt, a major manufacturer of bed springs and other wire products. Finally, among the Friday PA crowd were Bayard and Bea Waring. Bayard has added a new chapter to his working career titled Business Manager of the Waring School, a liberal arts secondary school in Beverly, MA. We were also fortunate to have five Abbot alumnae join us for reunion this year. Since information about this may be found in Mary Lou's adjacent column, I will only say your presence enhanced the pleasure of the weekend, ladies, and I hope even more of you will join us for the 40th.

The highlight of Saturday morning, after breakfast, a chapel service and the class parade, was the annual alumni/ae meeting chaired by retiring Alumni Council President, Bill Rosenau. Bill did a superb job with his warm, natural conversational style seasoned with good humor. Other Saturday arrivals in addition to Bill and Jane were Steve and Patty Goodhue, Dean Lackey, Sandy and Ellie Trowbridge, Dean and Eliza Webster, Henry Hyder, another of the veterans in our class with his wife, Kay and Felix Drury with his guest, Jeannie Zwerling. One of Felix's interesting architectural jobs at the present time is a national theater of Guatemala which he is designing and building.

A variety of activities, athletic, intellectual and otherwise, followed a picnic lunch all leading up to the class cocktail party, dinner and dance Saturday evening. Jim and Alma Grew and Fred Stott stopped in for cocktails and Fritz and Laura Allis, Dick and Norma Pieters, Bob and Kay Sides, Steve and Steph Sarota and Eleanor Tucker (from Abbot) joined us for dinner. The "great end and real purpose" of Reunion is touching again associations of the past with both classmates and faculty. It was a real joy to renew acquaintances with these former faculty members. We appreciate their joining us. The dinner was okay, the band nostalgic and good, the conversation convivial the dancing delightful and the evening a wholly enjoyable experience.

On Sunday, after a brunch at the Log Cabin, the last of the '47 reunioners left the Hill each one, I believe, glad he had come and intending to return.

I'd prefer to close on a happy note, but I am sad to inform you that Dick Henry died unexpectedly in Albuquerque on Sunday, April 4, 1982. After graduating from Harvard, Dick served in the army in Korea and then began a career in journalism which included assignments with the New York Post, the New York Journal, the New York World Telegram and Sun, the International Herald Tribune in Paris, the Philadelphia Inquirer, the Baltimore Sun, the New York Daily News and the Albuquerque Journal. Dick is survived by his wife, Nina, and two sons, Michael and Pierre.

What an enjoyable weekend! Our 35th was small, but a great success. Reeves and I registered about 3:30 Friday afternoon and found that Emily Hemsath Shull had signed in, but unfortunately I never did see her. She had sent me a letter earlier saying: "The 35th Reunion just happens to fit into a trip we are taking. I plan to be there just for the tour of the campus, the athletic complex and Addison Gallery." So sorry to have missed you.

As we were coming out of headquarters we ran into Diane Gould Berkeley and Julie Schaffler Bucklin '48. Julie was there in her position as Co-Chairman, Alumni/ae Fund so she was able to spend the whole weekend with us. Diane is teaching preschool children in New York. She had had a wedding the week before when one of her three children, her daughter, was married.

Friday evening we were at a class reception at the home of one of the faculty looking for more classmates and I found three: Ann Flowers Howlett, Carolyn Sackett Co-

Leburn and Jean Ritchey Ross and her husband, Wally. Ann still has her marvelous sense of humor. Kept us laughing all weekend. She and Phil keep hearing a term called "the empty nest", but as yet have not experienced it. There are five children still living at home. Carolyn is a very successful business woman. Her father owned his own printing company in New York. When he died Carolyn stepped in and became president. She goes in three days a week on top of raising four children. Jean and her husband charter boats out of the Virgin Islands and also own a boat building business which Jean runs.

After dinner we met at headquarters for a crazy evening. We giggled like teenagers and talked about our classmates and teachers so we were back in the '40s for a few hours. We also read letters and notes from old friends and teachers.

Janice Cole Johnson: "I do not plan to attend this Reunion." She underlined "this" so we will be looking forward to seeing her in '87. Jane Lewis Gleason: "Sorry, not this year. I will be opening my handcraft shop on June 11th for its 6th season. All's well. We'll be grandparents in May! My best to everyone." Margot Meyer Richter: "I'm embarrassed now that my name's been published. But, I fell off my roof a month ago and am recuperating from a broken vertebra and severe concussion, so am in no condition to travel to Andover. Give my love to all." Gerry Treadway Miller: "I haven't vacation time I can take to come to the north-east this year. Love to all." Mouse Morse Comstock: "Two of our daughters are getting married—Nancy Comstock on June 12th and Katy Abbot on July 10th with both receptions at the house. A busy and happy time!" Nancy Scripture Garrison: "All is well with us, and I am truly sorry not to be present. As luck would have it, I married a man thirty years ago whose Harvard reunion years correspond exactly to mine at Abbot—guess where we go! Fred has promised that in '87 it will be my year, so hope to see you all then. Aside from still being married to the same man joyfully, my four children are all happy, independent and doing things that I never would have dreamed of! We've added a couple of grandchildren to the flock. Over twenty years of breeding, training and showing exceptional Golden Retrievers has tapered off to the more elderstatesman-like occupations of judging these creatures in the show ring. However, we still own five retired Champions and they adorn our fireside and enrich our lives."

Skeeter Pierce Clark: "We have a graduation." Mrs. Mary Carpenter Dake: "You and Reeves are dears to invite me to your class dinner on Saturday and I do wish I could accept the invitation. If I go east at all next summer, I shall be unable to leave here before early in July. I have about recovered from the filtration operation for glaucoma done on my right eye last December 26th and am to go to the hospital to have the left one done next Thursday (March). Now I can drive the car again and could play golf if I had the time."

Miss Hearsey: "Thank you very much for the invitation you have sent me for your Abbot Class of 1947! I do wish I could accept the invitation to dinner. I should love to see again the 'girls' who will be returning. However, I must send my regrets. At my age, nearly ninety, it isn't feasible for me to take such an excursion as to Andover and at night. But I hope you all have a pleasant time. It will be different from former reunions since you will be sharing it for the most part with PA."

Saturday Jean and Wally joined us for the parade to the gym and then had to leave. Carolyn and Ann took off for Salem for the day so Diane and I were the only ones to be in the class picture. That afternoon there was a tea for all Abbot alumnae and faculty. Sally Humason Bradlee had sent me a note: "Am sorry not to be able to participate due to our daughter's graduation that same weekend. If I can get away at all, I'll come to Morton House tea Sat. pm." Happily, both she and her husband, Sarge, made it. She told me she had been to the wedding of one of Gerry's children and she looks marvelous. We also had the pleasure of talking with Miss Alice Sweeney and Miss Jane Sullivan. Both look great! Saturday evening we had the good fortune to have Miss Eleanor Tucker with us for dinner. She looks wonderful and really topped off the Reunion. It is so nice getting to know them as friends rather than teachers.

The weekend ended with brunch Sunday which only Diane and I were able to attend. I would like to leave you all with a message from Jean. She really debated about coming back. Andover is strange to us and we feel we have lost our identity. She talked herself into it. Turning to me Friday evening she told me to tell those who did not come, she had a ball—it was so much fun being teenagers again and seeing old friends. As Miss Tucker told us, Abbot exists in each one of us.

See you in '87.

It was my great pleasure to be among the cheering throngs when the Wellesley College Alumnae Association presented an Alumnae Achievement Award to Gene Young. The award is given to alumnae who "have brought honor to themselves and to Wellesley College through their outstanding achievements." Gene's citation read: "Your ability to sense a story that should be told and to help bring it forth, and your understanding of how a writer works and feels have brought you to a valued place among your peers. Both your authors and the reading public have benefitted from your insistence on literary merit." Whew! And she still had time to ice skate.

Beane and I had a moment to call on Miss Hearsey. She is a very vigorous ninety and looks wonderfully well. She and Miss Whiting will soon be leaving Wellesley to take up residence in Bedford, MA.

Jackie Kay Schlosser has a son at Williams, a daughter at Dennison and a son at Andover. She looks forward to her annual trip to the Greenbrier where she sees Muffy Wallis Harkness and Dodie Hildreth Detmer. She sees Kitty Bigelow Fitzgerald regularly and reports that Kitty is "great, has five kids in and out of college" and is active in the Smith Club, being a "Smith Pecan Lady".

Mo Jones forwarded a Christmas letter from Betty McConnell Barnett. Her eldest child, Kathy, is a CPA in Grand Rapids; Bob, Jr. has an MBA and is at National Bank of Detroit; Bill has graduated from Michigan State and Jim is a sophomore at Olivet. Betty says she keeps busy with community activities.

I am saddened to report the death on Jan. 1, 1982 of Sally Lunt Weatherall. Although stricken with cancer she continued to work for the environmental causes which concerned her so deeply, primarily as Executive Director of the Ipswich River Watershed Ass'n. Lawrence Morse, chairman of the board of directors of the IRWA, writing of Sally said: "Sally's spirit was always bright . . . As we enjoy the river walk, an open field that has been protected by a conservation easement, a wetland with its purple loosestrife, a sunrise over Crane Beach . . . we shall remember Sally Weatherall's spirit". The class extends its sympathy to her family.

David Pingree '50: MacArthur Award winner

The planets must have been lined up just right. Here's one of those happy events that makes us feel better about the world. The immensely wealthy John D. and Catherine MacArthur Foundation, in its search for geniuses to fund, found David Pingree. Pingree, a classicist in Brown University's History of Mathematics Department, has been given a MacArthur Award of $236,000 over the next five years, with no strings attached. The aim is to liberate him from financial cares to concentrate on his creative research.

To describe that work is almost to define "abstruse" and "esoteric," for Pingree searches Sanskrit, Greek, Latin, and Arabic manuscripts on astronomy, astrology and black magic for understanding of how scientific knowledge spread from culture to culture in the ancient world. If one idea of the university is to push back the frontiers of knowledge, Pingree is pushing back the frontiers of knowledge about knowledge. Knowledge squared! Who ever would have thought that pure knowledge would pay?

The MacArthur Foundation has made 40 such grants in two batches, last spring and this past fall. A strictly secret committee makes nominations for the awards, which are intended to free the recipients from all other obligations so they can concentrate on their creative work "and possibly make some significant contributions to society." Rodney MacArthur, son of the late John D. MacArthur, explained to the New York Times: "This program is probably the best reflection of the rugged individualism exemplified by my father—the risky betting on an individual explorer while everybody else is playing it safe on another track. If only a handful produce something of importance—whether it be a work of art or a major breakthrough in the sciences, it will have been worth the risk."

Pingree's particular interest is in astronomy, astrology and black magic or astronomic, in the ancient worlds of India, Babylonia, Greece and Rome, and in medieval Islam. Astronomy gave the ancients the mathematical means of determining the paths of the planets. Astrology explained for them how the motion of the spheres effected all the changes in the sublunar world (that's us!). Astronomic assumed the truth of astrology—that the physical motion of the planets controlled all phenomena in our world—and promised that a magician, through manipulating objects, was capable of affecting the movement of the planets and thus of controlling phenomena on earth.

Astrology was the science of the ancient world, Pingree explains, and long beyond. It was the practical aspect of astronomy, so there are a great many texts, and they tell a great deal about everyday life and about what people knew. "The astrologers of the ancient world were like the economists of today," Pingree offers; "they were working with a theoretical science, and some of them made their living by making predictions."

Among the "individual explorers" the MacArthur Foundation chose to honor, Pingree undoubtedly is unique in one regard: in addition to his award-winning research, he has been teaching six Sanskrit courses a semester—all the courses Brown offers in the subject.

"Sanskrit is one of the richest literatures in the world—over 2,000,000 manuscripts, and its still used in India today; it's the only language known throughout all parts of India."

The surprise is that David Pingree's own study of Sanskrit began at Andover when he found a Sanskrit grammar in the Oliver Wendell Holmes Library. A day student from Andover, David had taken Latin in public schools and also had studied Greek on his own: "So Alston Chase let me take the Greek 1-2 exam and go right into third year Greek. And in Latin, three of us, Tom Cole and Wells Stambaugh and I were in a special class that went at its own rate." Cole is now Professor of Greek and Latin at Yale, and Stambaugh is a practicing psychiatrist in Brookline. Even Gillingham remembers that "even in those early days it was evident that David was a scholar." One of the great things about going heavily into classics, Pingree notes, was that "if you took that Greek, you could escape History 4."

In conversation, David Pingree seems bemused by the honor and size of his award, but pleased that it will help him get on with the task. He has spent some of it to hire another Sanskrit teacher; this gives more time for research to him, and a welcome stipend to a graduate student. When another year has gone by and their daughter has graduated from high school, the MacArthur Award will take David Pingree and his wife Isabelle to India for a year, to find more Sanskrit manuscripts.

ation matters. Among other things, he was general counsel for the United Way of America. John's wife, Connie, and their four children reside in Washington. Connie's address is 2952 Macomb St. NW, Washington, DC.

Having seen his oldest daughter, Kate, enter Andover as a junior last fall, Charlie Flather was in April elected Treasurer and Director of the Abbot Academy Association. The Association, which has been described as Abbot's "lineal descendant and continuing conscience," supports projects at PA by annual grants from the income of Abbot's former endowment.

I have an update from George Pierre Gardere, Jr., who reports that he now has two sons at Southern Methodist University, one son in high school and a second son in middle school. "Houston and business are booming," Pete observes from Adams & Porter Associates' offices on St. James Place. Another vice president thriving in Houston is Thomas J. Keefe, whose daughter, Jeni, graduated from Bennington in December 1980. His son, Charles ('PA '71), graduated from Columbia Law School in May 1981, passed the New York Bar, and is now clerking for a federal judge in New York. Tom is executive vice president and director of the Galveston-Houston Co., an oilfield services organization. He and Freya live on Shadowlawn Road in Houston.

I am sorry to have to report that Dudley Shepard's wife, Mary, died on 21 March 1981. In the last issue we promised correspondent Jerry Lasley first crack at space this time around. He reports: Received, through the Alumni Office, a lengthy letter from Steve Yamamoto. Son Yuji, in the 10th grade, is captain-elect of his swim team. Daughter Etsuko, 7th grade, is on the volleyball team and wife Keiko is busy playing tennis and tending the family. Steve has recently passed the first test in the discipline of Chinese exercises called Tai-ji—hopes to become an instructor. Steve has spent much time at Kek, the Japanese high energy physics laboratory, performing experiments. Don Cardwell reports marrying Roberto Elizabeth Bryant in September 1980, is living in Glastonbury, CT, practicing law in Hartford. Class Agent Tony Thompson has recently been appointed head of the Communications Practice Section for Russell Reynolds Associates in Stamford, CT. Son Dewey (PA '79) is at Stamford U., daughter Elizabeth is a freshman at St. Lawrence, and son Woody is a PA hopeful.

Lasley called Lou Mowbray in Bermuda this spring to warn him of Jerry's daughter Barbara's arrival for college week. Lou has been appointed to the Elite Executive Management Group of the Bank of Bermuda. He is also chairman of the Public Service Committee. Son David is at Trent in Ontario and daughter Mary is excelling in swimming and swam in a swim meet in Cuba recently. After hanging up, Lou planned to resume painting the kitchen ceiling. Roelof Kreulen's wife, Lillian, reports that they are being transferred from New York to Johannesburg in July and that Ralph is Secretary of the AFIA World Wide Insurance Company. Lillian, daughter Kara and son Brian plan to make the move in July, stay approximately three years, return to their home in New Canaan, CT. Hal Higgins reports he married Sandra York a year ago and is living on his farm in Lisbon, CT. Hal is senior contract administrator for Electric Boat Division of General Dynamics in Rotham, CT.

Can you imagine putting your company's data processing center in the hands of Ed Ackerson? Ed is currently a data processing analyst for the Dennison Manufacturing Company. Ed, his wife Deborah and five children are "living the good but marginal life like the rest of us" in Belmont, MA. Ed further mused that he had not been recently involved in either flag stealing or shorting out bell systems. Bill Goodman reported that his schedule has been full. He is personnel manager at Brown Brothers Harriman in NYC, president of the New York Yale Club and chairman of the board of New York's Doctors' Hospital. Bill and Molly plan a 3 week trip to China this fall just to keep busy. Jerry Ward, recovering from a 50th birthday party given him by his family, looked as though he qualified as the oldest member of the class. This ends the report of our northern correspondent.

In a prior issue, I reported that Al Moe had tried to call me. Turns out he was trying to locate Tony duPont and Billy Lee to invite them over to soak in his hot spa. Al, retired from the Navy, is Integrated Logistic Support Program Manager for Sysion-Downer in Concord, CA. He and wife Cheri live at 814 Savignon Court, Clayton, CA 94517. He and Billy got together with Tony when he brought his duPont jet transport to Ames Test Center to test it in NASA's wind tunnel. Al sent along a photo of Billy and Lucille Lee, Tony and his daughter Diane (assistant curator at San Francisco Museum of Modern Art), Al and Cheri and Dean Weike, who attended PA in 1950, and his wife, in Al's pool. Sally Mason Crowell wrote that her husband, Howard, became The Commanding General of the U.S. Army Recruiting Command last summer at Ft. Sheridan, IL. They moved there in August and are enjoying the mid-west in spite of the long cold winter. Their daughter, Judy, graduated from Florida State Univ. cum laude with a B.S. in Communications. She is now a co-host for the P.M. Magazine TV Show in Madison, WI. David is a junior at Cornell defeating the rigors of Engineering. Barbara Gibson Roth's daughter Margot, 15, is a junior at Andover this year. Doug, 20, is a sophomore at Rollins College, FL and Allen, 24, is employed by Home Webster in Cherry Hill, NJ having graduated from Lehigh. Barb says she is on her own, living the somewhat precarious existence of the self-employed musician.

I am pleased to say our first grandson, Daniel, and daughter, Nan, are here for three weeks from Beaufort, SC. Sara, our youngest, will enter Dana Hall this year as a sophomore. She is so excited! Loved my note from Rosamond Reifsnnyder Peck saying she is having a really wonderful life as she practices the meditation of Guru Maharaj Ji and learns to know who she is and to recognize the source of love she so enjoys. Roz and her husband are having fun being along enjoying the cozy woodstove, cross-country skiing, summers in Maine and visits with their far-flung children. Abby, Skidmore, '78 is a carpenter in the Boston area, lately working wonders for Susie Kimball Wheelock in Lincoln. Lucy, Simmons '80, is working nights in the pediatric intensive care unit in Bangor, ME but leaves in June for the American School in Lugano, Switzerland. There she will be a nurse, teacher and coach. Roz is looking forward to her visit with her daughter in Lugano. Laura will graduate from Connecticut College where she is a dedicated oars-woman (she has won two gold medals in national competition) and history major doing a thesis on Lincoln. Jamie is finishing a freshman year as a theatre major at Northwestern University where he has had exciting roles in university productions all three terms. This has barely allowed time for academic energy. Roz writes "My bakery business is still loads of fun and has expanded into a gift basket business also—Love is a Basket" with homemade natural sweets and wholesome treats - perfect present for all occasions and so much fun to prepare. Life is good! She is sorry that a family wedding will keep her from the reunion this June.

And a wonderful 30th Reunion it was! About 50 people gathered for the brightest moment of the weekend, a glorious Saturday dinner mellowed by light jazz piano and guitar, and all arranged by world-traveled Fred Sharf. The decorations and bar had been carefully set by Charles and Nancy Faraci Shionis, Abbot '52, with drinks generously tended by their son Mark. And the evening was spiced with lightly-seasoned remarks by that living legend of PA's English Department, Tom Regan '51. Our tables were honored, too, with the spark of Tom's wife, Gerry, the dignified presence of Ken McDonald '50 (co-chairman of reunions), and the Math Department's Zab Warren with Sarah Warren (Abbot '52). The mutual Andover/Abbot bash was a first for '52ers, and both parties agreed, "It's about time!" Or, as '57 printed on their shirts, "Together at last!"

As for classmates attending, the spirit and warmth were of the highest quality and included these stars: Nancy and Dave Babin, the island-hopping MD from Falmouth; Pat and Mike Bromberg from Morristown, NJ (Mike tells of his Frisco legal treks, during which he next intends to challenge Dick Sagebiel to luncheon); Roxana and Denny Donegan, up from Atlanta for the entire weekend (Denny brought regrets from Susie and Ed Elson, who had visited PA the weekend before for their son's graduation); Sybil and Joe Falcone (handsome as ever) from Utica, where Joe is the new sales manager of a large corporation (not Corning, which Joe left after 15 years); Lloyd Farrar, sharp and witty as usual, and traveling with more independence and verve than most of us, despite his limited eyesight, and arriving from his challenging Widener Library research into the letters of Teddy Roosevelt; Mike Filides whose Nordest Gallery on Newbury St. Boston, thrives in the face of inflation; Beth and Tony Fisher from Montville, NJ (during the Alumni Chapel service, Tony provided a startling tenor solo from the newly renovated organ loft; Beth and Tony look forward to their Norwegian summer trip to visit Nils Sejersted; lovely Lauren and her chubby, bearded wonder Hubie Fortmiller, joined on Sunday by sons Ben and Jonathan (8 and 6), Grandma ("Mom" to many '52ers), and Fred Fortmiller and family, at PA for Fred's 35th; Gisele and Dave Hill, faithful reunioneers, as always, up from Connecticut with Pamela (14) and Alexander (9); Maureen and Roger Hinkson, from Clinton, NY (Roger and Maureen are looking for a home west of Boston, as Roger intends to move his medical practice to Medford this summer); Jesse James, as sharp as ever from his trade with Smith Barney & Co., on the Hill from Madison, CT; Joanna and Paul Jameson, with energetic toddler Andrew, arriving from Concord just before the rains came on Sunday morning, to enjoy our sumptuous buffet brunch; Vermonters Susan and Stu MacDonald who told of Stu's adventures in keeping his South Londonderry-based design and construction company in the home-building business for Andover grads and others; Nancy and Stew Sanders wheeling in from Belmont where Stew says he has recovered well from a lengthy illness—he's ready to get back to work in a vs with Tom Regan; the delight of Indiana University's Sociology Department, John Sevier, wife Peggy, and children, journeying to PA from South Bend; Stan Shuman and sons David and Michael, up from the Big Apple, where Stan continues to serve on the Governor's Council to keep The City solvent; and of course, Andover's Athletic Director, Joe Wennik, with Inga (Joe was a mainstay of PA detail-handling for yours truly in the final reunion preparations).

Messages arrived from many quarters, from '52 mates who sincerely regretted missing our gathering. Californian Dick Sagebiel wrote that his three-decade tennis challenge match with Ralph Stuart will simply have to wait another five years. Dick's son John has been a PG at PA this year; one of John's best friends is "a certain Graeme Henderson, son of the famous Henderson of similar name but vintage '52." John "CooLo" Vail "really wanted to make this one," but a "secondary school graduation of a boy-child (in California)" kept him away. He adds, "During a recent Old Homestead cleanout, I found a recording of 'Sons of Betsy!' If it is a rare enough bird to be of interest, please let me know, and I'll get it to you. Otherwise (particularly if everyone saved the damned record), simply give my best to any who might be interested, and double up if they happen to be Harvard '56ers as well."

Suzy and Steve Charnas sent regards while sharing lunch and joyful gallery-gazing at the Museum of Fine Arts with the Forts a couple of weeks earlier, before the Charnases had to return to Albuquerque, after a visit with Don Bourne. George Rockwood had to be on the West Coast for the Stanford graduation of his son, receiving his master's degree in mechanical engineering—the "same field as his grandfather"—PA Class of 1885! "T. K. Vodrey" sent his best with an invitation to all to visit Tom Bergin's or Bergin's West when in L.A.; "I'll treat them to the Best Irish Coffee anywhere!" John Reynnders would have attended, but his oldest son was graduating from Georgia Tech. Gordon Lish sent regrets with a note that he would be lecturing in Seattle. Bob Larsen missed by seven days; his plans brought him east a week after reunions. David "Itchy" Jones had to be in Europe on business, but sent his best regards. Graeme Henderson wrote that he would have to be out of the country in June. Liz and Jim Hammons wished us "a great time!" Jim's sabbatical leave at Yale has ended, and they were moving back to Wallingford, PA, during reunion time. Marcia and Steve Bailey wrote from Kansas City that they were sorry to miss the gathering, and they tell of their oldest, Adriene, PA '81, now at Princeton; their second daughter, Camella, who arrives for her senior year at Andover in the fall; and their son, Nate, a 7th grader waiting in the wings for what he hopes will be his turn on the Hill. Kit Smith and wife wrote regrets from Honolulu. Doug McGregor insists that "one of these days" he will make it back. Ben Gittes and family had an "official affair" they could not miss that weekend. Bob Milburn sent best wishes from Portland, OR. Fred Sharf and Jan had to be abroad on tennis-managing business, but (as is the case every five years) Fred's efforts to arrange many details of the Reunion weekend make it a lark for the rest of us.

The most original message any Class Secretary has ever received arrived this spring from D. Peter McIntyre, who mailed a 60-minute tape of news, biography, original poetry, music, readings, tales and memories. What a gift! To make it even more enjoyable, Peter enclosed a composite of McIntyre mug shots and pictorial documentation and a bag of herb tea, which Lauren and I brewed and sipped on a rainy afternoon while enjoying Peter's conversation with us.

Of significance to PA and an indication of '52's loyalty is Class Agent Stan Shuman's successful effort to help us give Andover a significant reunion gift: over $20,000 this year!

Finally, I feel obliged to note that you should make on your calendars the late spring and early summer of 1987 as absolutely reserved for our 35th Reunion!—Eibuh.

Hello Everyone! AA '52, 30th Reunion

What a great weekend! Back for Reunion were Connie Hamilton Greenspan and daughter Amy, 11 yrs. old. Connie looks great and is busy working for a travel agency. Joan Wood Stephenson joined us on Saturday. Her husband has had some health problems but it now on the mend and we all wish him well. The following thoughts and experiences are those of the girls who stayed through Sunday. Emma Willman: "Nancy says to cover 30 years in a few short lines—my business life has been with the Red Cross from 1959 to the present. I've been in Korea, Japan, Boston and am now in Freeport, ME right on the water. I have lots of room so come visit." Sarah Emmons Warren writes: "Huddled together for warmth in Stimson House commons room over a delicious brunch—we are having a wonderful time reminiscing and wishing the rest of the class could be here. Weather is chilly but spirits are warm enough to make up for that. Nancy and Charlie have done a great job organizing! (Thanks Sarah). Zab and I are at home here at PA and it's stimulating to be part of all the changes and growth in the school. Our Becky (PA '81) is at Tufts and Andrew is entering 7th grade. Zab has really entered into the world of computers and finds it very absorbing. I continue to work in one language lab, coach various racquet sports and assist Zab in running one dormitory. Come see us in five years, if not before!" Incidentally, Sarah participated in the Alumni/ae Chapel Service in Cochran Chapel and she did an outstanding job! She says she was glad she was behind the podium so no one could see her knees shaking—we would never have guessed, Sarah.

Anne Sanborn Lombard: "We've been living in Northampton, MA for 7 years after a wonderful 5 yr. stint in Hawaii. Daughter Karen is entering her senior year in high school, Pam her sophomore year. I'm teaching future teachers at The Elms, a small women's college in Chippewa. Also enjoy climbing in the White Mts. and wandering around Maine in the summer with my sister Pat (AA '54) and her children. Don is starting a practice in Northampton. Anna Right: 1952 at Saturday's Alamni Picnic: Joan Wood Stephenson, Anna Stephani Sanford, Connie Hamilton Greenspan, Ann Sanborn Lombard, Zab and Sarah Emmons Warren.

Stefani Sanford writes: "Drove to Andover with Anne Sanborn Lombard who lives fairly close to me. Spent 4 years living in Ann Arbor, MI, 1 year in Germany and 12 years in Connecticut. Wish more people from our class could have come to Reunion. I have 2 children ages 11 and 9—thinking of Andover someday - maybe." Helen Neisser de Modenesi sent a message from Lima, Peru. She had just returned from Montreal where her daughter Gaby made her a grandmother for the third time. Her other daughter Roxy has 2 little girls and they live in Lima. Helen was in Andover 2 years ago when she visited with Ellen Smith after 28 years.

As for Persis Goodnow Hamilton, she writes that although she has enjoyed being the class agent for the past 8 years—enough is enough - and she is hoping that someone will come forward to relieve her of a duty that she has performed admirably—thank you, Persis, on behalf of the class.

As for me, Nancy Faraci Shionis, since 1967, I have held a variety of nursing positions, latest of which is instructor in nursing education. I have kept a rather close association with Andover. My son, Mark '76, was very active while at PA and I was invited to serve as a member of a visiting committee who spent a weekend touring Isham Infirmary and making recommendations for future use of the Infirmary. We have 3 children—Mark (PA '76, Brown '80) who works for an international travel company, Saga International—who caters exclusively to senior citizens; Lee who has just completed one semester of her graduate studies at BU and Greg who just graduated from Andover High School. He's pursuing a career in Culinary Arts and Hotel and Restaurant management.

Seen over the weekend were Miss Ritchie, Miss Sullivan, Miss Sweeney and Miss Tucker. They all looked well and wish to be remembered to all of you, near and far. We missed you and want you to know, also, that we have a great counterpart in the PA class of '52. What a terrific class they are and it was wonderful reuniting with them and their lovely wives and children.

God Bless—Your Reunion Chairman,
Nancy Faraci Shionis.

Connie Market Day writes that she'll be missing reunion in June as they'll probably be moving from Pittsburgh back to NJ at just that time. Husband Bill is still with RCA working as a mechanical engineer in the transmitter division. Their daughter, Sue, is a freshman at Duke and Bob is a freshman in high school. Connie is working as a medical record consultant. They are all sailors and mainly junket to Lake Chautauqua. Good sailing to you and your family in NJ!

A Doctorate in Science Education was earned by Anne Sanborn Lombard from the U. of MA in 1980. She has spent the past 2 years directing several National Science Foundation grants for inservice workshops in science teaching and reasoning development throughout New England and around the country in such locations as Boulder, Vancouver and Nashville. Anne is currently teaching at the Elms College in Chicopee, MA. Her sister, Pat (1954), and Anne took the children on a wonderful trip last summer across the Presidential in the White Mts. Karen is 16 and Pam is 14. Congratulations on your accomplishments Anne!

A card from Berkeley Hts. NJ from Harriet Brown DeLong informs us that she has been teaching art for the past 10 years at the Pingry School. Each week she sees 300 "terrific" kindergarteners thru 6th graders in her art class. Her husband, David, is chairman of Fine Arts at Newark Academy. Their son, Mark, is in 8th grade. It appears that Harriet is plenty busy with teaching, gardening, housekeeping, tennis and racing a motorcycle—WHEW!

Clara Reynolds Palmer lives in Lexington, MA. She had expected to attend reunion; but her husband, Ben, has his reunion at the same time at St. George's. Their oldest son is married and in grad. school at Cornell. Two more children are part time in college, two others will be at Lexington Christian Academy next year and one daughter is in the nursing program at U. of Lowell. That's a lot of children to keep track of Clara. You must have fun when you're all together!

Thank you for your cards and notes. Keep them coming. Have fun at reunion! I'd love to see you all. Best wishes for a happy summer. Ethal.

Congratulation to Joe Mesics the new Secretary of the Academy. I'm not sure when he and Sandi will be moving in, but we can officially welcome them next year at our 30th Reunion.

Well, it's finally happened. We've plugged the gap in our network of Class Agents by appointing Simeon Cotton as our official representative for Paenonian Springs, VA. "We are striving for 100%," he said, hoisting the royal blue banner above the territory. When asked what the new Assistant Class Agent was doing these days, he told us that he was still working at the same business he sold to Sperry Rand some years back; that is, the building of flight simulators for U.S. and foreign markets.

Timothy Ross MacKenzie, Gordon and Sally MacKenzie's third child was born on March 16th of this year. Joining his two older brothers, Robbie 5 and Scotty 8, Timothy may well be the last child born to a member of the Class of 1953. As a prospective record holder, Timothy requests that any class son or daughter born after the above date get in touch with him or his father Gordon, IBM's Director of Banking Products for Europe.

According to his wife, Mary Ellen, Fritz Ostherr is currently with AVCO marketing and selling ICBM's to the U.S. Government. While it's still top secret, I understand they're working on a smaller version for fund raising.

Not long ago the "excitable" N.Y. Post ran a feature article entitled, The Mystery Mural of Eighth Avenue. Wrote the Post: "You're an artist who did the bulk of your work in the 1930s. You were heavily inspired by the WPA drawings of the period. One of your finest accomplishments is a small mural in the lobby of a building at 322 Eighth Avenue at 26th Street."

"That mural has drawn the attention of developer Don Shapiro who now owns the building, and he wants to make it the centerpiece of his newly refurbished lobby."

"He does have a head start in finding you because you signed your work 'K. Gress', so far he has had no luck."

The article continues at some length, even including a large photograph of the mural but personally I don't think Don will find K. Gress. I figure the original name under the painting was EGRESS.

Commander Brad Lovejoy, chaplain of the nuclear cruiser, USS Mississippi, writes that his ship is currently part of the NIMITZ Battle Group deployed in the Mediterranean. "The Libyan planes were too exciting to be fun. The General Recall at Venice when President Sadat was killed was also part of this cruise."

"President Reagan was so thrilled at receiving my vote," writes Peter Perkins, "that he immediately had me (and others) laid off from the Department of Labor. Fortunately, I did not miss a paycheck: I went right to work for a consulting company named Reed Roberts. All is well in Plano, TX."

Merv Gaskin of Taylor and Gaskin, the company that makes conveyor belts for automobile assembly lines, is averaging 176 at the Grosse Pointe lanes, according to his wife, Sue, the part-time nurse and tennis player. Seth Gibson writes that he got together with the Consul General of the Netherlands in San Francisco over Christmas. Just what he and Flor Kist discussed was not detailed in the note. "Fred Wardenburg came down from Seattle to visit us over Easter weekend" writes John Poppy, (Jon Ralte's old roommate) and we put on quite a show for him—another of our 4-inch-a-day rainstorms, with gales fierce enough to drop a 70-foot oak tree on a neighbor's house. I don't know how he found the time, considering that he's a single parent taking care of three children half the time (Chris, his former wife, has them the other half); a family therapist building what sounds like a solid and busy practice in Seattle; and partner in a professional building that he and a couple of other therapists have just finished putting up. Besides that, he's a good friend who manages to come to see us for at least several days a year. Handsome, bearded, just enough gray to look distinguished, and funny. That is as in sense of humor. The kind of therapist I'd want if I were a family. Speaking of gales, Fred says he and Jim Gale have become close friends up there in Seattle. Jim teaches (I think) and does research in a medical specialty I don't remember at the moment.

NEWS FROM TEXAS: Audrey Taylor MacLean received her M.A. in Liberal Studies from Dartmouth last summer. "Audie" has not entered the "working world" as yet. However, volunteer work and planning the wedding of her oldest daughter, Pam, is keeping her busy for the moment. Pam will be married at their summer place in NH—after Audie goes back to her 25th at Mt. Holyoke. Husband Bob is Deputy Commissioner of Health of Texas, necessitating his living in Austin during the week and returning to Houston for the weekends. Audie and I will have a chance to share war stores mid-May as I will be in Houston for the National Convention of the L.W.V. I will probably melt after the cold of the Northeast!

Bets Hitzrot Evans flew East with her youngest, Katy (11) for spring vacation. She was in CT the same time Anne Oliver Jackson was visiting, so they got their families together for dinner. Bets also managed lunch in NYC with Carol Hardin Kimball. Carol is currently assistant director of the Metropolitan Opera Centennial Fund (now I understand why I am newly on their mailing list—). Jennifer, PA '80, spent a year in England on an English Speaking Union Fellowship, and is now a freshman at Amherst. Andrew is in 11th grade at Brooks School and will be captain of both the varsity soccer and basketball teams next year. Bets also touched bases with Muffy Grant Lynch. They took their girls to the new Macy's in Stamford. Having now taken care of old friends in CT and NY, Bets will come to the Cape in July and see some more of us. It makes Cincinnati seem not so far away.

As I write this, I have spread around me a myriad of books, maps, pamphlets, etc. on the subject of traveling around England and Scotland. We will be celebrating our 25th in London with Ann Zuill "Zoo" Williams as our tourguide for some of the time. Needless to say, it is a much looked-forward-to trip.

Send me word of your travels, marriages, remarriages, careers, retirements . . . whatever. Anything is news to a fellow classmate.

Thank goodness you gave me so much to write that any creative introduction is out of the question!! I can just swing right into all YOUR news. Having had several postcards from a few friends I'll begin when news arrived post Bulletin deadline.

Nancy Donnelly Bliss spent a month after Day Camp Nature Counselling last summer in Maine with Howard and the children who had summer jobs there. Nancy is a new Board of Director of the Red Cross in Greenwich while Howard teaches and works in the Country Day print shop. Sarah, 21, majoring in Developmental Pysc. is a resident advisor in the internet! dorm at Pine Manor; Daniel loves his frosh year at Bates College after graduating from the Hill School. Nancy sees Jim and Doris Niemand Reudin and Peggy Moore Roll from time to time. Peggy's cousin Harriet Moore has been in touch with Debbie Hucksins. Debbie writes that she is planning a vacation from her job with a steel company and taking a trip with Hal. Debbie's son Chris graduated cum laude from Holderness School and is studying Engineering at U. of Vermont, while Alison is a jr. at Hebron Academy.

Audrey David Trowbridge and I correspond frequently and her latest news is that she had a wonderful lunch in Boston with Gretchen Kase Smith and her beautiful daughter! Audrey says Gretchen looks exactly the same after 15 years! Wish we could all say that!! Hopefully I can see Audrey when I drive our 16-yr-old daughter Sandy for a summer of "enrichment" at Andover July 1st. Sam Thayer Zaeder writes that Marion Badoian Emmanuel's daughter will be there too!! Sam and Phil will not be there as they will be recuperating after a full 81-82 year as well as a wedding in the family. Son John was married July 4 and Philip performed the ceremony—is this a "first" in the class? We wish them great happiness! Alison is a jr. at Wesleyan and son Thayer is an Upper at PA.

How great it is to hear news from past quiet voices!! Valjeanne Brodeur Paxton returned to the U.S. after an 18-yr. residence in France and Switzerland (Geneva for 13 yrs!). Valjeanne will receive a Masters of Divinity from Gordon-Cornwell Theological Seminary in Hamilton, MA in May. Our heartiest congratulations Val!! She also wonders if anyone knows the address or whereabouts of Lucy Garretson Selby??? Continuing class congratulations we also extend our Best Wishes to Sarah Harrington who became Mrs. Jefferson E. Williams! Sarah writes she visits Andover frequently and is pleased (tho a bit jealous) with all the changes (at times we can all wish we had been born 30 years later!) Sarah had a place at Wells Beach, ME and extends an invite to passer-by-ers! Invitations come from all over the states—Marti Belkap welcomes any friends visiting the Rockies! Contact her in Denver where she is a free-lance educational consultant with a specialty in creative relaxation programs for hyperactive children. Last summer she taught yoga and creativity classes to gifted children. Further west Margaret Johnson writes she lives

moving plants and art-lovers

When Jody Bush's responsibilities to Inwood House in New York City, to her school in Andover, or her campaigning brothers-in-law, or her commitment to the arts call her, she is warm and spontaneous in response. Her sense of obligation is strong when she respects the cause or the persons involved.

Jody represents many Abbot women who first lead professional lives, then engage in child-raising, family interests and volunteer leadership in civic agencies. Various models exist for women now, but this is a durable model that still serves many young women today, and serves real needs in society; ahead lie options of re-entering the job market or of moving up to the level of community policy-making, the route Jody Bush is taking.

An art-major at Vassar, she studied at the Institute of Fine Arts, NYU, and was assistant curator of photography for the Museum of Modern Art, 1963 to 1968. In that year she married Jonathan J. Bush, an investment manager—their sons, Jonathan Jr. and William are now 13 and 10—and her real commitment to social work began.

Since 1968 she has been a director of Inwood House, a residence and center for pregnant and unwed mothers with or without babies. "Most are teenagers rejected by their own families, referred to Inwood by foster homes and other agencies," director Bush explains.

"Many of these girls wanted to have babies so as to give them the love they never had themselves. They're crying out for love themselves, but also want independence. We have tried to use the crisis of pregnancy to somehow break the cycle." After several years as chairman of Inwood's board, Jody's focus has moved from the specific agency level to the community planning level; she is now on the Planning Commission for the Federation of Protestant Welfare Agencies, a large group of child care services in New York. She is studying child care legislation and is "learning how we can make public policy that will be right for the largest number of people."

Jody has been a tireless fund-raiser for the political campaigns of brother-in-law George Bush '42, and now another brother-in-law, Prescott Bush '40, running for the Senate in Connecticut. In eight months of hard work during the Presidential primary campaign of 1979-80, "I learned what the appropriate materials are to judge a candidate on," she says, "and learned that politics is nothing to be cynical about."

The Bradley-Bush Abbot-Andover ties are strong. A student leader at Abbot, she co-chaired its 20th Reunion five years ago, and was elected to Andover's Alumni Council in 1977. In 1980, fired by exposure to Andover's school programs and her own interest in the arts, she agreed to a volunteer leadership role for the Addison Gallery—so she's a tireless fund-raiser again.

Jody Bush is national co-chairman of the Campaign for the Addison Gallery. From New York she and Robert Feldman co-ordinate 300 volunteers whose goal by December 31 is to financially re-establish Andover's superb teaching museum and its programs. Why take on this new heavy Addison commitment? "Because I was excited by what the young people are learning and by the commitment to learning and to young people there. You should see what a painting teacher like Elaine Spatz-Rabinowitz does with kids; you should talk to Chris Cook. I work for the Addison because of the people there I respect. That's what turns me on." Besides her organizational work in New York for the campaign, Jody uses every business trip with Jonathan to do work and make friends for the Addison.

For an almost compulsively hard worker like Jody Bush, perhaps the greatest challenge is to rope off time from working for others to fill her own well, follow her own pursuits. Bush does this for herself through another art form—landscape gardening. She has studied for two years at the New York Botanical Gardens, and practices her art at the Bushes' weekend home in Killingworth, Connecticut. The best of it is getting her hands in the dirt, moving plants to her own design. "Now I understand my parents' love of gardening. It's artistically rewarding—design, space, voids, shapes. Moving plants around satisfies my creative urge, and my nurturing urge too. It's like having babies all over again."

quietly in Ventura, CA working as a Jungian analyst and loves her quiet time to walk in the mountains, beaches, and write some poetry.

Mimi Ludlow Crandall has a new home in Albert Lea, MN as well as a new consignment shop "The Heart of the Artichoke" dealing in antiques, collectibles, and crafts. Her son John finished his 2nd yr. of college; Bill working and skiing in Vermont; Meg in 8th grade, and Mimi "happily rolling-along" . . . brief note from Lucy Lippard: a "no time to write" as she is spending all hours finishing two books and working with cultural organizations to help combat economic rollbacks.

Economically "in the black" according to Ann Hunt Graf is her new shop Paper World, Inc. dealing in quality paper goods such as writing paper, notes, and cards! Good Luck Ann!! John is currently Chairman of the Board of the Derryfield School where Peter 16 and Julie 13 attend. Their oldest son Ted, on a leave of absence from U. of Vermont, is on the Experiment in Int'l Living in Nepal and he is having an incredible learning experience (another of those 30-yr.too soon . . .). Ted will be a senior along with offspring of Mary Weir Skala and Jane Munro Barrett. . .speaking of Mary, she called to "phone-chat" from Erie! We continue to try and meet for lunch in Pittsburgh! After office hours Paul is head of the ski patrol at Peak n' Peak Ski Resort . . . Holly has taken a leave from U. of Vermont, Peter is a senior, and their youngest, Hilary, is a freshman. Mary is happy and bouncy as ever!! Lee Carroll Beckmans is just as busy working for Merrill Lynch Realty, specializing in waterfront property, and says "in spite of some bad press, Miami is still a great place to live!" . . . they sailed to Bermuda, husband Bruce and his son Bruce III went on to Gibraltar. One daughter is a frosh at Westover, while another will spend 2nd semester (Jan.'83) of her senior year in Madrid. Diane Cookman Stallworth writes her daughter graduates from Bennington College in June in Creative Writing/Photography . . . after winning the Morse Art Prize at PA she received nomination for Fellowship at Yale Summer School of Art '81 . . . am sure we will be reading more about this talented budding artist in the future!

Continue to send us your news—it is so depressing to see a Bulletin with a blank space for 1954!!! Have a great summer, and collect news as well as shells!!!

Rich in local color and a feeling for the turbulent '30s, Jericho shows us what a corner of the world we came to know was like a generation before we were there. Sue Davis Brandse writes "We moved last fall to State College and are finding that life in a college town is exciting and helps a lot in keeping young." (That's State College, PA, folks.) She also says "Sorry to have missed the 25th—maybe our lives will settle down by the 50th." Hope to see you long before then. Sue, but in the meantime keep the news coming in.

Libby Baldwin Crabtree and her family visited Disney World last year. Her daughter, Melissa, was president of her sixth grade class and has been doing downhill skiing at Stratton, VT. Alright kiddies—here is the total news received of our August, communicative class: Perry Hall moved to San Francisco as head marketing guru for Morgan Stanley. Perry III is a junior at PA. Toby Schwartzburg is slugging it out across the bay in Oakland, and has made the mistake of dropping me a note offering to help with whatever it is I think I'm doing. Actor Frank Converse will be starring in a new TV dramatic series for NBC to air next winter: "Second Family Tree." Frank's son in the series, (about a second marriage) is Jim Spader '78, an avid actor at PA, who recently appeared in a Brooke Shields movie.

I have jumped off the deep end and am forming my own investment firm called—oddly enough - Marsh & Co. As if I didn't have enough problems . . .

Amidst early spring-like weather with temperatures in the fifties, fifty-five PA faithfuls gathered along with fifteen Abbot loyals in a Combined 25th Reunion whose theme, "Together at Last," provided the setting for one of the most memorable week-ends your reporter has ever experienced. Early arrivals on Friday found touring the new athletic complex included Rick Steinkemp, Chico and Magda Valledelja. Ron and Vicky Campbell and their children and Arkie Koehl and his son and daughter. Back at the Rabbit Pond complex of newer dorms Reubin Perin and wife Susan were pulling in from Dallas, while Sam Suitt and Jim Blackmon had just arrived from the West Coast along with Bill Dial, his wife, Lynn, and their two daughters. Ralph and Carol Weaver had come from Houston, Dan Adams and Joan, in jogging attire, were in from Missoula and Eric Myrvaagnes had come up from Suffolk, MA . . . Friday evening a cocktail party was held at Phelps House, the headmaster's home for the 25th and 50th Reunion Classes, where the Eight 'n One (remember the singing group) performed. Found standing very near the bar were Gary and Anne Hammond, Fred Shuman and Alan Blanchard with his wife, Ann. Justin Lindy had come all the way from London to join us . . . later that evening at our informal party which was held at Nathan Hale House Nick Trane, Bill Hege- man, Alan King and his wife, Dorothy Ann, were chatting along with Jim and Mary Ann D'Angelo, Gil Wright, Dan and Fran Tracy, Bob and Judy Bohorad. Wally Andrews, bearded and suntanned, looked great as did John Austin (no suntan), Bill and Rosa Babcock from Dallas and John Barlow, the banking king of Kansas City. Dave Behan, now a philosophy professor at Agnes Scott College in Decatur, GA, was whooping it up, and it was really great to see Pete and Susan Ward . . . Saturday morning found Bill Babcock participating in leading the traditional memorial chapel service; Bill is a professor of theology at SMU . . . at about the same time Al Blanchard, Dan Adams and Bili Sterling conducted a most interesting panel discussion about change in ourselves, and we all wished that it had lasted longer.

Together at last!

1957's Helen Guthrie Miller and Shag, Lynn Moughty, Penny Holbrook Reid, and Jody Bush

At the parade and picture taking ceremony were Scott Marsh who had to leave early as did Nick Trane who went to see his son row in the Yale-Harvard classic. But Tom and Mary Ann Dignan were there and were joined by Ed and Wendy Curley, Brian Golden and his sons, John Ives, and Ed and Carol Hotelling from California. Saturday afternoon found another panel discussion sponsored by our class for the benefit of all the Reunions. Ted Harrison from PA joined Grabo Keator, headmaster at Pomfret, Abby Shuman, Fred's daughter, and a student at Andover and Christopher Dean, son of Andy Dean on the subject: "Prep Schools Today." Unfortunately, Lance Odden, headmaster of Taft, was unable at the last minute to be on the panel. To say the least our group and especially our children—we have been prolific, by the way—showed up extremely well—the setting of our formal class dinner was the Log Cabin in the Sanctuary. Nobody could remember how to get there, and ties were cast aside for sweaters to keep warm.

Our faculty guests included the McNemars, Miners, Harrisons, Bob Hulburd and Bill Graham . . . Steve and Marka Larrabee made it up from Pomfret for the evening, and George and Mimi Breed were there along with John and Polly Draper. Andy and Ruth Dean were enjoying themselves eating lobsters as was Phil Olsson and Tim and JoDean Orcutt. Tom and Gloria Packard are thrilled about their move to North Conway and the White Mountains, and we did manage to get Brian Pendleton off the tennis courts to have a few drinks and dinner. Brian's cousin, Kim Pendleton, and wife, Elisabeth, seemed to be glad to be away from Washington, where Kim had been heading up our State Department's role in the Falkland Islands. Dave Remington dropped by, while Gay Smith and his family had come from Columbus, OH. Jim Sterling was taking many pictures, probably of Paul and Lynda Wonacott who had come from Portland, OR. Grant Willis came from New York with his guest, Karen Bowser, and had we known that Steve Trivers, radio czar of Kalamazoo, MI, has one of the best stand-up acts in the country, he would have had to perform; hopefully, five years hence . . . Our weekend wound up with a brunch at the Andover Inn at some time on Sunday morning. Proud parents of an eleven-month-old beautiful girl and future Andover alumna—were John and Diana McConnell; and Leo and Kay

Ullman were there and all the other folks who managed to drag in—If I have failed to mention anyone, I apologize; it was not intentional. I think the special mention ought to go to Alan Blanchard for the super fund-raising job he and his team did. And now, I must tell all of you the truth, even though it goes against my nature: if you think I was responsible for this super Reunion, you're wrong. The credit goes to Jim D'Angelo, Gil Wright, Brian Golden (treasurer) and Mimi Reeder, my counterpart. Those of you who missed it, shame; it was unforgettable. But you'll have an opportunity in five years, and "Together at Last" should be an ongoing theme. Regards, GEE.

I approached our 25th Reunion with a mixture of questions, images of faces that would "read" differently, expectations of crowded parties with no time to "catch up," and uncertainty about describing my recent accomplishments as well as past growing pains. These early hesitations turned out to be the natural springboard for meeting some wonderful classmates again. We were open, interesting, funny, mellow, attractive and well-seasoned. Most of all, we were very receptive towards one another.

The Reunion weekend was beautifully organized by Mimi Ganem Reeder (who else?) and her loyal committee of five. The extra wear on us since 1977 certainly produced a wiser, happier, and calmer bunch than I remembered. There are no grandchildren! Thanks to Mimi also, the 14 of us blended easily with the PA '57 contingent. Our motto—as sported on the back of our parade tee shirts read "Together at Last!" The Andover men had improved immensely, as they too had obviously weathered assorted family traumas and, in turn, were kinder and more sympathetic toward the female elements than was possible in the days of the adolescent "hunt." A few could even talk about Abbot without wincing. We have grown into modern times well.

Present were: Karen Jones Anderson, Louisa Lehmann Birch, Jody Bradley Bush, Beverley Lord, Helen Guthrie Miller, Lynne McLaughlin Moughty, Hope Hamilton Pettegrew, MIMI, Penny Holbrook Reid, Nancy Ruhlin Skala, Wiggs Carter Stanier, Frankie Young Tang, Glee Wooldredge Wieland and me. Judy Botnick Carmody was listed but I never did see her. Of course, husbands, Shag Miller, Bob Pettegrew, Larry Reeder, George Skala, Wade Stanier, Oscar Tang, and Sandy Wieland deserve more than honorable mention. They were a great addition!

These are a few notes off the top of my head—Karen was in wonderful form and has come a long way, via Florida, Colorado and now Illinois, where she is enjoying married life and two new stepsons. We would like to have met Mike who is a feverish jazz pianist. Bevie Lord just had a showing of her color photographs in Weston, MA and didn't even realize that Louisa Birch lives there. Many of Bev's pictures were taken two years ago in Paris and she is now talking about going back with her 4 year-old son Bill. She adopted Bill from a cousin, who was unable to take care of him. All this while she is teaching teenagers all day.

Helen Miller was the biggest surprise and entertainment of the weekend. She has persuaded Penny Reid and me to move to Montana, where there are "oodles of free cowboys lookin' to settle down." Shag is in the radio business and an avid golfer. Helen worked many years in broadcasting, as you've heard in this column. The two of them couldn't even manage to stay warm in Nathan Hale dorm, so moved downhill to a classier hotel. Wiggs was the same, thank God. She and Lynne were on the tennis courts by 7 o'clock Saturday morning, and I kept envisioning the old gym suits in place of their chic warm-ups. Glee and Sandy Wieland came over for the Saturday night party at the Log Cabin. Glee teaches at Fenn School in Concord and Sandy is teaching at Buckingham, Browne and Nichols in Cambridge. Their eldest daughter had graduated that day from Lawrence Academy.

Hope Pettegrew was on the "Today Show" in early June, discussing the success of her magazine venture. You've heard about this history magazine for the young folk—It's Cobblestone. Nancy and George Skala, and Nancy's seeing-eye dog Argo, were there from start to finish. My only long chance to talk to them was over Sunday breakfast in the Commons. Nancy is remarkable! And George threw himself into meeting all of Nancy's old classmates. Nancy teaches science to children and talks to groups about how she manages her daily routine without sight. She looked beautiful in her brilliant green pantsuit.

The rest of us fell right in with the mood and goings-on, missing many of you who could not make it. We can all be proud of Frankie and Mimi. Frankie was elected as an Alumni Trustee, after so many years of superb work on Andover's behalf. Mimi's successes in fund raising for our class have led her to be appointed Co-Chairman of the Alumni Fund. Her knack for appealing for money is her gift to our class and Andover. We are lucky to have her.

Happy Summer to all and let me hear from you. Dinah.

Somehow I missed a few of the cards I had at home, so some of the news this time is more dated than usual. My apologies to those concerned—it was not intentional. Jackie Locke Neaville writes, "Have been meaning to write for ages. I know how much I enjoy reading about my classmates in the Bulletin." Jackie and Ingrid Stahlbrand Kessler had their own reunion over two years ago. "Since then our families have become acquainted, and our sons are great friends. In fact, Hank and Karl went to basketball camp together in August. Ingrid and I try to see each other at least every 2-3 months—she looks wonderful, and we have agreed that after 22 years, we really haven't changed that much—except for the better, of course." Two daughters and a son keep the Neaville family busy. Alan, Jackie's husband, is Postmaster of Bothell which is north of Seattle, and Jackie is Administrative Secretary at West Seattle General Hospital.

"Fame has come to their farm this summer (1981) because of her son and husband's constantly escaping cows. (Our neighbor wondered why the leash law, which pertains to his dogs, doesn't seem to apply to our cows!). Above news comes from Carol Greene Donnelly. I'm sure you all join me in wishing her well with her cows (I know the feeling, Carol!). The Donnelly family has been "enjoying looking at colleges for our daughter and schools for our son."

After 14 years in Mason City, Iowa, Shirley Slater Crossman and her family moved to Amherst, MA in August, 1981. "John became president and C.E.O. of the Connecticut River Watershed Council, a private, non-profit group dedicated to the preservation and conservation of the Conn. River and its tributaries. This is a challenging time to enter the field of environmental protection. As the government moves out, private groups like CRWC may have a larger role to play. Our children are adjusting to their new school with Nathaniel in the sixth grade and Katie in the fourth. Our new address is: 2 Morgan Place, Amherst, MA 01002."

Mary O'Connor Sears and husband are proud of their son Jim (12) who "was the starting third baseman and relief pitcher on a tournament team that won the New Jersey State Championship. Over 300 teams competed for the title. He went on to play in the Eastern Regional competition. Jim appears to be a natural athlete so he loved every minute of it, and we are proud of his accomplishment."

Let's hear from more of you—just write to me at the above address.

The most significant news of the class in recent years is the award of a 1982 Pulitzer Prize to John Darnott for International Reporting from Poland. John, who has been a reporter for The New York Times for several years, has reported from, among other places, New York City, Nigeria, Kenya, and most recently, Poland. The New York Times of April 13, 1982, reports in its "Sketches of Pulitzer Prize Winners":

"International Reporting
John Darnott
The New York Times
"Tracing human dramas, as well as social and political upheaval in scores of articles that often circumvented censorship, Mr. Darnott, 40, detailed Poland's crisis from the rise of solidarity through Warsaw's martial law crackdown. The son of Byron Darnott, who died as a Times war correspondent in New Guinea in 1942, he joined the Times in 1966, was a metropolitan reporter and in 1976 became a foreign correspondent in Africa. He was posted to Poland two years ago."

Brad Reynolds, assistant U.S. attorney general in charge of the civil rights division(!) and "the Justice Department's top civil rights lawyer", made another kind of national news in mid-February in connection with the White House's decision to reverse a 1970 Internal Revenue Service policy barring exemptions to discriminatory schools. According to legal newspapers, Reynolds, by supporting the then-current White House decision incurred bitter protests from "more than 200 department employees" for allegedly politicizing the department and causing "a deep rift within the Justice Department on civil rights enforcement. "The published reports of Brad's responses to the department's employees' protest suggest that he made little attempt to be political in his administration of the division or its interpersonal relations.

Jeremy Wood, probably the class's most faithful correspondent, participated in a Boston Area Andover Phonathon in late March and chatted with a larger than usual number of class members in the Boston area. The following comments are from Jeremy's conversations. Ed Woll is living in Wayland, MA, and is a litigation partner in the law firm Sullivan and Worcester. Woody Wickham has been assistant to the president of Hampshire College in Amherst, MA, for the past four years, and is about to become Director of Development for the School. Wayne Matson is head of his own company making scientific instruments in the biomedical field and hopes the company will soon go public. Jim Newton is teaching at Lincoln-Sudbury High School.

John Williamson is teaching sociology at Boston College. Joe Ingelfinger continues to practice medicine at Boston City Hospital, teaches at Boston University, has a book on statistics of medicine in the works and manages to coach hockey on the side. Classicist Al Ward is teaching Ancient History and a course on Herodotus at the University of Connecticut and manages to see Dr. Chase quite often. Fellow classicist David Nelson teaches Latin and Greek at Suffield Academy in Connecticut.

More from Jeremy: Fred Todd is practicing architecture in Cambridge where he runs his own firm. Don Lacey is in the general practice of medicine at Union Village, VT, just across the Connecticut River from his alma mater Dartmouth. Jim Clifford, M.D. hangs his shingle for practice for internal medicine in Beverly, MA, and lives nearby in Manchester. Jeremy further reports a delightful chat with Bob Sanderson, who is working in a machine and metal shop building stainless steel devices for cryogenics work ("the bio-tech part of a high-tech industry"), as well as with Andy Teuber's mother at a small music concert where Jeremy learned that Andy returned to Harvard for a Ph.D. and is presently teaching philosophy at the University of Washington in Seattle. Jeremy himself was recently made a senior associate at the Architects' Collaborative in Boston and the construction supervision of the Westin Hotel project continues to occupy him in Boston. He is also about to embark on the creation of a solar-heated goat house to house their backyard animal menagerie which includes the recent addition of two baby nuban goats.

Finally, Jeremy reports that Edwin Gustavus Quattlebaum is not (as alumni records list him) alive and well in Andover, but is living with Ruth; Gus IV, and Hughie at 30 Edward Street, Woolthor 2025, Sydney, Australia, for a year on a teaching exchange program. Andover apparently would not allow Jeremy to call Quats in Australia on the school's nickel, undoubtedly on the wise assumption or inside knowledge that the school's return on its investment would not justify the effort. Reports from the west coast indicate that Gus IV, age 7, demonstrated powerful attractions to a green liquid called Osage Rub and to another class member's wife during the trip to Australia; the wife reciprocated.

Michael Scharf is dividing his time between New York and Jacksonville, FL, and was recently elected president of Park East Synagogue in New York; he reports it was nice having seen Ben Koehler at an Addison Gallery exhibition in New York. David Dumas, another of the class's most faithful correspondents, was married to Sara McKay Daniel of Jacksonville in Providence on February 1, 1982. Thom Chirug lives and works in Berkeley, CA, and was recently and briefly observed in most distinguished company at an Oxford-Cambridge society meeting in San Francisco.

Congratulations to John Darnton in particular, and to all of you in general who make the effort to keep in touch. Please do.

Several people have taken the time to write letters and I wish to acknowledge them and thank them for their contributions. Mal King practices law in Durham, NC in a four-man law firm. Mal's wife is also a lawyer with the North Carolina Department of Justice. It is always exciting when people like Mal write to share about their feelings for Andover and their sincere wishes to remain in contact with classmates. Landon Carter writes that he has left EST, is (wisely) out of the real estate development business, has joined a stock brokerage firm, and is working in the area of institutional sales in the European market. Landon has 3 children, is playing lacrosse again regularly, and continues to contribute by conducting workshops for teenagers. Jack Heikkinen lives in Hanover, PA where he is a veteran of 2 years on a church council of the Lutheran Church. Jack is a devout Christian and wishes to share that spirit with all of you.

John Zeisel has combined careers in social research and architecture to form a consulting firm in Cambridge for the purpose of producing designs for people to use and, presumably, not merely to look at. John is married and has one child, "an absolute joy". His wife is a special assistant in charge of water policy in the Office of Environmental Affairs in Massachusetts. He has published a book: Inquiry by Design: Tools for Environment - Behavior Research, and has been written up in the August, 1981 issue of Progressive Architecture. On top of all that, John has a B.A. in Chinese Studies and a Ph.D. Wow! Andy Cohen is such a faithful writer that I am always afraid that I may misplace his latest missive. At last report Andy was taking a year in the United States from his position as Associate Professor of Applied Linguistics at Hebrew University of Jerusalem. He says "I do care about Andover and about our class. Send my warm regards to all!" In addition to life with what seems like an extremely active wife and 2 children, Andy has written Testing Language Ability in the Classroom, published in 1980. Some time ago Steve Hurlbut sent a penetrating biography of himself in which he outlined his path as one of conversion from "upper middleclass unawareness" and a "sense of emptiness" to a new religious awareness which has led him to finish his Ph.D. in physics and become a source of sharing his own values with others. Steve wanted me to say a particular "hello" to Tom Evslin and Randy Graves. (Hey, Tom! whatcha doin?)

By now you all know that Clint Kendrick has passed the Class Agent's mantle on to Dennis Cross and gone on to bigger and better things for himself and Andover. Clint is now living in London as chairman of Alliance Capital Management International. He has done an outstanding job as Class Agent and has asked that we all pitch in to support Dennis in his efforts.

Michael Cohen reports that he is a cardiologist at Montefiore Hospital in New York and an associate professor at the Albert Einstein College of Medicine. He is working on a subject which is probably terrifying to us all: Mike is doing animal research to determine whether exercise is good for the heart! Please, Mike, would you hurry up and let us know as soon as possible. Finally, a terrific letter and accompanying photographs of Jim Hudson's family. Jim is a senior staff engineer at RCA, specializing in high performance computers. He and his wife, Julie, have adopted 2 Korean orphans and it is with incredible pride that Jim writes how Sarah, having arrived in the U.S. on March 9, 1982 from Seoul, was singing "Old MacDonald Had a Farm" and "Side by Side" after 3 weeks in this country. I can't tell you how warm it made me feel for Jim to actually send photographs of himself and his family. At first I thought, "What the hell will I do with these?" but after a while I realized that contact like this is what this job is all about.

Being on the Phonathon team for the Andover Alumnae Fund gave me the opportunity to be in touch with a few more classmates from who it was good to hear news.

Martha Farnsworth lives in Gloucester and is a painter. Beth Ely Potter lives in New Hampshire on a farm and is expecting baby No. 5 this summer. Kitty Stahlbrand is the coordinator of a Child Service Demonstration Center and also a consulting teacher at South Burlington High School in Vermont. She has written several articles about their project and has given presentations around the country. Kitty is also an Associate Faculty member at the University of Vermont. Sue Hill lives in Andover and has just completed a program in computer technology.

Sarah Knight Erlij, reported "lost" by all rights according to our alumnae office, has resurfaced. Sarah called me to fill me in on her whereabouts and life history to date. She has a nursing degree from Skidmore College and married a Mexican man who is currently a professor of Physiology at Down State Medical Center in New York. They lived for a number of years in Mexico and Europe and four years ago were "repatriated". They now live in Brooklyn, NY and have two children, a daughter, 16, and a son, 13. Sarah is the head of the clinical team of the United States Cerebral Palsy Association of New York State.

I recently began working, after a six-month search, as public relations and marketing director for a graphic design firm in Boston. After all is said and done, I am convinced that landing a job has a lot more to do with chemistry than with credentials.

I find it interesting to discover that many women our age are "at home" - and happily. I am glad to know that, even in the face of the pressure to prove oneself as a careerwoman, there are women who are true to themselves in choosing to stay home. I have stayed at home and I have gone to work and both have their agonies and ecstasies. I don't mind being at home, but I must say I become much more efficient when I have a job. It's nice if you have the choice. If you don't, you still get to choose what you have.

Our Twentieth Reunion was a big success, attended by 39 of our classmates and assorted spouses and children (for those who remember Ace Lake's dogs at the tenth, it may be a letdown to hear that there were no pets in evidence this year). A hearty thanks goes to Jack Fabiano, who did most of the real work, culminating in a marvelous clambake complete with boiled lobsters and a great dance band at Graham House Saturday evening. Among the other highlights of the weekend was a 2.2 mile run around the campus open to all comers. Although the more recent classes seemed to be disproportionately represented among the earliest finishers, Dinny and Connie Adams were the first of '62's group to cross the finish line. Several of our classmates joined in, including the multi-talented Jack Fabiano (a two-time Boston Marathon finisher!) and Mo Zukerman, a last-minute entrant running in street clothes (he had already run several miles earlier that day during his morning jog). Former track captain Jim Mettler dropped out after a few hundred yards (due to a previous injury, you understand).

Best Story of the Weekend: Jack Badman's recounting his role in Exeter's touchdown in our 18-8 victory over senior year. Leading 18-0 and in a punting situation, Coach Sarota insisted on having a tired Jack center the ball to punter Mike Moonves despite Jack's warning that he was dangerously fatigued. As Jack said, he not only hiked the ball over Mike's head but way over his head, leading to the late Exeter score. Mortified, he returned to the bench to find his coach positively relieved by the turn of fortune. He explained to the dazed center that by averting a shut-out of the Exies he would most likely escape the otherwise certain wrath of the Exeter alumni, which in turn could have led to more determined recruiting and a subsequent humiliation of a future Andover team. This way the Exies, whom the coach would have to face long after Jack was gone, would have the satisfaction of an apparently respectable showing. You may recall, incidentally, that Jack was named the next day to the All-Prep team and that during our four-year tenure on the Hill we never lost a varsity football game to Exeter.

Best Photographer: Mike Davey. Mike estimates that he took about 50 candid shots at the Reunion and will be happy to furnish any classmate a complete set at cost (about $15 or so - check with Mike). Please address all inquiries to Mike at 7610 Helena Drive, Falls Church, VA 22043 or call him at (703) 560-1589.

Unfinished Business: not everyone got a cap, but we can fix you up. Each alumnus who attended the Reunion should have received a blue and white "gimme" (or "red-neck") mesh baseball cap with the numerals "62" on it. A few didn't, and if you'll write to me at the above address, I will see that you get one. Anyone who would like an extra one, whether or not you attended, can get one by writing me and sending a check for $8 per cap (cost).

Most Deserving Plea for Help: Frank DiClemente's request for more volunteer Alumni Representatives from the "younger classes," among whom we were included. Local Alumni Reps help the Admissions Office by interviewing prospective students, maintaining contacts with local "kid-persons" (principals, teachers, counselors, etc.), and assisting PA admissions staff during annual forays into the hinterlands. Please contact Deke at the school directly if you think you might have an interest. He is genuinely anxious to involve more of the younger alumni in this very important (and stimulating!) endeavor.

Long Distance Award: Quentin Rappoport, hands down. He came from London. Honorable Mention: John Allison, from Seattle. Come to think of it, that's really almost a toss-up. Best Dancer: Nick Kip '60 and his wife, Susie. The faculty really lived up the party. Biggest Surprise: Jim Pfaff who at 6'6" is about a foot taller than when we graduated.

Best News: Pete Formanek is the latest classmate elected to the Alumni Council. Youngest wife: Susan (Mrs. Lee) Allen, 25. Prettiest Wife: You've got to be kidding. I may be dumb, but I'm not stupid!

Most missed: George Works. He and Donna Sue, Dudley and Sue Snyder, and Kay and I had been planning the trip from Texas together for almost a year; but the week of the Reunion George learned that his father was gravely ill.

Attendees: Dinny and Connie Adams, Lee and Susan Allen, John and Darlene Allison, George and Liz Andrews, Jack and Jane Badman, Rick and Kay Barry, Rick and Candace Beinecke, Tom (T.K.) Burgess, Tim Carter, Bob and Jane Corcoran, Mike and Artemis Davey, Skip and Gayle Eames, Larry and Melanie Ehrhart, Jack and Susan Fabiano, Lee and Kathy Gilbert, Tom and Shelley Gilbert, Tone and Kathi Grant, John and Myra Greene, Ed and Priscilla Grew, Tom Israel, Carl and Ruth Jacobs, Hugh Jones, Dick and Pam Leger, Jim Mettler, Rick and Anne Moore, Dennis and Diane Mulcahy, David and Missy Partridge, Dick Penley, Jim and Carol Pfaff, Quentin Rappoport, John Richardson.

We had a terrific turnout for Reunion, but those of us who were there missed those who were unable to make it. We all had a great deal of catching up with each other to do, which brings me to another topic—our class notes. The class notes are assembled from several sources: notes sent to the school are forwarded to the Class Secretary, notes sent to the Secretary directly, phonathon conversations and from classmates. There are, therefore, opportunities for unintentional errors and omissions. For reasons of economy the school prefers that the notes be concise, so letters are usually condensed, but never intentionally omitted. I am also hesitant about being the transmitter of bad news, so I generally do not include reports of the difficult aspects of our classmates' lives, unless directed otherwise by the person involved. Please send news of yourself and I'll get it out as quickly as possible.

The following notes on those who attended the Reunion are just that, I'm afraid. There was so much shared that it is very difficult to sum it all up.

Nancy Elwell Griscom came with her husband Rufus and two sons. Nancy's oldest son was combining the Reunion trip with secondary school visits. The Griscoms moved to Washington from New York four years ago. Nancy is working on her M.S.W. and hoping to combine her advanced degree with her nursing background in hospital-affiliated family therapy.

Natalie Gillingham Schorr and her husband Mark joined us at a rather chilly barbecue on Friday night before Natalie left for the peace demonstration in New York. Gretchen Whitehead Maynard changed her plans for coming to Reunion in order to be "one small voice" at the June 12 anti-nuclear protest too. Sue Boynton Koerber, husband Ken, two daughters and son came from their farm in New Hampshire. Sue saw Meribey Sweet in Concord, NH this winter.

Bonnie Hazelton Charrat came to Reunion with her parents and sisters Lee (A.A. '66) and Amy. Bonnie's husband Philippe stayed at home in Mexico City with their children Jenny, Valerie and Joseph. Bonnie won an award as one of the alumnae who had come the greatest distance to Reunion.

Carolyn Dow also came with alumnae sisters Marilyn Dow Moriarty (A.A. '69) and Barbara Dow White (A.A. '65). Carolyn had just (June 1) been promoted at IBM and has relocated from the San Francisco area where she had lived for eleven years to Chicago.

Nancy Hill Lyons came with her daughter Elizabeth who is four. Nancy is still very involved with her children's clothing business and will be on leave from her teaching position for one more year. Nancy did a terrific job of getting our classmates who live in the greater Boston area to come.

Martha Lyman will be making major changes in her life shortly. Martha is leaving her position as Director of Financial Aid at Harvard and getting married July 10. Her fiancé is dean of students at a college in eastern Washington where they will be living. Abby von der Heyde Summersgill came with her husband Bob and her younger son. Abby announced that her back is to appear on 20/20 at some future date. Abby has arthritis of the spine, but was looking forward to treatment shortly after Reunion which would relieve the pain. The treatment is a new one, thus the media interest. Abby is still managing a career and family with good humor.

Kitty Grant Galatis and her husband Tony came from Lexington. Kitty is combining work and caring for their fifteen-month-old son, Alexander. Anne MacDougall came with her husband Gil Einstein and their children Ashton and Susanna. Anne's life sounds busy and full. She is painting, teaching, raising children and maintaining homes in Andover and New York. Polly Lamed Herlihy came from California where she is with United Airlines. Polly is still riding and was looking forward to the arrival of a new horse when she got home. Linda Swanberg Musser combined Reunion with a visit with friends in Andover. She is living in New York and spending summers in Mystic. Mae Concemi Bolten came from Rye, NH. Mae is practicing law in Newburyport, MA where she sees Carol Laaff Nuttall and Mary Louise Currier Gagnon both of whom live in Newburyport. Anne Ripley came from Belmont, MA simply exuding energy. She has done some interesting and rewarding work in Southeast Asia. She has also set up a business for nurses to act as patient advocates and seems to have endless ideas for new and worthwhile projects.

Among those whose plans changed at the last minute were Becky Bartlett Fischer who is expecting her second child in August and whose activity has been restricted by her doctor. Becky promises that she'll make our 25th! Beth Crane Accetta also called just before Reunion to say that she was not going to be able to come. Life sounded just great with Beth. She loves Durango, had a huge family reunion at Christmas (and reports that sisters Lexa A.A. '60, Lucy A.A. '65 and Julianna A.A. '68 are all well) and was expecting son Randy (PA '81) home from Wesleyan shortly.

Let's hear from the rest of you! Please write, Lynne.

Ricky Muller Aalto will receive her M.A. in Psychology this spring. She is hoping to combine part-time University teaching with caring for her family. The Aalto's sons are 13, 9, and 6. Claudia Kerr Grose was one of the casualties of the April blizzard. When I spoke with her she was recovering from having slipped and broken her back during the storm. She said she was not in pain but was temporarily immobilized. Claudia is a program director for the Coro Foundation. She is developing leadership training programs for women in public affairs. Claudia's daughters are in high school at the Horace Mann School in Riverdale and her husband is writing a book on U. S.-Israeli relations.

Kathy Krakauer has a son Benjamin who was born in April 1981. Kathy is an assistant professor in the Department of Medicine at the University of Pennsylvania and doing research in rheumatoid arthritis. Natalie Gillingham Schorr is teaching French at Andover. Natalie has a daughter 5 and a son 19 months old. Jennifer Hesketh is recently remarried to Ken Young who is the director of the National Running Data Center. They'd love to hear from other runners. Susie Niebling Hendrie will be returning to New Mexico this summer.

Anne MacDougall married Gil Einstein in 1981 and now divides her time between New York and Andover. She is working full time as an artist and has a very impressive list of exhibitions. Her works have also been acquired by the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, Cleveland Museum, Virginia Museum, Fogg Museum, DeCordova Museum and others.

Of all the Pulitzer Prize winners, Tracy Kidder enjoys a unique literary distinction: His book has been "parodied" by Datamation Magazine. As we are all learning about computers, Tracy's book has enjoyed a continual rise on the best-seller lists throughout the country—and now an international prize and a parody. What can possibly be done for an encore? We all await your next book, Tracy—continued good luck.

Tracy Kidder '63: beyond fiction

What does it mean to be a professional non-fiction writer in America today?

"My trade is a form of anthropology. You approach people you don't understand with respect." If "you" are Tracy Kidder and have just won both the Pulitzer Prize and the American Book Award, you might find yourself in something of a state of shock. But in spite of the attention Kidder has won with his book on the high technology industry, The Soul of a New Machine, he does not seem to be diverted from his professional course. Tracy Kidder's approach to his writing suggests his modesty as well as his far-reaching curiosity and he freely offers some reflections on Andover and writing.

It was at Andover that Kidder says he first began to realize the importance of good writing. "Academically, it was much harder than Harvard." He is particularly grateful that he had to write every day in the classes of FAP (Fred Peterson '34) and Tom Regan '51. In science classes too, his writing was evaluated as writing, not just as 'the answer' to a question. "Students can become very good at manipulating the words to please the teacher. But, at PA, for the first time we had to explain ourselves." Also, at Andover he first realized that clarity was a virtue. "It was a skill to be learned, like riding a bike." Kidder says that his most important discovery was that good writing had to explain something to someone.

Tracy Kidder's path from Andover to his present home in Williamsburg, Massachusetts, included several years in Vietnam, some time at the Iowa Writers' Workshop, and some time in California writing a book about Juan Corona, a migrant worker who had killed 26 people. His hundred-year-old farmhouse shows signs of varied interests—from fishing to coaching Pee-Wee League. ("Kids today don't know how to throw and catch properly.") His wife Frances and two children, 3 and 8, are central in this version of the good life. There is much more evidence of living than of writing. The exception is the study, where an IBM executive typewriter is flanked by a burgeoning folder of newly-typed pages.

Why doesn't he attempt to write a novel? He had projected one, but stopped writing, bored because there was not enough happening with it. "And there is no reason why non-fiction has to be boring! Good technical writing is related to narrative." He explains that he writes and researches simultaneously. "Pay attention to detail, but never put all the details in one place. If you do, you lose your reader." What do the engineers at Data General think of the technical detail in The Soul of a New Machine? "They tried to find mistakes. A whole group of them went over it, but they only found one detail in the Adventure game program that was clearly wrong."

Writing about computers, Kidder reached a point where he had to get the story at all costs. "Many engineers don't explain things well," he points out; but the gifted ones, like his character, Paul West, can explain the most difficult concept even to a person who knows nothing about the subject. Kidder tried to identify with the kind of engineer who could make things clear to those around him. "To do so, I had to ask a lot of people a lot of times how the thing in front of me worked."

How does he arrive at subjects? "You get desperate," he said. "Most things are interesting once you locate the center of the story. So you must clear a lot out of the way, the improbable stuff." Is high tech the subject of the age? Not to Kidder. He isn't planning another book on computers now, although he remains fascinated with the theme of the individual in big organizations: "The important thing is to explain individual effort in corporate situations." Finally, he continues, "good writing gives your reader the smell of something." He quotes Conrad: "A metaphor should never be too flashy, too clever, too precise; it should make you see."

Is America a nation of separate subgroups? No, says "anthropologist" Kidder. He is impressed by the connectedness of people in his town and in the country at large. "I guess that makes my view cosmopolitan, and I'm still optimistic about this country --as long as we can still talk to each other."

—Mark Schorr

On receiving the drafts for our class notes, I found some news from Anita Schenck Zidnik enclosed. She writes that she is finding a year in Japan filled with delightful discoveries. They are in Yokohama until August 1982 and invite any and all classmates to look them up at 33-1 Yamate-cho Naka-ku Yokohama 231. Thanks Anita—maybe many of us wish we could make the trip.

I can't remember who I was talking to but they said they thought Cathy Hilgendorf Blanchard was back in this country and living in New Hampshire teaching. Cathy, if you're out there write us and tell us if this is true.

I have been remiss about sending out my postcards for news but I did sit down and telephone some nearby classmates again. Carolyn Holcombe Damp and I and Ann MacCreedy Northup and I had good conversations. First, Carrie is a fourth grade teacher at Milton Academy and likes it. She has a 5-yr-old little boy and gardens, hikes and dumbs. One thing she was doing that interested me was publishing a book of her fourth grader's poetry, not professionally, within the school with illustrations by the art teacher. Ann MacCreedy Northup too was teaching. She is an art teacher in the Lexington, MA school system. She has two children—one 20 months and one 4 years. She likes Newton and their home on a children-filled street.

Carrie shared news of Mimi Dean McBride. Mimi has two children and has just moved to a new home in Chevy Chase, MD and too is happy to have a nice suburban area for children. That seems to be a recurring theme from many classmates.

Meg Power also wrote a postcard catching us up on all her activities. In 1978 when Senator Brooke lost, she left his staff for the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee where she staffed Senator Javits of NY on energy issues. When he lost, she and her husband started their own energy consulting firm "Eisenberg and Power, Arlington, VA" and are relishing the joys and terrors of entrepreneurship as she writes. Meg and Joel were married in 1980 and they have a new little girl Emily Rebecca.

Flash!! Anne Harris Furguson is writing everyone a letter about the 20th Reunion next year. Can you believe it. No more room. God bless—Jackie.

For once we have some news that hasn't happened yet: Pete Schandorff will be spending the 1982-83 school season at Columbia Teachers College in New York, studying climetrics and the application of computers to the teaching of the social studies. If you don't understand this either, tune in to next year's notes and we'll try to obtain elucidation from the horse's mouth.

Paying for this adventure will be a Klingenstein Fellowship, which Pete is the first teacher from Missouri to garner. The press release failed to say whether he was also the first to apply, but it did mention that he has been at the John Burroughs School in St. Louis since 1971 and has had feature roles in ten productions of the Theater Project Company of St. Louis, including Cat on a Hot Tin Roof.

Peter's arrival should be cause for our traditional bi-reunion, so if this reaches you by October and you're in the New York area, give me a call for the exact time and place.

Anyone in the New Orleans area looking for a class confab should contact Bart Loomis, who is the father of two boys, ages 5 and 2, and who extends an invitation to anyone passing through.

As for myself, I will attempt my long-threatened trek to Philadelphia before the next report, to check up on Alan Wofsey's "professional growth." I would expect no less than a beard from someone who has been made Clinical Assistant Professor of Psychiatry at Penn Medical School and Chairman of the Psychiatry Department at Haverford Community Hospital in the past year.

From San Francisco comes an unconfirmed report that John Seegal got married this summer. If true, our congratulations to John and Barbara. Details, anyone?

Finally, we welcome Justin Huvelle, born April 7, to Ellen and Jeff Huvelle in Washington, D.C., their second child and first son. May he run as swift and true as his father.

I have been asked to keep these notes light, lively, and above all, brief (apparently, other classes have some news too). So . . . Randy Evans and wife Lynn are proud parents of daughter, Anne, born in April. Son Paul, age 2, has already decided to take up lacrosse. Jon Mills is in corporate planning for the Hartford National Bank and is in regular contact with Peter Vanderwarker who is a photographer in Boston. Steve Finch is a marine counsel for Mobil Oil in Connecticut and recently saw Tony Gibson for the first time since graduation at a hockey game near home. Peter Kitson is now vp administrator for Hill Refrigeration in Trenton, NJ. He and wife Cheryl have two children, Nicole (4) and Jeffrey (2).

Peter Andrews has just opened his own architect's office near Baltimore. Howard Stanback is now in New York on a sabbatical and will be teaching some courses at the New School. Jeff Gardner is a vp in corporate services at State National Bank in Evanston, IL. He and Barbara have a son, Peter (1). Perry Thurmond is an astrologer in Little Rock, AR. Jim Milmo has been with General Electric's legal department in Albany since 1974. He and wife Alexandra have three children, Anne (6), Steven (3) and Christopher (9 months).

Ward Hinkle is a lawyer in Buffalo. He and wife Cindy are expecting their first child in September. Jeff Pidot is the Public Land Lease Commissioner in Maine. Norv Dickerson is in Charlotte ("a very nice place to be") where he is a lawyer. Norv frequently gets together with John Lacouture for some lively handball games. Jeff Piehler is doing cardiac surgery in Rochester, MN and doing some running, photographing and bicycling in his spare time. Jeff and Kristina have two children, Britton (6) and Timothy (3). Dave Herrelko and Janet now have three daughters, and Dave invites any classmate with three sons to apply now for an early marriage contract. Dan will be headed to the Indian Ocean for 6 months—late spring. Ray Healey was named Director of Internal Communications, Corporate Information at CBS. Ray will be marrying Claudia Angelos this spring in between a rollerskating marathon in Central Park. Jack McLean will be leaving Boston for Portland, ME where he will be heading a new office for the Johnson & Higgins Insurance Co. Lou Maranzana has left Dartmouth to become the defensive coordinator in football at Bloomsburg State, Bloomsburg, PA. Jack Turco is the head of student medical services at Dartmouth as well as continuing his work in Endocrinology. Jack and Mary just had their third child—a baby girl.

Bill Rizzo has left the law firm of Ropes and Gray and set up a new law firm, McDermott and Rizzo in Boston. Steve Cunningham is a real estate investment officer with Mutual of New York in N.Y.C. Steve lives in NJ with wife, Salli, daughter Amy 2, and another child on the way. Peter William's wife, Ann Polk, RN, and twin daughters Hilary and Alison have recently moved to a suburb of Baltimore. In Washington, D.C., Bill Barringer is a partner in the law firm of Arter, Hadden & Hemmendinger dealing primarily with international trade and investment. In Pittsburgh, George Eichleay and wife Annie recently had a second son, Peter. And lastly, Peter Buchin is an assistant Professor of Clinical Medicine at Columbia Univ, having just completed a two-year fellowship in Gastroenterology at Yale. That's the news—please keep the cards coming in.

Best Regards, Skip.

We are all mourning the sudden death of Chris Gurry's wife, Dags, on June 9. In her memory, friends have begun a college fund for Erin and Adam, care of Headmaster Don McNemar or the Andover Savings Bank.

The PA '67 Reunion Starship achieved it's apogee the evening of June 12th, a night to be long remembered by those present. The superb gourmet dinner orchestrated by Joey Kahn supplanted the fried chicken box suppers one usually finds at these affairs. The quality of the food suitably complimented the camaraderie and friendship at the dinner. What followed was a musical and sentimental experience almost transfiguring in it's impact: the reincarnation of Tony Thompson, Bob Cohan, Tom Scheft, Rich Weinberg, and Charlie Rockwell as The Rising Storm. The musical output and sheer energy of this ensemble was truly phenomenal, and the experience of dancing to the same band that led us through adolescence was almost spiritual.

This was made all the more remarkable by the fact that none of these boys are professional musicians. Bob Cohan is a lawyer in Boston. Having spent some time working in legal services and consumer protection law for the Massachusetts Attorney General's Office, Bob is now in private practice, married, and in love! And the father of one daughter. Bob serves on the Massachusetts State Chiropractic Licensing Board and the Board of WAND-PAC (Women's Association for Nuclear Disarmament-Political Action Committee).

Tom Scheft is teaching at the North Carolina Central University School of Journalism and is married to "the best teacher in the world." Tony Thompson is no longer practicing law, but is active in real estate in the Washington, D.C. area. Tony has a two-year-old daughter, Anna-Ruth and another child due in September. His wife is a labor lawyer working for the union's side.

Charlie Rockwell is a ski instructor in the winter in Vermont at Killington, spending his summers racing motorcycles. Charlie is in the National Guard and had just finished a two-week tour of duty the day before the performance. Rich Weinberg is a gastroenterologist who is just leaving the University of Chicago for a new job on the faculty at the University of Texas in Houston.

The appreciative listeners to The Storm, included this diverse and congenial group: Ray Bird is still teaching and is working on his English Ph.D. thesis at Columbia. He is married to Lisa Sheble. Steve Brown continues to work hard at the meat business in Vermont, continuing to diversify and expand his operations. He is married to Alice Robertson. Charlie Collier is working in the fund raising office at Princeton University. He and his wife Sally have two young sons. Norman Cross is living and working in New Haven, CT. "Slim" Jim Gadsden is a lawyer with Carter, Ledyard, and Milburn in New York. Jamie Lee is involved in the oil and gas business in Houston, TX. He and his wife Jane are the proud parents of two children. Bruce MacNelly has moved with his wife to Martha's Vineyard where he is working as an architect. Bruce said that he would like to work on designing low-cost housing for the Vineyard (Poodles, please let us know as soon as you find this, Bruce).

Walt Mintkeski works for an engineering consulting firm in Portland, OR and devotes considerable amounts of his spare time to the Sierra Club. Walter is very active in the Nuclear Disarmament movement and arranged to have the film "The Last Epidemic" shown for the Reunion classes. He and his wife Vicki are the parents of two sons, Tyler and Charles. John Nettleton lives in northeastern New Jersey, just a short commute from his job in Urban Planning and Redevelopment in Brooklyn. Dan Cunningham and his wife Alice are lawyers in New York. Tom Schiavoni is a lawyer in a three-man partnership in Lynn, MA. He and his wife Mary Magee are the parents of an infant daughter. John Bassett is in the private practice of oral surgery in southern New Hampshire. He and his wife had a child just a few weeks before the Reunion.

Charlie Harrison continues to be an artist, specializing in knitted murals. Charlie works at the Willard Gallery in New York. New Yorker's Tom Ireland, Bill Mears, and Charlie Lucas all sent their regrets. All three gentlemen were kept from attending the Reunion by their newborn children (No. 3 for Bill). Finally, our own Bill Dorn works for Forrest Oil in Houston, was chosen by the powers that be for the Andover Alumni Council.

Fifteen years of life after Abbot: these fleeting years have presented us with choices and struggles, opportunities and events which few of us could ever have anticipated. Our class is a particularly interesting one which reflects the full spectrum of today's woman—from corporate lawyers to full-time mothers. Reunion weekend provided a time and place for many of us to share experiences and to discuss some of the choices we have made and the conflicts we have faced in establishing (as well as changing) our goals with respect to education, career and family. The reuniting group was small, but as interesting as it was diverse. The commonality of experience during those adolescent years of "sturm and drang" is an undeniable bond; it eliminates all obstacles to renewing old friendships and to cultivating new ones. I was both impressed and reassured to observe that we can convey vitality and confidence without complacency and conceit and that we can openly discuss our successes and disappointments without fear of judgment or criticism from our peers and contemporaries.

Judy Hannegan Sherman deserves special recognition for having come the greatest distance. She makes her home in Bangkok with husband Marcus, Kelly (age 4) and Annie (9 months). Marcus opened and manages a field office which offers technical assistance to farmers in rural development. Judy tutors English-speaking retarded children. Julie Schneller VanEnwick has two daughters, ages 5 and 8. She is moving to Vancouver, B.C. where her husband will open a practice in psychotherapy. She has been working part time with mildly retarded adults but is looking forward to temporarily retiring from the labor market and raising chickens and bees. Alice Robertson Brown enjoys life in semi-rural Vermont, caring for two pre-school girls, two dogs, one cat and eleven (11?) buffalo, studying ballet, and being active in women's support groups. She and her husband, Steve (PA '67) own their own meat and fish market. Julia Alvarez is as energetic and vivacious as ever. She is teaching creative writing at the University of Vermont and continues to write herself. Jane von der Heyde Lindley lives in New York with David, Camilla and Carolyn. She is vice president and general counsel of Coverham Holdings, Inc. and was recently elected a director of the Grand Union Company.

Our class is contributing its fair share to the current baby boom. Jean Haley Hogan, Nancy Howe Erdmann, and Nancy Porosky Harris are busy with new babies. Wendy Morrissey was unable to attend the Reunion because she was ready to deliver her second child. Liz Bonan Bertin-Boussu is divorced and living in New York where she is busy raising two children and developing a ski resort in Colorado. She told me that Kathy Hoover Olson has started an apple farm in Colorado and that Tilly Lavenas Shields lives on a dude ranch in Tucson. This news substantiated my statement that we are a diverse and interesting class! Also living in New York: Gail Nizak Strong who is a graphic artist, Anstiss Bowser who is a social worker, and Claire Moore Dickerson who is a lawyer with Coudere Brothers. In Boston are Sara Delano, an editor with INC magazine and Holly Washburn Mastasis, a supervisor of evening division courses at Northeastern University. Lissa Pendleton has rediscovered the pleasures of living in Andover. She is a systems analyst with NCR and in her spare time dabbles in antiques for fun and profit. Roxie Wolfe is thriving in Epping, NH where she is in the health care field and pursuing an additional degree in counseling. She was unable to make the Reunion because it conflicted with a road race in Litchfield, CT which has been an annual commitment for her for five years. Since a minor injury prevented her from competing in the race herself, she decided to ride her bicycle from Epping to Litchfield to cheer on a friend who has always run the race with her. The benefits of being class reunion chairman included hearing from people like Roxie after a hiatus of fifteen years.

My own enjoyment of the weekend came not only from seeing and talking with former classmates. I also felt a stronger affiliation with the school since I taught French there for three years (1973-76) and I welcomed the opportunity to visit with faculty members who were both friends and oate director of a fledgling nonprofit organization, The School for Field Studies, which develops field research expeditions to remote areas of the world. Our purpose is to provide field training to students in the environmental and ecological sciences.

Although I have been happy to report on the news of the fifteenth reunion class, Susan Shapiro would like to continue to be Class Secretary. Do send her an updated report about yourself so that I can read about you in the next issue of the Bulletin. Her address is: 2515 A Camellia Drive, Durham, NC 27705.

Linda Cregg

Only the east coast of the U. S. is represented this time around. Bill Schoonmaker writes of his wife, Jill Singer Schoonmaker, "Jill continues to work wonders with learning disabled 5-year-olds in Dover, NH as well as with Emily Rachel, now 2 years old. She is also extremely active in 2 quilting guilds. She does all this with unbounded energy and enthusiasm, which is why she is asleep at 8:30 pm and I'm writing these notes." Thanks Bill.

As always, I remain in close touch with Nancy Porosky Harris who added a 3rd child to her clan in Nov. 1981. Despite a shaky start (pyloric spasms), Reed Alexander is now healthy and happy and growing. I have also heard from Judy Hannegan Sherman. She's still in Thailand with her husband and now 2 little girls (Anne Gifford Sherman, born Aug. 24, 1981). The Shermans are planning to stay in Thailand at least 2 more years, but those of you who made it to our 15th reunion will have seen Judy, as she reported that she would be back in the U.S. for a leisurely summer visit.

As for me, I've enjoyed getting to know North Carolina. Since last June, I've managed to visit both the Smokies and the Outer Banks several times. In between such jaunts, Duke has managed to keep me adequately busy, to say the least. I've decided to return to Louisville to work on the last leg of my current pilgrimage—my dissertation. After that—who knows. Wish I could have made it to the reunion. Hope it was just great.

STYLE! We have a star among us. All the people who saw How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying about 15 years ago knew there was something special about Peter Evans. What they didn't know was how special. It turns out that Evans has taken to the stage like Richard Pryor took to cocaine, and both relationships, in different ways, have proved explosive. Evans could well be the Jack Lemmon of our PA era. Several years ago Evans won the Charles Derwent Award, which is given to the most promising young actor in New York, for his role in David Rabe's Streamers. He later played opposite Maggie Smith in Tom Stoppard's Night and Day. And last year, Evans played the preppie fellow who tried to pick up Liza Minnelli at a party in the movie, Arthur, then took the male lead in a national tour of Children of a Lesser God, the sometimes hilarious, always moving Tony-award winning play by Mark Nieldoff. The show tells the story of a teacher of the deaf who falls in love with his most obstinate student. The role is a demanding one. Evans had to learn sign language. He had to speak his own lines as he was signing to the deaf people in the play, plus speak their lines as they signed to him (most of the other actors were either deaf or hearing-impaired). Evans was on stage for virtually the whole performance, speaking about 90% of the lines. "Even Hamlet gets to go off stage once in a while," he sighed after his performance at the National Theater in Washington. No idiot, Evans plans to take his vacation when the show played St. Louis.

Many of his classmates had the pleasure of watching him perform: Sid Pertinoy, Peter Young, Duncan Andrews, Bob Anderson, John Barclay and yours truly. At a reception in D.C., Evans also saw another PA grad, the top preppie of them all, a guy whose name those of you with great memories will recall, George Bush. They talked Andover talk, Evans reports. Like Evans, Steve Blacher is dabbling in films, but from a different angle. He's working on a doctorate in film at NYU.

Moving further south, George Gaskins is still farming in Puerto Rico and by now should be the father of two children. He says that dairy goats are losing out to passion fruit and coffee and that he is working as an administrator for a small farmer's cooperative developing an agro-industrial center.

Dave Dunbar also has been working with co-ops for years, first in Cambridge, then at the National Consumer Cooperative Bank, and finally with Scan, the furniture coop. Now he and wife Kem Mitchell and daughter Christine live in Lewis, DE on the Eastern Shore and are planning to open a small business of their own. Ray Short is an architect for the Connecticut Trust for Historic Preservation. He's living in New Haven even though he didn't go to Yale and he doesn't claim to have an excuse for living there. Short says some occasionally reliable sources report that Bill Young grew sugar maples in Vermont last year and that Alan Fairley, after years of pretending to be bizarre, finally succeeded. Short would like to hear from people and can be reached at 325 Lighthouse Road, New Haven, CT 06512. He'd also like to hear from Motley and Parks.

Peter Durant took a sabbatical from his job with the federal government—he didn't say what the job was—to study at Harvard—he didn't say what he'll be studying. Guys, you've gotta do better than that for this section of the paper.

ANNOUNCEMENTS: Carter Bacon was married to Edith J. Noble on Oct. 3, 1981 in Manchester, MA. Caleb Warren was an usher, and Wells Bacon '73 was best man. The couple plans to live in Charlestown, MA. Russ Hall married Stanford Business School classmate Deborah Atkins and is working for the Boston Consulting Group in the San Francisco area. Which one of them keeps the family's books, do you figure? Tom Kidde and Deno Heal were wed in Sun Valley, ID in February 1981. Kidde still is a partner in a business/litigation law firm in L.A. Franco is still dead.

SCIENCE NEWS: Brandt Andersson took a leave from his job at the Berkeley Lab to work on a solar-energy computer program for the Swedish government. Jeff Hansen is an assistant professor of microbiology at the University of Alabama at Birmingham, where he works on your basic genetic engineering. And Pardon Kenney is an assistant professor of surgery at Rhode Island Hospital and at Brown's medical program. He also has two children.

LEGAL BRIEFS: There are some lawyers in our class. Did you know that? Scooter Libby left his firm in Philadelphia to work in the Office of Policy Planning at the State Department under a former Yale professor who remembered one of Scooter's exams - and still hired him. Dave Johanson is at Bingham, Dana & Gould in Boston and recently consulted Rob Freedman and his partner on what Johanson described as "a possible film project they may be developing." Terrible pun, Johanson, intentional or not. (Freedman is a producer at WCWB-TV, Channel 5, in Boston.) Neal Rosen is an embryonic lawyer, now in his second year at U. of Penn Law School after leaving his job teaching English and coaching at Roxbury Latin. One last law-school grad to discuss. Me. I still have never practiced a day in my life. I left the Wall Street Journal in March, and leaving work the last day was like getting out of my final law-school exam, a feeling probably 75% of you remember fondly. I am doing consulting work for a Washington outfit called Worldwide Information Resources Ltd. and am freelancing. I left the Journal just before taking on the class secretary job to avoid the conflict of working for competing publications. I didn't realize Gordy Baird was dumping the job on me just a year before our 15th Reunion, which I assume will entail a hell of a lot of work. But I can take a joke. See y'all next year, but write before then.

Just found a colorful postcard with a picture of the Big Apple on it. It was sent some months back by Phil Santucci, who's in NYC studying and practicing opera, working hard on the side to support himself, and having a pretty good time at it. Phil would like to see some of his old buddies. Also down in The City is Larry Uhl, now a married man. He and his wife Valerie Casey just bought an old home on Park Slope, Brooklyn.

Boston: Ran into Woody Tasch at the movies. Didn't have much time to talk, but I guess Woody's still doing free-lance writing. Leigh Hafrey, late of Cambridge, is now in the finest of cities, Paris. He's co-editing a British literary journal, and looking for another book to do for David Godine, publishers.

John Malik writes to say he's alive and well and living in Portland, OR. He's an associate with the architectural firm of Skidmore, Owings & Merrill, and has two kids. He and his wife are travel buffs, and last fall visited Switzerland. John says travelling with kids isn't so hard - and if anyone wants the process described, drop him a line.

Rumors that Chuck Smith (the actor) is now a newspaper reporter somewhere in MA, Peter Kunen definitely is a public defender in Hazard, KY. Peter's now head of the office there, and this keeps him busy "since there's no shortage of crime in eastern Kentucky." Anyone passing through on the way to the Knoxville World's Fair should stop by. Andy Raymond has been busy this last decade. Seems he's spent much of this time in Europe, where he's done some religious work, and has served in the Army. He was married in 1974, now has three kids, and recently transferred from a base in California to Fort Dix, NJ. Good to hear from you, Andy!

Nate Cartmell, now married, spent a couple of months working out in SF staying with Larry Gelb. Tom Mesereau, who seems to be in or out of the Bay area, has just gotten a job as assistant to the president of Getty Synfuels, and he'll be on the road a lot. Also out thataway: Art Oller says that in '81 he received an M.B.A. from "Bezerkeley," married Lee Merriweather of Detroit, and started work with Standard Oil of CA. They're living in SE, where Art is training for his fifth marathon. Jeff Kilbreth is also in B-School—at Yale's public management version. Pete Olney may be doing some studying at the University of San Juan in the fall. I was in Europe in the spring, where I watched the clouds roll in over Findhorn Bay in northern Scotland. I can hardly believe my eyes, but I'm now in D.C., working with our very own Congressman Jim Shannon, handling press and writing speeches in defense of liberalism. You know how we Irish from Massachusetts are.

Alex Van Oss of National Public Radio fame has been my incomparable host while getting settled. A more generous person would be impossible to find. So far I've run into Time reporter Evan Thomas, who hunts these marbled halls in search of the Big Story. Newsman Dave Ensor is apparently in Buenos Aires. I hope he's no longer using the British passport he used to carry back in the good old days.

Our move two years ago is still affecting our mail. Last week our landlady dropped off six months worth of mail which included postcards and letters from some of you. Sorry for the delay. Some other moves of which you should be aware are: Carol Nimick to California to teach in a school (based on the philosophy of Rudolph Steiner) emphasizing education thru an integrated arts program, recognizing the whole child. Mary Shavoni Wnek is off on her 34' sailboat "Dreamweaver" with her husband for some extensive cruising in the Caribbean and beyond. Happy Paffard has moved from California to Cleveland, OH where she is hoping to get a degree in Landscape Architecture. During the "indoor months" she has been sculpting in wood and showing and selling her pieces.

Betsy Hoover Sexton is hoping to spend a year in New Zealand with her husband (who will finish his degree in radiology at Yale in July) and son, Thomas Clark Sexton, born July 13, 1981. A different move, a promotion for Nancy Butterfield Horsley. She has a supervisory position at the Bank of Commerce in Sheridan, WY.

You will all be glad to hear Sheila Donald is alive and well and living . . . Sheila, we need your address! She married Larry T. Millington on June 13, 1981 and they are expecting their first child in early June! That's fast work! Katrina Moulton Wollenberg is expecting her second child in August. She is chairman of the cookbook, Private Collection, which was compiled by the Junior League of Palo Alto. It was featured in I. Magnin's Christmas catalogue and sold 27,000 copies in 15 months. Great job! Needless to say, Katrina will be on the executive committee of the League next year!

Susan McArdle really packed news into her letter. When in Andover last Thanksgiving she noticed that the gym is an office/storage building, the campus seemed desolate. She confesses she survived four years at Abbot without any goals on or off the soccer field! She's working in a lab and taking courses at U. of W. She writes Debbie Marum is married to someone and is in med school in PA. Susie Yeaton Hockmeyer is into kayaking and tried her skill on the Colorado River! I'm impressed. I went down in a 13-man raft and it was a thrill. Susie would especially like to hear from Helene, Jena, Diane Best and Linn Rowen. We all would. Keep in touch.

Good men, the last wave by, crying how Their frail deeds might have danced in a green bay
Rage, rage against the dying of the light.

It is night half past midnight here in the White Horse Tavern. Rosy fingered dawn will no doubt again be upon us before the column takes shape from this pile of napkins. I had wanted to say that we would not be reading about any M.B.A.'s in this issue, but alas I fear this will not be so.

From Lower Bavaria comes word that Bernie Kreiling has been appointed prosecuting attorney for the district court of Landshut. Bernie and his wife Elisabeth are now over here on vacation, touring the West in a VW Campmobile. Bill Abernizk was scheduled to be married in May, with one more year of training in radiation therapy left at Harvard Med School. Gerl and Andy Wexler will be moving this year from Vermont to Worcester, where Andy will continue residency at the U Mass Med Center. Jan Butter is reported on assignment with the finance department of the Trucial States, Abu Dhabi, United Arab Emirates. (It pays to read the want ads in Soldier of Fortune).

Frank Herron's brother says Frank has been accepted as a doctoral candidate in history at the University of Houston. The Herrons (Frank and his wife, that is) are also expecting their first child. Rob Wood is married and is in the construction business in Portland, ME. Meanwhile, back at the Poor Farm in Grafton, VT, John Deming continues his constructivist career as a carpenter, renovator, and sculptor. Amory Cummings is a Chicago lawyer.

Ken Colburn is still on the fast corporate finance track at First Boston here in New York. He can now reveal that he was an advisor to Marathon Oil during the recent $6 billion corporate dogfight. Guy Dempsey should be near the end of his two-year assignment in his law firm's London office. Laura and Charles Van Der Horst, who were married over two years ago, are moving to North Carolina. Charles will be engaged in some very promising virology research. Tarek Ashkar is an architect in New York.

Paul Yeuell has developed a fine acting career. He earned his MFA at Chapel Hill and is now a solid member of the acting company at the American Conservatory Theater in San Francisco. Grant Heidrich is also in the Bay area, running a venture capital firm. And Fred Bauer is a lawyer with Coudert Brothers in San Francisco, while Steve Vine works in international corporate law with Coudert Bros. in New York.

Christine and Cobber Eccles live in Baltimore. Cobber has made a name for himself renovating row houses in the downtown area, and has part of his own construction company, called Struver and Eccles. Timothy M. Smith writes that he has finally completed his graduate studies at the Yale Physics Department. He has not been involved in orbital laser weaponry.

Waller Taylor, his wife Carol, and two-year-old son Evan have been looking forward to the summer in Kenai, Alaska, where Waller is in private practice with the two-man law firm of Baldwin and Taylor. Summer is King Salmon season. Jim Shea has taken a leave of absence from his Baltimore law firm to work for the Maryland Attorney General. Judy and Bill Roth became the proud parents of a baby boy named Andrew. He was born on April 25, which is also Judy's birthday. Bill also reports that Chip Boynton has been busy selflessly devoting himself to many of our classmates' financial security. Ken Beilstein still trades precious metals from his midtown offices, but recently got married and moved to Connecticut. He honeymooned in the far east, visiting his wife Keiko's family in Japan.

We closed with some sad news. I recently learned that Don Weinberg, our Class Agent, died on April 27, 1982. He had been battling cancer for some time. His mother's address is: Mrs. Ilene Weinberg, 33 Sunhill Lane, Newton Center, MA 02159. Early plans are now in the works to establish a memorial fund at Andover in Don's name.

Hello Class of 1970:

There's lots of news so with no further ado; Wendy Underhill writes that she just received her Ph.D. in clinical psychology at the U. of Rhode Island and now has her own private practice. Debbie Prudden Lathrop writes that she is once again on the move and is now living in the Chicago area. She had her first child—Sarah—on 4/17/81 and adores motherhood. In her spare time she is doing some free-lance writing. Amy Baldwin Bratten is pregnant with her second child, due in August. She is still working three days a week in the hospital nursery as an R.N. Cathy Stone is now a section manager in charge of word processing at E. F. Hutton. Sue Cleveland Jacobson is still living in Gillette, WY and rearing two children. Beth Andrews and her husband are living in Massachusetts. Her husband David is currently attending Harvard Law School while Beth is working in her own ceramic studio. They are the parents of a one-year-old boy. Pam Mallen is living in Brooklyn and continues to teach special education to handicapped children. Leslie Breed is reported to still be at Houghton Mifflin in NYC. Margaret Cheney continues at the Washingtonian Magazine where she is the managing editor. Pauline Cerf is still living in NYC and she and her husband are the proud parents of a two year old. Chris Steele was recently promoted to product manager at Parker Brothers. She is in charge of the word games such as Boggle. Sandy Urie Thorpe reports that she and her husband, Ron, are expecting their first baby in June. Ron was recently hired to be the Dean of Faculty at the Kingswood-Oxford School in West Hartford, CT. Sandy will keep her job at PA and plans to commute to Hartford on the weekends. Penny Snelling Sullivan had her first child in February—a boy, Robert. Penny continues to practice law part time in Lebanon, PA. Marsha Lawton was married and she and her husband just had their first child. Tobi

Solomon is running her own business in dance and movement training for senior citizens. She and her husband are still living in Rhode Island. Carla Johnson married Bill Williamson and they are living in MA. Carla is in charge of Education Programs for an insurance company in Boston. Lisa Sweitzer is the co-host for the Public Affairs News Program on New Hampshire's Public Network. Tune in! Gay Luster is living in Connecticut and is working with her father in his tile business. She frequently travels to Europe, particularly Italy. That's it! Sorry for the rapid fire approach but we were asked to make the columns very concise and limited to the necessities this time.

Hope you all have a wonderful summer. Be talking to you in the fall!

My instructions for this column were to make our notes "lively" so I am introducing a new concept: "scratch and sniff" class notes. Scratch this paragraph to smell your old room, two nights before graduation. When fully recovered, read on.

Scratch and sniff "Big Apple." Doug Buxton writes, "Currently finishing my fourth and final year at Cornell Medical College in NYC. Hope to do a medical internship here next year, and will do my residency in ophthalmology at New York Eye and Ear Infirmary." Doug reports that Steve Sherrill is now an Associate at Paul, Wiers, Rifkin, "some small, unimportant law firm in New York." Steve hopes to represent Doug in his first big malpractice suit. Dave Mosher also works in New York, he writes, "teaching and doing graduate work at the Courant Institute of Mathematical Sciences, New York University." Sounds like powered to me. Scratch and sniff smog. Harry Chandler is "in L.A., married, and looking forward to our first child. I'm in charge of programming for a new pay TV network called SPOTLIGHT." He recently made contact with Dave Andrews, "starting rotation in med school at University of Colorado (Denver), and completing a Ph.D. by killing rats and doing neurological research."

Both of you that read this column may wonder why my address changes almost every time. I am in the Army, currently being trained as an Armored Cavalry Officer en route to Germany. While I may not be at the address you send correspondence to, you can be assured that it will be forwarded. Also, I need mail. If you will all be good and write, I promise to be frugal with your tax money. Do you know what mileage a tank gets? Two gallons per mile... write, or it will cost you.

"Well?" I said to Wife.

"Well what?" said Wife.

"What do you think of my friends?"

"I think they're nice."

"I don't believe it."

"Well," Wife added, "They are pretty weird. Especially Poliquin. Why on earth would you make that animal class agent? I mean, that's a very serious job."

"Bill Pruden needs a rest." It was my only excuse. "And since he couldn't make it to the Reunion personally—he likes his new teaching job too much to tear himself away—I botched the job." "I'm afraid most people will give money to Bruce just to keep him away." Wife shook her head sadly.

"So who else do you think is weird?"

"You, for starters. And Jimmy Armstrong, and Dick Green and Joe McDermott and Dick Keatinge and Jim Mayock and Bruce Wolfe." "Bruce isn't weird," I protested. "Just hyperactive."

"And Dick Green?"

"He's just, well, he's just Dick Green. Unique. A diamond of the finest water. I think I could listen to Dick tell stories all night, and I almost did."

"Was that before or after we listened to those hilarious tapes of John Rieger on National Public radio? The ones Mayock brought from California."

"During, I think."

Wife paused for a moment to gather her thoughts. After all, Mace Yampolsky had been at the Reunion, and Mace is enough to scatter anyone's thoughts. Mace had not been as well dressed as five years before, but he had learned how to play the piano, in between bar exams in California and Massachusetts. He gave a recital for Charlie Hirschler, Rick Berry and his wife Carla, and the Rich Remis. All five are now in the hospital.

Wife was speaking again. "You know, you really should apologize to Andy Russem. And to Bob Battles and Dick Keatinge as well. That was awful, sending them out into the cold night like that?"

"What can I say?" The weather had been cold. "The caterer told me they couldn't handle an overflow. Besides, they had steaks at Russem's."

"And I suppose you think there was such a good turn out because of your running the show."

"Of course," I answered modestly.

Wife harumphed, then asked who had come the farthest. She knew that several classmates had made the trip from California, Mark Brown and Mace among them, but the real distance and effort award went to Mike McDonnold, who came from Guantanamo Air Base in Cuba. He and I never did get to Angola, but it was a good story. Mike was coerced forth by Armstrong and Chris Haney, both of whom came down from Maine. They left the most important partner in their computer consulting business, Enno Becker, behind to guard the ship. Mr. Haney's lifetime wish was finally granted this Reunion, as he was awarded the badge of '72, and officially promoted out of the black hole of '73 into the light of '72. Well done, Chris.

And Andy Piper was there, with his wife, and Lebo Newman, I think. Lebo, was that you in the band? Doug Bigwood and Ed Regan came to take care of Poliquin, tossing him in the shower Saturday night (where he deserved to be.) Doug also gave me a hand with some thousands of pounds of ice—alumni are allowed to drink at Andover, which is great fun. Buzz Bissinger was there, reeking of success (he was Pulitzer runner-up and works for the Philly Inquirer). Matt MacIver, back from Nigeria, and Marcel Chardon, back from France, helped cosmopolitize the crowd. Rick and Mary McKallagat, of Worcester, did not. (Lo, Rick; feel the wrath of one whom you would not make honorary uncle to your children!)

"You always would hold a grudge," said Wife.

"Did you meet Brian Chagnot?" I asked by way of changing the subject. "I did. And it was very nice of him to bring such expensive Scotch."

"Did you see Bruce Kraus? With his charming wife, Mary Ann Mayo. And Peter Klosowicz? The basketball star who's engaged? Oh yes?"

"And Bill Boak and Mark Heller and the Andrew Thurmans and John Atwood and George Church and Morgan Flaherty and John MacNelly and Phil Moore and Bob Owen and John Keogh too?"

"I saw them all."

"Jim McVeety?" I said with growing excitement. "Did you see him?"

"Of course I saw him. And his wife Deb too. She's terrific."

"I owe him now," I answered. "Tit for tat, on to Minneapolis. You could always stop off in Chicago along the way to see Dan Burd in Law School. I'd rather see Alex deCholnoky, that bum, in New Haven. Let Dan come to me - we'll play baseball. He can even have the Terriers."

I sighed and glanced down at my typewriter. This was to be my last column, at least for five years. Dick Green wants my job in '87. Walter Maroney has it now. With any luck he'll be as objectionable as I was. His address at Law School will no doubt appear shortly; in the meantime write him care of PA. No doubt Frank Cregg will want an editorial voice, but such problems are Walter's now. Like trying to find out what happened to Bob Palladino, who showed up for the class picture on the old gym steps and was never seen again. Perhaps Maurice Mathis, that NYC public prosecutor, had him arrested. "Okay," said Wife; "that's enough. It's time you shut up." Ah yes, I muttered. "I'm entering a new stage of my life. Did I do good, Buzz, huh? You forgot Steve and Mimi Voorhees," said Wife.

I leave The Golden Thread, a story of insanity and success in the advertising world, starring Kevin Threadgold, to Walter.

Of those who returned for Reunion: Elly Mish, a costume curator at the Rye (NY)

Left: Mace Yampolsky hamming with Rick McKallagat's wife, Mary. Right: The Abbot Tea in Morton House. Liz Pajen, Meagan Schutte and K. T. Nourse.

Historical Society, is completing her Master's thesis for a degree in Museum Studies from Cooperstown, and dabbles in contradicting when she has a free moment. Liz Padjen is involved with the designs of banks, libraries and office buildings—to name a few of her recent projects at Padjen Architects, Topsfield, MA. Liz is now a member of the Andover Alumni Council. KT Nourse lives in Marblehead, MA and is a buyer and general manager for a chain of retail stores called Irresistables, located throughout New England and in Baltimore. Megan Schutte lives in San Francisco where she has been handling the internal marketing for a small brokerage firm, but is currently in the market looking for new employment. Sue Machie Talin is a biologist specializing in aquaculture, or more specifically, she is raising quahogs on Cape Cod. Her husband is a bookbinder. Lacy Gorham just moved East from Seattle where she had been director of a neighborhood development project. She will be attending MIT graduate school come fall with the goal of a Master's in Urban Studies. Sally Jo Gilbert remains in Seattle where she works for an architectural and engineering firm, lives with her sister and indulges in lots of running, dancing, swimming and teaching piano. With her new short hair, she was a picture of perkiness. Contrasting Sally Jo, Kathy Snowden appeared with long, long hair looking more like a model than a law student.

Joanie Lichtman married Stanley Corkin and the two have settled in Park Slope, Brooklyn. Joanie has her Master's from Hunter College and is a psychiatric nurse, while Stanley is a doctoral candidate at NYU in American Studies specializing in the cultural aspects. Both are bound for Europe this summer. Alice Sweeney is pregnant and expecting to give birth this fall. (An apology to her husband who graduated from Williams College and now works for the Pentagon. Last issue I had his alma mater wrong). Beth Urdang is in the midst of a divorce but looked quite chipper with her adorable two-year-old Nicole. Beth works part time in a bank. Joni Blaxter was managing a food cooperative in Philadelphia but she's given that up for a cross-country sojourn to find out what next she wishes to do with herself. Missy Baird has a family counseling practice in Florida and is halfway through her second Master's Degree at the University of Southern Florida. This one is in Business Management. She already has an MA in Rehabilitation Counseling.

Liz Hall is married and in her last year of vet school. Linda Rawson is getting married in August to Charles Harrison, PA '67, a textile artist, who works in a NYC art gallery. Linda is an attorney for Harper and Row publishers. Jennifer (Jeffie) Bloch hitched a ride to Reunion with Miss Ayer (remember—the Abbot nurse). Both live about an hour and a half north of Andover in New Hampshire. Jeffie sported 7-month-old Meada Wood, who slept blissfully through a showing of "All for Andover" and was the hit of the Morton House tea. Jeffie lives with Jim Wood, and his 8-year-old son, Sunny Boy. The family makes a living by homesteading with Jeffie doing some part-time waitressing and Jim picking apples seasonally. Jeffie has become quite an expert weaver—and survivalist, as their home has neither running water or electricity.

Joanne Mosca is executive editor for WEEI (CBS Radio) in Boston and is engaged to news anchorman Bill Watson from the same station. Friday evening we bumped into Brett Cook. She, looking as lovely as ever, was forsaking Reunion activities to travel with her mother, sister and friend to join the large anti-nuclear rally in Manchester. Sue Machie Talin also left Andover headed toward the NYC rally. Brett works at the Children's Museum in Boston.

A few remaining tidbits about some of those who did not return for our Tenth Reunion: Penny Stone works at REI Co-op in Washington State. Marna Parke Borgstrom was overseeing the dedication of a new Yale-New Haven Hospital building and was unable to make it to Andover. Gayle Biddle is chief mate on a research vessel based at Woods Hole, MA. Lila Willis has a Master's in Education, was recently certified as being bilingual, and teaches in California. Nancy Pinks is living in Jamaica Plain, MA, and is getting involved with the world of data processing.

And to wrap-up an update of the Coopers. Anna was one of three daughters brought to Reunion, and I have moved from heading up research and communications to being Finance Director on the Congressional Campaign of New York State Assemblyman Jon S. Fossel, who is challenging incumbent Richard L. Ottinger for his seat in the U.S. House of Representatives.

Elizabeth Coward Miller was married on January 1, 1982 to Gregory Kent Miller. Both of the Millers work for the United States Geological Survey at Woods Hole, MA. Congratulations! Ellen Hoitsma Schelberg is in Baltimore as last reported and wrote a book on Baltimore's history for children and Abbie Owen Reed did the illustrations. Abbie was married in September. Jenifer McLean Cooke attended Abbie's wedding and then her own three weeks later. Jenifer and George Cooke live in Andover. He works in Boston and she works as manager of the Information System and Alumni Records at PA.

Carolyn Naifeh has been working as a back-up singer at recording sessions. Carolyn also wrote a romance novel, to be published in early 1982. Carolyn, we can hardly wait to read it. Meg Sturges is married and living in Bath, ME. She has opened a thriving yarn and weaving shop called Penelope's Web, and is currently working on a masters in psychology. Loraine Utter is currently Museum Services Coordinator at the Thames Science Center in New London, CT. She is also studying the bagpipes.

From our friends on the West Coast... Robin Lothrop has been working on a second BA in biology before starting a masters. Robin had been a coach for the women's rowing teams at Harvard and MIT. She is studying at the University of California—Santa Cruz. Robin went to see Mardi Jane Hudson Waggoner in Seattle, who now has a beautiful daughter named Katherine. Susan Wheelwright completed her specialist degree in counseling/student personnel at the University of Florida, and is now at the University of California—Davis, where she is a resident director for two residence halls of 400 students.

Sara Leith is a graduate student in photography at UC-Berkeley. She is pursuing an MA in Visual Design. Molly Prescott is in San Francisco working as an editor/writer for the Public Affairs Department of the Kaiser-Permanente Medical Care Program. She works on the employee magazine, member newsletters, and other flyers and brochures. Edith Wilson Pope and her husband, Kevin, are also in Palo Alto, renovating a house at 301 Oxford St. She is working for Hewlett Packard in the research laboratory as a mechanical engineer while working on her Ph.D. from Stanford. She would welcome any visitors. Andrea Simonsen is working for a veterinarian in Great Barrington, MA. She is planning to go to medical school in 1982. Amy Rogers graduated from Boston University with an MS in print journalism and is now a reporter for the Lawrence Eagle-Tribune. She reports that Susan Macartney has a new baby, Brad, and that Laurie Woodworth Gilligan is expecting her second child, to keep her son, Tommy, company.

Connie Petty is working for Doremus & Co., an advertising and public relations firm, as an account executive. She loves New York City, although it's too cold in the winter. Connie, isn't it too cold everywhere in the winter? Anne Weisman was married in August '81 to Andy Hopeland, who is an attorney in Boston. Anne is finishing her third year at Harvard Law School and plans to clerk for a judge in Boston for a year. Anne reports seeing Betsy Fauver who works at the Shawmut National Bank, and Cathy Von Klemperer who works at the Fogg Museum. Elizabeth "Buzzy" Rollins is in Boston, working as a free-lance research consultant to a private fine arts collection, a rare book dealer, a publisher, and an art dealer. She sees Jane Cashin and Lori Goodman often and both of them are fine.

From the cold state of Michigan... Kim Whittemore Anderson saw Kathy D'Abre at Susan Costa's wedding last summer in Connecticut. I am now living in Farmington Hills, MI, (sort of a suburb of Detroit). I am still working for Ernst & Whinney, as I was when I was in Cincinnati. I had a lunch date scheduled with Kim in February but a blizzard cancelled the lunch. I am currently an Addison campaign volunteer and I urge all of you to try to give a contribution. I saw Colleen Flynn last summer in Cleveland, where she is a practicing attorney with the law firm of Benesch, Friedlander, Coplan and Aronoff.

Remember—we're all getting together in 1983!

It's been good fun hearing from quite a number of you since a chance remark cast me in the role of your secretary. Before I'm too thoroughly 'jazzed' this afternoon, therefore, I shall try to faithfully relay such varied news items as have come my way. Betsy Evans traded the good life out here for the management of a photographer's studio in N.Y.C. and is there "for keeps". She sees Caitlin Cofer in between Fiat commercials and George Ireland, who receives her "most transformed" nomination as our friend at Chase Manhattan. Alex Stille has returned to N.Y. and a career in Italian publishing after a stint on the continent. Faith Barnes also became a banker (Morgan Guaranty). Tom Herwitz will be gratified to learn that Jon Meath is (or was) working at CBS cable. Tom has forsaken the many charms of L.A. to practice communications law in D.C.

Libby Yoakum blazed to a 3-hour marathon. Sara Nelson is making new discoveries at Self magazine. Scott and Dru Coates "expect a baby in May." Congratulations.

Peter Currie was a pleasant surprise when I arrived at Stanford. He graduates this June (he hopes) and then will go back to Wall Street to tower over the investment banking community. Peter Anderson stays busy racing burros in Colorado. Another Foxcrofter, Tony Hobson, joined the bar this spring. Barbara Goyer-Rose (a newly-wed) is a cartographer in D.C. Family responsibilities (a new Michael Jr.) are sending Mike Corcoran off to Harvard B. School. Wow. Tom Mitchell became an associate with the Boston law firm of Warner and Stackpole (?) and joins Dave Wray, a broker at Tucker Anthony, on the links. Christopher G. forgot to mention what he was doing when he wrote to tell about his classmates. Katherine Keesling-Newland and her husband are protecting our nation's diplomatic interests in Bolivia. David James Cauty is practicing law in N. Myrtle Beach, SC, (truly a good time during spring break) and invites the alums to give him a call. Jon Drake is also enjoying the South (at Duke Law), but he and his wife Cathy miss the gypsy moths?

Now here's someone who really has it figured out: Lincoln Smith set up a software consulting firm (called Softtouch) in sunny San Diego and lets U. Cal. students do everything while he plays volleyball and contemplates marriage to "the world's greatest girl." Thomas Sulcer roots for Clemson in between marketing exams at U. Georgia.

Anne Randazzo and Mark Tay practice law in Lawrence, MA. Peter Kroon ponders his future plans at Harvard B. School. Elizabeth Philip says it's "deadly quiet" in Baltimore. Tom Boyle covers the mid-west from Chemical Bank's Chicago office. A self-described "low-life", Peter Clay, is a freshly minted M.B.A. from Stanford's Cambridge affiliate. Will Noel is a JD/MBA in Houston and the proud father of a baby girl. Doug Greef, a N.Y.C. Big-Eight accountant, is trying to beat Libby's marathon time. Phoebe Prescott is teaching in Togo and needs mail. Thomas T. Truaz joined the Mass. bar.

Shauna Doyle is teaching in Peking, but will be studying IR at Columbia U. this fall. Rani is in W. Germany doing research. Jeanne Nahill Kempthorne is now a lawyer and says that Amy Erlanger is working for an M.B.A. at Univer. Conn. Roemer McPhee is doing the same thing at Wharton after getting married. Michael Meyer wrote today that he is practicing law and "personal management of actors." Bob Street had lots of news to share. After M.I.T., he does aikido with his new wife, Denise, while "scorning big bucks" as a professor of computer science at Boston University.

Dave Loo, however, "gets big bucks" since M.I.T. as some sort of consulting engineer. Ted Nace studied econ. at Stanford and went back to North Dakota to "organize farmers on environmental issues." There, he saw Clifford Flamm, who was selling oil drilling equipment and now studies Slavic linguistics at Cornell. Ed Greer now has or is about to get a Ph.D. in chemistry at the Univ. of Wisconsin. Dr. Minne will be proud. Mark Harman is excited about specializing in gynecology at Tulane. Earl Kil- lian is out here designing computers at the Lawrence Livermore Lab. Marline Johnson is on a rig "somewhere off the coast of Texas." A great letter came from Steve Miller (of "Hand of Man" fame). He's now a professor of robots at Carnegie Mellon. Howard Carter is back in Connecticut doing photography after Princeton and a world tour. Ted Maynard studies law at N.Y.U. Joe Algrant is also in N.Y.C. working in publishing. Don Hayden and his wife are back in Indiana, where he works for Mead-Johnson. Fun-loving Greg Googer is in Atlanta working for Southern Bell and reports that he saw Reginald Jones who works for NOW in D.C. Nancy Peterson works for a trading company in Quincy, MA and plans to get an M.B.A. Margaret Downs, says T.H., does things for a congressman. Rob Miller wants to be a lawyer and Gary Lee is a reporter for Time. Tom Effinger is happily married and an engineer in South Carolina. Anthony Pietrafesa is a lawyer in New York State. Walter Granuth is at U. Va. B. School and will try investment banking at Shearson/Amex this summer. Len Moher is in his second year as Notre Dame's hockey coach and was recently visited by Dan Dilorati and Brian Burke, who he certifies to be "crazy as ever."

Well, I'm sorry if this seems more like a laundry list than a stirring tale, but I will strive for better in future attempts. After my wedding to another "world's greatest girl," I hope to run into many of you in New York this summer, when I shall be working at Morgan Guaranty.

As many of you must surely know, the Addison Gallery has launched a great fundraising campaign to complement its 50th birthday. To that end, a fund has been established in memory of Francesca Woodman, whose untimely death I reported in these notes last fall. Contributions to this fund would make a kind expression of sympathy, and simultaneously serve a fine cause. Please address inquiries and donations to Kyra Montagu, Campaign Director, Addison Gallery Campaign, PA, Andover 01810.

In other class news, I am forced to admit that response has been weak to say the very best: I suppose that the bacchanalian revel that was the reunion proved too drop for our work-a-day classmates! News that has trickled in, however, includes word from Chris Bensley, who produces multi-image slideshows for Envision Corporation, in Boston. He has seen Mark Shionis, who was working in some capacity for Saga International Holidays. Probably taking them. Chris also heard from Wally Row, the boy-wonder of Wall Street and working for ADVEST.

John Price has cornered the market on quarks out at Stanford, where he holds the Physics Department hostage in lieu of a master's degree. Also in school is Ned Elmer, a third-year student at Harvard Med. Talking big of his heavy schedule at the Mecca of Medicine (Mass. General), he looks anxiously forward to a career in surgery. Who wouldn't with the rising cost of medical care these days?

Also after the big buck available in a career in medicine, Gerry Cox reports spending much time at Block's Beach in LaJolla, CA. He sings praise of PA prof Tom Cone, who probably doesn't enjoy the salary Gerry will surely realize upon graduation from the joint MD-Ph.D. program at USC San Diego.

Marty Daniels is spending her senior year (it's about time, Marty) in university. Most of us went to college. But NO, Ms. Daniels is at London School of Economics, hence university. Excuse me. Jim Horowitz, the late bloomer we knew him to be at Andover, is also a wee bit late in finishing up his baccalaureate. He'll tidy up affairs at Yale, and hit the road mid wife and child for Italy. Jill Shaffer works for the television superstar Barbra Streisand, and spends her free time romping through the world of art and culture. Jill's world of art and culture almost certainly features many tea parties and a strict tofu diet. And lots of dance, preferably a la Merce Cunningham.

Thatcher Townsend has proven that there is life after Andover by proceeding forthrightly through his first two years of law school at Wake Forest. He had us down a few weeks ago for the biggest social event of the Winston-Salem season, the Tanglewood Steeplechase. The astute reader would ask to whom the we refers. Well, the cat is now out of the bag. I became engaged to Pam Eaton last spring; we will be married in Kennebunkport, ME on September 18.

Please drop a few measly lines to indicate what you all are up to!!

Grace C. Macomber

San Francisco, CA 94117

Festivities began at Samaritan House with the rains of forty days and forty nights breaking to welcome back reunions to a clear and cool weekend of gathering. At the generosity of our cocktail hosts, David and Sumida Cobb, we mingled trying to re-read ties and match names, catching Liz Laverack, recent Harvard graduate or Heather Little just finishing at Berkeley and working in San Francisco. Liz and Heather came by for Friday evening before heading down to the million person Anti-Nuclear Arms demonstration in New York. Nick Gutfreund was looking exceptionally well. He and Roger Gallagher and I discussed the problems of the artist trying to find justifiable economic support (besides the restaurant business). Roger is living outside of Boston working with pen and ink drawing.

In exodus up from New York came various carloads (20 people) in frightening mini-reunions. Fritz Thompson from law school in Missouri and Bob Brenner and Bill Yun from various corporate training institutes of investment remarkably arrived together before midnight tally wounding only one non-elevating toll gate that obstructed their path. Rich Riker drove a proverbial sedan bomb that safely transported us to "Charlie's Place" in Lawrence where Jerome Buttrick, born again New Yorker and potential architect was denied a kamikaze and informed that Charlie only serves real drinks. We were better off at Morse Hall Class Headquarters. The headquarters provided informal ground to hear that Bob Colombo is pursuing his artistic talent with ceramics, coupled with his entrepreneurial nature—he has plans to be our first independent business owner. Ed Frechette made an appearance before Dartmouth graduation. Ed and Ellen Carley confirmed rumors of their plans to wed—an alma mater couple! Andy McCarthy did a full circle and spent this year at the alma mater as a teaching fellow in English. Andover once again spins off its kin on adventure as Andy is headed for Morocco and Arabic efforts in language and labor.

Saturday afternoon's somewhat clearer heads and clearer weather inspired athletic activities down on the Infirmary Field (where is that?). Ann Lin Chung and Peter Ventre, soccer enthusiasts and Hunt Richardson and other softball fans were moved aside by two fifteen member ULTIMATE FRISBEE teams led by blonds and no shirts Lars Waldner and Bruce MacWilliams vs. the likes of Marty Koffman (hatless ever since Calvin Klein's hat phase) with a sprained ankle obtained while running one of many "collection keg r'n's." Harrison's boys and the PG team—Bob Crane, Gerry Harrington, John Vaughan and more arrived as spectators. The afternoon escaped with just one fatality—Bryan Durrett's injured ankle cured by a prescription from Isham to gargle with salt.

Previous to class athletic attempts we had taken class pictures, after the ALUMNI PARADE led us to the new gym and the annual meeting with Headmaster McNemar's first address! A major point in his speech was the breadth of our alumni, the places we've been and the experiences we can share—an opportunity that was appreciated again at Saturday night's "catered dinner" in the new gymnasium room.

I discovered the technocrat lads, talking about my working with schools integrating computers into their curriculum, with FOXBORO systems engineer Bob Mann, Chicago based engineer Jeremy Guralnick and Jay Hoey who works near me in the heart of "Silicon Valley." Even Tim Hudner when he gets time off from Marine war games is a programmer in MA.

There was Irish Coffee—gathering at the Inn preceding the dance with the '67's revival band—THE RISING STORM. More faces in the crowd... Sandy Jones is in medical school at Harvard, Charlotte Hartwell is working for North Country Regional Planning Council in North Conway, NH. Annette Porter trades gold in New York—when she talks, people listen! Debbie Segal came out from graduation at Santa Cruz along with Peter Crowley who's been making his way back ever since '77 through Egypt, Brazil and Northern California. And from Geneva, Switzerland, the return of Jamie Bentley, though "pre-grad" at Andover he appreciated the finer point of renewing experiences together, those who appreciate the finer experience of Geneva, please get in touch with me for Jamie's address.

I have many updated addresses and would appreciate more! Peter Engel is working on a farm in Topsfield, MA. Lucy Hanna—our wonderful treasurer and organizer!! is at Harvard Summer School and headed to Virginia to teach at Foxcroft. Sara MacLean is being corporate in New York but she doesn't wear a blazer or short hair. Rab Ker was wild on the dance floor in bright yellow pants, where he wiggles his hips now is anyone's best guess. Judy Sizer works in admissions at Yale. Lisa McGovern is a buyer for Fiorucci's, presently on a summer shopping tour in Europe, she will enter Harvard Law School this fall.

There were well over 80 of us back at one head count—those missing were missed... those who came, thanks! Carry on. I hope the feeling of strength in reuniting is with everyone as we see how enriching a network can be and what an interesting pool of creatures we are.

Life is rosy for Rick Moody as he spends his time in the beautiful resort town of Wilmington, NC working a four-day week, with plans to be married in the fall. Whether he has a designated spouse or not, remains to be seen! Perhaps we'll see at Reunions. We'll see Ned Andrews at Reunions as he promises to jet back on the Concorde from a spring travel in Scotland where he is pursuing the radish of his English and Philosophy Degree from UVM. Polly Hoppin hints at a more resolute life as is "learning to snuff out dreams of free evenings" while lobbying her altruistic, idealistic heart out with the Clean Water Action Project. She's thinking about the political future of the environment and influencing our future with her political involvement.

Martha Hill '78 reports seeing Duncan Campbell at Winter Park and Aspen this winter. He graduated from University of Colorado last December and was enjoying being a ski bum for awhile. She also says Ed Frechette is graduating from Dartmouth in June and will be marrying Ellen Carely this fall. They are planning to move to Chicago next winter.

Some of our classmates who are too involved won't be joining us for Reunions but do send their overseas best. Debbie Bedford is in West Germany as is Dunja Vehrenkamp "Too bad—no money!" Ying-Dat Ho is in Singapore and Todd Anderson writes that he is employed with Schlumberger oil exploration in Alexandria, Egypt!! Chris Cotton is not overseas, but over the river as he writes from Winnetka where he is living at home saving money to move to N.Y.C. Alas he is working in a show until July 15 so he won't be with us for what he says "should be a royal shindig" and so enough of this and on to that—That royal shindig reunion!!

Martha P. Hill
132 S. Greenbay Road
Lake Forest, IL 60045

Being a time of great transition in our lives, since most of us are graduating from college, I have the pleasure to announce the marriage of three of our classmates. On June 6, Ann Newhall will tie the knot with Jeff Walters. Dave Lancaster, Meg Carley, Martha Hill, and Jenny Newhall '83 will all be in the wedding, and numerous Andoverites will be attending. Mary (Putsy) Cahill is marrying Dave Warlick, a graduate student in Business Administration, in Rye Beach, NH in June. Terri Fusco is also getting married this summer. On behalf of the Class of 1978, congratulations to you all and best wishes for the future!

For those graduating this spring and not getting married, their plans are quite diverse. Larry Braverman is graduating from Columbia and will be attending law school this fall or the fall of '83. He has kept in touch with Sara Shepard who is presently at the University of West Virginia and planning a career in social work. Maureen Walsh is graduating from Smith this summer and will be a guide in Europe for Putney Travels. Lisa Tavenner also graduating from Smith will be a paralegal for a law firm in Boston starting this summer. Julian Chang after graduating from Yale will be spending the next two years in the People's Republic of China. Although it sounds exciting, we'll miss you next year at our Fifth Year Reunion! Liz Dunn also plans to be overseas next year. After spending the summer in New York, Liz will travel in Europe and hopes to settle in Italy working in the graphic design field. On the other hand, Esme Neely spent her senior fall living with a French family and studying at the Institut de Tauraine. She reports that she had a "fantastique" time. I would also like to congratulate Esme in being initiated into Sigma Delta Chi—the society for Professional Journalists—at Ohio Wesleyan.

Jim Spader '78 will be featured with stage and screen and TV star Frank Converse in a new dramatic TV series for NBC that will air next winter: "Second Family Tree". Jim plays Frank's son in the series. Jim says they share not only an alma mater, but the experience of having both flunked American History at Andover.

A number of classmates will be stationed in the Rockies next year. Caroline Sheahan graduates from University of Colorado and will be staying in Boulder this summer. After graduating from Dartmouth, Peter Saltsman will be working in geology out in Colorado. Betsy Ham also graduating from Dartmouth in June, will be heading out West for some backpacking. I too will be graduating from Dartmouth along with numerous other Andoverites. Unfortunately, I don't know what their plans are for next year. As for me, having won a silver medal in the Handicap Nationals this past winter, I am planning to train in hopes of making the Handicap Olympic Ski Team and race in Austria in 1984. Since I'm not sure where I will be training next year, please send all news of you and fellow classmates to my home address (note address above). Congratulations to those of you graduating this year! Please keep in touch and let us know what you are up to.

Gretchen Van Dusen
38 Pond St.
Marblehead, MA 01945

Hi. This is Sarah Moore, roving reporter, filling in for Gretchen Van Dusen. Like many of us at this time of the year, Gretchen is inundated with final exams and papers (of course, by the time you read this, those days will be but a memory...). Being a rookie at this sort of thing, I hope you'll bear with me if my news overlaps hers.

Many '79ers had a change of academic scenery this year. Florence, Italy was the setting this spring for Ruth Calhoun, who was studying economics. Also in Florence was Rebecca Eastman, who writes that her last summer was spent at a wilderness camp in Canada. She also spent some time with Kim ('78) and Mark ('80) Ellison.

In Paris, it is rumored that Margaret Shuwall and Tori Abbott tore up the town. Margaret, pretending to study at Sorbonne, managed to do a good deal of travelling throughout Europe. Tori called me last week from Paris to report that all goes well. She spent her year off from Harvard taking cooking classes there at Cordon Bleu, and working in a restaurant as well. As we talked for almost an hour, Tori will be in cognito until her after parents receive the phone bill. In October, Eliza Deery joined her to do some travelling. This winter, Eliza competed in the cross-country skiing nationals at Stowe, where she is said to have done quite well.

On this side of the Atlantic, Kyra Maes spent the fall semester at Trinity on exchange from Wheaton. Anne Cavett is now living at home in Louisville and going to school. I spent the fall at the University of Michigan, where I ran into a few familiar faces. A short chat with Bill Miles on a street corner in Ann Arbor confirmed that he enjoys attending school back on his home turf. Also at Michigan, Dave Barnett confided that he is on the 5767 year plan, holding on to the last bastions of college days for as long as possible.

In a letter that can only be re-created verbatim, Michael Moore writes "After a period of hedonistic fury followed by a contemplative existence encompassing two years, I am returning to academia this fall in Chicago." Speaking of hedonism, John Dabney reports "great women, weather, and whiskey" in Austin, TX where he has spent the last three months doing construction work and taking in a few concerts.

Meanwhile Michael Starratt is busy captaining the California lacrosse team for the second year in a row. His parents have just moved to Palm Beach, FL so from now on "vacations will be heaven". A Sigma Nu at Berkeley, Mike's wise dosing words were to "remind everyone to give generously and often." Also involved in Greek life here in the East is Beth DiRusso, who is president of her sorority at Cornell this year.

Doug Sun has spent the last two summers working and sailing, and will be going to China this summer to see "multitudes of relatives." He is masochistically pursuing a bio-engineering major at Boston University. A short hop down the road, Andrew Gilmour is studying comparative religion at Harvard and is actively involved with the Episcopal Church in Massachusetts. Jeremy Pirtle has migrated from the University of Oregon to the University of Vermont, where she is a geology major. John McCorvie is also there, and from what I can gather through cocktail party conversation, seems to enjoy it very much. He spent the fall in London. Steve Henry spent last summer in Germany, and is now back at Oberlin. Brad Holmes is president of Alpha Theta fraternity—one of the few coed frats at Dartmouth. Other house members include: Sean Wolford, Martha Hill '78 (vp last year), Jay Glynn '80, and Anne Hartwell '81.

Here at Amherst, our PA contingent thrives. As I write this, Hugh Silbaugh is furthering his crew career at the Dad Vail Regatta in Philadelphia, where he will doubtless run into a few of you. Chris Smith, who transferred here from Stanford last year, will spend the summer working for a photographer in Spain. All goes well with Fred Wasson. I saw him fall asleep in our sociology class today.

Rounding out this bunch, I do a good deal of choral singing, too little work, and a weekly radio show.

Finally, I now sympathize with Gretchen's plight. It's hard to write a column when there's very little news! Don't be shy. Send us your newspapers clippings, your latest gold record (autographed), your little brother, anything. We're not picky. A happy summer vacation to you all!

P.S. Is it true that John Andrews has become a Rastafarian?!!

Reflections: an Open Letter to the Alumni from the New Secretary of the Academy

by Joseph C. Mesics '53

April 21, 1778—Keel laid, mission stated. To no longer allow Youth to go neglected, but to capture them and learn them the Great End And Real Business Of Living.

What most of us know about the early success of this mission, we have learned only from what we have read and been told. Some of us have had the pleasure of observing the growth and success for close to 80 years. Some of us for only as long as 33.

Fall of 1949, some of us arrived at Boston North, by Boston and Maine. Perception of "preppies," Lord Fauntleroy's School. Wrong. Found grades in 70s not 90s; college freshmen on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons; and guys ready to fight, not switch. Found a faculty ready to hold us above water, if we cared enough to float, but ready to dunk us when we didn't.

Right from the start—tough, but caring; loyalties to What Was Right. The spirit of Samuel Phillips was there, no question!

Spring of 1953, another crew piped over the side, prepared for the real business of life as alumni.

From 1958 until 1982, 6 reunions. Same crew, super wives, lovely kids. Some Trustees, councilmen, committees, agents, secretaries—alumni involvement and loyalty. This place was always home, often with a changing beautiful look. New facilities, girls, 1978 refueling, but with the same traditions, loyal crews, and Spirit.

1982 alumni infiltration. Three return to OAR. One after a phone call, a long close look, the anchor weighed, a four-hundred mile sail north to Moses Stuart House docking, South Campus. New skipper, Don. Faculty caring, but tough; ready to . . . (the same). Where are our ports of call for the 80s? The administration/faculty are in the process of planning Andover's course for the 1980s, and beyond. We are not presumptuous to think that we can plan or implement alone. The strength lies in our vast and talented crews ready to help with expertise, encouragement, criticism, and financial support, all for the education of our Youth.

We here at the Office of Academy Resources stand prepared to support you in all your volunteer efforts. We want open lines of communication. We want to hear from you and work with you. We want to see you, no matter where; but most of all, we want to see you here and have the chance to welcome you so you never forget Andover is your home away . . .

The View From Bulfinch

There are worse ways to view the world than through a window of Bulfinch Hall. If that world is the microcosm of Phillips Academy, the view is just about ideal, since almost all the inmates pass our way daily. For this reason we intend to use this space periodically to comment on the quotidian trifles that for some of us may constitute memories, and perhaps even minor league social history.

Even in idyllic Phillips Academy the world is confusing. Nothing is what it should be. As we look out of our Bulfinch window at the Bell Tower (every time we see it above the trees, apparently plunked in the middle of the road as we approach Andover from the south on Route 28, a piece of us recalls our student days when each September it was our First Glimpse of Andover), we feel a draft: something is not right. The clock on the side facing us has no hands, as if time has stopped in Bulfinch. The resonant Westminster chimes that used to strike the quarter hours haven't sounded in years. Instead of telling us the time, the tower is now used by our Search and Rescue types for rappelling—creatures in helmet and harness traveling vertically with more grace than many of us manage in the more traditional horizontal mode.

Although we admire the modern ingenuity that finds new uses for older things, we miss the days when the Bell Tower told us the time. Church bells and tower bells have been Communal Sounds for centuries, but the Communal Sounds we all must listen to today are far different: modern music from open windows, trucks bellowing on Main Street, frequent sirens from emergency vehicles hastening to salvage life and property. We are not so foolish as to want to live in the past. We only suggest that there is something to be said for measuring out the brevity of our lives in the leisurely quarter hours of Westminster chimes, rather than in frenetic minutes and seconds suggested by the relentless beat of drums and by the urgency of sirens. The contrast is even visual as we contemplate the silent Bell Tower overlooking with detached dignity a boisterous Main Street.

There will be a happy ending to all this Bell Tower business. We are told by Jim Winn, our Superintendent of Maintenance who has spent his entire life on this campus and whose mind is a library of PA lore, that the Westminster chimes will shortly be restored. The oft-broken mechanism, repaired again and again by ingenious expedients (an old washing machine motor was the most recent and most humble example), will be replaced by a more dependable system. The hands on the clock, Jim tells us, are merely in storage, removed from the Tower so that our rappellers will not entangle their feet or ropes. And the carillon, which has been in good repair all along, will continue to be played by our talented musicians.

One of our young alumni stopped by the office recently to report on his life. A college senior about to graduate, he was interviewing with several large firms in hopes of a future in business, and he was depressed.

"Why so low?" we questioned.

"I've just received a letter of rejection from XYZ, the gigantic computer firm," he replied. In schoolmasterly fashion we hastened to counsel him that life is full of rejections in this best of all possible worlds, that disappointments purify, that King Lear had it worse, and so on.

"But I did not interview with XYZ. I didn't even apply for a job with them."

We had no answer. You know you are a loser when the giant computer firm seeks you out gratuitously to reject you.

And it is worth pondering what a queer world we live in when the big computer firm itself can't get things straight. Our only suggestion was that he give XYZ a dose of their own medicine by writing them a letter accepting the job at handsome salary, and asking then when he should begin. We don't think he was whimsical enough to take our advice.

In the Academy's mail room the other day we noticed on the table an extraordinary parcel that was being returned to the sender at PA. It was large, sloppily rewrapped after a customs inspection, stamped "Importation Prohibited and addressed to someone in the Soviet Union. Without even touching the parcel, we could see through the rips that it contained the two-volume compact edition of The Oxford English Dictionary. Although two or three of our Lower Middlers in Competence have an aversion to dictionaries, it never occurred to us that a dictionary like the OED may actually be subversive, and we wondered what must be like to live in a society that rejects what many people consider the finest product of collaborative literary scholarship the world has ever known.

A few hours later we opened the Boston Globe to read about the American Booksellers Association convention in Anaheim, where our own Tony Schulte '47, Executive Vice President at Random House, spoke about book-bannering and censorship in America. An exhibit at Anaheim listed Robinson Crusoe, The Age of Reason, King Lear, and The Odyssey among the victims. We were a little unnerved. As we said, it's a confusing world.

A Celebration of Patrick

by Denison Hatch

Someone once said that in all your years of schooling if you could count the truly great teachers on more than the fingers of one hand, you were damned lucky.

Patrick Morgan was a finger. Maybe two.

Patrick knew more things about more things than any other person I have ever met before or since. He was an artist-in-residence and teacher of art and art history for seventeen years at Andover. But, for him, art was the jumping off point. Fluent in French and German, Patrick was also a brilliant naturalist, gardener, and landscape architect; he would walk through a woods and identify every bush, tree, weed, wild flower, fern, and lichen, off-handedly giving you their Latin names, some history, and occasionally stopping to pull one apart to show you some special aspect of the stem, leaf, or root. He was also a splendid cook, mathematician, and walking encyclopedia of a dazzling array of subjects from Greek and Roman mythology, film, Paris in the 20s, Berlin in the 30s, poetry, music, and theatre. Once he had a brief fling at short story writing, and two stories, as well as being published, were anthologized in The Best Short Stories of the Year. On the squash court he was a demon, able to turn opponents half his age into limp, wet, flailing rag dolls while he coolly played the angles. He was also a master of small talk, repartee, a connoisseur of gossip, and the quintessential practitioner of laid back one-upmanship, so lethal it was akin to the mythical word that was so sharp, the victim didn't know he'd been sliced in half until he toppled over trying to tie his shoe.

My first memory of Pat Morgan was in the basement of the Addison Gallery where a group of skeptical Lower and Upper Middlers had gathered to learn about the history of art. Wiry thin, with a long John Carradine face, Patrick sauntered into the basement classroom wearing a dark rumpled shirt and dark tie, an old brown checked jacket, baggy dark trousers cut far too short and, astonishingly, a pair of screaming pink iridescent day-glo socks. As he began his first lecture, you immediately became aware of a soft, medium-pitched voice and an accent that was—well—affected as “perfectly” became “peufickly” and “over there” came out “ovah thay-uh.” But, along with his staggering erudition, he also laced his lectures with everything from the sexual exploits of Greek gods and goddesses to Cole Porter lyrics and the punch lines of bawdy stories. That first day, for example, he matter-of-factly referred to a slide on the screen as resembling Dorothy Parker's description of the Yale prom, whereupon two or three of us giggled aloud and—up in the front—Patrick chuckled at our reaction. After the class, I asked if I had heard the Dorothy Parker line correctly and he said, with obvious pleasure, “You weren't supposed to get that.”

How great a teacher was Patrick? Very. I remember a lecture he gave that first year which started with his drawing a square on the blackboard, and by adding a few, simple, logical lines, a frieze, a roof, and some columns, he created the facade of the Parthenon. From there he took off on a dizzying mental flight that included the Fibonacci progression of numbers, the phi rectangle, and how it all related to the physical proportions of man which, in turn, became the spiral of the snail shell. In under an hour he had wrapped up architecture, mathematics, nature, and Greek philosophy and handed it over to us in a neat ball. It was Patrick at his rabbit-out-of-the-hat best. And thirty years later—in the autumn of 1979—I, a D+ student who had never taken a philosophy course, had flunked geometry twice, and had no real knowledge or understanding of the natural world—stood in front of the Parthenon and was able to recreate the phi rectangle and the mathematics of the snail shell for three astonished traveling companions.

*"this garden . . . was

Over the next three years a number of us became regulars at Park House, which the Morgans—Pat and Maud—ran like a wide open after-hours club. There in the sparsely furnished living room with bare wood floors, Patrick would hold court, dispensing Coca Colas to the students while he smoked endless cigarettes and drifted in and out to refill an enormous pitcher of martinis. From a turntable and a collection of naked vacuum tubes and dials on the coffee table that was a primitive hi-fi set issued all manner of music, from Bach to Arthur Honegger to Kurt Weill, Marlene Dietrich, and Josephine Baker. Patrick would regale us with a seemingly endless stream of stories about Archie MacLeish and Sandy Calder and Pamplona with Hemingway the year following publication of The Sun Also Rises and his and Maud's subsequent honeymoon on the Hemingway yacht in the Caribbean on up to the present, which included the morning-after tale of a blast at Harvard where Dylan Thomas got roaring drunk and extemporized poetry to a cat giving birth to kittens amidst the coats piled on the bed. Patrick was also a sympathetic listener, guide, and mentor, encouraging and inspiring everyone he came in contact with to heights of achievements far beyond what we thought ourselves capable of. I remember once outlining the whacky idea of a bullfighting novel in which execution of the bull would be likened to Christ's crucifixion and would encompass the entire history of the bull in religion and culture from the palace of Knossos up to the present. "You might want to look up Apis," he said quietly. "Apis? What's Apis?" "You'll see." The novel never got written, but Patrick had sent me off on a long and fascinating exploration of the bull in ancient Egypt. I still have the notes somewhere.

The business of teaching . . . the minutiae of rules and faculty meetings . . . the incredible strains and pressures of running a perpetual party at Park House eventually took their toll. Patrick left Andover in the late 50s, living apart from Maud, wintering in New York and summering in La Malbaie, Canada, some 90 miles north of Quebec.

We saw a fair amount of each other in those years in New York—gallery hopping, going to films, having dinner once a week. One year he went to Vallauris, France, where he did a series of fine ceramics. He was painting on and off and had a few shows, but with no real success. He was a master of many trades, jack of none. Meanwhile, his former students Frank Stella and Carl Andre were climbing to the upper stratosphere of the art world, commanding five- and later six-figure sums for their work. His former student Jack Lemmon was garnering Academy Awards while Michael Chapman was becoming one of the industry's premier cinematographers and Hollis Frampton the guru of experimental cinema. It was around this time that Patrick showed a series of six paintings he had done some years previously on St. Francis of Assisi's sermon to the birds. They were on exhibit in the U.N. chapel in New York, and were exquisite—obviously done in a burst of creativity after a visit to Assisi and filled with wonderfully stylized birds and rich earth colors that were his trademark. It was at this time, too, he was separated from one lung and part of the other, a horrifying experience that slowed him way down, but bought him another twenty years.

Patrick moved to Portsmouth, New Hampshire, where he wintered, and continued to spend summers in La Malbaie where, at age 70, he fell in love with a piece of land and built a house and garden. He came to dinner with Hans Dorfer one night in 1977 and then we lost touch until I bought a house in Connecticut in 1980. I kept looking at an enormous blank curved wall and wondering what to fill it with when I remembered the St. Francis pictures. I wrote Patrick in New Hampshire with no reply for several months. Then came a letter in that familiar handwriting saying the mail had gotten screwed up . . . that he was delighted to hear from me . . . and, amazingly, that the St. Francis pictures were on loan at the little museum at La Malbaie, but they had never been sold and were still for sale. He quoted me the price and said I could have easy payment terms. We got color slides of the paintings, and my wife, Peggy, and I decided to go ahead with the purchase.

We drove up to Canada to pick up the paintings over the July 4, 1981, weekend. I had heard dire descriptions of Patrick's frail health, but he greeted us at his little house during a rainstorm and was just the same as always. We had a grand time catching up on old times, old friends, former students, travels, and gossip. He was sharp as ever, surrounded by books and paintings in this little French Canadian-style house he had designed and built himself. "How come you picked this spot?" I asked. "Oh, the land, the land!"

The weather cleared and we went outside and he led us through this truly extraordinary natural garden—a circular walking tour that included ferns and lichens and lilies and ladyslippers and rock gardens and thundering cascades that swooshed and swirled beneath the bridges he'd built over them. I am able to identify two flowers; one is a rose and the other one isn't. But Peggy is an accomplished gardener, and Patrick took her all through, describing the various plants and flowers with relish, and how fern experts would come through and freak out over this or that variety of fern growing so far north. I followed with the movie camera and took some footage which gave the flavor of the place. By the time we had gotten through it, I realized that this garden, "Cache-Cache"—named for the Tchelitchew painting at the Museum of Modern Art—was Patrick's masterpiece. And probably one of the most peculiar masterpieces in the history of the world, for where most artists create a work of art with an eye towards some form of permanence, all gardens, in the words of Pat's nephew, Frank Cabot, are ephemeral—each is tied to the lifetime of its creator. But this one was particularly vulnerable. An ordinary work of art is sold or set aside by the artist, who goes on to do other work; that original work presumably becomes more valuable the longer the artist neglects it. Patrick's garden, without constant attention, would be eaten alive by the forces of nature—an overgrown mess in a month. With each minute of neglect it loses value, until it entirely disappears into an indecipherable tangle of underbrush, leaving behind only the raging cascades as an echo.

Over a superb dinner he created of chicken in paper and creamed spinach, we talked about permanence on earth and what eternity had in store. He was quite ready for it, and was interested that I had not yet quite reached that point.

We picked up the St. Francis paintings at the local museum and brought them back to Connecticut, where the fit was so perfect that many people have asked whether we had the house designed around the pictures. Over the winter of '81 - '82 Patrick and I had a lively correspondence . . . and I'd call periodically to ask where to send the next check. He wanted to come down to New York in March, but the good friend he usually stayed with was ill and over the past year several of his oldest friends had died. So he decided to head back early to La Malbaie. I called him in Canada in May of '82 to ask if he was ensconced and if I should send the next check to him there. He was delighted with the call . . . said there had been a drought so the garden would be a long time in coming back . . . and tried to pin me down on a date to come up. I fired off the check with a note. A week later, Maud stopped by Stamford to look at the framing job of a collage she had done, spent an hour revving our engines about nuclear disarmament, and then sped off into a deluge.

A week later she called to say Pat had died. Mercifully it had not been a long drawn-out thing with his lungs which he was expecting and was not looking forward to; it was a heart attack and all over in three hours. He had wanted no funeral, no memorial. His only request was that his ashes be scattered around the garden and that a stone be carved with an echo from, of all people, Colette:

ICI gît Patrick Morgan et les débris d'un rêve.

Here lies Patrick Morgan and the shreds of a dream.

Faculty Outward Bound

by Gregory J. Wilkin

It is the penultimate morning of our Outward Bound course; we are on a shady pathway in the woods of Hurricane Island, Maine. A count-off has been called for by the day's "watch-captain," Andover Development Officer Christopher Shaw. History Teaching Fellow John Marella, second in the crescent we form, begins, heartily, as has been his wont.

"One!"

"Two."

"Wait. What am I—chopped liv-vah?" It is English Instructor Carole Braverman. First in the crescent we form, she is from certain angles justified as she looks around showing her amiable sense of perplexity and affront. The count-off stops and after a moment, just a moment, laughter erupts. All very quickly understand, including Carole.

Now believe it or not, my anecdote is really over. Even though I have been asked to tell about the five-day Outward Bound course twelve of us PA adults took this August, and even though those were days packed with a teeming brochure's worth of activities, lived out, it seems to me, to their photographic full, the brief interchange itself is closer to what really happened than any schedule of events, any list of what-we-now-looking-back-would-hope-to-sound-challenging locales and tasks. I would like you all to think that the countings-off that we so delightedly and so constantly indulged in, were constantly, dramatically necessary, that we were in some kind of admirable danger much of the time. No such ambiguous luck. No, what we were counting off for seems now to matter less than how we did it—with what variable anticipation, vigor, weariness, wariness, congratulation, self-parody, parody, bafflement, or simple joy in each other's voices.

In this particular case it matters little, I think, that we were making ready, in our way, to capsize our 30-foot ketch-rigged pulling boat, and that we were calling out our "watch numbers" rather than our momentary line-up numbers as Carole briefly had believed. What we were living out in her words and our laughter, I think, were three common phases of the inner Outward Bound experiences: 1) "What's going on here?" 2) "What am I, anyway?" and 3) "Ahaa" or "We understand." As we know from the study of literary romances like Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, these might be the only moments that give human adventure value.

Adventure is what Outward Bound delivers: something we can define for the moment as the quick arrival of new, compelling, inescapable information. Now if the Swedish adventurer Stefansson is right in calling an adventure "a sign of incompetence," the twelve of us were all in need of it: like most American adults we had spent much of our previous time trying to keep doing what we know how to do, letting new books slowly into our curricula, as if we were trying to go from corn oil to olive oil, imperceptibly, in our favorite recipe. Outward Bound, even only five days of it, for many of us, what with its rapelling, its rock-climbing, its Burma-ladders, its call to oars in bouncy seas in a very bounceable boat, its requiring us to plunge like maniacs into surprisingly distant waters, its sometime shocking readiness to say "Okay, now YOU take over,"—presents us systematically with a whole new reading list, not just one new book slowly to be worked in, not just one new ingredient for the recipe, but, say, a freshly spitted boar carried in by natives.

The natives who did this for us were our watch leaders, Daniel ("Dan'l") Robertshaw and Holly Miller, both of whom I found steady, watchful, ironic, understanding, and physically well-roughened, one especially good at being demanding, the other especially good at being appreciative, both of them true virtuosi of outdoor life.

That, of course, was what most of us tried very hard during those five days to begin to become. Others of us, to my relief, were near-virtuosi already, and like Holly and Dan'l, sensitive, gentle educators in such matters. When Al Coons showed me something he had learned in his days as a Search and Rescue Instructor at Andover, or when Pete Washburn or Cilla Bellizia gave me the benefit of their many times at sea, I learned doubly 1) what to do and 2) how to teach that. In fact, maybe triply: for I learned 3) what kind of people I was with.

Drying out sleeping bags

I don't rightly know which learning process I now prize more. All of us learned in those three ways, I'd wager. For Outward Bound, even in the five-day version, is various enough to present even accomplished campers, hikers, or sailors with a frontier of some kind or another. Whether it was the moment before one of our morning leaps, or a moment leaning out over the edge of the quarry cliffs, or a moment leaning out over the side of Pulling Boat Number 4, we all had time when anxiety was available and composure or humor was a triumph.

Just how much anxiety was available became apparent one morning when after a bit of wake-up time we realized that the night before, prompted by someone calling out in a dream, about eight of us had instantly begun to shout along, setting up a rather prolonged roar of animal concern, loud, until Cilla Bellizia, who was keeping one of her unintended, unsolicited vigils, managed to soothe us with her calm murmuring of "It's all right now; it was just someone's dream." I for one, as soon as I came to my alleged senses, decided that it had to have been Dan'l, on a little mission of stress, pretending to be a bear or an avalanche or something. What remains with me, however, is the eerie sense of oneness, of "primal sympathy, which having been must ever be," a memory of having felt so much intuitive trust in a group of companions that I would join them in calling out wordlessly such a fierce dissuasion into the night.

What I have just made public is, of course, a somewhat intimate and mysterious event; so it occurs to me that I shouldn't tell you everything. I recall that the intermediaries in this anonymously donated course, Josh Miner (a founder of the program) and Pete McKee, who both briefed us in Evans Hall a few weeks before we left, were brief. Part of what got to be known as "the experience" was from the start a kind of blithe unknowledgeability that Josh, Pete, and others in the know (like the many alums of a longer trip made ten years ago) did their impish best to keep intact. It would be good to face the unknown, we were told, and told with the kind of eagerness that made me suspect that what was going to be unknown to us was at least known somewhere. Outward Bound seems to include the unknown very knowingly; in the most exuberant of events there was clear evidence of a vivid forethoughtfulness: unnoticed scuba divers appearing suddenly to offer aid if needed (or to add a little stress if that too were needed!), Bonine tablets appearing (sometimes) in a nick of time. But all the same, no matter how much I might tell you, and no matter how much control might ever be apparent, there will always be enough of the unknown in Outward Bound to shout at in the night. So I won't hesitate to give you a few more specific memories. One of them has already helped me in a number of other situations.

It was on the Ropes Course once we reached Hurricane Island. One of our number was on "The Stairway to the Stars," and not moving, just struggling to regain balance. The Stairway to the Stars is a long tree-trunk, inclined upward, connecting two still living trees; like most tree trunks in such a situation, it gets narrower as you near the top, and tends very readily to wobble and to sway. It is a well-conceived Ropes Course problem, I realize, as does our climber, in retrospect. One has nothing to hold on to, although a safety line trails behind running along a guy-wire. This catches and suspends you, I can now avouch, in the case of a fall, or, as our climber can also avouch, it can be caught hold of through frustration or doubt in the case of a lesser loss of balance. Picture this going on, and picture old Dan'l appearing out of nowhere with the cheery, never-say-die words: "C'mon now, X, you didn't come all this way to hold on to the safety line! When are you going to be in this kind of mess again?"

I've thought of this often since the trip; a way to meet crises is not to hope you've seen it before or will, having gotten through it, see it again and be able to do what you did, but to appreciate it, almost to savor it, and to realize that you may never see its like. It is the attitude of the smiling rock-climber, almost in love with the rocks he is trying to climb. It may be the attitude of the server, down 30-40 and hoping for a good return, or that of a teacher almost hoping that a few students for the moment won't think they completely understand.

It is to face a moment in life and, like Emerson, be "glad to the brim of fear." For one thing, such an attitude helps you keep your head, and pay attention to the distinguishing possibilities of what's going on.

Let me share one more moment from the Ropes Course. At the end one takes a long trip into the ground on what is called in the Army, with an unusually intuitive accuracy, the Death Slide. Others through the history of death slide have bellowed out something macho, or shrieked their favorite flavors of ice cream, or called out what trivial modern thing they would do when they first got home. Britta McNemar's words for the Death Slide I will not divulge, but they were real words, and words of love.

I hope the words of this short, insufficient report will be considered such by the members of Nor Seabi Watch: John Marella, Sara Gates, Pete Washburn, Chris Shaw, Cilla Bellizia, Carole Braverman, Al Coons, Britta McNemar, Don McNemar, Jonathan Marlowe, Paula Drewniany, Holly Miller, and Dan'l Robertshaw.

Teaching Economics: an Andover Conference

by Thomas T. Lyons and Jeanne Amster

On a cold, snowy December day in 1981 Peter G. Kohler '52, President of Kohler-General, met with Tom Lyons, Chairman of the History/Social Sciences Department, and Economics Instructor Jeanne Amster in Headmaster Donald McNemar's Office. The conversation produced two questions and a call for a conference to find answers:

1. What should be the goals of a 12th grade economics course for college-bound students?
2. What do teachers see as the most important needs for teaching materials in such an economics course?

Mr. Kohler generously supported this venture.

Six months later, on three perfect late summer days, from August 29 to September 2, 1982, sixteen people, from widely divergent backgrounds, met to answer these two questions. They worked morning, noon, and night in Nathan Hale House and the Log Cabin. These conferees stated positions vigorously and clearly. They listened. And they achieved unanimity on all aspects of their report.

On the first day the group learned that approximately twenty-four states require economics for a high school diploma; economics was the number one major for graduates from Harvard, University of Massachusetts, Smith, and Middlebury last June. Thanks to the strong and long-term support of O. J. Anderson '46, former Executive Vice-President of Alliance Capitol Management Corporation and now an economics teacher at St. Edward's School in Florida, Phillips Academy now offers Economics. PA's senior course, Introduction to Economics, taught by Jeanne Amster, has the largest sign-up of any elective in the department. Although over one hundred students signed up for the course, we will be able to accommodate only forty this year. We don't come close to meeting the student demand.

The conferees included six experienced public and private secondary school teachers of economics, two university economics professors, two corporate leaders, a journalist, a unionist, a government official, and some thoughtful laymen. The secondary school people kept our focus on the students and the need for materials. As practitioners they were knowledgeable about teaching goals, materials, strategies, and what works in a class. The two university people provided expertise in the study of economics, materials available, and the expectations of colleges. The journalist saw the economic world as it is and his experience as a reporter of that world added an additional note of realism. The corporate and union officials presented their interests, their day by day concerns, and their visions of the economy "as it should be." An elected official represented governments' roles in the economy. The thoughtful laymen served as skeptics with scruples and tried to make the conferees conscious of spoken and unspoken assumptions and to challenge the conventional. On two evenings, Professors Peter Temin of MIT and Richard Edwards of University of Massachusetts, Amherst, presented alternative models for a high school economics course.

The conference began by addressing some old and familiar questions: how much time and emphasis to give to theory, how much to practical application; how to talk about values and yet stay objective. Our students, the groups decided, should be able by course's end to read the newspapers intelligently and have some grasp of economic events. At the same time they should be familiar with the distinctive way that economists think; they should "know their marginals." They should be aware of the value judgments implicit in economic policies, of how such policies create winners and losers. By the end of a high school course, students should be able to analyze various economic problems and independently reach their own conclusions. As to materials and content, there was agreement that much more has been written than needs to be read: the difficulty is to choose. There is need for a good 12th grade text, a book of readings, and computer software to enable students to manipulate the variables in a macroeconomic model. These materials should be somewhere between what seem to be the two current choices of Harvard and Dick-and-Jane.

As to goals the conferees established a list of "shoulds." First, they agreed that economic forces seem to dominate our lives. Many feel confused and powerless when confronted by economic issues. Economic education should demystify the economy and economic analysis and empower individuals to play an active and responsible role in the development of economic policy and institutions.

Second, students should recognize economics as a body of theory relevant to their lives. They should be able to use a basic economic vocabulary and set of tools. The analytic core in microeconomics should include scarcity, supply and demand, elasticity, marginal analysis, and allocation and distribution. In macroeconomics, students should be able to understand terms such as GNP, unemployment, and inflation; the effects of individuals, groups, and governments on unemployment and inflation rates and on the rate of capital formation; and the various ways governments affect the economy through monetary, fiscal, and regulatory policies and the trade-offs involved in choosing among policies.

Third, students should know that economic activity is a social process, not a set of immutable technical relations. They should be acquainted with institutions—such as private property, profit-making businesses, workers' organizations, and governments—which affect behavior in the global economy. Some study of economic history and comparative economics systems should be an integral part of the course. Students should understand that an individual's perceptions of economic problems usually depend upon the structure of the economy and his or her position within it.

Fourth, students should be able to look at current economic events, apply theory, and evaluate policies in terms of their often conflicting goals, their interrelatedness and their likely secondary consequences. Students, as thoughtful readers of the economic news, should draw on their own experiences and better understand economic principles and the implications of economic policies.

Finally, the conferees agreed that students should be aware of the value judgment implicit in policy alternatives and should be made to confront their own assumptions and articulate their own values. That concluded the list of shoulds.

The conferees shared teaching materials from a surprisingly wide range of sources. These materials came from the United States Budget, the Joint Council on Economic Education, The Federationist, the Data Book of the Social Science Education Consortium, films, T.V. programs, and the Minneapolis Federal Reserve Bank's simulation games. Everyone seems to want to get in on economics education. The conferees agreed that when a teacher uses "sponsored" materials produced by economic interest or advocacy groups, teachers and students should be alert for persuasive arguments, omissions and distortions of fact, or more subtle kinds of bias. A teacher's decision to use sponsored materials implies an obligation to insure balance. Students may learn more, however, from a critical analysis of a one-sided presentation than from a bias-free, but sterile, text.

The conferees were an unusual group—a most civil collection of people. All those diverse backgrounds; yet unanimity on goals in three days. In 1982. The only mishaps were the unexpected arrival at Logan Airport of the Tuesday night speaker on Monday afternoon (he discovered his error, went home, and returned in good humor and good form the next day) and Frederick B. Kriebel's '59, plane trouble that allowed him to move no further south from Montreal than Burlington, Vermont.

Now phase two of the Andover Economics Project will include assembling a book of readings, creating a text, and developing the computer software.

"If all the earth were paper . . ."

John Lyly, 1554-1606

by Thomas J. Regan

"It's a laundry for books!" says the Phillips Academy Lower Middler as he looks in the ground floor window of Abbot Hall. "They are doing God's work," says the bibliophile historian with such fervor that he is unconscious of metaphor or hyperbole. They are both talking about the Northeast Document Conservation Center, an independent, nonprofit organization which occupies the former art gallery and science laboratories of Abbot Hall on the Abbot campus. Their mission: to help libraries and other institutions save their rare paper documents from damage or destruction.

Less than ten years old, the NEDCC would probably not exist at all if it had not been for major "advances" in paper manufacturing during the Industrial Revolution: the use of chlorine to bleach dirty rags for paper-making, the use of alum to reduce paper absorbency, and—worst of all—the shift from comparatively acid-free rag paper to the much cheaper wood pulp paper in the 1860s. Wood pulp contains abundant lignin, a cellulose-like organic substance that eventually ruins the very paper it is part of by making the paper dark and brittle. With age, both alum and chlorine turn to acids which have the same effect: the paper becomes yellow and brittle. We all see the results in old newspapers, more sadly in paperbacks we bought ten years ago, and disastrously and heartbreakingly in the yellowed edges of many clothbound books on our own shelves. Today about 80% of our books are still printed on wood pulp paper instead of on acid-free paper, so that every great library in the world must cope with the probability that a majority of its books have a terminal disease. The New York Public Library, for example, estimates that more than half its books are unusable right now.

And four out of every five new books only increase drastically the number of volumes that will require conservation treatment soon. By "soon" is meant ten to twenty years, not a century from now.

There are other problems besides acidic paper. Pollutants like sulfur dioxide pervade our atmosphere—witness the effect of acid rain on the flora and fauna of the eastern portion of our country. Temperature and humidity fluctuate between obvious extremes in winter and summer in libraries without air-conditioning. Mold thrives in damp books; insects invade any books, and must be exterminated in a special fumigation chamber. Well-intentioned but ironically harmful conservation attempts in the past have scarred our books: pressure sensitive tapes for tears, adhesives like rubber cement for pictures. Every house counselor at Phillips Academy knows what the painters in our Office of Physical Plant know, that pressure sensitive tapes on dormitory walls leave greasy scars that are well nigh permanent. If plaster and cinder block are vulnerable, what chance does fragile paper stand?

And so the need for paper conservation, not just for books, newspapers, and periodicals, but also for other paper artifacts like maps, manuscripts, photographs, art on paper, architectural drawings, ledgers, town records.

In 1973, aware that only a few of the wealthiest libraries in the country could establish their own in-house conservation departments, the New England Library Board established the regional New England Document Conservation Center, to be shared by all nonprofit institutions in the region as their needs arose. The momentum was due to the efforts of Rockwell Potter, Walter Brahm, and George Cunha, who became first Director of the NEDCC and who had recently finished co-authoring with his wife Dorothy) Conservation of Library Materials, a Manual and Bibliography on the Care, Repair and Restoration of Library Materials—two volumes that are treasured by booklovers as well as conservators. Starting in the basement of the Merrimack Valley Textile Museum in North Andover, the Center in 1978 climbed out of the basement into Abbot Hall on our own campus. By 1980 the Center was incorporated as a separate, nonprofit organization, no longer an agency of the New England Library Board, and changed its name from New England to Northeast Document Conservation Center in order to indicate the inclusion of New York and New Jersey in its area. Despite the suggestion from the name that each region of our country is served by a comparable conservation center, the NEDCC remains unique. There are other conservation laboratories, but they are structured differently (usually open to members only), they focus primarily on fine art rather than on paper documents, and they are not linked in any formal way. As current Director Ann Russell writes in The American Archivist, "An advantage of NEDCC's structure is that it opens a potential market of literally thousands of institutions which may use the Center's services."

Thanks to funding from various sources, the services of the NEDCC are available to nonprofit organizations in the area at cost or less. For example, the first day of emergency assistance during a disaster is provided absolutely free, and one day is frequently sufficient to get the institution back on its feet. Nonprofit organizations outside the area are charged just a shade more than cost, and private individuals and profit-making organizations pay full fees in a modest effort to make the Center self-supporting.

The in-house services provided by the NEDCC are threefold: paper conservation, hand bookbinding, and photoduplication. The Paper Conservation Workshop resembles an eighteenth century artisan's shop with twentieth century chemicals and tools added. There are sinks and trays of monumental proportions to accommodate such documents as wall maps and posters. There is an Israeli-manufactured leaf-caster, a machine which fills in the holes and missing corners of damaged paper documents, with the new paper matching the old perfectly—one of only six such machines currently in existence. Above the workbenches are walls of brushes, rollers, cutters, chemicals. If a valuable book is to be saved from destruction, it is completely disassembled, and then every page is washed of impurities by submersion in water (the laundry process witnessed by our Lower Middler in the opening sentence), deacidified, mended, re sewn, and rebound by hand into a durable, handsome artifact. Every step involves the skill of the artisan, even the leafcaster: the amount of paper pulp and the shade of the paper must be determined by the conservator. Conservation is a costly and complex process, overseen by Mary Todd Glaser, Senior Conservator and the first graduate of the conservation program at NYU.

A tour through the Paper Conservation Workshop reveals an eclectic assembly of art and documents. Bucky Weaver is cleaning and preserving a surveyor's map of some private property in Concord Massachusetts, drawn by the surveyor himself, Henry David Thoreau. Mimi Batchelder is preparing a large Currier and Ives lithograph for reproduction on next year's Travelers Insurance Companies calendar. For every object worked on, the Center takes a set of before-and-after color slides; Mimi holds up the "before" slide of the Currier and Ives to show us the tattered corners and the two deep brown vertical stains from the wooden slats that had pressed against the back of the picture for a century. The almost finished product lies before us on the table, its corners invisibly mended, the brown stains completely removed.

On an adjacent table are pictures that Mimi has recently finished cleaning: turn-of-the-century lithographs by Joseph Pennell showing the various stages of construction of the Panama Canal, property of the Panama Canal Commission.

Having recently treated a water color by Winslow Homer and a charcoal drawing by John Singer Sargent, Thomas ("TK") McClintock labors over the four large folding panels which make up General Pershing's attack map for the American Expeditionary Forces in World War I, a map studded with about fifteen hundred pins and labels of assorted colors. In order to treat the map without rewriting history, TK first has to become a researcher. He has been fortunate enough to interview an aide to General Pershing who could explain the significance of the different colors of the pins and tags. By the time this article is printed, the map will be on display at West Point.

At yet another table Andrea Pitsch is treating plans for furniture designed by Frank Lloyd Wright. The plans have to be removed from acidic cardboard and cleaned of destructive adhesive, then washed, deacidified, mended, and encapsulated in polyester film—a clear plastic enclosure, an alternative to lamination, which would be very difficult to remove in the future.

With all these documents under one roof, it is little wonder that the NEDCC is protected by the most modern security system available.

Upstairs in the Book Bindery, Book Conservator Sherelyn Ogden supervises a staff of craftsmen who work with linen thread, needles, leather, fabrics, acid-free binder's board and papers, oils, chemicals, hand tools, and presses that would be the envy of the monks in a medieval scriptorium. Besides rebinding books that have been disbound, the staff treat and preserve historically valuable bindings. The goal is to preserve as much of the individual object as possible; it is an artifact from the past whose integrity must be honored and retained. On this day Sherelyn is skillfully rebacking an early edition of Ovid.

The third department is Photoduplication, where archives, manuscripts, photographs, and other materials of enduring value are reproduced for posterity. This includes a special microfilming program which is able to accommodate documents that usually photograph poorly because of poor contrast between text and background, a service that commercial microfilming firms are not equipped to offer. Collections of old photographic negatives, especially those on a nitrate base which deteriorate and are flammable, are copied onto modern safety film. Like the other two workshops in the Center, this one is filled with the finest equipment. Coordinator of the Microfilm Department Valerie Harper explains that the two current projects are microfilming for the Montgomery Ward company their catalogs from 1865 to the present, and microfilming the Salem Witchcraft Papers for the Essex Institute of Salem, Massachusetts. Our history has diverse roots.

Of the outside services provided by the NEDCC, the Disaster Assistance Program is of paramount importance to librarians and museum directors. In early June of 1982 southern New England was hit by several days of torrential rains which flooded basements and seeped through roofs of dozens of institutions. The NEDCC disaster log book for June 7 and 8 looks like the beginning of a cultural gazetteer for New England, including libraries, museums, town hall archives, historical societies, and valuable private collections. In Andover in August of 1981, when the Oliver Wendell Holmes Library roof was being replaced, similar rains poured through the canvas taraulins overhead and damaged thousands of volumes. Within an hour of being called, Field Service Director Mildred O'Connell was on hand to offer the free first-day disaster assistance, mobilizing mops, people, trucks, fans, and freezers so that our total loss was comparatively modest.

The second outside mission of the NEDCC is preventive medicine. Thanks to a three-year grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities, the Center offers a consultation service to small and middle-sized area institutions at a fee of only $150. The consultation involves close inspection of the facilities, followed by a detailed report of fifteen to twenty pages of recommendations for the conservation and safety of the material. The report focuses especially on how environmental conditions can be improved, what is wrong with the storage and handling of the collection, and what items require immediate or long range conservation treatment. The fortunate institutions selected for such surveys include the libraries or archives of Middlebury College, Connecticut College, Williams College, Wheaton College, and our own Oliver Wendell Holmes Library, among forty others.

What will happen when the NEH grant expires in 1983 is a matter of considerable concern to the NEDCC and its friends. With budgets as restricted as they are, most institutions require the incentive of inexpensive surveys like these to convince the administration of the need for conservation before their collections are beyond repair. A third outside service provided by the Center is a broad educational program, including lectures and workshops throughout the nation. Staff members, for instance, currently teach a course in conservation at Simmons College Graduate School of Library and Information Science and offer internships to advanced students in conservation.

The staff of twenty-five at the NEDCC are a rare lot: art historians, booklovers, artisans, innovators, and chemists all at once, who love their work and have the satisfaction of knowing that they are performing a scarce but necessary service for the preservation of our cultural heritage.

One area of Abbot Hall unused by the NEDCC is the Abbot Chapel on the top floor. That handsome room itself is being properly preserved, a precious memento of Abbot Academy as so many alumnae remember it. The bibliophile historian we mentioned in our first paragraph who thinks that the people at the Conservation Center "are doing God's work" may feel a particular satisfaction as he contemplates the Abbot Chapel physically presiding over dedicated people who labor with their hands and ingenuity for modest financial rewards. Whether missionaries, artisans, or scientists, they are good neighbors. It is difficult to conceive of a more appropriate landlord-tenant relationship than that between these two nonprofit institutions, PA and NEDCC. Their presence on our campus is a source of considerable pride to the entire community.

The Summer

Last August twelve PA faculty embarked on a five-day course in the Hurricane Island Outward Bound program. Though some other New England headmasters spent August sailing in luxury, Don and Britta McNemar were part of our more Spartan group, and spent their fourteenth wedding anniversary coping with aching muscles, mosquitoes, and mal de mer. For a personal reflection on that venture, see the article elsewhere in this issue by Greg Wilkin.

The PA Summer Session now fills every bed in the school. Director Jim Bunnell allows that we are in the enviable dilemma of not being able to introduce a new program without sacrificing an older one that is already successful. Besides the standard Summer Session curriculum, we continued the intensive program in Music, inaugurated an intensive Studio Art program, and hosted the first Andover-Dartmouth Teacher's Institute in Mathematics, funded for two years by the Ford Foundation. Under that program thirty junior and senior high school teachers from across the nation studied with three PA math teachers and visiting math professors from Dartmouth.

The summer also provided the time for the History and Social Sciences Department to sponsor a conference on teaching Economics, and we recommend the article by Tom Lyons and Jeanne Amster for your perusal. Work on Graves Hall continues apace, with the Music Department expecting to move back in for the Winter Term, and formal dedication planned for April. PA has also established a Child Care Center in the library area of Draper Hall on the Abbot campus—a self-supporting institution that is of immense help to our own staff and to the neighbors who share in its use. Opening took place in mid-October.

School Opening

The Fall Term opened with 1217 students, 455 of whom are new. There are twenty new faculty members and nine Teaching Fellows. For the second year in a row Headmaster McNemar spoke with and shook the hand of every new student as part of the orientation program.

The first school meeting of the year has given way to Convocation, a more formal affair the night before first day of classes. The entire Senior Class and faculty were invited to the McNemars' garden after dinner for dessert, and then they marched formally to the Chapel, where the rest of the community awaited them and where the Academy orchestra performed with that professional skill that we are beginning to take for granted.

Early Fall

PA continues to offer its students a wealth of educational and cultural opportunities outside the classroom. The Fall Term had barely begun when the Franz Liszt Chamber Choir from Budapest, Hungary, offered a free concert in the Chapel, with an outstanding program of music by such composers as Bartok, di Lasso, Kodaly, and Hindemith. The Music Department offered weekly chamber music concerts, usually in the Addison Gallery on Sunday afternoons. On 6 and 7 October the Theatre Department offered two lectures by British Shakespearean scholar Ronald Watkins, a return engagement after his equally successful appearance here one year ago. His 1982 lectures included "Shakespeare in Rehearsal" and

Red Roses for Miss Hearsey

It was a joyous occasion for Marguerite Capen Hearsey, 14th Principal of Abbot Academy, when a group of her former students and former faculty members gathered on 5 August at the Wellesley College Club to celebrate her 90th birthday. The sponsors and hostesses of the party were Elizabeth Parker Powell '56, Eleanor Tucker, Barbara Humes Euston, Ricki Hinrichsen Cain Stambaugh '44, and Mary Dooley Bragg '36.

Besides the alumnae who attended the birthday party, Miss Hearsey was toasted by eleven former faculty members. Headmaster Don McNemar sent both an affectionate letter of congratulations and a dozen red roses—the traditional Abbot symbol of esteem and achievement reminiscent of so many commencements. "Your high standard of educational leadership coupled with wisdom and concern has been and continues to be an inspiration to many other principals," wrote Mr. McNemar. "My most important understanding of your contribution has come through the hundreds of alumnae of Abbot Academy whom Britta and I met during the past year who value the impact you had on their lives."

The highlight of the afternoon was the reading of "A Birthday Ballad, or The Nine Decades of M.C.H." by its author, Louise Coffin Downs. The poem concluded

Now here to pay her tribute
 Have come from far and near
 A few of all her countless friends
 As she marks her ninetieth year.

And if good wishes count for much Indeed 'twould not be wondered
 If love promotes longevity
 She's sure to reach one hundred!

And those sentiments are echoed by all the graduates of both Abbot and PA. Congratulations to a great woman!

From 12 to 15 October twelve instructors of the Freedom from Chemical Dependency team were on campus meeting with the entire student body in small groups; each student attended one session a day for four days, and each regular PA class gave up both a class hour and one assignment that week to enable the students to devote proper attention to the program.

Much of the effectiveness of the program was due simply to the credibility of the team members: every one of them had been at one time addicted to alcohol or drugs or both. Last March the PA faculty gave up their last day of spring vacation to undergo an intensive one-day exposure to the sessions offered by the team: the faculty were impressed enough by what they heard to invite the team back this year for the entire school.

On 1 and 2 October Class Agents gathered in Andover for meetings with both faculty and students. Clint Kendrick '61, and Mimi Ganem Reeder '57, co-chairmen of the Alumni Fund, steered the Agents through sessions on PA's residential life and Alumni Fund participation. Joe Vaamonde '41, spoke on reunion giving, and Don Shapiro '53, explained the multi-agents system. Planning on the Andover end was done by Director of Annual Giving Sandy Urie Thorpe '70, and Sarah Craver, Sandy's Associate Director.

Chairmen of the Parents Fund this year are Marilyn and John Pickett, who live in Locust Valley, Long Island, NY, with their three children—Johnny, 16, an Upper Middler at PA; Brett, 14; and Jocelyn, 11. John served for four years as president of the Board of Trustees of the Green Vale School on Long Island and still serves as an active Trustee. Marilyn's interest in Andover goes back to when her brother, Barrett Seaman, was a student in PA's class of '63. Both Marilyn and John are active in community affairs on Long Island, where John is owner of the New York Islanders hockey team.

As the Addison Campaign nears its deadline, the Gallery has mounted a magnificent show, Frank Stella: From Start to Finish—six downstairs gallery rooms showing the progression of Stella works of art from rough idea to final form. The exhibit runs till 19 December. Stella, PA '54, is also making 1000 posters for the show, sales of which will benefit the Addison Campaign. A handsome holiday gift, for you and for us.

Lovers of the Addison Gallery and all it stands for will find pleasure in reading Denison Hatch's memoir of Pat Morgan in this issue—a spontaneous and unsolicited manuscript that is a testimony to a great teacher. Some friends of Pat Morgan want to establish a fund at PA to be used in ways that would have pleased Pat. If you are one of those, Diz Bensley will send you more information if you write to him: Gordon G. Bensley, Phillips Academy, Andover, MA 01810. Contributions will also be credited towards the Addison Gallery Campaign, tax deductible.

Alumni Council Weekend

Pursuant to the mandate of the 1978 report of the Alumni & Visiting Committee on External Affairs, the 1982 Alumni Council met under the leadership of Stephen Clarkson '55 over a long October weekend to "provide the administration with an accessible sounding board of Alumni opinion."

"Long-Range Planning" was the topic for the three-day meeting of the Council, and Headmaster Donald McNemar opened the session with the challenge for this year's group: "To assure the excellent quality of the Academic experience and the learning diversity within the community in the face of economic constraints and more limited offerings."

To meet this challenge, the Council met in large groups to discuss general issues, and smaller committees to refine those discussions into more focussed recommendations. Cynthia Eaton Bing '61, Donald L. Shapiro '53, Edith Williamson Bacon '54, and William Moore '45 monitored the open discussions, which centered on reports which had been prepared for Council members by Dean of Residence David Cobb, Headmaster McNemar, Assistant Business Manager Susan Stott, and Director of Admissions Josh Miner. These reports summarized the four important areas of the Phillips Academy program which must be factored into any long-term strategy for the school, and fueled the debate which evolved over the course of the weekend: size of the school, educational policy, disposition of the Abbot Campus, and tuition policy.

The Council found "no argument for a retreat to a smaller school" in their examination of the problem of the school's size. While there was appeal from the standpoint of practicality, efficiency, and decreased per-student overhead in expanding the size of the student body through more efficient use of space, the alumni ruled in favor of the size and configuration of Andover at approximately 1200 students—a size which has been shown to work quite well.

Speaking for the Academic Program Committee, Graeme Henderson '52 declared that "the curriculum needs a diet." In the face of fiscal restraint, "leadership from above" will be needed, he explained, to encourage trimming of the fat. In addition, the Academic Program Committee recommended the enlistment of outside professional expertise and encouraged regular self-evaluation as possible methods whereby staffing and program decisions could be made. Also suggested was a screening of Andover graduates after one year of college to determine how they feel their Andover curriculum prepared them for a college education.

The question of whether or when to establish a tuition policy triggered some of the more lively discussion, and illustrated just how complex are the decisions which must be made in order to preserve the diversity of the Andover program within context of seriously troubled economy. "Tuition has traditionally been determined by adding up expenses, subtracting endowment and other income, and dividing the difference by the number of students," explained Admissions Director

John Barbour '76, Phil Chaplin '73

Miner. When it was shown how this would affect the cost of an Andover education over the next five years through a simplified budget model, Christopher Hart '65, co-chair with Elizabeth Padjen '72 of the Student Affairs and Admissions committee, suggested that "Tuition is too important to recruiting efforts and to the traditional image of Phillips Academy to be set by means of a simple mathematical formula." This proposal illustrated the theme of Alumni Council 1982—tough decisions must be made on the spending side of the ledger, and efforts must be redoubled on the income side if the Andover model is to continue on a solid footing into its third century.

From the Budget and Finance committee, Hayes Clement '54, co-chair with Mo Zuckerman '62, reminded the Council that "It is people, not dollars that have made Andover," and reemphasized the importance of the human dimension before summarizing his Committee's suggestions. Although there seemed a need for additional diversity in the management of the school's endowment in order to maximize the return on investment and a need for outside advice to suggest ways to monitor and control the budget, Hayes insisted that the administration's perspective be to "preserve the ideal of attracting youth from every quarter" in making financial decisions, and to avoid stripping the important human element from this decision-making process.

Miriam Ganem Reeder '57 reported on behalf of the Alumni

Fund Committee and described the fantastic success of the annual giving program. Growth in both the participation rate and the level of giving has been impressive with participation growing from 29% in 1980 to 38% in 1982—with total giving of $1.275 million. Abbot giving has truly improved over the last three years, from $30,000 in 1980 to over $75,000 in 1982. For the future, the Alumni Fund Committee has established a goal of 50% participation and gifts to meet 10% of operation costs by 1986.

In support of the Alumni giving effort, Carolyn Butler Lisle '61 and J. Kenneth McDonald '50, co-chairmen of the Class Secretaries and Reunions Committee, stressed the importance of reunions and of the Andover Bulletin for maintaining and sustaining a continued relationship between the alumni and Andover. In their meetings, Mary Stevens of the Office of Alumni Relations encouraged organization and diversity in reunion programs; Andover Bulletin Editor Tom Regan sought advice concerning the financing of the magazine—which was unanimously determined a vital link to the 20,000 Andover alumni; and Academy Secretary Joe Mesics suggested the periodic rejuvenation of class officers through the reunions' quinquennial schedule to maximize the effectiveness of each class's annual giving efforts.

On the recurring topic of the fate of the Abbot campus, the Council was unanimous in its determination: the property must be retained in order to preserve the Abbot legacy and to provide for flexibility which may be needed in the future. There was a bit more excitement generated over how to utilize the property until some clear use materializes, though most on the Council felt the facilities should be producing some sort of income for the school—from an education-related use.

The fields of Siberia have been replete with athletic competition this Fall, as coaches trim rosters and plan winning strategies. Varsity athletes were back on campus eight days before classes started, in hopes that the extra practices will make Andover athletics tops among prep schools this Fall.

Frank Hannah's Boys Cross-Country squad has been spending a lot of time in the Sanctuary lately, as they gear for a successful season. The team is led by co-captains John Floyd and Bruce Trask, both two-year Seniors. Upper Jim Moore is also expected to carry the team—a necessity considering the loss of four outstanding Seniors (Phil Harrison, Ken Seiff, Steve Donahue, and Phil Knight) to graduation last June. Coach Hannah is optimistic about this year's Chariots of Fire group, and expects a winning season.

Optimism is evident amongst the Girls Cross-Country squad also, as Coach Elwin Sykes leads them through grueling—yet worthwhile—five to ten mile practices. Jennifer Mosse is this year's captain, and will anchor a team also led by new talents Debbie Hamilton and Celia Pastoriza. The team's endurance and depth will be put to test frequently, as Andover meets such formidable opponents as Milton, Northfield-Mount Hermon, and Exeter. The squad will compete in the Interschols on November 13.

Field hockey coach Marjorie Harrison had to trim her squad down from fifty to sixteen in mid-September, as she tries to mold the 1982 version into one of Andover's finest. The Blue's strong forward line is abundant with old faces, including Moira Recesso, Collette Devine, Milisa Galazzi, and Becca Bennett. The defense also stars almost totally veterans, led by Martha Gourdeau, Polly Warner, Andrea Feldman, Laurie Nash, and Sarah Rosenfield. Tending goal for Andover is yet another returnee, Upper Kathy Mulvey.

If there is one goal that coach George Best and the Varsity Football team must have this autumn, it is to avenge last year's upset loss to those Exies. Quarterback John Shaw leads the troops on offense, and is complemented by backs Rufus Jones and Chris Gildehaus, as well as receivers Mike Mula and Captain Martin Clarke. The squad's 5-3 defense is headed by Kevin Doherty and Adam Wall. The pigskinners started the season off on the wrong foot, however, losing their opener to Worcester Academy by a score of 21-0.

At press time, Meredith Price's Boys Soccer squad was 3-0-1, and coming off a big upset win over Boston College's junior varsity. Gregory Simon and Angelo Iasiello co-captain this Fall's team, also led by the Apgar brothers (Rick and Zack), Dave Trowbridge, goalies Eric Thieringer and Chris Wilson, and post graduates Denny Wright and Joey Ross. The booters seem well on their way to improving on last year's 7-4-1 record, and Coach Price may be right when he says, "We have the potential to be one of the best teams in school history." -

Down at Graves Field, however, the Girls Soccer team stands even taller than their male counterparts. At press time, the girls had won their first three games of the still young season, extending their amazing unbeaten streak to twenty games. Coach Sherm Drake's dynasty is co-captained by Electa Sevier and Caroline Higgins. Other standouts include Katie McBride, Sara Poinier, Chris Kuckacki, Angela Hsieh, and Liesl Rothacker. In the nets for the team is Serra Butler, from San Francisco, who was named All Bay League Conference Goalie last season.

Rounding out the varsity sports is Coach Bonney Hart's Girls Volleyball team. Six returnees—including Captain Naomi Mulvihill—as well as four new players make up the 1982 squad. Opponents must contend with the spiking of Leslie Tucker, Renee Kellan, and Emily Ayscue, as well as the all-around play of Trina Moiso, Megan Guiney, and Alison Beaumont. The consistent play of Mulvihill, Alison Cooper, Cindy Lamontagne, and new junior Viva Bartkus is also vital to the team's success this Fall.

Stephen Guschoy, a Senior, is Vice-President of the PA Press Club

No word from any of the survivors since last May. As nearly all of us have now attained our 90th birthdays, there is not much to report that is newsworthy until we reach our "Journey's End." It reminds me of the Englishman who always looked each morning at the obituaries in The London Times to see if he was still alive.

I want to report to you about one near classmate—Sumner Smith of the Andover Class of 1908. He went back to Yale for the 70th reunion of the Yale Class of 1912 and was the only member to make it. He is one of five or six survivors and was certainly the "Grand Old Man" of last June's Yale reunions and was treated with awe and respect and, above all, affection.

You will all remember Sumner's son, Charlie Smith, who was Andover's Alumni Secretary during our more active years. Sumner has recently written for his family and friends a delightful book about his long life. He has always been a great friend and benefactor of Andover.

living in those peaceful Cape Cod surroundings.

Our Class is unique in having two sets of twins and they are the main subject of this current column. Al Clarkson, of one set, is now living at Edgewood Manor, 928 South Street, Portsmouth, NH 03801. He reports that he is in good shape and takes walks every day to keep that way. His brother, John W., died August 17, 1982 in Concord MA. He attended MIT after Andover and his business career was spent with B. F. Goodrich Company. I'm sorry to say that's all we know about John at this time.

Of the other set, Charlie and Franklin Balch, Charlie died in 1959. Franklin Greene, Jr., died July 19, 1982 of pneumonia and its complications. Frank was a graduate of Harvard College and Harvard Medical School, after which he interned in surgery at Massachusetts General Hospital, followed by a year at Mayo Clinic. There he met a fellow M.D., India Hunt of Atlanta, and they were married in 1926. She died in 1954. Frank practiced general surgery at Mass. General Hospital, the Faulkner Hospital in Jamaica Plain and two suburban hospitals. At Lawrence Memorial Hospital in Medford, MA, he was chief of staff and chief of surgery for ten years. He was a diplomat of the American Board of Surgery, a fellow of the American College of Surgeons, a member of the New England Surgical Society, the New England Cancer Society, the Boston Surgical Society, the A.M.A. and the Massachusetts Medical Society.

In spite of all his professional activity Frank found time to serve his country. In World War I he served on the Mexican border and became a First Lieutenant of Artillery. In War II he was called to active duty in May 1941 in the Navy and served two to three years at the US Navy Hospital in Chelsea, MA, attaining the rank of Commander. In the latter part of the war he was assigned as senior medical officer on the USS Currituck, AV 7, a seaplane tender, participating in the Philippine invasion. Here he was awarded the Bronze Star. After a year of this he was ordered to Camp White, Medford, OR, as chief of surgery, where he was promoted to Captain. He returned to civilian practice in May 1946.

This remarkable classmate retired from active practice in 1965, devoting his time mostly to gardening and playing the cello. For several years he has served as our excellent Class Agent and we will miss him. He is survived by a sister, Mrs. August C. Putnam; a son, Franklin Greene III; a daughter, Mrs. Virginia Harlan and several grandchildren.

Here's hoping you all have had a good summer. Don't forget the Alumni Fund.

Where has the summer 1982 gone? I expected to hear of a lot of traveling from Classmates. Charlie Gamble could not resist returning to New England for he enjoyed Spalding Club Inn at Whitefield, NH, during part of August and September. We expect to spend a least a week at that Inn in celebration of the release of Marney and me from the Mass. General Hospital. Henry Keyser II is now residing in Keswick Home, 700 West 40th St., Baltimore, MD

21216. He would like to hear from friends. Dayton Wilmot at 84 manages to keep out of the rocking chair with volunteer work with R.S. & P. and an occasional nine holes of golf. He has two children, five grandchildren and two great grandsons. A good record but not the greatest number. Maybe PA '95 can enjoy the great grandsons. The Alumni Office furnished me with an update of our Classmates and added 23 of our widowed friends. I think it is a great idea to start collecting that list for we certainly should keep in touch with them. The report from the Office was a bit disappointing for it showed only 48 living members, a decrease of five from my present continuing list.

Rob Schelling 2nd has requested that he be considered inactive and not to be kept on the mailing list.

Your secretary regrets that he has not been able to report family changes as they have occurred. The tally showed five deceased members but no one has a record of their dates of death. John A. Beaman of Sharon, PA; Russell H. Boyd of Delray Beach, FL; Irving Z. Humphreys of Bennettsville, SC; Kenneth T. Lavelle of San Francisco, CA; and John Weber, Jr. of New York, NY. We send our belated words of sympathy to the families and friends of each. If anyone has knowledge of any of these dates, our Alumni Office would like to bring the records up to date.

The new printout listed the following changes in address: William S. Bailey, Jr., PO Box 547, Nokomin, FL 33555; James R. Carter, 14 Summer St., PO Box 456, Hampden, ME 04444; G. Church Durant, 2448 Columbia Dr., Apt. 48, Clearwater, FL 33513; Freeman H. Dyke, 84 Fairview West, Tequesta, FL 33458; Howard J. Hamerslag, 10 East End Ave., 15C, New York, NY 10021; Austin C. Smith, 50 Surrey Lane, Rockville Center, NY 11570; Charles P. Swan, 907 30th St., Apt. 2, Parkersburg, WV 26101; Roswell Truman, 6500 Carefree Lane, Apt. 106, Roanoke, VA 24019; Herbert H. Upton, 2037 Medford Rd., Apt. 199, Ann Arbor, MI 48104; Stuart Wainwright, 1317 LaJolle, Thousand Oaks, CA 91360.

Send me some personal news before the next issue. News of our friends is interesting.

Way back last August I realized I was not performing well as your Secretary. I had submitted only two or three Class Notes in over a year. Also coming up was our 65th Reunion next June. Things were becoming "too much" for me.

I was no long writing you personally; something I thoroughly enjoyed throughout the years because you were all wonderful in your replies giving interesting information about yourselves. I never had a letter unanswered! Thank you, thank you, thank you.

I did not think it fair to you or to the School to hold a job in which I was no longer performing adequately; so I tendered my resignation.

At this writing I have not heard from the Alumni Office. I am sure whoever takes over will do an excellent job of communication with you and running our 65th Reunion. Our 50th, 55th and 60th! What fun! Good Luck and Best Wishes to each and every one of you.

Your scribe spent the summer gardening, fishing and visiting on the ranch of his daughter and son-in-law in Alberta. This was a particularly happy occasion as the ranch is located in country I have been in off and on for over 60 years. Located on the edge of the Livingston Overthrust of the Rockies, it holds many happy memories of pack trips into the mountains off and on since 1919 when I went as the guest of F.M. Crosby, Jr. PA '20.

I have very little other news of classmates other than a note from Tom Powers in response to Vin Farnsworth's letter about the Alumni Fund. He writes "I was North Dakota alumnus representative for 30 years or more, but do not get much news anymore. I was in the hotel business here for many years. We had three and I sold the last one in 1981."

And a forgotten one from Harold B. Noyes who wrote that he and a few others have started a first-class restaurant in Harpswell, ME as a corporate enterprise known as Captain Jack and hopes to see some of us at the captain's table.

Lastly, a note from Brad Burnham saying "I have just published privately a new book God in Our Time."

The chief interest of Florence Matile Bishop is her four grandchildren; Peter, Thias, Matile, Joel, and Thais' beautiful son Luke, Flossie's great grandson. Florence studies Modern Greek and goes often to the Pelloponce. Last summer she visited with Margaret Neelands Parsons, class of '21, in Palm Beach, FL.

Irene Franklin Foster writes from the Berkshires where she is visiting her daughter, "I still work with the blind as I have for 20 some years, as director of Carnell chapter for 21 years, now as Director of Meetings. I have ten grandchildren, four step grandchildren, two great grandchildren, and two step great grandchildren. My eldest son lives in the old Foster homestead, one of the oldest houses in Andover."

Isabelle Parrott Mitchell is enjoying her home in Boyton Beach, FL, and her continuing work with the Republican Party. From Mildred Linscott Havighurst July 1982. "My husband and I have just returned from a three week visit to England. Traveling by car we spent time in Winchester, Salisbury, Wells, Falmouth in Cornwall, Lavenham in Suffolk, and had four days in London. We had some beautiful drives through Wiltshire, Somerset, and Devon. We saw some of our English friends, which was pleasant."

Caroline Wilkenson Halliday's daughter-in-law, Polly writes, "My mother-in-law has not been well for several years although she is still interested in Abbot, for she has many fond memories of her days there. We all enjoy the Bulletin."

Anne Hussey is enjoying being "an old maid great grandmother, courtesy of my adopted daughter, whom I brought home from France in 1929 at the age of fifteen months. My two great grandsons are four and nine years old." From Constance Ling: "My life has been a very happy and interesting experience. After graduation from Abbot's 'Academic' course I entered the University of Michigan. For me, the educational experience there could not compare with that at Abbot—too big, too impersonal. I studied in New York and I later taught in various private schools (including Abbot) near Boston and New York. I greatly objected, and still do, to the amalgam of Abbot with Phillips, I continue to greatly lament the closing of Abbot. Years ago I joined the American branch of the Anthroposophical Society, which has led me into a life-long study and activities, and I live at one of their centers at Spring Vally, NY. Margaret Worman Thompson will be going to the Class Agents meeting in Andover on October 2nd. Her big news is that her youngest grandson, David S. Ward was graduated with honors from Duke University over Mothers' Day weekend and got a splendid job with Digital Communications. Elizabeth B. F. Beveridge, Betty Babb, 80, of Camden, ME died July 11. She was a graduate of Abbot, Class of 1920 and Smith College, 1924. She was formerly Assistant Women's Page Editor of the Kansas City Star, and Executive Secretary of the Camden-Rockport Chamber of Commerce. Her first husband, Richard S. Foxwell died in 1937 and in 1955 she married Norwood P. Beveridge, who died in 1980. Surviving are a son, Richard W. Foxwell; a stepdaughter, Deborah Duff; two stepsons, Norwood P. Most of this goes back 4 months ago—when I struck out on account of lack of space. It's now Sept. 9!

The most up to date news is barely at hour old, though. A belated thank you by phone to Dave Williams for a Yale Class picture of some 57 years ago and he also had sent one to Bill Serat. He wondered how Bill was so I phoned to see. I could hardly hear Bill but I gathered he had a full time male nurse and was feeling lousy "getting old." It was good to hear him (what there was of it) but I won't venture to repeat what he said his malaise really is. Write him a "cheer up" at 2180 No. Alvernon Way, Tucson 85716. To get back to Dave—he was still glowing from the celebration of his 45th wedding anniversary with some 45 guests plus accordion music and "the works." Dave also had played hi David vs. Goliath act (refer to pitching at Andover-Exeter game way back when when he was victimized by a pickpocket Dave pursued and captured the guy, got his wallet back intact, preferred charges several trips to court in Boston, and in the end the thief received, in effect, a slap on the wrist. The Williams had lunched with Lou Lincoln in Falmouth a couple of week go and were amazed and delighted with Lou's collection of hats, caps, and head gear of all sorts and descriptions. Janice and I had been to Lou's earlier in the summer and also were dazzled by the hat collection which covers practically a whole wall of the living room. Rather unusual, like Lou, who plays golf most every morning at 6 am. Nice territory, Lou's, both Dave and I agreed.

Back in Feb. I had consulted "Jeff" Drew by phone regarding Financial News Letters, an endeavor I was about to embark on. But first of all I was disturbed to hear he had lost a leg due to atherosclerosis, the amputation located about half way between knee and hip. He seemed to toss this off as no big deal; has an artificial leg and drives his car and so on. Widowed in 1966, he has remarried, has 14 grandchildren, one of whom went to PA and is at Williams now. I asked Jeff what had happened to his "Odd Lot Theory" which was going great guns back some years ago. He said that when the institutions began to take over the Wall St. market and the "little fellows" and the odd-lottery were pushed aside he had sold out and retired. Prior to that he had been placing ads in Barron's almost every week to the tune of $10,000 each (pre-inflation real bucks) and had a large and enthusiastic following. Jeff sounded chipper as ever and said he liked my "letter" and it sounded "folksy." I've gotten out 7 of them since on a monthly basis (but no ads in Barron's!) and anyone interested in getting a sample please let me know.

Al Pearson wrote (April) that "Our lives now in a contented routine: long winters in our Florida home, summers in Princeton, MA, with travel interludes." Al also said he'd recently lunched at the spry Roger Havillands. Al sounded "spry" himself!

Don Leach et ux, Isabel, have lived in Essex, CT for about 6 years now, with Februarys in Florida. Don keeps occupied with matters associated with Old Lyme, just 10 minutes away: Chairman, Lyme Academy of Fine Arts, Trustee, Lyme Historical Society—and playing golf. He sees Jim Bunting from time to time; Jim still in Wallingford. We, Jan & I, often think of that July 10th year (1959) surprise party when Don and I brought over that silver coffee service with its much appreciated engraved inscription and the album of memorabilia from Classmates, and the bag of silver dollars! And I enjoy the photos of the Classmates and wives that gathered in our living room. Herm and Beckie Kohler were visiting us at the time. Beckie has taken a trip to Alaska this summer.

Charlie Gage brought me up to date last April on his physical condition which, from his letter, he fears will be continuous. His shingles are long gone but a virus damaged some nerves leading from his spine thru his right shoulder to the pectoral muscles in his chest and nothing seems to do much good. The result is a practically continuous pain and its effect on his disposition. He says he gets along pretty well but doesn't feel like doing much. As you know, Charlie was not up to attending Reunion last year and this I think will explain why.

One Classmate that is much improved physically is Tom Darling who had been plagued by diverticulitis. Attacks becoming more and more frequent until he submitted to a 3 hour operation, came out without a colostomy and is fitter than a fiddle!

And here's a man that says he'd rather stay home than travel: Don Loker. A card from him this summer with Yugoslavian stamps said he'd phone me from Boston early in August. But he didn't; detoured straight to California. Don and Kay had also been to Greece and way stations mostly on business, but a bit of fun. In the course of his life Don has poked around most of the corners of the earth including many behind the Iron Curtain.

If you get this before Christmas, congratulations to Uncle Sam and a Happy 1983 to thee!

Make plans, pals! Our 60th comes June of '83.

Don and Dottie Jean Harris are looking for a furnished apartment in Tucson in which to spend the months of Jan. and Feb. of '83. This is great news for their many friends in the area, especially the alums from PA and Yale. Bill Foster writes from Sarasota to urge me to return to that retirees' haven when I get fed up with the heat of AZ. He forgets the low humidities of the desert (sometimes 5 or 10), which make 100 degrees tolerable with the use of the A.C. in car, stores, and home. He spoke of a "good dose" of Red Tide in Sarasota Bay. Is the RT good or bad, Bill? Judge Mac Smith has no news fit to print but says that rains have made their farm, given as a nature preserve in 1979, a beautiful sight. Enroute to their colleges, a great niece, a great nephew, and a grandson visited Mac and wife.

Paul Richardson hasn't seen a PA alum since the 1974 class reunion with one exception (can it be he means 1973, our 50th?). Six members of his family have attended Andover or Abbot—the first, B.F. Richardson, PA '82, uncle, Harvard '86; Hazen K. Richardson, PA '82, father, also Harvard '86; the last was Hazen K., 2nd, PA '53; other three were not identified.

I regret to report the very recent death of E. B. (Beck) Hitchcock. Beck recently lost his wife and has had serious health problems in the last 15 years, including a tracheotomy and a mild coronary. He will be remembered as a member of the PA basketball team that beat Exeter. I have no information on survivors or details of his career.

Jack and Althea Hall have moved to a retirement home in Juno Beach, FL. Both are in good health and still making music (which I'm sure delights their fellow residents—remember the fun with this duo at our 50th?). Jack plays golf, Althea bridge. Tom and Becky Flint have re-established themselves in Maine, intending to stay while their constitutions permit. Tom describes his property of 160 acres of woodland with salt water frontage, two summer cottages, boat house and 18' cat boat in terms to stir envy (which the Bible forbids). The view from their house sounds perfect. They ignore ribbing of friends about the "boon docks" and find the ambience friendly and to their liking. Tom meets weekly with "an old man's mutual admiration and boasting society." Tom and Becky sing in a 50 voice chorus with a classical repertoire. Because a heart attack in Jan. '81 limits physical activity, Tom indulges in intellectual pleasures, such as investigating the nature and mechanism of human consciousness. The "enjoyable bibliography" of this "obscure subject" is impressive and prestigious. Tom's letter is the first to conform with Johnny Fitch's urging that Classmates reveal their thoughts, so I quote a philosophical passage by Tom: "You probably think I's nuts. I am. Now that I'm approaching the end of this experience which has been mostly zestful but with a few hard bumps, I begin to look with a good deal of curiosity for what comes next, if anything. I don't think I'll be disappointed, but if I am, I won't know it." Tom hopes to be able to attend our reunion next June and I hope all of you have similar hopes!

I did not hear until recently that Otto Alcaide lost his beloved wife Hilda in Dec. '81. Reunioners of past years will remember her with affection. Otto had loving support from his family and friends. To adjust to the agonizing loss he keeps busy and involved. He took another church job and the work of Assistant Treasurer of the Music Guild of Boca Raton. In May '82 he flew to Boston for the ordination of son Ted's wife as a Unitarian minister. At ceremonies at Rivers School where he taught and at a neice's wedding he saw friends of the past forty years. In July he flew to Pittsburgh for the wedding of a grandnephew. He gave further news of his son Ted and his wife, who will preach in a church in New York City; of Ted's daughter, Fawn, and son Howie, entering Guilford and Peddie, respectively; of Otto's daughter Monsita's children—Arthur in med school, Eric, a computer designer, and Sandra, a computer programmer with TRW in L.A.. I'm sure that Otto's loving friends and relatives are a comfort and blessing for him in this time of irreplacable loss.

The day after Labor Day was surely a banner day for me. In the mail I received five replies to my plea for news. I wish I might have gotten my cards out a little earlier than I did, but I surely got busy—don't we all! I have made the rounds of the list once, and next time I shall be starting at the beginning again. Now for the news.

I finally caught up with Liz Peck Watrous after sending her a card to the wrong address, and I quote what she says "Your well travelled card came today. Live here to be nearer family. 1. Son—4 young—live in Idaho Falls. 2. Daughter—3 young—lived in Malta, MT. I guess I better stay here and not attempt reunion—please give them all my best." Any Abbots near here? I suspect she would like to hear from anyone who is nearby.

Do you recall that in the last issue I reported calling Fran Holmes while I was visiting in Florida. I was pleased to receive a letter from her in which she said: "I hope next time we can go to lunch somewhere." I hope so too. She went on to write of the things she has done, which I think are great. After Abbot she went to Bouve's and subsequently did a lot of volunteer therapy work—mostly at Children's Sunlight Hospital in Egypt, MA. Then, being interested in design she ended up in a greeting card company in Newton, MA, where she stayed for 17 years. After that she took a course in blue print reading and went into the Emergency Dept. of Boston Edison, where she stayed for 18 years. Hasn't she done interesting things—it surely sounds so to me. She has been in Florida for 23 years, and loves it in her condo.

Mimi and Libby Thompson both sent news of being together, as always, for the month of June, with visits to Cape Cod and Vermont. In August Libby attended a World Affairs Symposium in Glen Arbor, MI—"a Fascinating Experience. Most of the principal speakers were from the Christian Science Monitor." She also attends symphony concerts, operas, lectures, ballet, etc.—further says "I'm active and happy."

Mimi, this summer has made several visits to Woodstock and Lake Winnepausaukee and may go to visit Libby in Dayton this fall. She lives in a 20th floor cooperative overlooking two ponds and woods, and loves it. Both Libby and Mimi have worked on this Bulletin and are helpful to me.

Sally Finch Hartwell wrote that she had just been in my "part of the world" and had read interesting news of '23 which "inspired her to answer my plea," for which I am grateful. She and her husband had spent some time at her daughter's camp on Fairyland Island in the Thousand Islands. Then they went by car and ferry to Nova Scotia, St. John, N.B. "and home via Maine's beautiful Tpk" (that made my eyes shine). She says she and her husband are both well—he plays doubles a couple of times a week, and she keeps the home fires burning. Looks like they travel some, too. And speaking of Maine, if I may, now that the word has been spoken. If you have never been to Maine I hope you will come someday, and from the middle of September until the 10th day of October it is really beautiful. You will not receive this in time to come this year—so come next year, to see the beautiful foliage, among other things, of course. And when you come, please come to see me—my door is always open. We really do have much beautiful scenery here, and I should love to show you around.

Periodically, say about once in three years, I decide to give myself present by calling M.C. Swartwood Sinclair and finding out what is going on with her. We were roommates both years we were at Abbot. I decided that this was a good year to call, and I was glad I did, for she was all ready to leave for London and Scotland that week, to be gone until the end of September. She also told me about some great grandchildren named Megan and Katrina, I think, but I wrote so fast I don't dare trust my notes—so, more about that next time. She was pleased that she had received a good report from her doctor, following her surgery of last year. While in Scotland she will have a car and drive wherever she wishes to go.

Ginny Maxwell Hyland sent vital statistics "Jack and I have 3 married children—2 boys and 1 girl—5 grandchildren—one son a plastic surgeon at Lahey Clinic—one son in Vail, CO, with Vail Associates—daughter project manager at Constitution Quarters (formerly Boston Navy Yard)." Sounds like a very interesting family. She says further that she and Jack are both well—play golf and swim until frost hits their pool. She sounds peppy too.

Dottie Upton Jesson's card got smudged in transit, and I cannot read all of it. Apparently she has had back trouble (wearing braces) for 7 years and a wonderful doctor who believes in exercise has gotten her going again. We are glad of that. She says they are settled in CA now, but they miss MT and also would like to get back to "see the old Classmates".

The last of August I was sad to hear from Doris Holt Flinton's husband that she had died on July 11, a patient in the Windsor Nursing and Retirement Home in South Weymouth, MA. We extend our sympathy to Edgar.

Again thank you for your help.

Dick Knight reports it was 104 degrees in Green Valley, AZ, that two tremendous white cirus blossoms were out, there was a rattle snake on the main road, a rainbow one afternoon and an eclipse of the moon one night, that he had a letter from Nick Danforth and he asks "what's new in Newton?" To repay us for driving them to the Yale picnic in June, Nick and Nancy presented was with 20 lbs. of hydroponic tomatoes raised by their daughter, Julie. They were beautiful and delicious!

Had a "Get Well" card from Bill Jones who admitted he knew I wasn't sick but he thought the card was cute. Dick Morris wonders why we didn't stop off to see him and Jo while we were in PA. He found on the map the reason, as it was a 100 miles out of the way and 100 miles back. Gige Mumby's birthday card said "Lots of people over 30 lead happy and useful lives, so cheer up." A letter from Art Tai's wife, Frieda, said she plans to teach one more year which means Art will drive the school bus. The Tais were in Green Valley this winter and the card from Art showed mountains and he wonders if seeing them we were homesick for our Santa Ritas. He thinks our actor grandson must be a character—he is Art! There were two letters from Van Johnstone during the summer. We hope to see Van and Nancy on our way West. Dick Chace had no bumper stickers to report but he did send a book of poems he wrote years ago and just had published. He says they are "A memorial to what I look back on now with affection as the most actively created period of my life." The title, Grasshoppers Against the Sun was from a poem by Keats. The Ralph Blanks paid us a visit in Aug. and with them were their daughter, Betty, and grandson, Chris who was a 5 yr. old dynamo. Betty is one of the top people of the York Museum in England and was over last year to put on a Viking Exhibit in NY and MN. Ralph retired from the wholesale jewelry business in Feb. and he and Grace do much travelling. Bob Hamilton sent us a clipping about Ralph's brother, Henry, PA '14, who died recently. He had another brother PA '16 and Henry's son was PA '49. No wonder Ralph is so loyal to Andover. It is a family tradition! Bob Hamilton spent the evening with the Larsens after the party in Boston at the Constitution Hall for Fred Stott. We were able to meet the new Mrs. Stott at that time. Susan and Fred were married on June 20th.

Bob and Esther Clark are also avid travellers. Their trip to the Greek Islands and lower Egypt was their latest to "places they have heard about for years." It was Bob who initiated the Larsen Fund, and although the Larsens have received recognition enough through the friendship of a great group of people in 1924, Bunny and thank you and we hope the Fund will do much good for the old school. I received news of Ess Askew from Connie Brayton Lawt's widow. Ess is in a nursing home in RI and Lawt's brother sees him occasionally. Hunt and Barbie Eldridge were in Brookline visiting their daughter. Their schedule was too tight to visit us again this year. Whenever we are on the Cape we drop in to see Bill and Sally Curtis as we always enjoy our visit.

The Hobbsses say they have more control over their lives when school is not in session. They have been doing some renovating in their home which has taken months mostly waiting for the workmen to show up. We expected to see Mary Dake Rocky's widow, in the East this summer but her Doc felt she should cancel all the plan she had made which was very disappointing to her. Prentiss Glazier is always nervous while in London. His card with the Tower and Tower Bridge on it mentions the fact that many heads have been lopped off there and he has only one. It was interesting to read that the two bascules of the bridge weigh 1000 tons each but can be raised in one minute for a ship to pass through. Henry Hitchcock makes the statement that "at our age any effort seems to make one very busy." Hitchy was in Cotuit his summer home on the Cape. Bill Keate says he made 79 okay, now he is trying for 80. I thought he was talking about his golf score. I believe Bill, Chick Peck and Gardi Brown played in the Seniors. Bob Wool and your Sec. have the same birthday (not the same year). He agrees with Bill Keate that we are all getting older! Bob's card said "you know you're getting older when" takes you an hour to undress and another hour to remember why."

The Dick Vaughans had a wedding of Adele's son, Roger, on Sept. 5, with the reception at the Marriott in Albuquerque. Morry and Ethel Skinner were in Hawaii again in May and June. They stayed at the favorite hotel where the food was excellent and they serve martinis and hot hors d'oeuvres for 95¢. Their many friends started a whirlwind of social activities immediately on their arrival and they fortunately left before they had to be rolled on and off the plane.

The most prolific letter writer is Frank Treat's widow, Barny. We have never met her but we feel like one of her family, her letters are so friendly and intimate. Incidentally we have a "Barny Frank" running for Congress from Newton. Three letters this summer from Ed Fischer who taught some of us Chemistry at Yale. He writes Dick Vaughan, Gige Mumby, Bob Redpath and others of the Class. At 86 he is remarkable for his interesting letters and his handwriting is above reproach. Bunny and I met Ed at the Yale picnic in June. He's surely young 86! Bob Redpath wrote from Munich, Germany. The Redpaths surely go around. Bob mentioned how, after WW they piled the rubble from the bombed city 3 to 4 hundred ft. high and half a mile wide. He mentioned that 50% of the people were unemployed but they didn't feel it much as our 10%. He was glad the youngsters were not on drugs. Bob and Nan were guests of the Ohio Casualty Corporation of which Bob has been a Director since 1950.

Just received a letter from Bev Thompson. He wanted the address of Ed Wells his PA roommate as he might be in his area in November. Bev has had quite a career as a lawyer for the Armed Services. He was also surgical technician in the 85th Infantry, mostly in Italy during the war. He still gets called upon to arbitrate contract disputes of the American Arbitration Association.

There has been sadness among the 1924 roster during the year. Bob Redpath called to say Jim Kern had died in Miami. We had received news of George Penny's death in March. Only this week we received a call from Amy Howe to say that Dike had died on Aug. 27. We also heard from Ruth Smith that Joe was seriously ill in Umatilla, FL. Already this year the deaths of Frank Atterholt and Bill Kelly have been reported. As secretary I have written to all the wives of these Classmates to express our deep sympathy on behalf of the Class of 1924 and have received acknowledgements from them.

It was fun—our Second Annual Spring Luncheon at the Pillar House on Route 128 in Newton. The date was May 12th and it was a gorgeous day. There were eight of us around the long table—six Classmates, one husband and one daughter. Everyone looked great.

Lila Clevenger Burke came from Abington with her charming daughter, Peg Colby Williamson came from Norwood. Ruth Kelley Perry drove up from the Cape with husband Elwyn. Elwyn held up his end very well as the only man amidst the bevy of beauties. Ruth Larter Eveleth drove down from Nashua, NH. Laura came out from Boston. Sybil came with her arms full of bright pink dogwood blossoms from her garden in Attleboro. What an addition to our table. They made it really a festive occasion.

It was good to be together again. We chatted, caught up on each others news since our last luncheon, and of course, enjoyed the excellent Pillar House food. We hope we can all be there next year and that more of you will be able to join us. (by Peg W.)

Jane Allen Kilby—had a beautiful experience on board a 4-masted, 28 sailed square rigger to the "Carib Islands," with Dartmouth '25. Even a '19er sailed too.

Polly Bullard Holden—& John had a busy summer with guests, family & garden. Her 2 Ph.D.s taught her new words on their Scrabble board. In October, they will attend the Grand Council Meeting of the Ladies Committee of Mt. Vernon to celebrate the completion of the authentic restoration of Washington's home there. Now, the Opera House in the old Town Hall in Barry, VT, is being remodeled!

Betty Bragg King—A long letter reads that she is determined to come to our 60th in '84! She has urged Marion Shyrook & her 2 roommates, Ruth Beach Newsom & Betty Korst King to keep well & come to this "impressive sounding reunion."

Betty has 2 sons & 3 grands in CA. The oldest graduated from Mt. Holyoke in '81. The others are still in grammar school.

Kay Hart Mitchell—drove 3,000 miles alone to join 921 members of the WW II Armored Division in Louisville, KY. She did not mind becoming lost 3 times, because for the spicy songs on the radio! Now she is about to drive to Nova Scotia etc. before starting on 6 volunteer jobs in Shirley Center. Still, she will be at our reunion in Oct.!

Ruth Larter Eveleth is planning a visit from Genevra Rumford on Oct. 16 to attend the party for our Alumna Council, Polly B. Holden, in Andover, at their Inn. Ruth's grandson is a freshman at Columbia University. Her 2 granddaughters are almost college age.

Laura Scudder Williamson—Even in the summer, Boston continues to be the center of a kaleidoscope of various colors from music at Tanglewood to US Industrial history in Lowell. Now after visits from mountain to shore, back to Volunteer in the Schools.

May I add congratulations to Sandy Thorpe for the daughter who we hope will be Abbot/Andover around 2000.

Margaret McKee DeYoe—Died on 6/11/82. A letter of sympathy was sent to her son, Wood. She added so much fun at Abbot & in her lovely home in Paterson, NJ and the NY and NJ Alumnae meetings we had there. She was a serious homemaker, too. She even made curtains and petit point chairs.

Dorothy Hallett Dion—Died 7/26/81. A letter of sympathy was sent to her husband, who answered with a beautiful tribute, which is too long to include in our measured space. I'll bring this to our next meeting.

A highlight of your scribe's summer was when I and my wife visited Dorothy Partridge, (Walter's widow) over July 4th at her lovely home in Andover. She treated us to a delightful dinner party, that included Charlie & Thayer Poore and Jack & Barbara Whitham. All in fine form. While on the hill, we visited the Addison Gallery. Included in the exhibit was a finely executed drawing, which had been donated by our Winslow Ames from his collection. A welcome note from Phil Bastedo sent from their summer home in Dublin, NH. He still enjoys tennis. Although largely retired, Phil is very much in the mainstream, serving on the Board of the Hospital for Special Surgery; Chairman United Hospital Fund; Treas. Board Amer. Academy in Rome and Board of MacDowell Colony.

You can always depend on Dick Bernheim for a "bon mot." He writes, "some enterprising fellows in my WW II outfit decided this summer, after almost 40 years, to organize a reunion. One reunioner called me Joe and said I used to be tall and thin but had changed and now was short and fat. I told him I was Dick and he accused me of changing my name too. I heard one reunioner tell another he couldn't recall his face but his breath was very familiar. We talked about old-time navy high jinks and it was almost as much fun as an Andover 50th." Believe it or not Dick is still active in his leather business.

Ed Bartlett spent a memorable 2 weeks in Alaska last August, ending their trip visiting his oldest grandson near Kenai, where he bought some land and is building his own house to test life on the "last frontier." Ed reports he & wife Sara (Sis) are fine and keep busy in a variety of volunteer activities. Pres Breed writes that age limits have brought him down to 3 directorships and 2 active consulting assignments; finally lost his 6 year appeal for tax fairness before the Supreme Judicial Court of Taxachusetts pro se. This has given him 2 months of nearly free time to recover from total replacement of his right hip. Is now looking for a Law Review who will confirm or deny his view that the top MA court was less the recourse of an aggrieved citizen—more the consistent ally of the Tax Dept. He's been revelling in his enforced leisure.

Charlie & Par Arnt were leading the good life last summer on a tour through England. They stayed in gorgeous manor houses & at Leeds Castle. Fantastic food and service. Nobody wanted to go home.

Dutch and Suzanne Brodhead's children gave a gala party to celebrate their golded wedding anniversary last June. Our congratulations! Al & Ada Keedy still enjoy Al's winter ministry in St. Eustatius, V.I., coming back to Walpole in the spring. Al derives much satisfaction from his work. Chuck Moore's son Frederick made the news when he was named Chairman of Diamond Salt Co. last June, a position his father relinquished in 1978. Chuck divides his time between St. Clair, MI and Florida. Most welcome word from George Bradley. "I'm still able to sit up and take nourishment—even an occasional martini! We summer in Jaffrey, NY and winter in FL on Siesta Key. We're in the phone book & I'd be delighted to see any "drop ins." (We could sit around and lie about the prowess of our kids.)"

Gerry Blanchard has been taking advantage of courses under the Older Persons Program at the Fordham/Madison Campus each semester since the fall of '73. Last June he attended the Provincial Synod of the Anglican Catholic Church in Kansas City. Still does volunteer work, counseling families of "students" at Little Hill—Alvia Lodge, Blairstown—a rehabilitation treatment center for alcoholics. We lost Donald G. Davis on March 23rd. He's been retired from the Reading (MA) Public Works Adm. Our deep felt sympathy to his wife, Gladys and their child.

Notes Bob: "The experiences of schools like Andover . . . indicate that 98% of the loans have been repaid . . . a better record than most banks."

Regretfully, we report the following note from Dick Prentis: "My wife, Helen, died the 13th of June after a ten year fight with cancer. The last six years were very sad for her. She was a graduate of Stephens College and we would be celebrating our 40th anniversary this Fourth of July had she lived."

Your Secy. takes pride in calling readership attention to the fact that the new Bulletin Editor, doubtless en route to the heights attained by his charming and competent predecessor, Helen Eccles, is Thomas J. Regan, distinguished mentor of English and member of the Class of 1951, who penetrated the Pearly PA Portals in a breeze during the hard-oiled Adriance Admissions Administration and has proven himself a shining credit to the screening sagacity thereof ever since. In his #1 Official Pronunciamento Ed. R. reminds all Class Secys of "Classes ending in 3 and 8 to remind Classmates of Reunion activities in June 1983," which I happily and hopefully do herewith. Al Rowland has once again generously agreed to serve as Reunion Chairman, with a yet to be selected committee, and in considering the possibility of your being on hand, we hope you'll bear in mind the comment of a PA '28 wife at her husband's 50th college reunion: "This is a nice affair, but we always enjoy Andover reunion much more; they're smaller and more relaxed and you get a chance to really talk to people." This sentiment has been of time echoed by other ladies and gentlemen of our Elite Constituency. If you haven't attended a '28 reunion, try it, you like it!—As expected, a sizable passel of '28sters appeared at one point or another for Yale 32's 50th. Listed in appropriate A-Z style in the official tally were Bob Adler, Spike Adriance, Em Bates, Dick Carroll, Charlie Ganson, Gerry Gessell, Bill Laundon, Hart Leavitt, (Hon.), Tom Mendenhall, Al Ogden, Al Parker, Miles Pendleton, Al Rowland, Tully Torbert, Tut Tuttle, Al Yale. Most were accompanied by wives. Some were seen for a fleeting instant, some not at all in the Milling Throng. Several (cf. supra) expressed firm intentions to be in Andover next June.

Bill Frank, as co-chairman, and Tom Mendenhall were particularly prominent and active, Tom as lucid moderator of an illuminating discussion of the penetrating '32 questionnaire for which he was largely responsible. Reports on other collegiate 50ths will be welcome for future reference—Nancy and I had the extraordinary good fortune to enjoy the warm home hospitality of Dick Carroll and Esther, who are actively involved in the New Haven Hospice program, as well as in the more recently established Greater New Haven Volunteer Stroke Rehabilitation program. A better pair for such healing work would be hard to imagine.—Not seen, but engaged in telephonic exchange, Sam Crosby reported good progress after 2 "mild strokes," completion and dispatch to printer of his epic opus on St. Denis—Other redoubtable '28 bouncer-backers: Don McLean from springtime heart attack, rejoicing in summertime arrival of granddaughter Sylvia Pratt McLean, named for late maternal Grandma Sylvia Pratt Kemper; "Pen" Pendleton from wintertime stroke, on hand, bright-eyed and busy-tailed, for Eli 50th; Bill Laundon, from separate arm and leg injuries incurred in icily treacherous Vermont maneuverings, in abbreviated reunion appearance.—Brief note from Bill Robertson (with medic-prescription-type signature thoughtfully deciphered by Alum. Office) chronicled retirement of wife Anne (McKillop) as professor at Columbia Teachers College after 35 years. "No more commuting to NYC after May—Thank God!"—Formal note of thanks from Addison Gallery Campaign Chmn. Bob Walker for puny benevolence to this eminently worthy operation added personal footnote, "Thought you might like to see the Standard Revised Text," which was indeed couched in language guaranteed to make the heart of a Donor go pitty-pat and ponder if he/she might not Do More.—Egg Lewis and Mary remained in CA for the summer to be near composer son Pete, making an apparently amazing cancer recovery after "2 courses of chemo and of radiation." For surcease from their wintertime desert surroundings the L's make vehicular ascent to Big Bear where shade is frigid, sunshine quite agreeable. "Back on desert for sunset we slide into sweater and later ooze under a blanket. Some temp. range!"—Communique from Pom Pomeroy after more than century hiatus raised the question of possible PA interest in his ancestral farm in South Parsonfield (Limerick), ME and led to interesting visit for Nancy and me, with Joe Mesics, well chosen new Secy. of the Academy. Extensive tour of fine woodlands and fields, towed behind a small tractor with Pom at the controls, was followed by inspection of much fascinating memorabilia and amiable reminiscences of 2 ancient '28sters, talking and/or musing about what ever happened to good old Soandso? Remember the basement plumbing in Bancroft? Et al. Along with profound discussions on Life and lesser topics, this type of exercise is oft relished at 55th Reunion. (ADVT.)—Hort Smith with continuing eye out for Dixieland Doings, sends clipping re demise of 2 Titans, says son Mike is one of the owners of "Tipitas" a New Orleans jazz club featuring the best of the N.O. jazz performers nightly. Although Mike has evidently not found his co-ownership a lucrative sideline, he has doubtless derived and provided much pleasure in this rhythmic enterprise.

Readers of these perishable stanzas may recall reference, many issues ago, to T-shirt sported by broad-beamed No. Carolina gentleman, bearing the somewhat dubious admonition, "Do unto others—Then split." In a much more positive vein worthy of the hearty approbation of Dr. Norman Vincent Peale, is a careful carving on the wooden bench in front of Grover's General Store in Five Islands, ME, a favorite gathering place to await the arrival of the Sunday Paper. "Yup Powa" is the simple message, in constructive, charitable harmony with Down East description of an acerbic, less than charming acquaintance: "He seems to be afflicted with Charisma Bypass." Class Dismissed.

Thomas C. Mendenhall II '28:

history, rowing, and metaphysical wit

"Retirement is o.k., but one misses the younger generation!" writes Tom Mendenhall '28 from his home on Martha's Vineyard. Rhodes Scholar, Professor of History and Master of Berkeley College at Yale, President and Professor of History at Smith College, author of books and articles, President of the Council for Basic Education, and rowing fanatic—it is a wonder that Thomas C. Mendenhall II ever had time for his students. On the other hand his students can't believe that he had time for anything else but them, as they reminisce about his teaching, his coaching, his college administrating, his letters of recommendation that made him into a one-man placement agency.

After graduating from Yale in 1932 and winning a Rhodes Scholarship, Tom Mendenhall spent four years at Oxford, earning two degrees and developing a passion for rowing. He returned to Yale for his Ph.D., becoming a member of the History Department from 1937 till 1959—and serving for those last nine years as Master of Berkeley College, a Yale residential college. In 1959 he was appointed President and Professor of History at Smith College, where he served until his retirement in 1975.

The Smith Alumnae Quarterly of November 1974 had the following to say in the Mendenhall valedictory year as President: "He has held Smith together when no other man or woman could have done so through grueling years of war and outspoken criticism and outright selfishness. Day and night he has worked for Smith's welfare and lost his youth but not, thank goodness, the historian's viewpoint nor his sense of humor through it all. He keeps his high ideals and is never afraid to voice them."

Perhaps one of the keys to his astonishing rapport with college students is a metaphysical wit that John Donne would have been proud of, an ability to link the sublime with the ridiculous, never taking himself too seriously. What else could explain his naming the lovely Mendenhall farm outside of New Haven (the locale of many Berkeley parties) "Goat Acres"? Or the December bulletin board invitation to sing Christmas Carols, laconically announcing "Beer and Hymns at the Master's House at 9:00"? Or the potato from his own recipe, served on major college weekends, called Old Tennis Shoe Punch—derived from Old Overholt, to Old Overshoe, to Old Tennis Shoe?

This whimsical world view carried over from words to actions. On Saturday morning of the Big Football Weekend at Yale, Berkeley College would play touch football with Calhoun College on the cross campus lawn in front of Sterling Library, and Tom Mendenhall would referee the game—perhaps wearing a London bobby's helmet and a cutaway, with a crutch to measure off the inevitable penalties.

The major hint his students had that Tom Mendenhall occasionally spent time on other things besides them was a glimpse of his study, where books, journals, and papers collided with rowing mementoes, photos, student recommendation forms, and sleeping dogs. It does not matter whether the study was in Berkeley, at Smith, or on Martha's Vineyard. We have on our desk photographs of all three, and one can barely tell them apart. One day during a history seminar in his Berkeley College study the telephone rang a pathetic, muffled sound until his students helped him find it under some folders in the bottom desk drawer.

But such anecdotes, though they reveal the Character, say far too little about the Teacher and Scholar. "I've always stayed in the classroom despite administrative pressures: a full load at Yale, and a seminar and a section of the general course every year at Smith," writes Tom. "Last year was the first year I haven't taught in forty-three years." Even in retirement he has found time to teach a course at the Nathan Mayhew Seminars of Martha's Vineyard, on "Man and the Sea"—maritime history being one of his long-term scholarly interests, along with English economic history of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. His 1953 volume The Shrewsbury Drapers and the Welsh Cloth Trade in the XVI and XVII Centuries is now something of a collector's item according to the "Books Wanted" lists in a recent edition of Antiquarian Bookman.

Tom Mendenhall is a theorist as well as a scholar and a practicing teacher. He has spoken out frequently on matters educational—as a member of the committee that established the Directed Studies Program at Yale, as Master of Berkeley College, as President of Smith in his annual reports, and as Director and now President of the Council for Basic Education. This fall Tom has co-authored with James Howard a CBE publication, Making History Come Alive, the Report of the History Commission. Over the years he has been able to express his own educational theories as a Trustee of six schools and colleges, President of the Five Colleges, Inc., and—for the home team—a member of PA's Alumni Council.

In many ways his dedication to rowing subsumes all his skills: the teacher as coach at Berkeley College and at Smith, the historian who has just published A Short History of American Rowing, the theorist and writer who not only is working on two more books about rowing, but also has frequently published articles on crew in both the Yale Alumni Magazine and The Oarsman. The years at Oxford produced more than an historian.

The hospitality of the Mendenhall homes has been due in large measure to the warm generosity and blessed disposition of Tom's wife Cornelia, known affectionately to their friends as Nellie. Writing recently to one of his former students about some of the happy achievements of the Mendenhalls and their three daughters, Tom ends with a statement that epitomizes their entire relationship: "And we all owe it all to Nellie—our leader—who has put up with so much."

No metaphysical jokes there. It is no wonder that if "one misses the younger generation," the younger generation misses very much the campus presence of Thomas C. Mendenhall II.

Dear 29'ers—Thanks so much to those of you who answered my call for help with news for this Bulletin—blessings on you!

What a travelling bunch we are—"Duffy" Newcomb Smith and Arnold toured across the country on the Canadia Pacific Train ending in San Francisco before flying home, as did Kay Bowden Barnes. By now, Kay is a happy grandmother to daughter Susie's new baby. Betty Taylor Amazeen summers in Martha's Vineyard but had a really busy year going to Hawaii with grandson and daughter-in-law, then to Florida with a friend to "lap up the sunshine." Her daughter, Betsy's brood are all grown up—Ted at Plymouth State doing graduate work—Lisa, a medical secretary at Children's Hospital, Boston—Peter at Northeastern—Andrew at Merchant Marine. Daughter Nancy is back with her family, living in Hanover, MA, after being in London and Luxembourg for years. So Betty manages to keep busy!

"Gillie" writes that she has had a "dull" summer with physical problems but is feeling better come Fall. Kay Kennedy Beardsley sees Kay Foster Haviland often since they are neighbors at "Hilltop" in New London, NH. She is looking forward to being an great grandmother again in November. Charlotte Osgood Bennet and husband are planning a trip to Switzerland and Austria in September to celebrate their 50th wedding anniversary. Their eight grands are all doing their own thing in school, college and the Navy. She will be in St. Augustine, this winter. My only claim to fame is my younger son who is in Sumatra, Indonesia setting up training programs to develop new vegetable crops for that country. Barbara Folk Howe and I have just had a delightful, chatty visit here for a couple of days. We figured we have know each other for 58 years!

Please keep the news coming in! It makes life much more interesting!

With pride we report that John Munro was awarded PA's Claude Moore Fuess Award for distinguished contribution to public service on May 17 in Cochran Chapel. Johnnie resigned his Deanship at Harvard fifteen years ago to teach Writing at Miles College, a predominantly black college in Birmingham, AL. Currently he is a Professor of Writing at Tougaloo College. He is a Trustee of Tougaloo College, the Southern Education Foundation and Phillips Academy, where another Trustee says, "He is the conscience of our Board."

Charlie Dufton writes from Christchurch, New Zealand, where he is a visiting lecturer at the University of Canterbury. From there he will travel to Johannesburg and Capetown, South Africa, where he will be lecturing from July through October at the Universities of Witwatersrand and Cape Town. We shall be sure that he will be a discussion leader at our 55th Reunion and shall hope that he will arrive at it in his vintage Rolls Royce.

Elsewhere we report with sadness the deaths of Charlie Lansing and Carroll Smith.

From Berea, KY, Jack McLanahan writes: "Busy developing a network or Credit Union Services here in Central Appalachia among low-income—one Credit Union with 40 branches—to offset "usurious" interest rates charged by banks and finance companies. Still director—5½ years Mountain Education and Management Institute."

Your secretary has been corresponding with Wa-Wa Kimball in Bellevue, WA, who is just as convinced as ever that the Pacific Northwest is the ultimate hunting ground. Your secretary can also report that just when life should hold fewer frustrations his golf game is providing more. So what else is new? You tell us, please. It will make this column a lot more interesting!

Dear Classmates: Heart felt sympathy to El Ritchie Doepken and Libby Tarr Morse in the loss of their husbands. A note from Kay Dutton Leidy informing me of the death of Doris Sturtevant Bacon. Kay had received the notice from Louise Hollis Black (who had been in our '30 class until illness forced her to drop out) Kay also said "all goes well with her, no earth-shaking news tho." Yes, we are a hardy group Kay and in spite of this sad report there are bright lights in our lives, namely—a card from Pat Brewer Dericks oogling over her second grandchild born in April and another expected in Sept. They have sold their house in St. Martin and will be in Florida on St. Johns Island and Hillsboro Club in Pompano Beach this coming winter. Her husband had knee surgery and is doing fine.

For 3 reasons yours truly did not send out any cards this time. (1) We were to have been in Cal. for 3 weeks. (2) Instead I lay on the couch most of that time with a back problem but now am much better. (3) Believe I have done this for 2 years and it is really someone else's turn! ANY VOLUNTEERS? It is not difficult, not time consuming and I have all the material to pass on. The office sends you an alert in Jan. and Apr. and Aug. and you take it from there, sending out only a dozen or so cards each time.

It's hard to believe summer is over and vacations have passed! My husband, Stedman, and I had two great but short trips—one rather on the spur of the moment to spend six days in Holland. It was primarily to see the Floriade in Amsterdam, a once-in-ten years international flower show and the world's largest flower auction in Aalsmeer. They even auction off golden rod! We also had a few days in the charming dutch country-side. Our second trip was in our recently acquired motor home with two former Canadian friends. We visited their home town near Toronto and then the Canadian Exposition in the latter city. It surpassed the World's Fair in Knoxville we felt. Our trip home was via Niagara Falls, Washington, D.C. and Williamsburg, VA. It was our first long trip in our home on wheels and really lots of fun. We had to develop sea legs!

Katharine Phelps Richardson and her husband live in Shelter Island Heights, NY. They were expecting a visit from their daughter Sally and her husband in late August after they had packed their two daughters off to college; Cindy to Mahlenberg, PA and Kathy to Lynchburg, VA. Katharine and Nelson had a fine trip in mid-summer to the Scandinavian Countries by bus and boat, then on to Finland by train.

A newsy letter arrived from Olivia Grant Smith saying she now lives in St. Michaels, MD. Her husband Ted had been an exec with AT&T and they lived most of their married life in Morristown, NJ but retired to a farm on Chesapeake Bay. Her hobbies were weaving and other crafts so she opened up a shop called Gingerbread House in St. Michaels but gave it up when her husband died six years ago. Since then she has been in the business of renovating old houses but still finds time to share life with her two daughters and three grandchildren. She plans to build a house of her own and renew her craft hobbies since the grandchildren are older and need less baby sitting.

Catherine Prentice White writes "no news to share with '31 but thanks for making me stop and remember for a little while in the midst of this busy time of living". Her Scottie, Andrew, runs the house activities. She does keep in touch with Miriam (Bunny) Bass.

Bunny Bass lives in Tallahassee, FL with a friend of long standing and a faithful black poodle. A solar-heated swimming pool is her greatest enjoyment with little parties with friends and trips to the beach or to the mountains running close seconds.

We are saddened to learn after four years that Raymah Davis Harper passed away on July 7, 1978. She is survived by her husband Graham, 34 S. Salandra Dr., Orlando, FL. A note of sympathy was sent on behalf of the Class.

It's fun to hear from you so keep the news coming you all!

I've been sitting here thinking about Edgar Allan Poe. As we sit huddled over our typewriter, E.A.P.'s The Raven keeps coming back: "Once upon a midnight dreary, while I pondered, weak and weary . . ." We are positive that Poe was his class secretary, and that The Raven came into being as he faced yet another deadline with no news from Classmates. Edgar wrote a poem about it, but if that big black bird shows up around here we're just going to burst into tears.

Our ONE correspondent, Thayer Warshaw—may his tribe increase—writes of the publication of his latest book, entitled bingdon Glossary of Religious Terms in 1981. Thayer retired from teaching at Newton (MA) High School in order to become editor of the Bulletin of the National Council on Religion and Public Education. He has long been interested in the Bible as literature, and has written several books in this connection. Thayer writes that he also does an occasional book review and speaks often before religious and educational groups. He still lives in Andover (the icing on the cake).

And that leaves your kindly old editor talking to himself. Fascinating though it is, it doesn't make much news for this column. I can't say that life has been all that hair-raising around here, especially since we abandoned our projected trip around the world on water skis. We continue to push Mr. Hulse's fine foil stamping and embossing presses, fill in our spare time, with volunteer activities of various descriptions, most around the church, mourn the sad fate of the Mets, and tend the old homestead. Recently coimpleted household project, the McWilliams Kitty City Jungle Gym for our two most recent feline additions, Ahab and Wheatsworth. Truly amazing bit of carpentry. Special Incentive! Send us a box top—any box top will do, so long as it has some news on it—and we will send you AT NO CHARGE, complete, easy to follow plans. You can have your very own MKCJG! Or, if you insist, we won't send the plans; but please, fellas—let us know you're still there!

Plans are proceeding for our FIFTIETH. A meeting is scheduled in early October at PA after which you will be receiving details. In the meantime, mark down the dates: June 10-12, 1983. DON'T MISS IT!

We are sorry once more to close with news of the death of a Classmate. We have just received word of the death of Edmund W. Scutt during the fall of 1981. What a joy to receive a letter (before the Class News deadline) from Lois Chapman Tarby who lives in Southbury, CT, on what sixteen years ago was a rural road, and is now heavily travelled with cars and speeding motorcycles. Lois and her husband are retired, but keep very busy—no longer breeding cocker spaniels, but caring for grandpa and grandma cocker spaniels and several generations. The Tarbys love rural life. They garden, can, freeze, gather and cut wood for their wood stove—getting ready for a long hard New England winter. Their son, a worker for Digital Corporation, lives in Princeton, MA. They have three teenage grandchildren.

Olive French Sherman writes that she has moved her summer home to Severance Lodge on Kezas Lake in Maine from where she can see Mount Washinton. Her younger son, and Andover Alumnus, has moved with his family to Eugene, OR, where he has taken over an agency for MONY.

Dick and I have just returned from a 6,803 mile trip from here to New England, to Ohio and Houston, TX and back—attending my 45th Wellesley College Reunion, the World's Fair, two Elder hostels, and sightseeing and visiting relatives and friends enroute.

News of Classmates is a bit sparse this issue, but we do learn that John Humason, who after a long distinguished career as a teacher-administrator at Lawrenceville has retired. He lives much of the year in Sarasota, but with vacations in Farmington, CT.

Paul White has broken silence after forty-eight years, during which he has had a remarkable career. From 1965-1977 he served as VP and Trust Officer of Gulf National Bank of Gulfport, MS, and also spent a good deal of time in civic and charitable activities and teaching Spanish and Latin American Geopolitics at the local community college.

In 1978, he and his wife Katherine joined the Peace Corps, working in Central America and living on $185 a month—a marvelous three years. Paul reports: no phone, no TV, no car—Nirvana. Highly recommended. He has written a number of technical articles and published a number of short stories, the title of the latest being Some of Our Best Friends Are Gringos. He and Katherine remain impressively active in Central American affairs and are living in Bay St. Louis, MS. Paul and Katherine intend to be at the FIFTIETH, and I trust all of you who read this (and others) will be there too, including a number of Classmates, great guys, whom I haven't seen in FORTYEIGHT years. How nice it was to hear from the fastest man in our class—Jake Wolf. That cinder burner and funny man reports that he has been in insurance for the past forty years with Nelson Stoker in Winnetka, IL. He and his wife Patricia have one daughter named Nancy, who was a fine hockey player, and also boasts of one granddaugher.

I have had a nice note from Dick Woodbridge who lives in Princeton. He said that he was sorry to have missed me and other PA '35ers in the Jadwin Gym in Princeton before the Yale-Princeton game last fall. Dick says that he has lived in Princeton some thirty-three years. Woodbridge retired a couple of years ago after thirty years in the New York financial world. I think he was with the NY Life Insurance Company. Most of his work had to do with investing in high technology areas and in venture capital situations. Since retirement Dick has become associated with the Space Studies Institute in Princeton. As Dick says "to bring it some common sense." It is extremely interesting because SSI does "actual research and development to advance mankind's entrance into space and living there." Wow! Dick is Executive VP and Treasurer of SSI.

Frank Hurlbutt in Hawaii is one of our most distant Classmates and also one of the most reliable in corresponding. Frank writes "Mary and I had a delightful two week voyage aboard the Royal Viking Sea last summer—San Francisco to Alaska and back. This last month I went to the East Coast to see brother Bill (PA '36) in Woodbridge, CT, and sister Carol, who now is in administration at Williams College. Had a marvelous week in northern Maine with her and her husband, Fred Stocking, a professor at Williams, just across the bridge from Campobello. I passed Andover during my recent travels but could not stop."

"Saw your pleas to Erv Baldwin to write from his macadamia nut farm in Hawaii. He should be making a mint with the current prices. Am still definitely planning to make our fiftieth reunion in '85, as I have promised you, Fred Griffin, Bob Cushman, and Elaine Eaton Perine."

Your Secretary has received a fine, long letter from Ward Wickwire. I'm not allotted enough space to quote it to you word for word. I'll take a shot at condensing it. In December 1974 Ward fell down some steel steps in a garage in Pittsburgh and fractured his head. He spent the next three years getting well again. His wife Jean had him retired from the Salem Corporation which he headed up. This was a tremendous help in his recovery. In '80 and '81 he had minor cancer operations on his jaws and radium treatments. He thinks he is completely recovered; his golf handicap is 16; and he can still get beaten by his wife Jean. Ward concludes, "I have had a great life in spite of the problems since 1974. I look forward to many more years of no office problems, continuing golf and travel, watching three married sons make their way in life, and anything else in which I may be able to contribute something."

Now here are a couple of tidbits before getting into the sad news of two Classmates. Monny Cochran is our Class representative on the 1982 Andover Alumni Fund Phonathon. I have received a terse note as follows: "Teaching US students from Saudi Arabia in Austria." It is signed "John" with a last name beginning with "H." I cannot make out the rest of his last name. I am guessing it is from Johnny Hughes, who has been lost from our Alumni Records for quite a spell. If I am wrong, please someone, who knows, straighten me out.

I am sorry to report to you the passing of Hank Bagg. He was with us for four years at PA, went on to Dartmouth, and served in the Navy in World War II. Hank lived in Holyoke, where he was President of the Henry G. Sears Co., until his retirement when he and Mrs. Bagg moved to Belmont, VT. He is survived by his wife Elizabeth, three daughters, five grandchildren, and a brother and a sister. A nice guy, a solid citizen, a fine athlete at Andover, and well liked by all. Mrs. Bagg may be written at Box 58, Belmont, VT 05730.

In early August we lost Harold "Bud" Cross, Norm's brother. He had sustained heart attacks for about three weeks, had open heart surgery, and passed away a week later. His memorial service was jammed. From Andover Bud went to Yale and in World War II he was a Captain in the 9th Air Force in France. For many years he was a VP at Acorn Structures in Acton, MA. Then he taught at Funn School, Concord. He is survived by his wife Pat and six children. Five of the six and his brother Norm are nearby. You may write Pat at Box 47, East Dennis, MA 02641.

It has been a wonderful summer in Norwalk. I hope you can all say the same about your summer.

"Grandma" Elizabeth Murphy and Herb Garrison have a tenth grandchild (8 boys, 2 girls). Of their four boys, one is a banker, one an advertising man, one a wholesale medical supplier salesman, and one a potter. The potter is producing a cookware called Spodjie. Lib's husband retires in January or as she puts it, he's "shifting gears." Lib and he will then market the Spodjie. Lib's health for the past few years has kept her from doing activities athletic, however, she wrote she "did (on a walker) a fiesty old lady in an old people's home in The Silver Whistle." More power to you, Lib! We remember those wonderful performances on the Abbot stage. Lib ended her note by saying "It's very exciting to live on a pond, the greatest joy!"

Within the past two years (following retirement) Lee Jordan reports having traveled to Curacao, to Florida, to Greece and its Islands, to Turkey, to Italy, and most recently to Spain and Portugal. "In between travels I keep busy with my concert, theatre and travelogue series, a yearly two semester course conducted by Quinebaug Valley Community College at our senior center, various organizations such as AAUW, DKG, and the Willimantic Woman's Club of which I am the new president for the next two years, as well as with other community and social activities."

Shirley Smith King reports that retirement is perfect. Now free to travel she and Harold have visited Europe many times especially enjoying England and Germany. She finds being a volunteer for Meals on Wheels very rewarding. Shirley can still enjoy family having two daughters (married) living near by. Her son Don is a minister in Wheaton, MD.

Please bear with me if I report on one more reunion of a certain crew, namely Barbara Chamberlain MacCreedy, Eleanor Johnson DuToit, Frances McTernan and Pres Coan, and Wes and me! This time the place was Ogunquit, ME, at Ellie's summer home for a July weekend. The weather was beautiful for golf, a walk along the Marginal Way, a dip in the cold Atlantic, a picnic on the beach, a game of bocce ball on the hard packed wet sand, shopping, and dancing under the stars! Doris Anderson Clark, also a summer resident of Ogunquit, entertained us one evening and joined us for most of the activities. It was a great weekend.

Ours is a class of considerable talent. Take Harry Groblewski. He writes "I am now in my third headmastership and I am beginning to believe that I know a little about running a school." His new school is the Glen Urguhart in Beverly Farms, MA. Here's what the North Shore Weeklies had to say about Harry. "He is an unexpected picture for a private school headmaster, a small, gray-bearded man in green corduroy pants, gray striped shirt, khaki hiking jacket and bow tie. He has the finely lined face of a grandfather." (Claude Fuess in a bow tie—yes, but green corduroy pants?) Harry additionally has five grandchildren which ties him with Loring Reed. Part of my last Class Notes were "word processed" into another column so if you have the summer issue of the Bulletin, be sure to read Mik Jennings 45th reunion epic. It was "electronically transferred" into the class of 1935's notes (Abbot). John Bishop report that "Mike sounds well and plans a trip up this way in the fall. He has just acquired one of those fancy new Rolls Royces." Lloyd Blanchard has retired after twenty five years as Superintendent of Schools of Westford, MA. Fred Donaldson report "the Commonwealth's new manager pay title is now Program Manager VII instead of outposted Central Office person based in Worcester Welfare Community Service Area out Office".

Roy Finch, Professor of Philosophy Hunter College, and your Secretary, retired, attended the Yale Alumni College lecture series on Periclean Athens last June and graduated with honors. Our fabulous forty-fifth reunion, officially reported in the summer Bulletin, is now history; but for the benefit of those Classmates unable to attend, I want to share with you some of the great moments and the news we were able to collect over that weekend:

The PA-rade with Angus Gordon and Mary-Emily P. Smith-Petersen holding a banner on high. (It's my turn next, Ma Em!) Frances Connelly Dowd's umbrella made quite a hit. We were ready come rain or shine and we had both. Bill Bowne's definitive account of Col. Knox's expedition with howitzers to Boston, Ye Cohorn Captain, must reading for you history buffs. I will be happy to send you a copy. His address is 1079 Lexington Ave., Schenectady NY 12309. Betty and Horace Poynter dancing in Cooley House with Miriam and Joe Machell running a close second. (He was your trip through NH and VT, Miriam. Do write us about it.) Jake Jacobs with his New Hampshire booze crossed the state line without mishap. Ann and Jake upon retirement from Inland Steel moved from Chicago east to Keene, NH. Also present were Connie and Bill Quinby who was driving force on our committee and in affairs. Ed Chapman's marvelous canyons provide us with a pictorial record of our 45th. He doesn't know it but he earned a spot on our 50th Committee as the official photographer. Ed was accompanied by wife, Toschka, and daughter, Virginia.

'77, celebrating her 5th, who left her own headquarters from time to time to charm and flatter the old folks. Connie Wood, never at a loss for words, lived up to the tradition of the Episcopal priesthood with an appropriate "grace" at Saturday night's dinner. Ann and Dick Lux, our HF, who taught so many of our sons, contributed much to our reunion as they did five years ago. They are grandparents. Would you believe it!? Jack Ware was caught re-handed swiping extra blankets from our assigned beds in Bancroft Hall much to the horror and chagrin of wife, Jane. (Please read on for more on Jack.) Vin Broderick, our esteemed and honored jurist, spoke eloquently of the trials and tribulations in the court room. No pun intended. Sally and Vin vacation in Manomet, MA. Winnie-Lou and I planned to see them in July. Sorry, Sally, we didn't make contact. We'll plan better next year. Talked with Howie Reed and Pat and Kim Loring on the stairs of Addison Gallery. Howie, one of our educators, teaches history at University of CT. Also chatted, but only too briefly at Sunday's brunch with Gitty and Bill Scheft. Says our chivalrous Bill "Gitty, one of my most important claims to fame, has just become president of the Women's Golf Association of Massachusetts!" Adrienne and George Schreiber, who rarely misses a reunion, made it again! Mary and Bill (H. Y.) Stevens have moved to Oak Bluffs, Martha's Vineyard. Remember the Sunday brunches and the ball games when they lived in Andover? Mary, I still have my mug commemorating our 40th. As for our cosmopolites (weekend singles): Ty Dines reported in from "way out in Colorado," Johnny Foskett from Geneva, IL. (Johnny has made a remarkable recovery from a bad accident last year), Tom Lenagh from Westport, CT, Tom Rockwell from North Andover, Professor Bert Davis from Tallahassee, FL, and Pat Deming from Hampden, CT.

Pat, remembered for the the superb job he did running our 40th, was so concerned that your new scribe without any New Haven connections of credentials whatsoever would fail to report the news of our Yale Classmates that he has arranged to have the Yale Alumni Magazine and Journal sent prepaid to 3 Fox Hill Lane, Norwell, MA 02061! The June issue (Prexy Giamatti on the cover) has already arrived. How about that! Probably the first Princetonian ever so honored. I promise, if all you Yales send in our news, I will include everything "fit to print" and Pat's fears will be unfounded.

Our man on Martha's Vineyard, no less a personage than Henry Beetle Hough, editor of the Vineyard Gazette files this feature news item dated June 25th under headlines "Agency Appoints Temporary Head." It appears that the Vineyard Community Services director suddenly and unexpectedly resigned leaving this important agency in a state of chaos. To maintain the credibility of the Community Services, the Board of Directors called on none other than our very own Jack Ware (who else?) to make the transition as smooth as possible" as they seek a permanent executive director. We are not surprised at their choice. Is this retirement, Jack?

Finally our heartfelt thanks and appreciation to Pat and Angus Gordon for a superb job these past five years in reporting the news of our Classmates faithfully, accurately, and impartially. With your help I hope to do the same. A final suggestion: It's never too soon to plan for our fiftieth in 1987—NOW! Plan to attend and plan to set aside each of the next five years a generous amount! Jacobs, Quinby, and Ware will update us from time to time on the progress of our 50th gift to the Academy.

The 15 letters requesting news produced 6 responses, but four of these were letters. This is what makes the secretary's job fun and full of interest. We had some late leftovers from Spring so I am inundated notwithstanding the school's plea from brevity.

The recent letters echo retirement and/or poor times. Wally Dunlap retired from the MA. Welfare Department in early 1982, but keeps happily busy painting his home in Haverhill, and dabbling in "backyard horticulture." Andy Palmer, another retiree (I think), has moved to 17 Springside Drive, Hendersonville, NC 28739, having been in the 2 house market for a bit. But no particular news . . . Pat Flournoy (retired) spends May-December at 1420 So. Bellaire St., Denver, 80222, and the balance in Sarasota. He says the hot months in FL are deadly (Banzhaf: please note), but loves Denver and its people. He also extols the life of the single man, but notwithstanding, invites me and Barbara for a FL visit. He failed to get a visit from Damon Carter who, he thought, was attending Irv Pettengill's wedding in Naples (When? Details?). He can't get any word from Marshall Scott or Cupe Coxe. Neither can I. Can anyone, especially those two, help? He asks about Denver Classmates: Wilhelm (Denver), Taplin (Englewood).

John Allen's civil engineering business is hard hit by the economy, but he is offered some compensation by becoming a great grandfather in February—at age 61! This has to be a first. A nice note from Cy Nute ("semi-retirement now") starting up a small computer sales and service business, in a small island resort town, Avalon, CA (PO Box 156, zip 90704), with some nice sentiments of his days at PA and Yale.

Hank Williams did himself up brown with a long, newsy and "beautifully" typed letter full of the humor he accuses me of. He noted a triple bypass operation 9 years ago; retirement from a Carrier Corporation division; and the reirement of wife, Dorothy, who was 30 years a planning engineer for McDonnell-Douglas. She makes lists which keep him busy, he says. They're in route to Europe and retracing the path of the 80th Division of Patton's Third Army. Worried about kids there that might look like him, Dorothy noted "those KIDS would be around 40." (It was safer in New Guinea . . .). They live in Tulsa and have a cottage on Grand Lake. He sees Tom Bird, a successful oil man and rancher, now living in Kansas. T. Bird: please write, I've never heard from you. Hank says he'll get back to our 45th and hopes to bring brother-in-law, Tony Godinez, and brother Dave. Do your best.

Anent the 45th, I'm expecting Fred Kent, Adams, Spink Davis, Harrison, Meader, Pike, and possibly Burns and Ireland in Hartford to plan a fund-raising for us on Sept. 13.

Older letters received late: Tom Conlin,

(Fullerton, CA) is still President of United Can Company and enjoying it, but says he doesn't briefcase as much home as he did. He travels but the charisma of jumbo jets vanished for him some time ago. I see Bill Lynch's name as a consultant to a Hilliard oil fund I invested in (and from which I've yet to see cash) in the field of oil geology . . . Ken Fleming retired from EAL piloting in 1979. His first wife had died in 1978 and he is now married to Frances Church, and they are living at 5730 SE Miles Grant Road, Stuart, FL 33494. He golfs and fishes and saw Wooster Richard at a recent PA dinner. Finally, Harry Adriance's July letter notes another documentary film travel again to Switzerland via train, boat, bus, and a helicopter trip around the Matterhorn. He noted in The New York Times, the marriage of Elizabeth Harrison (Ted and Marge's) to Arthur Hadley, on June 26. I did see—and clip—that. Beth is a lawyer with Choate, Hall & Stewart, Boston; a graduate of Exeter (!) and a PBK at Yale.

The last newsletter omitted the sad news of the death of Walter Musgrave on January 27, 1982, of cardiogenic shock. His wife, Lillian tells me he had been very well for 3 years, so I suppose there is a little consolation that it has ended. In addition to Lillian he left 2 children and a grandchild.

PA '38ers at the Yale '42, 40th reunion in May were: Abelson, Adams, Spink Davis, Harrison, Ireland, Keller, Lee, Leggett, Murphy, Pattinson, Schulhof, Sumner Smith (and father, '08) and Wilhelm. Yale President Giamatti (PA '56) addressed this eminent class and said he owed his position to the love and precision teaching of one Ted Harrison. He said it led him into teaching English, but, not being as good at it, he took the "other" job! The second compliment to Ted was the loud and long applause.

Our 45th Reunion will be June, 1983. Mark it—and come!

"Well, Sir, here we are again," as Grandpa said in the play You Can't Take It With You many years ago, but there seems to be a dearth of news this time around.

As this column is being written the sun is shining brightly here in West Tisbury but I can hear the Nobska Foghorn in the distance so Vineyard Sound must still be shrouded in fog and mist.

The summer has gone by much too quickly and next week we start the trek back to Maryland. This summer we have not heard from any Classmates except for Midge Coll Fields and Jean Cross Maier who spent a fantastic two weeks here on the Vineyard with me. I did talk to Billy Godfrey Richardson briefly while in Maine in August. She was on her way to Vermont the next day for the weekend with grandchildren.

Next June is our 45th and we are going to try to get a group together then to plan for the big "50." Everybody will be getting a card in the mail in the next few weeks and later expect a brief questionnaire which we hope you will be kind enough to fill in and return so that the reunion committee can get an idea of what you all would like to do in '88.

That's about all for now. If you want news in this column about Classmates, you have to generate same! Best wishes to all—and please don't wait for me to send you a card!

Has passage into the sixties brought on the blues? I suggest a trip back to Andover as the best tonic. It makes no difference when in the year you go. The incomparable beauty of the place is for all seasons. Only dimly remembered is the terrible scorn with which Horace Poynter greeted a mispronunciation of "Labienus," or the misery of slogging through the slush to class on an early February morning, or the frustration brought on by Monte Peck's refusal to concede you that last inch on the pole. Happy memories emerge and one departs with spirits restored.

Received a good letter from Mel Liverance, or, as he describes it, "a report from the Colorado Territory, our home for the past 11 years." He writes: "I have fully retired from the Manville Corporation as of 8/1/82, and now function as Director of Marketing for Love and Associates, P.C., a small and refreshingly innovative architectural firm in Denver. Farewell Fortune 500's . . . tie . . . and jacket! Never too late." Mel and June became grandparents for the first time last spring with the birth of a granddaughter, Erin June, daughter of their son Stephen and his wife Cindy. It appears that John Kebabian, Mel's old PA roommate, has special reason to rejoice at Erin's arrival. John and Mel married sisters which elevates John to the status of great uncle. I see John and Phyllis every now and again at functions in New Haven, where he continues as owner and proprietor of the highly respected oriental rug business that bears his name.

The ever-diligent Bulletin staff has sent me the April issue of New England Society of American Foresters News Quarterly, announcing the presentation of the Society's 1982 Distinguished Forester Award to Howard Mason. Since 1951, Hap has been the Chief Forester to the Peck Lumber Company of Westfield, MA, with responsibility for the management of 10,000 forested acres. The list of associations dedicated to the proper use of woodlands, river watersheds, and parks, in which he has been an active member, officer, and, in some instances, founder, is too long to set out here. It can be said with confidence that he knows about everything there is to know about trees, taken singly or collectively. Hap and his wife Louise live in Russell, MA, and have three sons, David, Derrick and Bruce. The Award honors Hap for a distinguished career, and he is to be congratulated.

Finally, it is my sad duty to report the death of Donald Currier, who died on April 23, 1982. Don's wife Ethel lives at 12 Eno Place, Simsbury, CT 06070.

As summer lingers, and with fall, I hope, just around the corner, I get immersed in PA memorabilia. Year Book, Class Directory, instructions from the Alumni Office, short notes from Classmates, random jottings on travel documents, from all of which I must try to produce a column for your enjoyment.

I should have remembered from Saturday night "bull-sessions" of yore that there is nothing like an injection of politics to produce response. And so, out of Missoula, MT, a letter finds its way to Bermuda. Bob McGiffert, Dean of Journalism at the University, and wielding as trenchant a pen as ever he did in Alan Cook's English IV and as Editor of the Phillipian, writes that while his affection for Pres Bush has not diminished over the years, he cannot espouse his politics. I had thought in my innocence as a "furriner" (James H. Gans) that any member of PA '40 entering politics deserved our support and good wishes. I should have remembered the second verse of my National Anthem: "confound their politics." It's all academic now, as Pres has withdrawn from the political scene.

Before flying in June to those "wild and woolly wastes beyond the Hudson"—AZ—I checked the Alumni Directory to find we have a classmate, David Withington in Phoenix. However, a call to one of that name elicited that he'd never heard of Andover. As he's not in our Year Book, perhaps someone could advise.

Returning home via Cleveland, I was able to contact Jim Burke in Cincinnati. I last saw Jim and Ann on their honeymoon in Bermuda in 1947. They are both well and see Frank and Mary Soule in Hilton Head, SC from time to time. A brief note from last month advises that Dick Sisson is monarch of all he surveys overlooking the Atlantic in Kill Devil Hills, NC.

Frank Carr was always a modest member of our class and still is. A recent letter asked me to downplay his great community work. Frank writes: "I founded INROADS about 12 years ago to prepare talented minorities for careers in business and engineering in Corporate America. We have now 1500 such students in 15 cities enrolled in pre-college and college programmes—and work with some 500 companies. We are privately supported—no Federal or State funds. Students must perform at college or on the job, otherwise they are dropped and replaced." Surely, in this day of the Welfare State, Frank deserves our congratulations.

Hugh Masters and I participated in an Old-Timers Race (?) for former skippers of Luders—16 yachts. Hugh has not lost his touch and finished first, with yours truly third—there were six yachts! Still on the nautical scene, I am advised from Marblehead that Tom Rowen and Lil have been cruising New England waters in his new "Dutchess".

A well-known weekly newsmag writing on businessmen's lunch illustrated this feature with a photo in a popular Wall Street bistro. Unless these eyes have deceived me there were our own John Kubie and Dave Gile among those present.

We had a pleasant visit with Adair Gans who spent two weeks here in early summer with her husband Francis "Red" Lobdell. Adair is delighted to be listed as a member of our class, and is always eager to hear of old friends.

There has been some constructive criticism received at Bulletin Headquarters that some classnotes are too stereotyped and relate mainly to the Eastern seaboard. Geographically I am east of the East, and this column may reflect that fact. However, it is mainly of and from our classmates in the East that I hear, so come on you characters out there in "Porky" Benton's "wastes beyond the Hudson" and drop me a few lines so that I am not labelled an "Eastern effete".

Closing, I would report that I joined the Grandfather's Club a fortnight ago. To sor Stephen and his wife, Nancy, a son, Graham—he could be PA 2000 in time for our 60th!

It's almost like cramming for an exam to get my act together and meet the deadline for the Bulletin news. While writing this I just had a call from Mimi Calder Dunn's daughter, Barbara, confirming a dinner date for all of us within the next few days. Mimi and husband, Jim, will be visiting in this area with Barbara and her family and have agreed to join us here in Barrington for a reunion dinner.

Our love, concern and sympathy go out to Addie Waterhouse Mackay. Her husband, Phillip, died in April after a long illness. She plans to stay on in St. Augustine where her two children are near by. Phyllis Campbell Crowell boasts of a new grandson born last May to daughter, Terry. Tha makes a total of 11; six grandsons and five granddaughters. I'll bet no one else can mee or beat those figures! Phyllis is working in travel agency in Sherman Oaks, CA along with attending college one day a week. A busy but great life she's enjoying!

We had a happy reunion with our daughter, Judy and family who were on leave from Bangkok in July. Our two granddaughters are without doubt the most beautiful and intelligent little ones in captivity. No prejudice, of course.

My negligence in contacting each of you individually is shameful, but so is the lack of news received from the class. Which came first—your negligence or mine? really doesn't matter. I will try to do better and hope that you will send me your news for next time.

The well attended June reunion and the effort that preceded it gave me a great deal of news for the previous column. For that reason there has not been much correspondence since June.

Jack Carr reports an active practice in general psychiatry in Hingham, MA. He and wife, Marion, have four teenagers including a daughter who graduated Andover this June. The note indicates a continuing close tie to the school. In five years time maybe we will entice Jack back to reunion.

A recent release announced the appointment of John Carter to the National Council of Architectural Registration which studies and recommends educational qualifications for architectural degrees. John is a prominent New Hampshire architect and is the New England director of the American Institute of Architects. He has received numerous awards and honors. His design of St. George's Church in Durham, NH, is included in a list of the 18 best churches built in the country in the last 25 years. John is living in Nashua, NH, and is married to the former Julie Macauley of Grosse Pointe, MI. They have six children.

Our Vice President continues to make news. On May 29 George along with five other distinguished Americans received an honorary degree from Bowdoin College. And on September 1, his daughter Dorothy was married to Richard LeBlond in Kennebunkport, ME, with a reception for 250 friends and family held at his summer home there. Dorothy, the youngest and only daughter, was the last to marry. At last count with all four sons married, George has four grandchildren. While he and Barbara could not make our reunion, we did send him a souvenir T-shirt which he wrote had already been put to good use for daily jogging.

We just heard from the school that J. Burke Shay died August 8, 1981. I saw Burke on repeated occasions in New York. He had a long career in the textile industry. His wife, who is the sister of Dick O'Leary 43, is living at 500 East 83 Street in New York. The Shays have six children.

Retired Coast Guard Captain James Morton and his wife, Barbara, died on July 9 in the crash of a Pan American jet in Kenner, LA. The plane exploded two minutes after take off from New Orleans on a flight to Las Vegas. They had been living in Key West, FL since Jim's retirement. Both were former Andover residents though they had lived in Alaska, California, Virginia, and Florida during his Coast Guard career which included a volunteer tour in Viet Nam. The Mortons had three sons; the oldest James is a Coast Guard lieutenant in Virginia Beach.

It will be another 5 years until reunion—too long to wait to call you all for news. We would especially like to hear from some of you who have been long absent from these columns.

Woody Dulaney, Jr. writes from Louisville that the advertising agency he founded ten years ago is now in the five million dollar range. Small by New York standards, but big by Louisville's, he points out. Paul Miou—Classmate Paul writes that he is proud to be working with the United Nations Fund for Population Activities, which he says has made a "vital" (Is vital quite the word?) contribution to the population problem. A New York State Association of Life Underwriters press release brings tidings that PA Gilbert & Sullivan star Benny Brewster, Jr. has been re-elected Executive Vice President of the Association. He has appropriately served on the Board and as resident of the Capital Artists Resident Opera Company. He is a member of the Albany Diocesan Commission on the Ministry, and has served three terms on the board of the Episcopal Cathedral of All Saints in Albany. Gene Bernardin married for thirty years to Carolyn Riggs has four children. Three of whom are college graduates; Trinity, Roger Williams and the University of New Hampshire. The 4th is presently a senior at Suffolk University. Amy and son, Gene, are both in the insurance business with big Gene in Andover, where Gene owns Mortgage Insurance Administrators, and is President and Treasurer of Bernardin Insurance Agency, Inc. (So far, Chicago's new Archbishop has said nothing publicly about cousin Gene). Buzz Ballard, married for thirty years, met his wife Jeannette Haien at the University of Michigan either during or slightly after the war. The Ballard's, who have one daughter, married, live in New York. Buzz is a partner of LeBoeuf, Lamb, Leeby and MacRae. He is alleged, at least self-alleged, to be a doughty salmon fisherman. Peter Baker—who, disloyally lives on Exeter Road in Newfields, NH, reports that his wife is the "love of my life" (Placing this sort of thing in the class news contributes to domestic tranquility.) Daughter, Kimball, is in the wine business in San Francisco. Son, Walter, is studying for a masters degree in international management at Thunderbird School, Phoenix. Peter, Jr. attends Boston University School of Theatre Arts. Peter, who took early retirement from Arthur D. Little, Inc. is joining the good guys - in the paper business, that is. He is our new class agent, for those of you who have not been paying attention. Pete praises Pete Roome for outstanding performance for 13 years as his predecessor, but points out our individual gifts have been below average!! He urges us all to respond a trifle more generously. Richard Abrons received the New York Parks Council Community Annual Service Award—presumably for his tree planting activities.

Chris Eatough wrote last winter, after a lapse of 38 years. He reports that he was at the 25th reunion in '69 and is firmly committed to reappearing on this side of the Atlantic in 1984 for our 40th. He and Margaret have been married 32 years and have two daughters, one married to a charming South African boy and living about a ten minute drive from the Eatoughs. The other daughter works as assistant public relations officer for Thomas TV in London. Chris's life revolves around the construction industry and he has continued contact with Jerry O'Brien with whom he did a job in Saudi Arabia for Aramco about ten years ago. Chris is in quantity surveying of which there is apparently no equivalent in the United States. In addition to Jerry O'Brien, over the years, Bud Smith, Norm Hascall, Dick Harrington, and John Kellett have visited the Eatoughs. Apparently Bud's visit included a round of golf, which filled Chris with a thirst for vengeance which he hopes to slake in 1984. Chris and Maggie get in plenty of traveling—South Africa in 1979, Kenya last year (where he saw Wheels Whitney's name in the visitors book at the Treetops Hotel), late last winter a couple of weeks in St. Lucia. Finally, Chris urges any PA '44's who plan English trips to write him what their plans are: Bearsden, Ridgeway, Horsell, Surrey, GU214QP Woking (04862) 63719

The summer is over and gone so fast, it's almost like we didn't have one. In September I often think of those days 41 years ago when I first arrived on Andover Hill. As an overawed, pudgy, little 14 year old, I was completely over my head assigned to Rockwell House "for the more mature" boys. Some of you guys even had whiskers! Memories of being prepped by guys like Elly Vose, Mase Phelps, Cal Burrows and Ace Wickwire are vivid today. I think that the most remarkable thing, other than treasured memories, is the fact that many of the guys I met those long years ago are still close friends. How about you?

Speaking of Rockwellites, got a note from Ches McCracken, the original proprietor of this space. He's happily back in New England as VP of the First National Bank of Boston, having taken early retirement from Morgan Guaranty in NYC. He's living in Sherborn, MA after many years in the Garden State. Sally and their daughter, Liz, were due to join him in June after school ended. Son Doug is a freshman at Duke and sons Bob and Stuart are staying in NJ where they are "gainfully employed".

Fred Zonino was my partner at a recent member-guest golf tournament at our club. For an "old jock" he really hits the ball well although we didn't win anything for our efforts. Zo finds business a little tough, but is plugging hard as always.

Our oldest son Milt, PA '70, was married in June to Miss Sylvia Scott of Dallas, TX. We seized this as an excuse to take Jack and Patty Horner up on their longstanding invitation to visit them in Ft. Worth. We had a houseparty week and had a great time between Dallas and Ft. Worth and had a great time with more in-laws and family than we knew existed! Jack is Exec. VP of Bell Helicopter Division of Textron Corp. and I very much enjoyed a plant tour and a chopper overview of the whole D-FW complex. We observed the motto "Keep Texas Green—bring money," but it was worth every nickle!

We spent a great week-end at Lee Bergstrom's Sagamore Beach manse with Lee, Burt Page and Pat Agnew in July. Great food, great company, great time! Lee is a resident of Southport, CT now and sees the Kutschers regularly.

I was delighted to see the Alumni Fund going over $1 million and was pleased to see the part '45 played in it. John Blake has done one great job for us and the school and deserves our support again this year.

One of the toughest things to avoid in writing this column is getting in a rut. The rut I am in is that I regularly see old friends from the class and keep up with what they are doing, but they are the same names over and over again. There is nothing I can do about this. You have to help by dropping a line or calling me up, or, best of all, stopping to see us when you're in the area. Let's hear from you, please.

Back in June, McLannahan fell asleep on the 2 pm Jitney to Southampton. Upon awakening (20 miles short of home) he thought he had slept past his stop, so he jumped off in a big hurry. Before he recovered his senses, the Bus roared away leaving Duer alone on a barren stretch of the Sunshine Highway, at least 15 miles from civilization, as we know it. No phone, no deli, nothing but a broken down filling station, scrub oak, sand, and the occasional Turkey Buzzard making lazy circles in the sky. Before severe panic set in, a maroon

Mercedes idled alongside the bewildered broker and offered Mac a ride to the East. The driver turned out to be none other than Fred Shuman '57 with family and daughter, Abby '83, a Classmate of William McLanahan '83. Small World Dept. Fred delivered Duer to SH well ahead of the Jitney.

Recently, mid November, Chairman Roger A. Neuhooff of Eastern Broadcasting Corp. was on a panel with Chairman Tom Wyman '47 of Columbia Broadcasting Corp., at a Communications Seminar at Amherst College. Asked how Tom was, "RA" quipped: "Beyond the Paley".

Correction on last column, re: Golf with Friday. He actually beat me easily; I believe he plays 4 times a week, his title at Drexel, etc., is Sr. VP Golf and entertainment.

Played tennis with Mary and Cam Paradise on the recently resurfaced court of the Scudder Compound on Shelter Island. Cam had picked Sheila and me up in Southold in a fishing boat of dubious vintage, a porgy-man's reject, propelled by a 1 horse Sea Gull, so inadequate for the task we were passed by jelly fish. Great fun and we won.

Have you all completed your Christmas shopping? I haven't gotten a single gift or card yet. Did you go to the Exeter game? Or the Yale game? Or whatever? Who won? It's only September as I sit before my "correcting" Selectric II and make up all this stuff well in advance of the actual printing date.

The US Amateur was played at the Country Club (in Brookline) where Martin Begien was conspicuous in his Carol Reed casuals. If your telly has a sharp picture, you may have caught Bege in the ABC coverage. He and Kate attended a ribbon-cutting ceremony celebrating the Grand Opening of Dick Phelps' Superior Pet plant 4 in Plymouth, MA, June. Superior Pet is a leading manufacturer of Dog Chews, Kitty Litter, and Cat Canapes.

Dick Lincoln is still teaching at Texas Christian and lives in Fort Worth. The Curriers sold the biz and are somewhere "out west" until Thanksgiving. Whit Budge answered my double card and keeps up with PA thru the annual Bohemian Picnic, where trustee "Tim" Ireland brings the good news from NY. That's about it for now Lads. If only you would write or ring me up when you are in NYC, this opus could be improved immeasurably. Happy Thanksgiving and a Merry Christmas to one and all!

This evening, just before sitting down to write these notes, I read in the newspaper with pleasure, but with no surprise that Tom Wyman will replace William Paley as Chairman of CBS when Mr. Paley retires next April. As Chief Executive Officer, President and Chairman, too, of this 4 billion dollar entertainment-information-communication enterprise, Tom has come a long way from the days of "Wyman, Pugh and Drury, Too." From Ann Flowers Howlett: "Our reunion was such a success. Seems a shame that so many of our Classmates dragged their heels and didn't come. They missed a very good weekend! Had a phone call from Nancy Hamilton Eglee—wanting a report on the reunion." Nancy, how about news about the Eglee family?

From Jean Ritchey Ross about reunion: "I was hesitant to go at first, but my husband urged me and I was pleasantly surprised and very glad I did. It was fun to see some Classmates and reminisce. 'Do you remember tiffin?' 'How about those chaperoned trips to Boston?' Posture class, speed reading machines, vespers, lights out and studying by flashlight under the blankets. I was sorry I couldn't have stayed the entire weekend and was especially sorry there was such a poor showing of girls from our class. I'm determined to make our (ugh) 40th and will try to contact others ahead of time."

From Carolyn Sackett Coleburn: "—a fine reunion weekend. Even though the Abbot crowd was small, we had a marvelous time. When our 40th rolls around, we'll have to beat the bushes a bit and tell everyone what a good time can be had."

From Eleanor Tucker: "The Class of '47 Reunion Dinner was most pleasant --. Recently I had lunch with Alice Sweeney and told her of all of you and your lives and your appreciation of Abbot. She used a lovely phrase to describe the years after World War II, saying 'the looseness of the times made the Abbot girls feel restless about the rules of the school.' By the time this Bulletin is out the plans for our 35th Reunion in June will be well under way and you will be kept posted as usual.

Jan Ehrnberg is living in Mexico City where he manages a Swedish company, Al-falava S.A., which sells machinery to the food industry and dairy farmers. He writes that he has 2 children and his daughter is currently a senior at Exeter.

Josh Hill has become nationally famous as a crossword puzzle whiz by entering his first puzzle competition recently. The competition which was sponsored by Games Magazine started out with 7,700 participants each of whom sent their trial entries into the magazine. On the basis of this, 2,500 were invited to continue in the tournament by a series of mail puzzles resulting in the selection of 250 finalists who came together in New York City in August from 26 states and various other places. After an arduous series of puzzles and tests he subsequently learned that he emerged as 16th in the nation. These skill had already emerged during his Korean War service as a cryptographer. After finishing college at Dartmouth and graduate school at New York University and began his career in printing and publishing field which he has continued to date.

After warming up in the context with such definitions as "Topsy television cop" the answer to which turned out to be "Starsky & Hootch," he cites as his proudest moment was discovering that "Drunk-en exterminator" in 15 letters comes out as "The Pieeyed Piper."

Paul Altrocci went into private neurological practice with 2 medical associates in Bend, OR, after having spent 16 years at a Palo Alto clinic. Bob Baldwin is living in North Andover and is currently Director of the industrial and commercial division of Landvest, Inc. Art Contas has been declared one of Boston's most eligible bachelors by one of the Hearst newspapers which suggests that there is life in at least some of us yet. Bill Engstrom swears that he has made his last heart and lung machine but I don't believe it. Bob Harding is an Associate Professor of Anthropology at the University of Pennsylvania and has recently been doing some work in Sierra Leone where he and his wife were asked to a survey of large mammals in a new National Park being sent up there. Dar Tucker's musically talented daughter was married in August to a musical colleague. They will make music in Dallas. Arnold Schoeller is living in Reno and is still in court reform work.

Think Reunion in June.

Don Sutherland, who continues as President and Corporate General Partner of Quincy Partners, a New York firm specializing in leveraged buy-outs, reports that Duncan Kidd has been named Vice President, Corporate Development, of Amstar Corporation.

More sad news. Bruce Smith died in Ma in a boating accident on the Ohio River at Louisville, Kentucky. At the time of his death, Bruce was general manager of the Louisville division of The Cincinnati Cordage and Paper Company. Bruce was well known in the industry, having served in 1979-80 as president of the National Paper Trade Association. Prior to joining Cincinnati Cordage, Bruce had been with Louisville Paper Company for 24 years, and became chairman of the board and chief executive officer of that company in 1977. Bruce is survived by his mother, Mrs. William D. Siebern, his wife Diane and three daughters and a son. Diane's address is PO Box 204, Harrods Creek, Kentucky 40027.

Visiting San Francisco last month for the ABA convention, Emily and I had a delightful Japanese dinner with Bob Brelsford, who is restoring a townhouse two blocks up the hill from Fisherman's Warf, managing an apartment building and other real estate he own and collecting and restoring old cars. Locked in his first-floor garage were, the wood-sided (real wood) 1940 Buick station wagon that Paul Newman drove in Hud, which Bob brought from Warner Brothers, and a yellow 1955 Buick convertible that was pictured in the Aug. 30 issue of Newsweek. Ever think something made the year you finished college would be an antique?

The next day we had lunch with Billy Lee, Al, Moe, and Cheri and Beverly Tuller, a PA parent who has been active in school affairs in San Francisco. We toured Billy's offices, checked out his current architectural projects, and lunched in the Palace Room of the Sheraton Palace a couple of blocks away. Al, retired from the US Navy Supply Corps, markets specialized instruments for military planes. We regaled his wife with the story of the day Al, through a misunderstanding, arrived a half hour late for an indoor track meet, laced on one shoe while he placed the other, stood up, touched his toes twice, got into the blocks and tied the school record for the forty yard dash. We missed seeing Steve Booth, who teaches English at Berkeley. He was packing to spend a semester at the University of Hawaii and could not join us for lunch.

Trivia quiz: What two members of our class were born in Shanghai?

Bill Coakley became president of the North Middlesex Savings Bank in Ayer, MA, in April. Bill has been a banker since he finished Harvard and the Army. He spent eighteen years with First of Boston in a variety of positions, including setting up a retail bank organization in England, setting up a mortgage company in the deep south and running a subsidiary bank in Holyoke, and he was Vice-President for retail banking for the Bank of Maine in Augusta immediately prior to assuming his present position.

Bill Gilland has become Dean of the University of Oregon School of Architecture and Allied Arts. Since getting his Bachelor's and Master's from Princeton, Bill has been associated with a number of firms on the east and west coasts. He is now a partner in Gilland and Peting in Eugene. He taught at Berkeley and joined the U. of O. faculty in 1969. In his career he has designed office buildings, theaters, educational facilities and residences. He was principal in charge of design and production for the Chemistry Building and the Science Library at the U. of CA, Davis, in the middle 70's. He is currently national secretary of the Association of Collegiate Schools of Architecture. He and Mary have two children.

Halsey Sandford and Barbara paid us a visit at the tag end of a white water canoe clinic they attended this summer. They are also into serious running. About twenty miles into the Louisville Marathon last fall, Barb, running side by side with Halsey, looked over her shoulder, saw the nearest female runner of her vintage gaining on her, told Halsey goodbye, moved out and left him and won her age group.

Earlier this week we put our oldest, Grace, on a plane for Taiwan, where she will be an English instructor at Tunghai University, in Taichung for the next two years. I am taking off Sunday to drive third child, Emily, back to PA for her Upper year. Incidentally, I had a brief visit with Tony Quainton at commencement at Princeton (his daughter graduated with all sorts of honors from the Woodrow Wilson School). He is in Nicaragua.

Jerry Lasley and I missed connections on this issue, so that he gets first crack at the space next issue with all the hot news from the Northeast.

Let me tell you of my telephone conversations with several of our classmates this last period. When Dave and I were in Denver last May I called Rebecca Fuller Maguire to find out she is an accountant for Tel-Communications in Englewood, CO. With a family she is a busy woman.

Later I called Barbara Wood Emmons who told me these details. Four years ago they moved to Burlington, VT, where her husband is now the head of the telephone company. They have three sons and a daughter who have left home and are spread around. Barbara said they have two big weekends, like Christmas and another each year, so they can all be together. Now they are pleased to have two grandchildren. During our conversation she said that she does not work, but likes to lead a busy life. Barb and her husband play as much golf as possible. We had fun catching up to date.

Joan Morrison Mason and Dick, who is a '48 graduate of Andover, are now living in Parkersburg, West Virginia. On the phone we covered many years since neither of us had forgotten our times at Abbot. Joan recognized my name right off. She said their children are quite grown up. They are living in Portland, ME, Seattle, WA, and Marietta, OH. The latter one is in college just over the river from home: With the busy life the child leads, Joan does not see her child at home often. Joan is a registered nurse, but is not working in that field. Her husband is the president of a firm in Parkersburg. They both love the area. Joan is now a professional yoga teacher for several different groups. There are exercises for breathing, stretching, and one for pregnant women. It certainly is interesting to see what each of us have done since Abbot.

The fourth call was to Joan Nielsen Gray. I had not heard from her since we roomed next to each other. I learned that her husband, Roy, is in the mining business. Over the years they have moved around, from Ridgewood, NJ, Australia, Salt Lake to Palo Alto, CA . . . Joan said they still own a home in Australia. One or more of their children still live over there since Joan told me they were with them in CA this summer. Wish I had asked which kind of mining Roy was in. Joan said she did sell real estate a few years ago.

Now after school begins and life settles down please drop me a note so we can stay in touch. I just wonder how many of us are grandparents? Let's see who falls into that group. I hope I have not made any serious mistakes in writing down the notes from the phone calls I made. If I did, let me know and I will correct next time. I loved hearing from you.

On March 16th of this year, 1982, Dana Smith died of cancer. At the time of his death he was the General Counsel for Lufthansa German Airlines. We all knew Dana, he was with us for four years, starting as a Junior in Rockwell. I suspect that almost everyone in the class has a special memory of him, but I remember best the first time I saw him pole vault. I had seen photographs of vaulters, but until I saw Dana, in the Cage, racing over a dirt track, building up speed to lift his body high up in the air, I'd never realized how hard it was. He was sensational to watch and the memory of his clearing the bar, of his remarkable athletic ability, of his exuberance, of his triumphs, has lasted vividly, for over 30 years now. In the Army, he once wrote me, he became a member of a parachute team; back home, I heard, he was an active motorcyclist. He and his wife, Lois, came to our 20th Reunion with a new baby in a stroller. I was amazed that they made the effort. And very grateful for it. It was the last time I saw Dana.

He is survived by his wife and three sons, his mother, and two brothers. To them we send our deepest sympathy.

Ben Brown, I did not know as well. He entered our class in 1951, a graduate of Mt. Joy High School in Pennsylvania. Had he not left PA at the end of his first year, he would have graduated with us, but instead he went on to the University of Pennsylvania. I remember him as a great soccer player. Others remember his unusual strength. Yet, with all his talents, he was modest, and fun, and someone whose presence was known despite the brief time he spent with us. His death, in 1979, came to my attention, just last week.

Tony Lopez has retired from the USAF effective July 1. He's now manager, Business Development for Latin America, Vollrath Company, Sheboygan, WI, living on a farm in western Tennessee, and travelling constantly throughout L.A. His daughter, Linda, is married and in the Peace Corps. His son Rick ('77) just graduated from the Univ of MD. His son, Mike is a senior at UCLA and Anthony, a junior at the same college.

Speaking of sons and daughters, Pete Roe, told me about his son Adam, the third grader; son Jodie; the Hobie/Cat expert, and daughter Ashley, the tennis star. He also mentioned that his wife, Robin, was regularly published in the L.I. edition of the The New York Times. I didn't know that. I understand that Bob Pelletreau is back in Washington, now on assignment to the defense department. I hear that he is in charge of the Red Sea, Arabian Gulf, and Middle East desk, and that he has three girls, 13, 11, & 9.

James Rayen, the painter, has had a busy year. In February, his work was shown as part of a group exhibition at Studio Faculty, Wellesly College; this summer, at another group exhibition at the Kendall Gallery in Wellfleet, MA. In addition he has had a triptych painting commissioned by Cinimon Associates of Brookline, MA. Tad Girdler, whose left leg was amputated at the hip as the result of an operation for cancer in 1978, has not only recovered, but, as he told me, is "no longer a threat to anyone in the swimming pool." Tad is Vice President of Corporate Relations for Binney & Smith in their NY office. His oldest daughter just graduated from Sarah Lawrence and is about to enter Medical School. His second daughter is a junior at Emerson while his son is a 9th grader in Greenwich. When he told me that his wife, Jean was a ceramist, I immediately pointed out that he meant ceramicist. I now realize that he was gracious enough not to correct me. Anyway, she does clay, and, I hear, very well. Fred Fenton and his wife, Billie, helped a nuclear freeze initiative qualify for the November Ballot in CA. "Reversing the arms race," writes Fred, "is our number one priority." Bill Joseph, the lawyer, is now President of Playschool Association, one of New York's major charities for children. Joe Mesic's son, Chip, who graduated from Kenyon, is a consultant to an English teacher. I think I wrote that down too quickly. It sounds like something's missing. I'll have to check with Joe. Speaking about check with Joe, reminds me that our 30th Reunion Gift is coming up along with our 30th Reunion. I'll definitely be at the Reunion. As a matter of fact, I hope to be as fit and trim as I was when I was Captain of our undefeated football team.

Merry Christmas and Happy New Year to everyone.

Lovely summer growing flowers and vegetables . . . Lots of golf and tennis—2 week-end golfing trips . . . Took Troy to 1st year at College—off to Bermuda in Oct. and again in Jan. for senior tennis tourney—Council taking up my spare moments. Betsey Beeson Owens

What a happy way to begin the column, and hope that you all enjoyed the summer as much as Betsey has . . . how about writing me and letting me know?

Marti Belknap's card says she teaches graduate psychology classes through the University of N. Colorado and private yoga classes in her home . . . During the summer she has a natural foods lunch cart at the Medical Center in Denver . . . she would love some Abbot visitors . . . anyone going skiing? Nancy Donnelly Bliss wrote from Maine where she is summering with the family . . . Sarah will be a senior at Pine Manor, and Daniel will be a soph. at Bates College—he went on two canoe trips on the Allogash River! What an exciting experience.

Ferd and I spent three great weeks in Europe on business/pleasure and I called Leslie Burgiel Moore in London, but she was not there! Wish we could hear more from all the gals who are in Europe! July 1st Sandy (our 16 yr. old) and I drove to Wakefield, RI and spent the night with Audrey Davis Trowbridge and her great family . . . we had a ball catching up on news and Sandy and I hated to leave the next day for Andover where Sandy spent 6 weeks at their fantastic summer program! She just loved the summer there; made new, wonderful friends, and learned so much in her major and minor courses! She will highly recommend the experience to any, and all, who are at all interested! Our daughter Betsey began her senior year at Vanderbilt majoring in business/psy; Eric began his soph. year at St. Lawrence in pre-engineering.

Well that about wraps it up for this month's class notes . . . we need to hear from more of you out there . . . or if you know of ANY news of classmates pass on the word!

Anyone who thought after the Spring issue that it was going to be announcements of grandparenthood from now on was very wrong. Jack and Vivi Tracy announced the birth of Michael John Tracy last June 25, a companion for their three year old daughter, Dana.

Jerry Leet is President of his own company, Agua Media, Lt., manufacturers of industrial water purification systems in Sunnyvale, California. I've often wondered how Merrill and Batten and those other people got billing above Lynch, Barton, Pierce, Durston, Fenner, Osborne, Bean & Smith. If you share my curiosity, we have only to ask Perry Lewis, who is the Lewis of Lewis, Githens & Ahn, New York investment bankers.

Enjoyed a brief holiday visit with Art and Diane Kelly in early July. Art reports that LaSalle Steel Company has been sold and while he is staying busy, he is enjoying the extra time he has for family and friends.

OK, Kiddies—you have once again failed to provide your long suffering class secretary (I'll get you McBride!) with literate (or even illiterate) grist for the class notes mill. Therefore—as previously threatened—we will now see how your lives have evolved, according to my lurid (not necessarily lucid) imagination: Bart Giamatti may be asked to leave Yale after it was discovered he has been secretly involved in a Harvard correspondence course. John Bay, who dabbles at Doyle, Dane, Berbach is rumored to have somehow been involved in the Edsel Advertising campaign. Toby Callaway is down in Florida playing banker, wondering why Ed Clark, who's an economist with the White House, can't add and subtract. Bob Clark is still practicing law trying to get it right. They don't call it practice for nothing. Frank Converse is being considered as host of the new Micky Mouse Club series, after a successful national network run selling Exlax. Doug Crowe and Ned LeRoy are both protecting and serving us in Uncle Sam's Mountain Clumbers (USMC). Jack Curley, over at Paine Webber, wonders why Mickey Countee at the SEC isn't thanking him. Russ Decker's travel agency is taking reservations for the first space shuttle, and Russ Donnelly's newspaper opened a bureau on the moon to cover the landing. Tony Forstmann's still concerned about Fifth Avenue's poverty program, and Trevor Grimm continues to wage the battle started by his formidable mentor, Howard Jarvis. Perry Hall finally got smart and joined us in the San Francisco area. Had a nice evening at a Bay area Andover dinner with Perry and his lovely Virginia.

The ever indomitable Jules Herrey continues to do god-only-know-what in Germany. Thus far, they are still our allies. Stay tuned. Phip Hirsh is expanding or (shrinking) psyches on the eastern shore of Maryland. Si Hoadley is hiding somewhere in Sausalito near San Francisco—rumor has it he's a "consultant." That's what I am between jobs. Bill Huxley's a consultant, too—wish someone would offer us an honest job!

T. J. Kelly who I see whenever he can slow down, is enjoying life in Miami (trust me—he's really enjoying!) and occasionally dropping into visit his medical practice. Lanny Keyes recently experienced a rare genetic malfunction and, at last report, was 5'3" tall. John McBride and Biggie Moore never quite made it out of Colorado. I don't know how they can breathe air they can't see. Marsh McCall's just down the road at Stanford, doing generally cerebral things. Dave Paresky holding forth in Cambridge. We actually sang at the reunion—or so we're told. Wish Walt Roe had been there—we clearly needed direction.

Jim Philbrick's in the Navy playing in billion dollar submarines, and my old roommate Jerry Ringland, is practicing medicine in Princeton in addition to his evening job as short order cook at Cottage Club. Toby Schwartzburg and I run into each other too infrequently. He works for a private phone company in Oakland and writes exotic graffiti on the Bay Bridge at night. Tim Timken and Dave Zurn are, at last report, still gainfully employed.

One noteworthy exception to the foregoing mass indictment: I got a great phone call from Mel Vackavik's widow Annette Milan Vackavik, Jr. is at PA now, and their oldest son Russell (named after Russ Donnelly) is at the University of Massachusetts. Vac and I were roommates in Taylor Hall in our upper year, and I suspect Steve Whiney still wakes up in the middle of the night in a cold sweat at the recollection.

See what happens when you don't write. Don't write some more, and see what come up with next time.

Hello Everyone. After running wild after the reunion, this article will be short and sweet. I want to thank Austen Zecha for his telegram to the class, saying that eve-though he had intended to return for the reunion, he was unable to make it . . . Tom Phillips, the new president of the northern Michigan chapter of the AIA, dropped a note to say he had a nice phone visit with Ben Field who had spent some time at a resort near Traverse City, where Tom lives. In addition to health enthusiast, Dan Adams who has recently moved to Indiana, Dick McKenzie's wife was good enough to tell us that Dick has been running in several marathons, including three Boston Marathons, three Ocean State, and one in New York. On the lighter side, Dick has three daughters, ages 15, 12, and 9, and he is a partner in the Hartford firm of Day, Berry and Havord. Many thanks, Mrs. McKenzie; we hope more wives will keep us up to date on their husbands and our Classmates . . . Bob Watters wrote some time ago that he has joined the Headquarters Department of the Army, since returning from Ft. Speaking of international personalities, Roland Kuchel wrote that since 1980, he has been serving in Budapest as the Deputy Chief of our mission there and would welcome any passers-by to drop in . . . Finally, this time of year will find yours truly out hunting ducks and geese as much as possible. I do want to remind you that we have always been most generous in our class giving, and I hope that in spite of our economic circumstances, all of you will make every effort to keep our tradition going. How time flies! Here we are less than one year away from our twenty-fifth reunion. I know that it was while back, but it just doesn't seem possible that much time has passed since we have heard from some of you. We are in need of a reunion chairman, so if any of you could spare a little time I would be happy to hear from you. (714/494-746) Much has happened at Andover in those years as you faithful readers of the bulletin know. I think you will find it a real experience to return to the hill and experience some of the changes and some of the things that never change.

Hugh Springer has become the Associate Chaplain of Newton College, located in suburb of Sydney.

Sam Friedman is keeping busy in Atlanta as President of AFCO Realty Associates, chairman of the Board of Commissioners of the Atlanta Housing Authority (5th largest in USA), and running. Gil Leaf is presently Headmaster of Lower School in Marblehead. His wife, Elizabeth Goodenough, PA faculty member in the 70's, is completing her Ph.D. in English at Harvard.

Steve Rieber and wife, Sue, report the birth of their second child, Nicholas Jones on Apr. 6th. Their daughter Sarah, 2, isearing up under the strain.

And Al Griggs, my Classmate at the Naval Academy has become the President and Chief Executive Officer of the Coca Cola Bottling Company of Northampton succeeding his father, who plans to pursue other business and personal interests.

After a flying tour with the Marines in Vietnam, Al recieved an MBA from Harvard and has been the Treasurer and ran the day to day operations of the company, which has facilities in Northampton, Greenfield, and Pittsfield, MA; Rutland, VT; and Keene, NH. In addition to its soft drink interest, the firm operates an extensive food service business in Western New England.

He is a member of the Northampton Redevelopment Authority, headed the mayor's advisory panel for the development of a commercial Area Revitalization District for King St. and served on the Board of Trustees of the Cooley Dickenson Hospital.

He is on the executive board of the National Soft Drink Association and President of the MA Soft Drink Association, and a Director of the Third National Bank of Springfield.

He and Sally and their two children live at 9 Barrett Place in Northampton.

Vickie Kohler's card reached me the day after I sent off the last newsletter. I don't know how, but it happens almost every time. So here is her news, but a bit dated. Vickie moved into a townhouse condo a year and a half ago at 28 Fresh Pond Place, Cambridge, MA 02138. Then she left her job at Harvard and flew off to China for 3 weeks followed by 7 months of leisure. Last January Vickie began working "with a travel company out of NYC as a trip director. I love it—I'm finally getting paid to do what I've always wanted to do anyway—and meeting all sorts of interesting people at the same time."

More recent news comes from Beverly Black O'Malley, who enjoys reading the class notes and decided that it is time for her contritution to them. Thanks, Bev! "Thanks to the never ending support of SUPERDAD(!), I've been able to feel good about being a part-time working mother. Given what has been going on in Washington, D.C., these past few months it was, clearly, just a matter of time: I mean, after all, just how long could PA '59 sit back and let things go on as they have? How long before we rode to the rescue? Roger Ahlbrandt has joined the Administration as Deputy Assistant Secretary for Urban and Community Studies at the Department of Housing Urban Development, where his responsibilities include neighborhood and community research, urban policy, community development, fair housing research and evaluation, and local government capacity building. Rog took a two year leave from the University of Pittsburgh, where he is a Professor in the School of Social Work. Across town, but light years ways, Scott Thompson has become Associate Director of the US Information Agency for Program Guidance and Planning. Scotty's 8000 subordinates keep themselves occupied putting out all the printed material the US Government distributes in its effort to spread the word on our word or words to the world at large. Scott and Rog join Chester Crocker who, as previously, reported, is Assistant Secretary in charge of African Affairs.

Could it be that America's greatest legacy to mankind will have been the development of not great organizations and the capacity to run them, but the ability to give everyone within them such wonderful titles?

This is a good start, gang, but we need more. Let me make three modest suggestions: Willie Nordhaus should be convinced to leave the Economics Department at Yale, move to D.C. and become Chief Plumber for the US Economy; Bill Bell should forsake his chickens in Maine and undertake the management of the larger animals in Washington; and finally, Perry Miller should move in and document, in song and ballad, the efforts of us all to muddle through yet another period of history.

Ron and Mary Ann Upton report the birth of a new son; Hank Higdon continues to be happy in L.A. and active in PA affairs out there; and Dave Rogers continues to practice law in Columbia, MO, as well as raise five kids aged five to twenty (the latter activity in conjunction with Genie).

A final note: one more 40th birthday story came in from Basil Cox (and it will be hard to beat). He, Jayne, and a few friends went for a midnight horseback ride through newly fallen snow on a moonlit night. The ride ended about 4 AM at a countryside pub . . .

Inspired by what seems like a consistent if infrequent stream of deeply negative written comments about the School and its memories by a large and diverse segment of our Class, I thought I might hopefully attract some communication, perhaps a receptive nerve center, and maybe deliver some heresy by mentioning some of the negativism of our Class to Andover's purported "greatness."

First, I must personally admit that on our day of graduation, June 3, 1960, I drove out of the town of Andover with the conviction—personal vow, nearly—that I would never be back. Whether I went all the way to California to college partially out of reaction to my high school days will be permanently unanswerable question. Myself aside, comments and feelings such as these—including fears of expressing such comments, concerns about censorship, paranoia about being the only one(s) not on the gravy train of Andover's "greatness," doubts about the School's overall value, simple hatred for the place, and, probably as much as anything else, indifference, plus a host of other negative reactions—pervade the communications that come here. It's possible, of course, that the positive people stay out of the limelight and contribute money to the School, and the negative ones contribute nothing but sardonic comments to the Class Secretary. I suspect, however, that it's much more than that.

Ours is/was the most heterogeneous Class (of anything) most of us have ever personally observed, experienced or heard of. As a group of 250 individuals or so, we were an intensely, individually, disparately talented group. But, as 14-18 year olds, we weren't close to each other, we weren't secure in ourselves, we weren't overall particularly happy, and we were nearly all fearful of something or other. For the most part, with obvious exceptions we didn't particularly like (or know) each other. We came from all over the country and the world, with varying backgrounds of financial, emotional, and cultural insecurity, and our gradual acceptance of each other varied with each of us. Only a few of us were the ultimate jocks who enjoyed the common adulation and friendship of all; the few intellectual all-stars among us enjoyed a common grudging respect but at least to some extent an uncertainty as to our social acceptability; a lot of us began to learn for the first time and to our quiet unhappiness the limits of our athletic, intellectual and/or personal/social skills; some of us were misfits, who, to be sure, hated the school and the class and everybody in it and vowed to disassociate completely the first possible opportunity; and almost all of us to some extent secretly worried about being a misfit and tried hard to conform, to disprove the connection. Sure, it was and still is all part of learning the real end and business of living. And, sure, we weren't and aren't unique and there are lots of others—as classes and as individuals—very similar to us. But it was us.

A recent letter from a Classmate states, in part: "... I'm one of an unknown number of Andover graduates who for some reason have not kept in contact with the School, or supported it, and who, twenty years later, has very mixed or perhaps somewhat negative feelings, or perhaps cold shivers of repulsion at the tangled recollection of what happened there. Either these people are carefully censored from all School publications, or they don't communicate for some reason(s). One reason I haven't communicated until recently is that the prospect of trying to offer and sustain the postulate that there might be something very questionable about Andover's 'greatness' looks like a good way to get crucified." Those sentiments, both about personal reactions to the School and about the wisdom of communicating with it, are the one common thread—other than factual announcements of births, marriages and professional activities—that has run through correspondence to the Class over at least the past ten years.

There is no intent here of cheerleading. No one ever said pump up the School in this column. Our 25th reunion is only a few years away, and, based on precedent and past communication, there would appear to be little chance for what the movies and novels glamorize such occasions to be. There are a few of us who have already made it big, and for various reasons those few have not or will not choose to communicate much with us or get actively involved. A few of us have gone away, have died, or have in one way or another dropped out entirely. Most of us are simply living a life, in varying degrees of success and happiness, affected by and in some way or ways enriched by our experience at Andover but not committed to participating in every aspect of the School's continued being. One point of all this occasionally purple prose is that there are common threads to our experiences at and feelings for the School: we were individuals and have personal and sometimes dissimilar sentiments about Andover, but there is a common ground. There is here no crucifixion, no censorship but, hopefully, some sensitivity to each of us as part of a whole. This is not a plea for communication, but there is, or should be, hopefully, no fear or problem in communicating.

News of and from the Class? There is almost precisely none. Simply for filler and to supply some names—a practice the Bulletin editors publicly encourage and privately abhor—the following are from the School's computerized printouts on each of us, undoubtedly part of the School's ultimate financial arsenal. The information may be out of date or inaccurate, it's a random sampling, it excludes lawyers and the missing (probably two-thirds of the class), and it's Andover's reminder: Ed Abbott is a professor at Montana State University in Bozeman. Tony Williams is a geophysicist with Texas Instruments in Dallas. Tom Campion is a "rancher" in Ketchum, ID. Tom Whitesides is a chemist with Eastman Kodak in Rochester. Dayton Datlowe is a scientist with Lockheed in Palo Alto. John Weidenhammer is listed as a consultant living on Bainbridge Island, WA. Bill Fleming is a college counsellor at St. Mark's School in Dallas. J. Roger Sullivan is a Vice-President of First National Bank of Maryland in Baltimore. Chuck Goodell is a neurologist in Davenport, IA. Nick Spitzer is an associate professor in the Biology Department of the University of California, San Diego, at La Jolla. A.K. Griffith is a staff scientist with Information International, Inc. in Los Angeles. Charles Rhinelander is President of Maiden Lane Press in Charlottesville, VA. Charlie Kessler is a manager at L.L. Bean in Freeport, ME. Barry Peckham is living in Ashland, OR. Ned Leavitt is a literary agent with the William Morris Agency in New York. David Olivetti is listed as a "designer" with Olivetti International, Inc., in Ivrea, Italy. Dick Leete is a manager with the Connecticut Dept. of Transportation in Wethersfield, CT. Kit Moore is president of his own construction company in Montrose, CO. Bob Sanderson lives in Marion, MA, and is in the low-tech part of a high-tech industry, namely "manhandling lethal hunks of stainless steel sheet." Ed Quattlebaum, a history teacher at Andover, is in Sydney, Australia for a year on a teaching exchange program at Cranbrook School. Shorny Mills is listed as cellar master at Bully Hill Vineyards in Hammond, NY. Al Daniels and wife Cathy celebrated the birth of twins, Elizabeth Grace and Christopher Gregory, on July 3, 1981. Al is a financial planner with the Commonwealth Financial Group of Wellesley, MA, and the family resides in Southborough. Duncan Kennedy, a Harvard Law School professor, is featured in the August 23rd issue of the National Law Journal. He is described as an integral part of a "leftist, iconoclastic core" of a group known as the Conference on Critical Legal Studies, which is dedicated to incorporating "into law the ideals of the counterculture of the 1960's." Pictured in the article as a charismatic and gifted public speaker, Duncan, in another description from the article, "strides around the lecture hall in his squeaky shoes and exposed shirttails, as genial as a camp counselor." Brad Reynolds, current Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Civil Rights Division of the US Department of Justice in Washington, is portrayed in the July issue of The American Lawyer as "the ambitious workaholic head of the Civil Rights Division (and) not the advocate that civil rights leaders have been accustomed to seeing in that job," and in a recently issued book, Reagan's Ruling Class: Portraits of the President's Top One Hundred Officials, as a former "corporate super lawyer (Shaw, Pittman, Potts & Trowbridge in Washington, D.C.) whose salary was (huge)." We're an eclectic group certainly. It will be interesting to see whether the negativism is real—and still remains.

No news is not good news. It's not bad news either. Just no news. Which means no fun reading our '61 column. You may be wondering: "How could my Classmates from 20 years ago really be interested in what I'm doing?" And: "How could my little contribution make a difference?" Guess what? They are interested. And you do make a difference. Keep the news coming.

I have been elected to be Co-Chairman of Andover Class Secretaries and Reunions for a two-year term. Am excited about the increased involvement and responsibility working with Abbot/Andover alumnae affairs. And I look forward to getting to know the many outstanding members of the Alumni Council. Two other members of our Class are also members of the Alumni Council: Cynthia Eaton Bing, who is one of the vice-presidents of the Executive Committee, and Sybil Smith, who is on the Academic Program Committee. You are well represented, Class of '61!

Becky Bartlett Fischer sent me an announcement of her son, Tobias Frederick's birth to share with you. Toby weighed in at 11 pounds 2½ ounces! Toby joins a sister Emily who is two years old. The Fischers are living in Hamden, CT.

Unfortunately I have no other news to report. I hope that this means that you have all had a wonderful, happy, and busy summer.

Please keep in touch.

As the Fall leaves remind us, winter is not far away in many parts of the country: now drifts, skiing and curling up by the fireplace to send your class secretary a long overdue letter to tell me what you are up to.

No news from anyone leaves a void, not unlike a picture frame without the canvas. It leaves the viewer a bit miffed and allows the imagination to wander. If you are wondering about "what ever happened to . . ." let me know.

More news in future columns, and make plans for our 20th (already?) reunion next spring!

To everyone who writes class news in the space provided with your remittance to the alumnae fund—thanks a lot! The alumnae secretary sends all those notes to me for the class news. For you who haven't used the space, it's on the flap of the envelope that is sent to you for your financial support of Phillips. It's a great place to use because it's short, sweet and convenient. So try it next time and send news. I find that when I receive both my college bulletin and my Answer Bulletin I turn to the class news eagerly to read news of others. I always mistakenly thought (and some of you may be like me) that I had to have big accomplishments to write in, but I find I'm just interested in seeing others' names and their news. So if you were like me, maybe you'll feel better about writing in.

Karla Haartz Cortelyou is near Washington, D.C. and writes that she's head of the Math Dept. at Madeira School. She rides horses, has a son about to enter kindergarten, and her husband is a farm manager at the Evans Farm Inn. Mimi Dean McBride is also in the Washington area and wrote that nothing new has happened since their move to the suburbs in October 1981.

Jackie Van Aubel Janssens sent me a fascinating article that had been in the local newspaper in Belgium on her company. She and another woman have a company called Phone Languages which teaches languages by telephone. The company consists of 30 teachers who teach students half our lessons 3 to 10 times a week in 9 different languages. Jackie says the method is popular because teachers can teach from their homes, students can choose a time that suits them and also students have a teacher's undivided attention and communication. Jackie is learning Dutch herself. She also writes that she is happily married with two boys, 16 and 14 years. And obviously very interestingly employed. Thanks for sharing the article, Jackie. I am fine. Our family went to Washington, D.C. this past year and enjoyed all the sights with our girls as well as relaxing in the motel pool. That was the highlight of the past months for us.

Hilary Hayes also wrote that she received a B.A. in Anthropology at the University of Wisconsin. Now she is living on the Gulf in St. Petersburg Beach and working at a nearby hospital. After work she walks on the beach and collects shells. Sounds nice, Hilary!

By now we're all used to the many commercial personae of Hardy Phippen, who stares down at me in the guise of an IBM executive in my commuter train every evening and jumps out at me in his pajamas from the pages of my favorite magazine. I don't routinely give him space in these notes just because he's in a new ad. But when he appears of TV between innings of the Yankee games, financing the house of his dreams with a Citibank loan, and the announcer claims that he and girl he is hugging are "the Marshalls," then I feel he is crying out for notice by this column. Or is Citibank, by subtle allusion to a recent non-bestseller, cleverly taking a position on Steinbrennerism?

In a Class top heavy with corporate lawyers and doctors, it's refreshing to find one of us who is known to his friends as "Wolfman." A responsible editor by day, putting out the weekly Bristol (RI) Phoenix, on weekends and evenings DeWolf Fulton dons his black "Born to Swarm" T-shirt and rides the waves of Narragansett Bay on his windsurfer. "The Swarm" is the name of Dewey's windsurfing gang, sort of halfway between Hell's Angels and the Torques. Dewey lives in his family house on the Bay, the kind of house Siri and I agreed we would go back to, too, if we had been raised in one. The informal hospitality we witnessed, on our weekend visit, was almost Californian, except for the 19th century family portraits peering down on us.

Another special treat of last summer was the opportunity of being the first journalist to interview Lilana Danielle Wofsey, who was two months old and about to move into her parents' new house in Bryn Mawr, PA, when we saw her. Much to mother Susan's consternation, Lilana seems to have her father Alan's sense of humor, which we nevertheless found still delightful, after all these years. We left daughter behind and went out for a delicious Main Line dinner and discussed psychiatry, Philadelphia and burglar alarm systems, all of which Alan discoursed upon knowledgeably and equably.

Siri and I feel fortunate to have had an excuse to impose ourselves on Classmates we haven't seen in years and hope that you will start thinking about sharing his experience when it comes time to plan for our Twentieth Reunion next year.

A friend from the South reports that a third ex-Torque, Joe Freeman, is thriving and lawyering back in his hometown of Elkin, NC, with a son and daughter in the six and four range. I often think of Joe as I walk "On Broadway."

Our only contribution from news comes from Hugh West, who announces the arrival of William Langin West in April '81. "He seems amazingly tolerant of Rosalie and me"—this, despite Hugh's tapping him already for the PA Class of 2000. Hugh is still teaching history at the University of Richmond (VA) which, he drolly notes, "is quickly becoming a subdivision of Greenwich, CT."

Best to you, Hugh, and may I urge everyone else to send in some news when you remember the School, or the Addison Gallery, before the fiscal year closes. Failing a massive response, I will turn this column over to Wofsey for a quarter. There will be no mercy then.

Suze Voorhees has completed a two year post doctoral training program in clinical psychology at The Menninger Foundation in Topeka. Suze completed her doctoral work at the University of Denver School of Professional Psychology in 1981. Suze may be the first doctor in our class . . . ?

Barbara Suhr White and her husband Doug are living in Colusa, CA. They have two children, Weston, 3, and Juliette Bowen, born December 20, 1981. They were expecting a summertime visit from Kathy Platz Zox, her husband Alan and their two sons.

I once again saw Olivia Motch's name in print in the Arts section of the The New York Times. She is doing very well as the assistant to Roy Lichtenstein, assembling and installing all his exhibits.

I ran into Polly Osborne in Boston. She is the happy new owner of a house in Manchester, MA.

I have recently seen three of our Classmates. Ellen Huntington Bryant and Sarah Watson DeCew, and I spent a weekend together in New York last May. Ellen is caring for her husband and two daughters. Sarah also has two children plus husband. They are living in New Canaan, CT where husband Sperry is a lawyer and Sarah is teaching Health to elementary school students.

Karen Swenson was visiting her family in NH this summer. She and her own family, husband Jay, two sons and daughter, live in McMinnville, OR. Karen came to Boston for a day during her visit. It was really good to catch up. She would like to know more about our class and so would I. PLEASE WRITE. Until next time . . .

Pardon my inauspicious debut as class secretary. The notes were supposed to have been modeled after the sections of a newspaper, but the graphics and typefaces didn't make that clear. What a dummy! (That's a pun only a few of you might get. Fortunately.)

Anyway, this is going to be the first relatively straight set of class notes you've seen in quite a while. I'll try not to let it happen again.

Some people are doing interesting things. George Swope spent 15 days in Russia with 13 students from Lake Forest Academy. Unclear if that was punishment or what. Jim Lynch travels regularly to Central and South America and Europe to consult on agricultural development. (Lynch reports that Coit Liles is active in D.C. crew circles and that Dale Nicholls is practicing law in Australia.) Brian O'Dea is traveling, too. After leaving a polling job with Field Research, he took off for Greece and Israel "to look at antiquity to figure out what I've done and what next." He hopes Dionysius will provide the answer.

Dito Staley returned to college (University of Rhode Island) to finish his undergraduate degree in art history. One possible next stop: seminary.

That would be a far cry from the life Dick

Dumez is leading. He's manager of the Rumble Seat Rathskellar in Woodstock, VT. Dick, his wife Barbara, and their two children live in South Pomfret.

Both Scott Currier and Pat Chang are in radio. Scott is manager of WDER in Derry, NH, according to Jim Yule. Pat is with WKND in Windsor, CT. He's married with a young son, Michael, a stepdaughter who is going to Miss Porter's and a lot of gratitude for A Better Chance. Pat says he ran into Chris Moore at Aetna in Hartford, where Chris works. He is the father of two boys.

Tom Kidde reports from L.A. that his wife had a daughter, Katherine Merie, in February and that he is "considering purchasing beach front property in Nevada." Jim Ross, on the rare occasions when he is not on the golf course or softball diamond, practices law in the Greater New Bedford, MA area. He says Ed Moulin is an attorney for the New York Stock Exchange.

Bruce Hearey decided to move "to the saner lifestyle of Cleveland (not to mention the rather creative approach to professional basketball of the Cavaliers) from New York City." Not only did he lead his team to the lawyer's league championship, but he visited Ken Blake in Pittsburgh, where Ken's sax is a musical rage. Bruce says Ken, wife Sharon, and son Ken Braden, Jr. are doing well. Ken is playing at clubs, working on albums and doing commercials. Bruce also saw John Hawkins, who works for Crawford Fittings in Cleveland. John has a wife and a baby girl.

Rusty Chapman is finishing his military duties, then plans to go into private practice (he didn't say as what) in Greenville, SC. He married Marsh Butler in March 1981.

Cliff Wright is working as an economic analyst for the Southern Pacific, whose traffic is based on autos and lumber. Well, remember Cliff, some days you're the windshield, some days you're the bird. Cliff is living with his wife, Margaret Boyle, another San Francisco State economics grad., in Oakland. He invites anyone who gets lost to visit him. (I figure getting lost is the only way one would get to Oakland.)

Gordy Baird also extends an invitation: for anyone who wants to go sailing, the boat is in the water off Gloucester.

The newspaper effort didn't have an obituary section. This set of notes, unfortunately, does. According to a friend of Jim (Roger) Lynch, he fell asleep in a park in France in the summer of 1981 and never woke up. He was one of the most easy going, least pretentious and most likable members of the class. His death is a terrible loss.

The "Exotic Travel" Award this time goes to Brendan Doyle, who spent a spring day running the Paris Marathon. Brendan's working with an environmental consulting firm here in D.C., and he and his wife Tary have recently completed the renovation of a brownstone near Dupont Circle. Rumors abound that Jonathan Ginsburg and Dave Perdue are lawyers here in fun-city. D.C. does have some hidden pleasures. One has been discovering that Nate Cartmell who is still extremely tall, is prone to speculation on the BIG ISSUES. I'm not talking politics. I'm talking life.

Newsman Dave Ensor is about to leave for a beat that may win him the next travel award; he's going to be ABC's correspondent in Warsaw, and will have a pied-a-terre in London. Dave tells me that Dirk Nelson is living outside NYC, working computers, after a stint on the West Coast as a journalist. Dirk spent some time this summer brushing up on his Latin, and is thinking of becoming a classics teacher.

Reports that Burgess Walker is teaching at Dana Hall. Leigh Hafrey, back from Paris, is working on a manuscript and teaching in the writing program at MIT. Bruen Tucker has an address in Pass Christian, MS, and Craig Weston, according to the Class list, is in Atlanta.

When one of my friends went to a computer convention in KC, she stopped in on Kate and Crosby Kemper. Good to know that Cros, is a fan of the great, little-known American writer James Salter. Try Solo Faces. Also writing: Fred Strebeigh, working on something in England (for Smithsonian?), and Chuck Smith, freelancing in that perfect New England town, Northampton, MA. Tom McAfee is a photographer in SF, where he and his wife just had their second child. Also new parents: architect Steve Sullivan and Ptarmigan Teal (AA '70) who have a daughter and are living in Seattle. Steve apparently did some impressive work up in Juneau, Alaska—work that's been featured in some of those well-built architectural magazines that sell for about $59.95.

Prosperous-looking Larry Uhl visited town not long ago. It's great having private-sector friends with credit cards. When Yale Mgmt. student Jeff Kilbreth visited, I had to pay from my own fried rice. Jeff will have his degree next spring.

Currently faring well in Boston (according to reports) is Jim Hearty who has some kind of hefty job for Bank of Boston. Also in the Boston pro-circle is Harvard Law grad Willie Washington. Working in the mine fields of New York politics is one of our Class' favorite conservatives, Howie Lim. He's an Executive Assistant to New York Senator Al D'Amato. Bob Furse, M.D., is completing an oncology fellowship at Baylor College of Medicine. "Everybody passing through Houston, feel free to call (socially!)." Bob asks about Bill Fuller; he's an Assistant Professor of Slavic at Colgate in Hamilton, NY.

Received a fine letter from Venice, CA, where Rob Sherwood is starting to get paychecks as an ABC TV-movie script writer. "It is the first tinge of success I've known, and the window of actually ending up a professional (screen) writer is opening. Of course, the light is too dazzling, but what did we all share at Andover but learning to recognize the scent of success."

Amen.

First, the moves . . . Barbara Allen has moved to Cambridge, MA, as her husband, Lenny Reich, has been awarded a fellowship at Harvard Business School. Barb is looking for a position with a Boston Arts organization. She would love to hear from anyone who lives in the Boston area. They spent three weeks on their boat this summer sailing through New York Harbor, up L.I. Sound to Martha's Vineyard, Nantucket and up to Boston.

Madelon Curtis Finnegan is making moves of a different sort . . . with her body. She's teaching jazz at PA and the University of Lowell. She's also choreographing Grease for PA. She's dancing with the North Shore Civic Ballet in Marblehead. She is also in several films which have been shown on HBO—Eyes of a Stranger, Fire in Coconuts Grove, Who's Life Is It Anyway.

Sara Gray Stockwell is at Eaglebrook with her husband and two sons, Carl 2 and Quentin 4. She's teaching English, working in the school library and coaching the J.V. ski team. She would love to hear from anyone who would like to become a Co-Class Agent. I would love to hear from anyone who would be interested in becoming Class Secretary. I hogged the job for the past few years and would love to let someone else have this pleasure!
